TO THE HIGH AND MIGHTIE, RIGHT VERTVOVS AND MOST CHRISTIAN PRINCE, King
IAMES, our dread Sovereigne, by the grace of God, King of Great Britaine, of France, and Ireland, Defender of the Christian faith.

MOST gracious Sovereigne, as under the shadow of your Highnesse great and mighty tree,^{} I meane your Princely and peaceable government, the goodly beasts of the field, honourable and great persons doe solace themselves, so the fowles of heaven, and the little birds,^{} doe sit and sing in the branches thereof, and there build their neasts, and lay their young: and I among the rest, have brought forth my implumed and unfeathered birds, those imperfect workes, which heretofore I have dedicated to your excellent Maljestie, and now this, which wanteth but the wings of your Highnesse favour to flie abroad.

To your pious and sacred Majestie therefore, I here present this absolute Tractate upon Genesis, such as hath not beene yet (in respect of the order, matter, and manner) set forth vpon this booke: wherein whatsoever questions of weight are discussed, and other necessarie matters added, as the short preface following sheweth. This my third work to your highnesse, I here in all humility exhibite and offer, as an unfained pledge of our hearty joy, for the joyfull entrance of this third yeare of your Majesties happy reigne.

This divine booke of Genesis (as Ambrose advised Augustine,^{*} to read the Prophe|sie of Isaias, Augustine sendeth Volusianus to the Apostles writings) I would com|mend in the first place, as it is in order first, to be read of all the Scriptures: wherein are declared and set forth the beginning of the world, and the progresse thereof: the punish|ment of the wicked, and rewards of the righteous: so many examples and enticements to vertue, such judgements and dehortations from sin▪ and the same so lively and effectuall, •s if they were now presently done before our eyes: as Augustine saith of this historie of *Genesis; I know not how, but as often as it is read, the hearer is so affected, as though the thing were even now effected.

This worthy history containeth the space of 2368. yeares, above halfe the age of the world, from the first to the second Adam. It insisteth principally in setting forth the life and acts of six honourable Fathers,* as starres among the rest, Adam, Noah, Abraham, Isaack, Iacob, Ioseph: from all these your Majestie may receive somewhat: with Adam, who in Enos time, when religion decayed, taught his sonnes apart from the wicked, to call upon the name of God, your princely care must bee, that you and your people, as separated from the superstition of the world, should worship the Lord more purely: with Noah God hath raised you up to bring rest and comfort to his Church: as another Abram,* the Lord hath made you an high Father: as Isaack to procure joy and laughter to the Church: as Iacob, a supplanter of Popish superstition: as Ioseph, to adde what is wanting in the Church, or Common-wealth.

Much bound unto God, is this Church and Common-wealth, for your Highnesse peaceable and religious government: that whereas we for our sins had deserved with Israel, neither to have King nor Church:* as the Prophet Hoshea saith, We have no King, because we feared not the Lord: and againe in the same place, the thorne and thistle shall grow upon their Altars: yet the Lord in mercy hath blessed us with both.

We praise God for your princely vertues, your worthy clemencie, equity, bountie, piety, which doe shine in your Majestie, as the pretious stones in the King of Tyrus garment:* your gracious clemencie is as a cordiall unto this land, which having remitted some great offences, must needs passe by smaller trespasses. If David pardoned Shemeis rayling,* he could not but forgive Mephiboseths negligence. Your princely peace made abroad, doth give us hope of a peaceable state at home: as Davids favour toward Abner, a reconciled enemy,* was a signe of grace to Barzillai, an ancient friend: what would we have more, your Majestie professeth to be a nourish-father to the Church, counting it one of your fairest stiles, and had rather be loved of all, than feared: as Ambrose setteth forth the good Emperour Theodosius.* When he had command over all, he had rather expostulate as a father, than punish as a judge: he desired to winne with lenitie, not to force by extremity: an umpire of equitie, not a decreer of severitie: hee would rather bind men by sacred religion, than servile subjection.

Your Highnesse Honourable equitie is manifest, in that your Majestie professeth to love and honour the grave men,* and preachers of either opinions: as David did favour both Sadok and Abiathar, priests of divers families: as Saint Paul did joy that Christ was preached, though by them that were of a contrary faction: as Iacob had a right hand for Ephraim, and a left for Manasses: Paul and Barnabas jarred, yet both preached the Gospell: Cyprian and Cornelius differed in judgement, yet both pillars of the Christian faith: Chrisostome and Epiphanius disagreed, yet both enemies to the Arrians: Hierome and Ruffinus were divided, yet in the end were reconciled: I doubt not but all faithfull,* sound, and sober Preachers of the truth, are acceptable to your Majestie, as good Theodosius embraced Meletius, kissed his eyes and his lips, and made much of other faithfull Pastors: as Valentinian revered Ambrose, who sending for him in his sicknesse, salutem sibi quandam venturam arbitrabatur, did thinke he saw health it selfe comming to him.* this love of the Emperour was not lost:

Ambrose againe requiteth it; quam meipsum pro tua obtulissem fide: how gladly would I have offered my selfe as in sacrifice for thy faith? as all your Highnesse faithfull Preachers are ready to doe for your Majesties health and life.

Your princely bounty hath well appeared both toward the Church and Common-wealth, not in precept onely, but in practice, as in the rare lifting up of subsidies, but in case of necessity: as Tiberius the Emperour was wont to say;  aurum illud adulteri huius esse, quod cum subjectorum lachrymis collectum esset: that it was adulterate gold, which pressed forth the subjects teares.* * Toward the Church your princely and fatherly care sheweth it selfe, in that you would have sufficient provision made for the sustentation of the Pastors and Ministers: we shall not now need an Ebed/melek to make intercession for Jeremies food and maintenance: * nor yet that noble Earle Terentius, who having obtained a notable victory, * and being bidden of the Emperour Constantius to aske what he would, Templum pe•i•• pro or•hodoxis; did aske to have the Church restored to the orthodoxall teachers. We need no such mediators: (our times, God be thanked, are farre more happy) neither yet as Tullie saith, that twenty thousand made request and mourned for him: in a Monarchicall state such suits are not fit, for Isocrates rule is to be held; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . ad Demonic. that as in a Democratie the popular state, so in a Monarchie the King onely is to be admired.

Your Christian Majestie, without such remembrances, out of your owne princely heart can consider of the necessity and wants of Church Ministers: as Salomon, * though he advanced Zadock, yet suffered Heli his posterity to have some of the Priests offices, to eat a morsell of bread: * and Iosias graunted the Priests of the high places to eat bread among their brethren, who much more cared for the Priests of the altar.

Lastly, your Christian pietie is evident, in taking care, that all the Churches in your Majesties dominions be planted with good Pastors: * to increase the number of them: not to suffer it to be empaired or decreased: to thrust in labourers into Christs harvest, and to thrust out loyterers: to supply the one, and employ the other: that none be permitted to stand idle in the market place, that would labour quietly in the Lords vineyard, nor yet occasion be given to such, to say as Sisinnius answered Chrisostome, * that would have enjoyed him silence: I will giue you a reward to •ase mee of so great a labour. Your Majestie in your princely wisdom knoweth how for the common vtilitie to beare with some mens infirmities, as fathers (as Augustine saith,) doe beare with their sons whiles they are children, or sicke, * till their infancie or infirmities be over.

May I now use to your princely person the words of the kingly Prophet, Prosper with thy glory, (O glorious Prince) ride upon the word of truth, * and of meekenesse and righteousness: Meekenesse well becommeth the word of truth, the Gospell of Christ, toward your faithfull subjects: Iustice and righteousnesse against the aduersaries of truth in the land, and your right hand shall teach you terrible things, in rooting out all idolatry and superstition, and rejecting all confused motions for a Babylonicall Tolleration: for this your Majesties faithfull service in earth, * wee will not presume to say as Nestorius to the Emperour: Mihi ô Imperator terram •u•haereticis purgatam tribue, & ego tibi coelum retribuam: Give unto me the earth purged of heretikes, and I will give thee heaven. But Christ Iesus shall say, * Well done good servant and faithfull, thou hast beene faithfull in a little, I will make thee ruler over much; enter into thy Masters joy.

Thus I end, with that chearefull acclamation to your Majestie, which the Councell of Chalcedon sometime used to Leo and Cyrillus, the names onely changed, Vivat Iacobus multos annos, vivat

Your Majesties most loyall and obedient subject, ANDREW WILLET.

¶ CERTAINE DIRECTIONS TO THE READER TO BE OB|served in the reading of this Booke.

Christian Reader, seeing God hath called us the Ministers of the glorious Gospell of Iesus Christ, not to stand idly in the market place, but to labour in his vineyard, some in one worke, some in another, I thinke no labour better bestowed, than in setting forth the word of God, both by preaching and writing: as S. Petertoucheth both: of the first he saith, I think it meet, as long as I am in this Tabernacle to stirre you up by putting you in remembrance: of the second: I will endeavour therefore alwayes, that ye also may be able to have remembrance of these things after my departure. That time therefore, which others spend, some in following their pleasures, some in ambitious suit of preferment, some in attending their profit, I find most comfort to imploy after this manner: for if that heathen Orator did professe: that he did bestow as much time in humane studies as others took in following their businesse, some in celebrating festival dayes▪ some in pleasure, some in feasts and bankets, some in playes & games.* Much more should we preferre the divine study of the Scriptures, before all worldly pleasures and commodities whatsoever.

I know that these labours of mine shal find many hard Censors, as my other travailes before; some have not forbore in publike assēblies to tax me & my writings, some in private corners have spoken their pleasures: of such I say with the Apostle: *I would know, not 〈in non-Latin alphabet〉, the speech, of them which are puffed up, but 〈in non-Latin alphabet〉, the power: as the same Apostle else-where saith, they understand not, that they measure themselves by themselves, and compare themselves with themselves. But as Hierome saith: he which carpeth other mens writings: when hee commeth to write himselfe, and setteth foot to foot, then will he sweat, and tug, and find great difference between publicke writing, and private carping. si ad libros venerit & pedem pedi contulerit, tunc haerebit, tunc sudabit, tunc intelliget aliam viam fori esse, aliam triclinij Hieron. ad Domin.*

In this worke I have abridged the learned commentaries of Mercerus and Pererius, and of others, that have written upon Genesis, taking the best and leaving the worst: Pererius hath taken great pains in this argument, though he have many slips in history and not a few errors for doctrine: I have served him, as Hierome did origen, I have caused that our country men should know his best things, and be ignorant 〈◇〉 his worst. It seemeth that he spent above ten yeares in compiling that work, the first tome was set forth, 1589. the fourth and last, ann. 1598. he was as long a time about it, as Isocrates was in penning his panegyrikes: and I confesse, that I almost have at spare times bene as many yeares occupied in preparing this worke, as the Elephant is in bringing forth her young: I have also collected divers things out of Mercerus: of whole learned expositions upon Genesis, I may as Isocrates did of his panegiricke orations: 〈in non-Latin alphabet

› , &c. that both they which had handled that argument before, being ashamed of that they had said, did raise out all their orations, and they who seemed some body, mistrusting their wits, gave over.

In the reading of this booke, I would premonish the Reader to take these directions, that he would first with his pen mend the faults, which are very many, escaped in my absence, through the oversight of the Printer▪ In the divers readings S. standeth for the Septuagints translation. H. for the latine thought to bee Hieroms: C. for the Chaldee: P. for Pagnius, A for Arias Montanus: B. for the great English Bible. G. the Geneva translation. T. Tremellius: he. for the Hebrew. text: caet. for caeteri, the rest.

In the marginall figure: ad. signifieth, addeth. differ. ver. difference of words. diver. accep. divers takings. app. f. pr. appellative for proper: plu▪ f. sing. plurall number for the singular: de, detract or take away: cor corrupt: diu. sig. divers significations: negat f. affir. negative for affirm. invert. inverting of the order: al. alt. altring of the text. differ. pron. difference of pronunciation: mut pers. change of the person: differ. temp. difference of the tense: simil. voc. likenesse of the words: interp▪ interpret, when the sense is kept, and not the words: transp. transposing of words: mut. temp. change of the tense: mut. voc. change of the voice, as when the active is put for the passive, or contrariwise. r. standeth for right. c. for corrupt. These my labours and travels I commend to the favourable acceptance, and Christian use of the carefull reader, thinking my selfe happy, if by my small talent, I can any wayes profit the Church of God. Th•• I end, craving the hearty and unfained prayers of all, that shall finde themselves furthered by this worke, for me, and all other our fellow labourers: that as the Apostle saith, utterance may bee given us, to open our mouthes boldly, that we may publish the secrets of the Gospel▪ and as the Prophet David saith, Pray for the peace of Hierusalem.*

THE FIRST TOME OF THIS COMMENTARIE VPON GENESIS: CONTAINING THE NOTABLE HISTORY OF THE THREE GREAT PATRIARKES, Adam before the flood, Noah in the flood, Abraham after the flood.

TOGETHER WITH SVCH MEMORABLE THINGS, AS FELL OVT In their times, during the space of two thousand, one Hundred, and eight yeares, from the beginning of the World, to the birth of Isaack:

As they are set forth by Moses that great Prophet, and holy Historiographer, in the 24. first Chapters of Genesis.

HEB. 11.7, 8.

By faith Noe being warned of God of the things which were as yet not seene, moved with reverence, prepared the Arke, to the saving of his houshold, &c.

By faith Abraham when he was called, obeyed God, &c.

AMBROS. lib. 1. officior. c. 27.

Noe quam sapiens, qui tantum fabricavit arcam, quam justus qui ad semen omnium reservatus, quam fortis ut diluvium vinceret, quam temperans, ut diluvium toleraret.

Noah was wise in making so great an Arke; just, in being reserved to be the seed of the world; strong in overcoming the •loud; temperate in induring it.

Fuit sapientiae in Abraham Deo credere, fuit iustitiae filium acceptum reddere: fuit fortitudinis appetitum cohibere, ••it temperantiae modum pietatis tenere.

It was wisdom in Abraham to believe God; justice to render his sonne, whom hee had received; fortitude, to subdue his naturall affection: temperance, in keeping a measure in his devotion.

Reverendissimis in Christo Patribus ac Dominis, D. Richardo divina providentia Archiepiscopo Cantuariens. totius Angliae Primati & Metropolitano: & D. Richardo Episcopo Londinensi, dioecesano suo salutem & pacem in Christo sempiternam.

Reverendissimi Domini, si quos ego in hac scribendi exercitatione, progressus fecerim, quos exiguos certe •gnosco, si quid ego adjumenti ex privatis meis studiis ad communē fructum & utilitatē attulerim: totum illud vos vestro jure repetere & merito vindicare possitis, quorum unus author mihi extitit, alter adhortator ad suscipiendam hanc scribendi provinciam, in quā me mediocriter versatum esse fateor: * vt cum Hieronymo dicere possem: vobis & quae possum debeo, & quae non possum.

Cum igitur tria praecipue sint studiorum genera, quibus Theologi ut plurimum addicti, & toti dediti & devoti sunt: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, in refutandis erroribus, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, in scripturis interpre•andis 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 in questionibus explica•dis: quē••dmodum in alijs opusculis, ex duobus primis generibus aliquid in lucem & conspe|ctum 〈...〉 averim, ita experiri volui, an in hoc tertio genere nostris etiam prodessē potuerim: quod 〈...〉. Certe non inficior, me praematurē ingressum esse ad hoc iter, * nec sequu|tum 〈...〉 consilium, ne ad scribendum citò prosilias, & levi ducaris insania; longo tempore dis•e, quod doc•s. Ill•d tamen me assecutum video, quod Augustino accidit: Ego(inquit) ex eo/rum numero me esse profiteor, qui proficiendo scribunt, & scribendo proficiunt. * superba est illa Tull•i •ox: se nullū verbum, quod revocare voluit, emisisse: me potius cum Augustino angit, * & anxium reddit Horatiana illa sententia, nescit vox missa reverti: scribenti vt dicenti multa excidere possunt, quae matura deliberatione opus habent: scriptionis ergo meae temeritatem, si primis annis hic forte impeggerim, istius operis maturitate compensa•e statuo.

Istius ergo tractatus tomum primum vestrae gravitati consecrare volui, quo dignitatis accessionem hanc vtri{que} vestrum congratuler: qua precor multos annos ad Dei gloriam, Ecclesiae, commodum velstrum ipsorum solatium perfruamini. Nunc aliud non quaeram argumentum, unde incipiat, & vbi de|sinat epistola haec quam, vt vestrae paternitati, & vigilantissimae curae Ecclesiae pacem ejusdem{que} pastolres commendem. Novit prudentia vestra, quanto Serenissimus Rex singulis Ecclesiis idoneos Mini|str•s praeficiendi desiderio teneatur: quo tam pio & verē regio instituto, nihil ad obedientiam populo perswadendum magis aptum & accommodatum, vel ad papasticam superstitionem extirpandam malgis efficax & salutare inveniri potest. Ista Ecclesiis prospiciendi cura vestrae pietati demandata est: satagite ergo (gravissimi patres) & huc incumbite, ut fidelium pastorum numeros pervos indies cres|cat & augeatur: obstacula omnia & impedimenta e medio tollite, quibus sacro isti ordini officiat, •ut nec de numero decedat quidpiam, vel existimationi detrahatur: estote 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉: bonis favete, sustil•e•e infirmos, homines frugi & Ecclesiae utiles tolerate: non dubito, quin cum Ambrosio dicatis: * *Ego diligo eos vel presbiteros, vel diaconos, qui cum aliquo processerint, * nequaquam se patiuntur à suo diutius abesse munere.*

Quid opus est, ut de rebus non necessariis inter nos digladiemur, & domesticis concertationibus incal•scamus: cum cervicibus nostris immineant, & jugulis nostris pontificij votis suis gladios inten|tent: sed in vestram gravitatem fortassis non est conferenda culpa, illi in reprehensionem cadunt qui obstinato animo torrenti se opponunt: Equidem quos pertinaciter deprehenderitis obsistentes, compri|•te: quos sub conscientiae onere anhelantes & laborantes videtis, sublevate: at{que} equidem de cle|mentia vestra hoc audeo polliceri, quos sententiae illi Barnardinae annuaere & acquiescere scio:  quid •ugum vestrum super eos aggravatis, quorum potius onera portare debetis?*

Vt inamidem sentiremus omnes, & levi jugo colla subicere non formidaremus: verum in rebus evibus dum dissidemus, vni fundamento firmiter adhaerentes, opinione hic sejunctos, conjunctis op|eris in messe domini desudare, quid prohibet? Aequanimitas illa paulina in 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, amplexanda est:  si quid alitersentitis hoc vobis deus revelabit*. Idem Apostolus concionatores illos non rejecit, qui, licet ipsius aemuli, Evangelium Christi praedicabant: sic dum Ecclesiae usibus deseruitur quid ni eorum accepta esset diligentia qui pure doctrinae student, & pacis amantes sunt, licet caetera dissimiles? dixit

Christus:  qui non est contra nos pro nobis est*: Bene etiam hic Bernardus: Laudo ego omnes or|dines Ecclesiae, ubi piè vivitur, etiam si omnes non teneam: unum opere teneo, caeteros charita|te: Mariam aliter & Martham, non necesse est aut utram{que} aut alteram servatori displicere, cui nimirum tam dissimili devotionis studio contendunt placere:  didicit hoc ab Apostolo Bernardus: regnum Dei non est cibus & potus; sed Iustitia, & Pax, & gaudium in Spiritu sancto, qui enim in his servit Christo, placet Deo, & coram filiis hominum est probatus*.

Vos ergo pacis Ecclesiae Anglicanae patroni & defensores primarij, huic grassanti morbo remedium adferte: faces contentionis accensas restringite, luem & livorem hunc latius serpere non patiamini: Obsecro vos patres per illum, quo Christi gregem complectimini, amorem, per illum, quo in Pontificios excandescitis, animi ardorem, per Episcopalem vestram dignitatem, ut Ecclesiae laboranti mansuetu|dine vestra succurratis; suppliciter vos alloquor Augustini verbis, qui inimicitias inter Hieronymum & Ruffinum gliscentes plurimum doluit & graviter tulit: *si ego (inquit) alicubi vos simul inveni|re possem, * procederem ad pedes, flerem, quantum valerem, rogarem, quantum amarem*.

Vos, qui Ecclesiae iudices constituti estis, imitamini Christum Iudicem: qui interrogatus ut divi|deret haereditatem, respondit, quis me constituit divisorem haereditatis, inter vos: unde Augusti|nus,  non uti{que} dedignabatur compescere cupiditatem, sed nolebat fieri iudex ad divisionem: dicat ei unusquis{que} nostrum, dic fratri meo, non dividat, sed ut teneat mecum haereditatem*: Vos igitur (aequissimi Iudices,) ita temperate iudicium vestrum, ut haereditas Christi, (pax Ecclesiae) non dividatur.

Vos vigilantissimi Episcopi in puppi sedetis: ita navem Ecclesiae (cujus tractatis gubernacula) fluctuantem ad cynosuram dirigite,  ne illi datur ad scopulos, vel in syrtes praecipitetur*: Audite Cyrillum sic consulentem: sicut qui mare navigant, tempestate urgente, navi{que} periclitante anxii quae|dam exonerant, ut caetera salva permaneant, ita & nos cum non habemus salvandorum omnium paenitus negotiorum certitudinem, despiciamus ex iis quaedam, ne cunctorum patiamur dispen|dia: praestat sarcinam & merces abjicere, quam ut aut navis naufragio sit proxima, aut naut• in periculo.

Vos indulgentissimi patres, qui spirituales Ecclesiae filios generatis, nolite committere, ut ait Cypria|nus,  ut quos ad gloriam Christi Ecclesia peperisset, eosdem gloriosos Ecclasia Christi non habeat*.

Vos sacerdotes Domini Chrysostomum attendite: si Deus benignus, ut quid sacerdos ejus austerus? ^{*} Vis apparere sanctus? circa vitam tuam esto austerus, circa alienam benignus: nonne melius est propter misericordiam rationem reddere, quam propter severitatem?

Sed instar omnium est Apostolus Paulus, qui sic ad Corinthios: Quid vultis, cum virga veniam ad vos, an cum charitate, & spiritu lenitatis? date nobis cum Apostolo optionem (clementissimi disciplinae moderatores, ^{*}) virgam nolumus, sed veniam: si severius paulo processerit, (lege sic dictante) iudicium, culpam non habet, sin vero mitius exerceatur, meretur laudem: ut suaviter Ambrosius: excusationem habes si feceris, ^{}si non feceris, laudem.*

Ignoscite mihi (humanissimi patres,) quod tam confidenter ista vobis suggerere perrexerim: Si quid parrhesia hac mea deliquero, dolori meo hoc condonate: certe invitabit me comitas vestra, quam privatim expertus sum, ut liberiùs animi mei sensa palam expromerem, vestrae enim humanitati (sat sci^o) probatur Augustini consilium, ^{*} si quisquam est, qui se non audet ingerere ad amicitiam faciendam, cum aliquo nostro temporali honore aut dignitate revocetur, offerendum est illi quodam commitate & submissione animi, quod petere per se ipse non audet: desino jam plurib. molestus esse, excessi mensuram epistolae, sed non excessi doloris modum: ut ait Hieronym. precor jam, ut qua ipsi fratres & conservos miseratione dignemini in terris, ipsi abundè cumulatam apud misericordem patrem in coelis inveniatis. ^{*}

Vestrae Reverentiae observantiss. ANDREAS WILLETTVS.

THE FIRST BOOKE OF MOSES, CALLED GENESIS.

CHAP. I.

The Analysis or Logick resolution.

IN this Chapter Moses treateth of the creation of the world, first in generall, how God created heaven and earth, vers. 1. then in particular in the rest of the Chapter: where wee have the severall workes of God, and their severall approbations, that they seemed good unto the Maker^o.

The severall workes are distinguished into six dayes: and in every dayes worke there are foure things to bee observed; the authority whereby they are made, as v. 3. The Lord said, Let there be light, &c. the obedience of the creature in being made: and there was light: thirdly, the approbation of the Creator, v. 4. God saw that the light was good: fourthly, the distinction of the worke, vers. 5. The evening and the morning were the first day: and so of the rest of the dayes workes.

Againe, the order of the particular creation is this: God createth the workes and creature^os without sense, afterward the sensitive and living creatures: the first are either the superiour and celestiall, as the light made the first day, the firmament the second, the contents of the firmament, the Sunne, Moone, and Starres, the fourth day: or the inferiour creatures, as the earth, with the trees, plants, and herbs, the third day.

The sensitive creatures, are either unreasonable, as the fishes and fowles made the fifth day, v. 20. the beasts and cattell made the sixth day: or the reasonable creatures, man and woman made the sixth day.

In the framing and bringing forth of man, there is set forth, first the consultation of the Trinity, v. 26. Let us make man, &c. then the creation, wherein is to be considered the substance and forme of mans creation, according to Gods owne image. v. 27. the endowment of man created in his preheminance and domination over all other creatures, vers. 28. his increase and procreation, bring forth fruit and multiply: his maintenance and preservation, vers. 29. I have given unto you every herb, &c. that shall be to you for meat.

3. The Exegesis, or Theologicall explication of doubtfull questions and obscure places.

QVEST. I. What the heaven and earth was, created in the beginning. vers. 1.

Vers. 1. IN the beginning God made heaven and earth, &c. 1. Moses here doth not onely generally, or summarily set downe the creation of the world, which afterward is described in particular, which was the opinion of Chrysostome, remembred by Augustine, lib. 2. cont. Manich. c. 3. 2. Nor yet doe we understand a certaine first matter, whereof the heaven and earth were afterward made, as Augustine seemeth to thinke. lib. 1. Genes. cont. Manich. c. 7. and one Philastrius Bishop of Brixia, doth affirme it to be heresie to say that this was the element of the earth, afterward created, but another earth, as the matter whereof other things were made: catalog. haeres. 3. Neither yet do we approve the opinion of the Schoolemen, which by the heaven understand only Coelum empyreum, the highest heaven above the starrie skie, the seat of the Angels and blessed Spirits: and by the earth a confused substance, whereout other things were formed afterward: of which opinion were Alcuinus, Rabanus, Lyranus, Tostatus, Catharinus, with others: for Moses specially intendeth to set downe the creation of things visible: and David expounding Moses, speaketh of these heavens here created, which should perish, Psal. 102.25. which are not those highest heavens subject to no change. 4. Neither yet doe wee here exclude the creation of those invisible heavens with Mercerus: but in this word comprehend as well the invisible, as visible heavens, Colos. 1.16. Iun. 5. This heaven and earth then here mentioned to bee created in the beginning, are the same heaven and earth, which are now, comprehending the generall matter and seed, whereout all other things in heaven and earth were made: first created in the matter, afterward perfected in forme, and lastly beautified with their ornaments; this then was the order of the creation. First, the same heaven and earth were created in a confused substance, and unformed matter: then the forme was added, in the first and second dayes workes. Lastly, the ornaments produced, as trees and plants, and beasts in the earth, starres in the skie, fishes in the sea, fowles in the aire.

Thus S. Paul expoundeth Moses, that God made the heaven and earth, Act. 14.15. God made the world. Acts 17.24. so that this heaven and earth, first made, was no other than the world, though not yet set in perfect order. Of this opinion are Basil, Ambrose, *Theodore*t, and most of the ancient Writers.

QVEST. II. What beginning Moses speaketh of.

Vers. 1. IN the beginning, &c. 1. This is neither to be understood, as *Iohn*saith, in the beginning was the word: for there hee speaketh of a beginning without a beginning, that is, from everlasting: but this was the beginning of the creation or being of things. 2. Neither is it to be understood causally, in the beginning: that is, for the beginning: as for Israels cause, or for the law, as the Hebrewes: for God created all things for himselfe, Prov. 16.4. It is also a forced exposition, by this beginning to understand Christ: although the doctrine bee most sound, that all things were created by him. 4. Nor yet, as Abe•Ezra, is this clause in the beginning, used here, syntactice, in construction with the next word: as though this should be the sense, in the beginning of creating, or when God created: and so the sense should bee suspended, till the second or third verse: for then hee would have said bar•, in the infinite, not bara in the prae•ertence: as it is vsed, Chap. 5.1. 5. Wherefore Moses saith in the beginning, in respect of the things created: that in that beginning, when God purposed to create the world, hee made first heaven and earth of nothing. Mercer: Iunius.

QVEST. III. Hebrewes curious observations.

Vers. 1. GOd created heaven and earth, &c. 1. The Hebrewes have here many curious observations, which I will not stand upon: as 1. by the letters of the two first words, bereshith, bara, they note the time from the beginning of the world untill the Messiah, Aleph and beth signifie 3000. r•sh, shin, tau, 900. jod, 10. that is, •910. which doth not much differ from the just time, according to the computation of some, from the creation to the Messiah. 2. They note the duration or continuance of the world, for 6000. yeeres, because aleph is six times found in the first verse. 3. By the 7. words of the first verse, they would have signified the 7. dayes of the weeke, and the 7. planets. These observations are more curious than profitable. 2. So is that question which is controverted among the Rabbins, whether the heaven or earth were made first: they thinke, that heaven being first named, was first made: but that reason is not firme: for the earth is named before the heavens. Gen. 2.4. and the manner of the Scripture is to mention that last,* which is treated of first: as in the second verse Moses beginneth againe to speake of the earth. Paguin. Wherefore it is most like, that God made the heavens and earth together in their first matter: as the cup and the cover: as in an egge the yolke and the white, as in a circle the center and circumference. Mercer. And this first creating of the heaven and earth, was a part of the first dayes worke. Luther. For otherwise the Lord had not made all things in six dayes, contrary to the Scripture. Exod. 20.11.

QVETS. III. How the earth is said to be without forme and void.

Vers. 2. The earth was without forme. 1. The earth is here so called by way of preoccupation: for it was not yet so called till the third dayes worke. vers. 10. Vatab. 2. The heaven was also without his forme, though not altogether so confused as the earth: for there being no light yet created, both the heaven and earth were unformed and imperfect. 3. The earth is said as yet to be, tohu and bohu, emptinesse and vacuity: this tohu, was not that materia prima, which the Philosophers dreamed of, and bohu to be the forme of things not yet applied to the matter: as though the heavens and earth had beene made of some precedent matter, whereas indeed God made the heaven and earth of nothing: which long continued not in this imperfect estate, the light being the same day created. 4. The darknesse here spoken of, was neither the element of fire, as some Hebrewes imagine, which if it bee, is bright and transparent: neither is it the same with tohu before mentioned, as R. Levi: neither was it any thing created, and a farre greater darknesse, than that which afterward was called the night, wherein there is some light of the starres: but it was a meere privation of light afterward created. 5. The waters here mentioned which covered the deepe as a garment in the beginning, Psal. 104. 6. were before comprehended vnder the name of earth, as all the inferiour elements beside, as the superiour parts of the world are insinuate by the heaven. Mercer.

QVEST. V. What is meant by the Spirit moved upon the waters?

The Spirit of God moved, &c. By the Spirit here 1. wee neither understand an Angell, which is the dreame of Cajetanus, for God needed not the ministry of Angels in making the world. 2. Nor yet the wind, as Tertullian. lib. cont. Hermog. 3. Nor the aire, as Theodoret. qu. 8. in Genes. If God had no use of the Angels to make the world, much lesse of inferiour creatures. 4. But this was the Spirit of God, wherby the creatures were fostered and formed. Iob. 26.13. His Spirit hath garnished the heavens.

QVEST. VI. What was the light created the first day?

Vers. 2. GOd said, let there be light, &c. Some doe thinke that this was a spirituall, no naturall or corporall light. August. lib. 1. in Genes. ad lit. c. 3. Rupert. 1. lib. de Trinitat. c. 10. but that cannot be, seeing this light made a visible and apparent difference betweene the day and night. 2. Some thinke it was the perfect light of the Sunne, which was created the first day, but afterward rehearsed to bee made in the fourth; Catharinus: but this is contrarie to the text: for the Sunne was made the fourth day. 3. Others thinke, that it was a bright and lightsome cloud, which was carried about, and gave light to the world, as Beda, Lyranus, Magister Sentent. &c. 4. Others, that it was a light without a subject, afterward fastened to the body of the Sunne, as Basil. homil. in Genes. 6.5. Others, that it was an exceeding bright shining light, such as no mortall nature could behold, being whole and altogether, and therefore it was afterward dispersed into divers bodies of the Sunne, Moone, and Starres: so Nazianzene, Theodoret; qu. 14. in Genes. 6. Some thinke it was the light of the Sunne yet imperfect, afterward perfected, enlarged, and beautified, Aquinas part. 1. qu. 67. art. 4. Thus we see how variable and inconstant mens opinions are, when they search into curious matters, and enquire after hid things: but it sufficeth us to know that God made the light, before the Sunne, that we should not attribute that to the creature, which was the worke only of the Creator: what manner of light it was, where placed, how it moved, how long it continued, because in Scripture there is no certainty, busily to search it were curiosity: it is most like, that it was a certaine light, which was not extinguished, when the Sunne was created, but rather increased, Vatab. Mercer.

And it is not unlike, but that this light proceeded from the element of fire, (as thinketh Damascene, lib. 2. de sid. c. 7. and Iunius,) as an effect thereof: and whereas it may be objected, that this light was moveable from one hemispheare to another, as causing day and night, whereas the elements, as the aire, are uniuersally dispersed and spread: it is also probable, that this light might be gathered to that side of the earth where it was day, and so to continue for a time, as wee see the water was afterward brought to one place, and so continueth: which light after the creation of the celestial bodies, might be drawne upward, and have his reflection upon the beame of the Sunne and of other Starres.

QVEST. VII. How the evening and morning were the first day.

Vers. 4. The evening and morning were the first day. 1. Some thinke that the evening is here taken for the day, because it is the end thereof, and the morning for the night, being likewise the end thereof, and that the artificiall day was before the night. So Ambrose, Chrysost. hom. 3. in Genes. 2. Others affirme the contrarie, that the evening and morning, are taken for the night and day, being the beginning thereof, the part for the whole, and doe gather thereof that the night belongeth to the day following: of this iudgement is Hierome, in cap. 2. Iona: which I hold to be the sounder, for these two reasons: 1. because this is the use of the Scripture, to account the naturall day from evening to evening, Levit. 23.32. From evening to evening shall you celebrate the Sabbath. 2. The morning is part of the day, and not of the night, Mark. 16.2. In the morning the first day of the weeke: the word is [< in non-Latin alphabet >], the same which is here vsed by the Septuag: for if the morning were part of the night, and not of the day, Christ in no sense could bee said to have risen the third day, and so one of the principall points of our faith should be shaken. 3. Further, we refuse Eugubinus conceit, which thinketh that in this first day, there was only an euening, not a morning, as in the rest; because the morning followeth after the night: but here no night went before, but the light was first: for the words of Moses are plaine and evident, that the evening and morning were the first day: it consisteth of both these parts, as the other dayes did: and this first day had also a night going before: not that darknes, which was upon the earth, as Iunius, but when God purposed to make the light, hee first caused the night to goe before, and brought forth the light of the day, Ramban, Mercer. 4. And the Sun not being yet made, which by his course and turning about maketh it day and night at the same time in diuers places: it may be thought, that it was day and night at the same instant now over the face of the whole earth. Mercer.

QVEST. VIII. How God is said to see the light to be good.

Vers. 4. GOd saw the light. 1. Not that God did not know the light to bee good, before hee made it: but Moses speaketh here according to our capacity, that God approveth and ratifieth that worke now done, which before he purposed to make: and Ramban well referreth it to the stedfastnesse and continuance of this worke, which God saw to be good. 2. God made a separation betweene light and darknesse, * not only in respect of their names, as Aben Ezra: but in the things themselves, giving to each of them their determined time. Mercer. 3. And in that it is said, God called the light day, &c. 1. God onely did not make and ordaine the light to be the day, Iun.

Muscul. 2. nor yet directed or taught men so to call it, Vatab. Mercer. 3. but beside God gave these names himselfe. Oecolamp.

QVEST. IX. Why it is called the first or one day.

Vers. 5. WEre the first day, or one day, as the Chalde, Septuagint, and Hierome translate. It is called then one, and not the first day, 1. not as R. Sol. because there was but one God in the world, for so there was but one likewise in the rest of the dayes. 2. Neither, as Hierome, because unity is good, and two bringeth division: for after the first day, noxious and hurtfull things were created. But the contrarie is evident out of the text, that God saw that all which he made, was good. 3. Neither, as R. Moss. is it callled one day, because there were yet no more: for it is so called in respect of the rest that follow. 4. Wherefore the reason is this: the Hebrewes use, Cardinalnumbers, for Ordinal, as the Grammarians speake: as one for the first: as Gen. 2.10. the name of the one, that is, of the first is Pishon: so likewise in the new Testament, Vna sabbati, one day of the weeke is taken for the first day. Mercer.

QVEST. X. Whether there are waters above the heavens.

Vers. 7. BY the firmament, which separated the waters which were under the firmament, from the waters above the firmament, divers of the ancient Writers understand the starry heaven, and that there are waters above those heavens which serve to mitigate the heat of the Starres, and from whence that abundance of raine came, wherewith the world was overflowne: so Basil. hom. 3. Hexemer. Ambros. lib. 2. in Hexemer. c. 2. Beda with others. But this cannot bee so: 1. for that the waters being of an heavy substance, must bee there kept against nature. 2. Neither could the great waters that drowned the world, come from thence, unlesse the heavens also should have beene dissolved: the windowes of heaven were opened, which was nothing else but the opening and loosing of the clouds, which as Gods bottles did powre downe raine abundantly. 3. Neither are wee to imagine such heat in the celestiall bodies (which are of no fiery or elementall nature) that they need to be refrigerated, or cooled. This firmament then is the spreading or stretching out of the aire, as the word rachiang signifieth, which divideth the raine and waters in the clouds, and keepeth them from the waters below: as is expressed in Iob. 26.6. which bindeth the waters in the clouds, and the cloud is not broken under them. Now whereas afterward, vers. 14. it is said, Let there bee lights in the firmament of heaven: it followeth not, that the firmament before spoken of, is the starry heaven; * for Moses here speaketh after the capacity of the vulgar people, who imagine the Starres to bee in the firmament of the aire, the eye being not able to distinguish betweene the region of the aire, and the azure skie. And according to the vulgar opinion, Moses also calleth the Moone a great light, because it so seemeth to the eye, to bee the next in greatnesse to the Sunne: whereas many other, both of the wandring and fixed Starres, doe exceed it in greatnesse.

And whereas that place is objected, Psal. 148.4. Praise him ye waters above the heavens: by heaven we are here to understand the lower region of the aire, as Psal. 18.13. The Lord thundred in heaven, and gave his voice hailestones and coales of fire: but thunder, lightning, haile, come not properly from the heaven, but out of the aire. Hereunto agreeth the name given unto heaven, which is called shamaiim, of sham and maiim: there is water: which agreeth first unto the inferiour region of the aire, where the raine is ingendred. This name also is applied to the higher heavens also: because the eye maketh no difference betweene them: Mercer.

QVEST. XI. How the waters were gathered together that covered the earth.

Vers. 9. GOd said againe: let the waters vnder heaven bee gathered together into one place, and let the dry land appeare, and it was so. Out of these words divers questions are moved, not unnecessary to be knowne, nor unprofitable to be handled, which shall be touched in their order.

First it is enquired how the waters, and whether they were gathered together, which before covered the face of the whole earth. 1. Some thinke, that the earth was this second day created, and by the earth men|tioned v. 1. that matter is understood, whereof the world was afterward made. Of this opinion is the Ma|ster of sentences, and Hugo lib. 1. de sacramentis; but wee refuse it, because the Lord saith not, let there bee earth, as when hee maketh other things, but onely, let the dry land appeare: whereby it is evident, that the earth was made before, but now severed from the waters.

*2. Some thinke that the earth was equall and plaine without hils and mountaines, that the waters might more speedily run together, and that this inequality that now is of the ground, begun after the flood: but this conceit is contrary to the Scriptures, Gen. 7.10. The waters prevailed fiftene cubits above the moun|taines. Prov. 8.25. Wisdome was begotten before the mountaines and hils: therefore in the beginning there were both mountaines and hils.

3. Others imagine, that the waters were dried up by the fervent heat of the Sun, and that the Northerne parts of the earth began to appeare first, as the higher ground, and the rest of the earth by little and little. Eugubinus in Cosmopeia.

4. Others, that the earth was dried by a mighty winde, as it was after the deluge: see Tostatus.^{*} But neither of these two opinions are probable: for the dry earth appearing all at once, was so prepared by a greater power, than either of the Sun or wind, which could not worke it at once, and hardly in continuance of long time.

5. Some thinke, that the waters did run together, and cover the other part of the earth,^{*} opposite to this where wee dwell, as Augustine seemeth to thinke, lib. 16. de civitate dei, c. 9. But the experience of skilfull Navigators, as of sir Francis Drake, Master Candish, with others, (who by their famous travels haue com|passed the wide Ocean) hath found that part of the world to bee habitable as ours is, and not to bee under the water.

6. Paulus Burgens. hath a strange device of this matter: he thinketh that the water maketh a globe by it selfe, and hath his proper center, and so likewise the earth, and this is the cause why the earth appeared dry,^{*} because the water did forsake the land, and was gathered to his owne center: in addition. ad postil. Nicol. de Lyra. But this opinion is very false and absurd: First, for that the text saith, that the water at the first cove|red the earth, v. 1. and so made but one globe with the earth, pressing to the same center: unlesse he will say, that God made a new kind of water the second day, and indued it with new qualities, which cannot be af|firmed. Secondly, Isay 40.22. The Lord is said to sit upon the circle of the earth: the word is chugh, a spheare or circle: as Iob 22.14. He walketh in the circle of heaven: But experience sheweth, that the earth without the sea maketh not a round globe or circle.

7. Some thinke that the Sea is much higher than the land, and so the waters were gathered as it were to a great heape, that the dry land might appeare. Thus Basil thinketh, and Ambrose in his Hexem•ron, l. 3. c. 2. but that this is not so, it shall be shewed in the next question.

8. Wherefore leaving these uncertaine opinions, I rather incline to think that these might be the meanes and causes of the appearing of the dry land, and separation of the waters. First the water while it compas|sed the earth, being of a lighter and thinner matter, might be coagulate together and thickned, as we see the sea water is of a grosser substance than the fresh water, & so be contained in a lesse compasse than before: so Augustine, lib. 1. de Genes. ad literam, 12. and Beda in his Hexemer. Secondly, the clouds being made this second day, and the region or stretching forth of the aire called the firmament brought into fashion, it is no other like, but that a great part of the water was extenuate and evaporate into the aire and clouds, a dai|ly experiment whereof we have by the conversion of the mists & clouds into water. Thirdly, * the earth be|ing much greater and deeper than the circumference of the water, which compassed the earth, might easily receive the water into the concavities and hollow places thereof, which were appointed of God to bee re|ceptacles for the water. And that the earth is of a greater depth than the water, that did at the first cover it, thus it may appeare, by taking the iust measure of the compasse o • the earth, and so of the diameter, that is, the through measure thereof.

Then for the compasse & circuit of the earth, Aristotle affirmeth it to containe 50000, * Italian miles •ib▪ 2. de coelo: Hypparchus as Pliny witnesseth, 34625. miles: Eratosthenes 31500. miles: Ptolome 22500. whom Basil followeth: Alphrag•nus 21500. Pharnelius 24514. But of late they which have compassed the whole Oce|an, doe find the circuit of the earth to bee but 19080. nineteene thousand and fourescore miles. And the di|ameter thereof is found to be 7000. miles, the semidiameter or space from the center of the earth to the cir|cumference 3500 miles. Now what the depth of the water was above the earth, may be conjectured by the height of the middle region of the aire, which is found by Mathematicians not to exceed 60. miles, as they gather both by the twilights which extend no further, and by the distance of meteors and exhalations, * which appeare in the aire.

Now the earth so far exceeding the water in depth, * might easily receive it into the hollow places & con|cavities thereof, which also is insinuated by the Hebrew word, Kava, that here signifieth to congregate or gather together, from whence the latine word Cavus, hollow, may seeme to be derived, as Pererius well no|teth. And this lastly, is Ambrose conjecture, that God did enlarge the low places of the earth, and the force also of the waters might make them deeper, lib. 3. Hexem. c. 2. And this is agreeable to the Scripture, Ps. 104.8. The waters descend to the place which thou hast founded for them: the word Iasadh signifieth to lay a foun|dation; so that God did make a low foundation for the waters in the earth. And in the same place the Pro|phet sheweth the manner how the waters were dispersed, that wheras they covered the earth as a garment, and stood vpon the mountaines: at the rebuke of God they did flee, and ascended by the mountaines, and went downe by the vallies, to the place appointed for them. 104. v. 6, 7, 8.

QVEST. XII. Whether the Sea be higher than the earth.

SEcondly, we are to enquire whether the Sea be higher than the earth, which was, as I shewed, the opi|nion of Basil and Ambrose with others, that thinke that the waters are kept by Gods extraordinary power and miraculous work, that they returne not to cover the earth: and that place is alleaged, Psal. 104.6. The waters stand above the mountaines: v. 9. Thou hast set them their bounds, which they shall not passe, &c. and Ierem. 5.22. Will ye not feare my presence, which haue set the sand for the bounds of the sea, by a perpetuall decree, that it cannot passe it, and though the waves thereof rage, yet can they not prevaile? &c.

For answer hereunto, we say, * that in the first place the Prophet speaketh of the first situation of the wa|ters above the earth and hils, before by Gods commandement they went to their place. In the next the Prophet speaketh not of any myraculous worke against nature, but of the ordinary providence of God by naturall meanes, keeping backe and bounding the Sea: as the Prophet giveth the like instance of the raine, vers. 24. They say not in their heart, let us feare the Lord, that giueth raine in due season, early and late, and reserue the appointed weekes of harvest. All these workes shew the watchfull providence of God, not by miracle, but by the naturall course of the creatures preserving the world. Indeed, the water in the red sea, stood up like a wall, * by a miraculous worke, and in Noahs deluge, the sea ouerflowed the earth by an extraordinary work: but now the sea is kept in by his naturall banks & bounds, as with swadling bands, Iob 38.9.

But whereas Ambrose, to prove the Sea higher than the earth, alleageth how Sesostris King of Aegypt, and Darius afterward would have cut the earth, and joyned the Aegyptian and the red Sea together: they finding the red sea higher by three cubits than the land of Aegypt, fearing the inundation of the whole countrey, left off from their purpose. Ambr. lib. 3. Hexemer. c. 3. First, it is true that these Kings attempted to bring Nilus into the red sea, and ceased from their enterprise upon that erroneous conceit: yet afterward the Ptolomies, Kings of Aegypt, as Strabo writeth, effected that worke, and made a passage out of Nilus into the red sea, * without any such danger of inundation. Secondly, though it were granted, that the red sea were higher than the plaines of Aegypt, it followeth not that it should be higher than all the earth.

So then our opinion is, that the earth is higher than the sea, and that this is more agreeable to the Scripture, 1 Psal. 107.23. They are said to goe downe to the sea in Ships, as to the lower place. 2 Psal. 24.2. Hee hath founded the earth, super maria, above the Seas: ergo not under them. 3. Eccles. 1.7. All the rivers goe into the Sea: but the water hath his naturall course downward. Now whereas the ships sailing upon the seas seeme to one standing upon the shoare, as floting aloft; the reason thereof is, because the sea being a plain liquid element, doth more easily shew the round compasse thereof rising to the fashion of a globe, <...> earth, being uneven full of hills and dales.

QVEST. XIII. How the waters were gathered into one place.

The third question is, how the waters are said to bee gathered into one place, seeing there bee <...> lakes, * rivers, and fountaines that are farre asunder: First, we may answer with Basil, that this <...> is not to be vnderstood of every collection and gathering of water, but only of the sea, which though it be diuers in name, yet it is continued together, one sea being perpetually joyned with another, unlesse it bee the Caspian Sea, which some thinke to be filled by the Northerne Ocean, as Strabo, Pliny, Basill others, that it is fed only by rivers, and emptied againe by the secret passages of the earth, as Herodotus in Clio. Aristot. lib. 2. Meteor. And Ambrose hereto agreeth, that like as all the earth, except certaine Ilands, maketh one continent, as Spaine, Syria, Africa, so the sea being joyned together, maketh but one general collectiō of water. Some other thinke, that the waters are gathered into one place, because as Salomon saith, All rivers (though they have diuers heads) run into the sea, Eccles. 1.7. Or else we may say, that the waters are gathered into one place, that is, a place separated and divided from the habitable earth: so that the waters have not one place in respect of their diuers divisions, but because they are severed from their earth, into their proper places.

QVEST. XIV. Whether the earth be founded upon the waters.

The fourth question is, whether the earth be founded upon the waters, which was the opiniō of Thales among the Philosophers, & of Chrysostome among the Christians. Which opinion seemeth to be favoured by two places of Scripture, Psal. 24.2. He hath founded it upon the Seas. 2 Pet. 3.5. The earth was of the water, & by the water, by the word of God. For the first place, Basil so understandeth it, that upon the Seas & flouds should signifie, in the waters, because the earth was first in, and under the water. Augustine referreth it to the Ilands and promontories, that doe hang over the sea, lib. 2. de Genes. c. 5. Euthymius thinketh it is meant of the secret passage of the water, that run within the earth. But the meaning of that place is evident to bee this, that the earth is founded not upon, but above the waters: so the Hebrew word gnal signifieth supra, aboue: and so we see, as wa[•] noted before out of Augustine, that the dry land hangeth over the sea.

For the other place of S. Peter, the earth is said to be of the water, not as though it was made of the wa|ter, but because it was made to appeare out from the water which before covered it: the other part of the sentence is not well translated, by the water, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, but in the water: as 1 Pet. 3.20. Noe is said to bee sa|ved, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, not by the water, but in the water. And so the earth may be well said to be in the water, because the whole continent being lesse in compasse than the Ocean, seemeth to be as a great Iland in the sea.

But that the earth hath not his foundation upon the waters, it is evident both by experience, because we see the earth to be the heavier element, and so to have his situation lowest: as also by the Scripture, Iob 26.7. He hangeth the earth upon nothing, then not upon the waters. Psal. 104.5. He hath set the earth upon her foundation, &c. that it cannot be moved: the earth hath no foundation, but of it owne by the word of God[▪] and seeing the earth is immoveable, it is not like to be founded upon the waters, which are moveable.

QVEST. XV. Whether the dry land was caused to appeare upon the second or third day.

Vers. 9. GOd said againe. 1. Some thinke that this was part of the second dayes worke, the causing of the dry land to appeare: as Aben Ezra, to whom subscribeth Mercerus; their reasons are these: 1. because it is said. Gen. 2.4 that in one day God made the heavens and the earth. Ans. This is spokken of the heaven and earth which were made in the beginning on the first day. Gen. 1.1, 2[▪] because the ap|probation of this worke,^{*} omitted before in the second day, is inserted here. vers. 10. Ans. This approbation, God saw that it was good, is omitted before: not because Gehenna was made the second day, and th[•] Angels fell then, as the Hebrewes imagine, nor because two is the beginning of division, as Hierome: for this division was good, whereas the creatures were in confusion before: nor yet for that the second dayes worke was not yet ended, as Aben Ezra: but because the worke begun upon the second day, was finished upon the third. For the which cause, this approbation is omitted in the first verse, when as yet the hea|vens and earth were created in their [•]ude and imperfect state.

2. It is therefore more probable, that this appearing of the drie land was part of the third dayes worke: and that the second dayes worke was finished: not so much because this worke beginneth with *vaio*mer, and God said: which is used sometime in the beginning of a new worke upon the same day; as vers. 26. but for that, vers. 8. this conclusion is added; the evening and the morning was the second day, which is an evident distinction of the severall dayes workes. To say with Aben Ezra, that an 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, is here to be admit|ted, that to be set downe last which was done first, is to force and racke the story.

QVEST. XVI. Of the divers kinds of trees and plants created out of the earth.

Vers. 11. Then God said, let the earth bud forth, &c. 1. God caused the earth to bring forth these things, without helpe of the Sunne or Starres, which were not yet made: as hee caused the light to shine in the first day, without the ordinarie instrument thereof, the Sunne: Iun. 2. Although God speaketh to the earth, yet it hath no understanding or will to obey, as some Philosophers imagine, but God worketh this by his power: Mercer. 3. Here are three kindes of plants and fruits brought out of the earth: the bud, the herb, the tree; which some distinguish into herbs, shrubs, and trees. Vatablus maketh the bud and herb to be all one: the first so called in the sprouting thereof, the other in the perfection: but they differ rather thus; desheh is that kinde which the earth bringeth forth of it owne accord: gnesheh,* that which beareth seed, and is set and planted by the industry of man: gnetz, is that kinde of greater plants, which are called trees: Iun. 4. Whereas the earth is bid to bring forth gnetz peri, the tree of fruit: Rob. Sel. his note is ridiculous, that God would have had the trees to bee all fruit, and not only bearing fruit, and because the earth did not bring forth such, it was afterward accursed. Likewise R. Isaakhis collection is curious, that would have this clause understood only of the trees of paradise, as though there were no fruit-bearing trees without paradise: Mercer. 5. Neither had the earth onely power given to bring forth these kindes of fruits, but it both brought them forth in act, and had power given to continue the propagation of them: Mercer. Calvin. And therefore it is added, fruitfull trees, bearing fruit, that is, which even then came forth with fruit for the present use of man: Iun. 6. Neither yet, as Basil thinketh, all trees were made fruitfull in the beginning, which afterward became barren when the earth was cursed. But either Moses speaketh of the fruitfull trees as more principall, or even those trees which beare not fruit, yet because they are profit|table for medicine, or other uses, may also be numbred among the fruitfull trees: or rather they may bee comprehended among those trees, that beare their seed, though no fruit: of such kinde are ashes, will|lowes, and such like.

QVEST. XVII. Whether the world were created in the spring or autumnne.

Vers. 12. AND the earth brought forth the bud of herb. Some would prove by this▪ that the world was made in the Autumnne, because the trees were created with ripe fruit. Concerning this matter there are three opinions.

1. Mercator thinketh that the world was made in Iulie: and his chiefe reason is taken from Noahs floud, where the beginning of the yeere he would have to bee in Iulie; because in the eleventh moneth, which he supposeth to bee in May, when the olive beginneth to put forth, the dove brought greene olive leaves▪ Contra. 1. There is no mention made of greene leaves. Gen. 8.11. the word is gnaloh, which Hierome translateth elsewhere frondes olivae, branches of olive. Nehem. 8.16. such as they made bowers of: and the Septuagint, cal|s it (< in non-Latin alphabet >), a dry stalke: it might be then some branch of the olive tree, rather than the leaves. 2. Admit that the branch or stalke had leaves, this is no argument of the spring in May: for the olive loseth not her leaves, as other trees, Plin. lib. 16. c. 20. and therefore as Chrysostome thinketh, the olive might remaine greene under the water: for it is unlike, that the olive in seven dayes should have new leaves: for seven dayes before the dove was sent forth, and could finde nothing.

2 Other doe thinke, that the world was made in the Autumnne, in the moneth Tisri. 1. because that moneth was the beginning of the yeere, as Iosephus thinketh, before Moses by a new institution appoin|ted Nisan (which answereth to part of March and April▪) to be the first moneth: and therefore it is called the end of the yeere, Exod. 34.22. from whence they began the account of the Jubile. 2. And beside they use this as another reason: because, in the autumnne the fruit of trees and plants, as grapes, apples, are ripe, and not before. Contra. 1. It might bee, that the Israelites accounted the beginning of their yeere accor|ding to the manner of the Egyptians, among whom they lived, who began their yeere in the moneth Ptho, which answereth to September: as the Athenians did in the moneth [Hecatombaion,*] which is in June: but it cannot bee shewed, that this reckoning was observed from the beginning. It is indeed called the end of the yeere, because all the fruit of the yeere past was then gathered, and seed time began anew: and so it is with us: the autumnne is counted the beginning of the yeere for matters of husbandry; and yet wee in the computation of yeeres begin in the spring at the Annuntiation. It is true also that the yeere of Jubile then tooke beginning; but it is notwithstanding called not the first, but the seuenth moneth, Levit. 25.10. the reason is, why it began then, because all workes of husbandry, and labours of servants, which then used to begin, did cease in the Jubile.

2. Concerning the other objection of ripe fruit, we shall not need to answer as some doe, that the fruit did hang still upon the trees till the autumnne, or that some trees in Paradise bare fruit in the spring, some in the autumnne: or that they might beare fruit twice in the yeere, as Plinie reporteth of India, and Solin of the Island Tephobane: but I rather thinke, this first bearing of fruit being supernaturall, that the trees again bare fruit the same yeere according to their naturall course. And this may seeme to bee gathered by S. Iohns allusion to the tree of life, that bare fruit every moneth, Revel. 22.2. that in the beginning, trees did beare fruit in the yeere more than once.

3. I thinke it therefore more probable, that the world was created in the spring, for these reasons.

1. Ambrose useth this reason,* upon these words, germinet terra, let the earth bud forth the bud of the herb: Dedit formam fructus, &c. God gave and prescribed a forme for the fruits to grow, ut initio cujusque anni, that in the beginning of every yeere herbs should sprout forth. This we see to be done only in the spring.

*2. He useth also another reason: Vt ostenderet Scriptura veris tempora in constitutione mundi, ait, men/sis hic vobis initium mensium: to shew that it was spring when the world was made, the Scripture saith, this shall be unto you the beginning of moneths. Moses then brought in no new institution, but it is more like,* he revived the old use of beginning the yeere from March, which was discontinued in Egypt by another custome of that country.

3. Further, whereas God blessed the creatures, and bid them increase and multiply: which blessing presently tooke effect: who knoweth not, that for most kinds of creatures, especially the fish and fowle, the fittest time to engender and increase is in the spring. And whereas God gave them the greene herb for meat: it is not like, that presently the greene herb with frost and cold began to wither and decay. Adam also was thrust out of Paradise to till the ground: but the spring time is apter for tilling, than the autumnne or winter season.

*4▪ Beda beside his owne opinion, maketh mention of a synode holden in Palestina by Theophilus Bishop of Cesarea, wherein it was agreed, that the world was made in the spring, and that Christ was crucified the same day that Adam was created: at which time he also transgressed, that the first Adam herein might be a type of the second.

5. This also may be proved by comparing the time of Noahs flood with the time of the creation: for seeing there are accounted full yeeres 1656. from the creation to the deluge, they must fall out both about the same season. But that the flood came in the spring, not in the autumnne, may appeare by divers reasons, which I reserve for that place. Chap. 8. quest. 10.

And of this opinion, that the world was made in March, Pererius nameth many, though he dissent from them: as Eusebius, Cyrillus, Hierosolym. Athanasius, Nazianzen, Damascen, Ambrose, Beda, with others. About this question there is a great controversie betweene two famous Rabbins, R. Iosua, who holdeth the world to be made in the spring, and R. Eleazer in the autumnne: but the other opinion is more probable, as I have shewed.

QVEST. XVIII. When the Sunne and Moone were created.

Vers. 14. GOd said, let there be lights in the firmament, &c. 1. These lights then, were neither made the first day, and but placed now in the firmament, as the Hebrewes thinke. 2. Neither was the Sunne made the first day, the Moone the next, the Stars the third, as Eugubinus: but they were all made upon the fourth day. 3. Neither yet doe we thinke that the celestiall bodies were made in order, as Basil conceiveth, but rather, that they were created all at once. Mercer. 4. And whereas the light created the first day, is called, Or: but the Starres are called, meoroth, as of the light: hence it may appeare, that these lightsome bodies were made the receptacles of that light then created, which was now increased and united to these lights: Mercer: rather than to thinke, that the element of fire was that first light, as Iunius. 5. But wee explode those Jewish fantasies: that the Sunne and Moone were created of equall light in the beginning; * but when the Moone envied the light of the Sunne, God brought it into subjection, and orde|red, that from thenceforth, the Moone should receive light of the Sunne: and of the light starre-beames, which the Moone was deprived of, they say, God made the rest of the lesser Starres: ex Mercer.

QVEST. XIX. Of the greatnesse of the Sunne and Moone.

Vers. 16. GOd made two great lights.) That these two great lights are the Sunne and Moone, there is no question: and that the Sunne is the greatest of all the celestiall bodies, it is also question|lesse. Anaxagoras did hold the Sunne much greater than Peloponesus, a countrey in Grecia. Anaximander to be as big as the earth. Plutar. lib. 2. de placitis Philosophor. c. 21. but since the Mathematicians have found that the Sunne exceedeth the earth in bignesse 166. times, and none of the other Starres, which they call of the first magnitude, whereof there are 15. to exceed the earth above 18. times. The Moone, though some among the heathen have judged it bigger than the earth, as the Stoikes, and equall to the Sunne, as Parmenides, and some among the Christians have thought it in bignesse next to the Sunne, because it is here tra|ined to bee a great light, as Basil upon this place, and Augustine, yet since by more diligent search, it is found to be lesse than the earth. 39. times, * and to be the least of all the Starres, except Mercurie. Mose there|fore here speaketh according to the opinion and capacity of the vulgar sort, to whose sight the Moone seemeth greatest, next to the Sunne, because it is nearest of all the Starres to the earth, and for that it is greatest in operation, and hath the government of the night. The reason of the greatnesse of these lights, is their farre distance from the earth. Empedoclessaith, the Moone is twice so farre from the Sunne, as it is from the earth, but the Mathematicians say, it is 18. times so farre from the Sunne. Era•osthenes affirmeth the Sunne to be 804000000. furlongs distant from the earth, * that is, an hundred thousand thousand, and five hundred thousand miles, counting eight furlongs to a mile. And the Moone to bee remote from the earth 780000. furlongs, almost an 100. thousand miles. Plutarc. de placitis Philosoph. l. 2. c. 31. The Hebrewes make the distance of the starry heavens from the earth to be about 500. yeeres journey: Aratus but 30.

dayes journey: and the thicknesse of the earth, as much: the one maketh it too little, the other too much.

But not to stand upon these curious observations, * Ambrose giveth sensible and apparant reasons of the greatnesse of the Sunne and Moone by daily experience. First, saith he, by this their magnitude is evident, because they appeare of the like quantity to all through the world, whereas heards of cattell being espied farre off, seeme as ants, and a ship discerned farre in the seas, seemeth no bigger than a flying dove. Againe, as soone as the Sunne ariseth, all the Starres are hid: and further, if the Sunne were not of such greatnesse, how could all the world be lightened by it? Ambr. l. 4. Hexemer. cap. 6.

QVEST. XX. How the Starres doe serve for signes.

Vers. 14. LEt them be for signes and seasons, dayes and yeeres:] 1. By signes here we need not understand, those extraordinary signes, which it hath pleased God sometime to shew, as in the Sunne in Io/sua, and afterward in Hezekiahs time: for in this place the ordinary use of these creatures is shewed. 2. Nor yet are we forced to referre it to the Astronomicall signes, though the Scripture doe also approve the lawfull use of them, Iob 9.9. He maketh Arcturus, Orion, Pleiades, and the climates of the south: for this combining and conjunction of the Starres was afterward found out by art and experience.* 3. But these celestiall bodies doe serve, both for politicall observations, as the computation of moneths and yeeres, and the celebration of festivals among the Jewes, as also to be signes of naturall things, as for setting, sowing, planting, and discerning of the weather, and seasons of the yeere: as Orion bringeth raine, the Pleiades the spring. Iob 38.31. We acknowledge then foure lawfull uses of these celestiall bodies. 1. To distinguish the day and night, light and darknesse. 2. To be for signes of weather. 3. To serve for times and seasons, as weekes, dayes, and yeeres. 4. To give influence by their heat, light, and motion, to these inferiour parts. Mercer. Iun.

But for morall matters, as to calculate mens nativities, and to discern of their dispositions to good or evill, or for supernaturall, to foretell things to come, to discover secrets, finde out things that are lost, or such like, these celestiall signes have no use at all, neither hath the vaine and superstitious invention of Astrology any ground at all out of this place, but is altogether repugnant to 1. the Scripture: 2. against reason: 3. vaine: 4. impious.

These foure points shall briefly be proved. 1. The Scripture thus testifieth, Isay 44.25. I destroy the tokens of the southsayers, and make them that conjecture fooles, and turne the wise men backward, &c. Ierem. 10.2. Be not afraid of the signes of heaven, though the heathen be afraid of such.* 2. The wise man saith, Prov. 27.1. Boast not thy selfe of to morrow, thou knowest not what a day may bring forth. If a man know not his owne way, neither can tell what shall happen to himselfe, much lesse can it be seene in the Starres: for the Spirit of a man best knoweth the things of man. 1 Cor. 2.11. and if we cannot bee certaine what shall befall the next day, much lesse, what may happen the next moneth, or yeere. Againe, if by the aspect of the Starres judgement could be given of man, then should they have dominion over man, whereas they were created for mans vse, Psal. 8.3.

3. It is a vaine and deceitfull study; neither are the predictions of Astrologers true,* as it may thus appeare; first, if there had beene any certainty in this art, it is most like, that the Devill should have the best insight into it, both by reason of his subtilty of nature, and long experience: but it is certaine that the Devill herein is deceived; for hereof it is, that the Oracles of Apollon ministred by spirits, directed by the aspect of Starres, were for the most part vaine, false, deceitfull.* This testifieth Porphirius in his booke of Oracles, cited by Eusebius, lib. 6. de praeparat. Evang. c. 1. that Apollo his Oracles were made by Astrology; and that they were false and vaine, or ambiguous and deceitfull, one Oenomaus a Philosopher among the Greekes, proveth at large, as Eusebius witnesseth, lib. 5. de praeparat. Evang. cap. 10. Againe, if there were any certainty in these Astrologicall praedictions, it would chiefly appeare in their Prognostications of the weather, which is the proper subject of the Planets operation: but herein daily experience sheweth how grossely they are deceived, that foretell such things, neither agreeing with themselves, nor yet with the event of the weather: yet I deny not but that the fairenesse and foulennesse of the seasons may be conjectured, when as the time is neere, and the naturall causes have begun to worke:* as in the evening to ghesse of the weather the next day, and in the morning, of the afternoone weather; as that a cloud in the west will bring a shower, and the south wind heat: as our Saviour saith, Luk. 12.55. But long before to declare these things, before there is any working in the naturall causes, it is not in the art or skill of man. Ambrose to this purpose saith well: Cum pluvia expeteretur ab omnib. &c. when, saith he, vaine was desired of all, and one said, the new Moone will bring raine, although we were very desirous of raine, yet I wished, that such speeches should not be true: yea it did me good that no raine fell, till it came at the prayers of the Church, that it might appeare, that it came not by the influence of the Moone, but by the providence of the Creator. Hexem. lib. 4.7.

4. The impiety of this science is evident, because they ascribe all to the influence and operation of the starres, and so bring in a fatall necessity, and rob God of his honour and glory.* One Petrus de Alaco a magnifier of Astrology, doubteth not to say, that Noahs flood, and the birth of our Saviour, might have beene foretold by the knowledge of the starres. Maternus affirmeth, that when Saturne is in Leo, men are thereby long lived, and their soules goe to heaven. Albumazar saith, that the Moone being joyned with Iupiter in the head of the dragon, whatsoever a man asketh of God, he shall obtaine: Thus reporteth of them Pererihus, lib. 2. in Genes. cap. 1. Thus they attribute all things both good and evill to the starres, and thus the grace of God is made void: yea as Origen saith, while they make alias stellas beneficas, alias maleficas, some good, some bad starres, they open their mouth against heaven, making the creature faulty and culpable, whereas God created all things good: tract. 4. in Matth.

But if it shall be objected, that many things fall out according to the predictions of Astrologers: I briefly answer,* that it commeth so to passe sometimes, not by the dexterity of their wit and knowledge, but either by the subtilty of Sathan that foretellet, what he himselfe is permitted to worke, or by the credulity of such as consult with them, whereby their affections give way unto the effect: or by the secret disposing of Gods providence, that such things should fall out for the probation of the faithfull, and further confusion of misbeleevers.

QVEST. XXI. Great Whales, how said to be created.

Vers. 21. GOd created great whales. 1. We need not, because God is said here to create the whales, which were made out of the water, to have recourse unto that indigested matter which was made the first day of nothing: Calvin. So not only that is said to be created, which is made of nothing; but that also, which is made new out of some matter, as man is said afterward to be created, yet made out of the earth.* 2. But we deride that Jewish fable, that God when he had made two great whales, lest the increase of so huge a creature might tend to the destruction of the rest, he did geld the male, and salted the female to be meat for the just in the next world. As though God did not foresee every thing before it was made, and approved it being made; and beside the Lord gave a blessing to all fishes, and so to the whales among the rest, to increase and multiply. Mercer.

QVEST. XXII. Of the great Whales.

Vers. 21. GReat Whales: the word turmin signifieth a serpent, dragon, or great fish. And this epithete great, is not added without cause: for the whale or great fish is the greatest of all living creatures, Iob 41.24. In the earth there is none like him. It is almost incredible, what some writers report, of the hugeness of these creatures: the Hebrewes write, that whales have beene found of 500. stadia or furlongs in length: Mercer. Some have appeared in the waters of the bignesse of Islands: Muscul. Pliny writteth, that in the Indian sea there are certaine fish called balaenae, whirlpooles, quatuor jugerum, of three or foure akors or furlongs in length, and certaine long fish called pristes, of 200. cubits, and eales in the riuer Ganges, of 300. feet in length: lib. 9. cap. 30. The same Author citeth Iuba King of Mauritania, who maketh mention, writing to Caius Caesar sonne of Augustus, of whales in the Arabick coasts of 600. foot in length,* and 300. in breadth: lib. 16. c.40. Aelianus also writeth, lib. 15. c. 21. that Alexander found in a caue in India, a dragon supposed to be 70. cubits long: they saw only his head out of the caues mouth, not da|ring with the whole oast to approach neerer, whose eyes appeared to be of the bignesse of a Macedonian target or shield. These strange reports are found in forraine histories, the truth whereof I will leave to the credit of the authors, and the judgement of the readers. Ambrose saith, aequalia montibus corpora habere prae|dicantur: the Whales are reported to have bodies equall to Mountaines. Hexemer. li. 5. c. 10. Certainly it is evident out of Scripture, that these creatures of the sea, are of a wonderfull bignes: as it appeareth both by that description, Iob 41. His jawes are likened to doores, v. 5. his scales to shields, v. 6. hee maketh the sea to boile like a pot, v. 22. As also by the story of Ionas, where we reade, that the Prophet was swallowed whole of a great fish, and cast up againe. And not to search further, our owne Chronicles make mention of great fishes, that have been taken, as of one that was in length 22. yards, being 12. foot broad betwene the eyes: some of his ribs were 16. foot long, his tongue 15. foot long: three men might stand upright one upon another in the opening of the jawes. Stow, ann. Elizab. 16.

QVEST. XXIII. Whether the fowles were made out of the water or earth.

Vers. 21. Which the waters brought forth, &c. and every feathered fowle, &c. By these words it seemeth, that the fowles had their beginning out of the water: but the contrary is affirmed, c. 2. v. 19. So the Lord God formed of the earth every beast of the field, and every fowle of heaven, &c.

To reconcile these places, we neither affirme that the fowles were made of the thinner part of the water extenuated into the aire, as Augustine, lib. 3. in Genes. ad lit. c. 3. and Rupertus: nor yet that they were made of mud or slime, and so partly of earth, partly of water, as the Hebrewes; nor yet that they were made of the element of the water, as Eugubinus in Cosmopeia: nor yet that the fowles were made part of the water, and part of the earth: as wee see there are two sorts of them, some that live in the water, and some that keepe the land, as Vatablus. But we thinke, that the fowles were created onely out of the earth, Gen. 2.19. neither is the contrary affirmed here, that the waters brought them forth: but the Lord saith, let the fowle foye upon the earth. v. 20. so Iun. Cajetan, Catharin.

QVEST. XXIV. How and wherefore God is said to blesse the fish.

Vers. 22. And God blessed them, &c. 1. God is not said before to have blessed the herbs and trees, as here hee blesseth these living creatures; because the generation of living things, whether it be 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, in bringing forth young, egges, or wormes, is a more admirable worke of nature, than is seene in the increase of plants. 1. In that the beasts of the earth are not blessed, as here the fishes and fowles, it is not because of the serpent, that was to be accursed, as the Hebrewes imagine: but for that the abundance and number of the fishes exceedeth the other: yet it must bee understood that God also blessed the rest, though it bee not expressed. 3. The Lord here first of all speaketh to the creatures, because now he beginneth to create living things: Iun. hee speaketh to them, as he did to the whale to cast up Ionas, not by any syllabicall voyce, but by his omnipotent will and power, which the creature forthwith obeyeth. Mercer. 4. The fishes are said to fill the waters, the fowle to multiply; because the fishes are more in number, and they only live in the waters: but the fowles live not only vpon the earth, but other creatures beside. 5. By the waters in the seas, all other gatherings together of waters are understood: but the Seas are named as the principall, wherein there is greatest store of fish. Iun. 6. Eugubinus here is deceived, that thinketh, that the fishes began to rise out of the water; as soone as the Seas were gathered together, and so every day their creation was in working till the fifth day: for this were to confound the workes of the creation, which Moses precisely referreth to their severall dayes workes. Mercer.

QVEST. XXV. Whether all kind of creeping things were made in the beginning.

Vers. 25. EVERY creeping thing.] If every kind of worme and creeping thing were created in the beginning, then we refuse Augustines conceit, that such creatures as are generated of dead bodies, were not then made, lib. 3. de. Genes. c. 14. For like as other perfect beasts were at the first formed out of the earth, yet afterward left to their usuall generation, so these creeping wormes, flies, and such like, might then have their creation as the rest, though now ingendred by corruption of other matter. Likewise wee reject Peregrinus conceit, that thinketh those creatures which doe spring of corruption, and are noysome and of[fensive to man, not to have had their beginning then: for by this reason, neither should the serpent have beene created: these creatures, though hurtfull now to mans nature, if man had not fallen, should not have beene so. We therefore rather allow Basils opinion, that even these small beasts, which doe spring from corruption now, were produced in the first creation. hom. 7. in Genes. and this is more agreeable to the text, which mentioneth every creeping thing then to have beene made: yet wee doe not thinke that there may not bee, or is not in the world, any other forme or fashion of flye or worme, than was in the first creation, but that the generall kind was then formed of such severall creeping things, and a generall power and ability given to produce them out of such corruptible matter, as is fit for their generation.

QVEST. XXVI. Whether creatures of a mixed kind were made in the beginning.

ANother question also here ariseth, concerning those kinds of beasts which are brought forth by a mixt generation, as the mule by the mixture of the Asse and the Mare, the Leopard of the Libbard and Lionesse, the Lynx of the wolfe and hind: whether these mixed kindes were created in the beginning. Some doe thinke that they were, but I hold rather the contrary with Rupertus, lib. 1. de Trinitat. c. 57. and for these reasons: 1. because these are no new kinds, but the first kinds made in the creation mixed and conjoyned together, that we need not fetch their originall from the creation. 2. Because wee finde it directly expressed in Scripture, that Anah the sonne of Sibeon first found out mules in the wilderness, as he fed his fathers asses, Gen. 6.24. he was the first that found out the generation of mules, by the unnaturall coupling of asses and mares. 3. The Lord directly forbiddeth to plow with an ox and an asse, Deut. 22.10. much more unlawfull was it to couple divers kinds for generation, than to yoke divers kinds together for tillage. 4. By the same reason wee might fetch the patterne of other monstrous births from the creation: as such whereof Plutarch maketh mention, as of one Onoscolis, the daughter of one Aristonymus,^{*} begotten of an asse; and Epona begotten of a mare by Fulvius Stellus: Plutarch. parall.29. But these monstrous generations <◇> never by Gods creation or ordinance brought into the world, but by mans wicked invention.

QVEST. XXVII. How God made man according to his image.

Vers. 26. LEt us make man in our image according to our likenesse. 1. We neither here approve the opinion of Rupertus, who by image, here understandeth the second person of the Trinity, by likenesse or similitude the third person, namely, the holy spirit, lib 2. de Trinitat. c. 2. for in that the Lord saith, let us make man in our image, the image of the whole Trinity is expressed, and not the image of the father onely.

2 Neither are the words so to be taken, as though man was made according to the similitude of that humane nature which Christ the Sonne of God was to assume: whereas the Scripture saith, that Christ tooke upon him the likenesse of man, Phil. 2.7. and not man his likenesse.

3. We also reject the conceit of Eugubinus and Oleaster, who thinke, that God took upon him an humane shape, when he created man, and therefore said, Let us make him in our image:^{*} for neither did God the Father ever appeare in any such shape, neither could it bee said to bee Gods image, being assumed but for a time.

4. Neither yet doe we distinguish these words, as some of the Fathers, Origen, Basil, Ambrose, who re|ferre image to the naturall gifts of reason, understanding, memory, the similitude to the supernaturall gifts of grace, as of holinesse, righteousnesse: for we see that the Apostle applieth the imago to the work of grace in our renovation or regeneration. Coloss. 3.10. Let us put off the old man, &c. seeing wee have put on the new, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him. Wee conclude therefore, that there is no difference in the sense and meaning of these words, but that one is the explication of the other.

QVEST. XXVIII. Wherein the image of God consisteth in man.

ANother great question is here briefly to be discussed, wherein this image of God consisteth, according to the which man was created.

1. Epiphanius judgeth it a matter incomprehensible, because he thought that the perfect image of God is here understood without any difference or dissimilitude: Epiphan, haeres. 70. whereas the Scripture saith not, that man absolutely was made like unto God.

2. *Theodore*t, thought that man onely and not woman was created after the image of God: whereas the contrary is evident, vers. 27. God created man in his image: and then it followeth, male and female created hee them: signifying thereby, that both were created according to his image. And whereas the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 11.7. Man is the image and glory of God, the woman the glory of the man: he speaketh onely of the au|thority and preeminence given unto man, wherein the image of God in that behalfe is more expressed in the man, but not of the principall part of that image, which, as the Apostle saith, consisteth in righteousness and holinesse: * according to which image the woman was created as well as the man.

Basil, Chrysostome, doe understand this image of the dominion which man hath over the other creatures.

Augustine of the immortality of the soule, where in it is like unto God, *lib. de quantitat. anim. c. 2. Nyssen*us in Hexameron.] herein saith this image consisteth, because the soule is capable of all goodnesse: Da|m●scene, [3] because man hath free-will, lib. 2. de fide, c. 12. The Master of Sentences, distinct. 16. be|cause [4] man hath reason and understanding, and therein excelleth all other creatures. Others, beside these [5] faculties of the soule, wherein the image of God is expressed, doe further affirme, that the likenesse is in [6] these respects: 1. Because that as all things originally are in God, so also man doth participate with the [7] nature of all creatures, of plants in growing and increasing, of beasts in sense and moving, of God and An|gels [8] in understanding. 2. As God can doe all things by his power, so man by wit, reason, and are, doth com|passe many difficult things. 3. As God is the principall end of all things: so man is the secondary end, for whose use all things were created, * and he for the glory of God.

I will also set downe more at large the divers conceits of Augustine, of this creating of man according to Gods image.

1. He thinketh this image and similitude chiefly to consist in the soule, and secondarily in the bodie, because it was made to bee obedient to the soule, and of an upright forme to behold the heavens, lib. 83. quest. 51.

2 Hee placeth Gods image in man in this, that as all things are of God, so all men had their beginning from Adam. qu. 45. ex vet. test.

3. Hee thinketh this image to consist in mans dominion over the creatures, de Genes. cont. Manich. c. 22.

4. The soule is like unto God, because it is whole in the whole body, and in every part thereof, it nei|ther increaseth, nor decreaseth with the body.

5. The soule expresseth the image of the Trinity, in the understanding, will, memory, which are three fa|culties, yet make but one soule.

6. The soule liveth by it selfe, and doth also quicken the body, as God quickneth all things.

7. The soule beareth the image of God in reason, the similitude of likenesse of God in charity. lib. de spi|rit. & anim. c. 39.

Thus Augustine varieth placing this image sometime in one thing, sometime in another. But to put all out of doubt, the Apostle sheweth, how we are to understand the image of God in man, *Eph. 4.24. Which after God is created in righteousness and true holinesse. Coloss. 4.10. Put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him. This image then consisteth not so much in the substance of the soule, or in the naturall faculties thereof, as of understanding, free will, memory, but in the know|ledge and illumination, holinesse and justice of the soule, which are now wrought in man by grace, and then were given by creation. Our reasons are these: 1. If this similitude and image were in the spirituall essence and substance of the soule, both wicked spirits and wicked men should have the image of God, for the substance of spirit and soule remaineth in them.

2. Ambrose thus reaso•eth: Deus non damnat imaginem suam, &c. God doth not damne his owne image, or send it into hell fire. &c. but the soules of the wicked are damned: ergo, the image is not in the substance of the soule: imago illa, &c. that image wherein thou wast made after the likenesse of God, is not con|demned, but crowned Serm. 10. in Ps. 119. but the righteousness and holinesse of the soule only is crowned.

3 That image, after which men are naturally begotten, is not the image of God: for it were absurd, if not impious, to say, that Gods image may naturally be propagated: but men by nature receive the image of •he •asonable soule, as Adam begat Seth in his owne likenesse after his image, Gen. 5.3. that is, like un|to him both in soule and bodie: wherefore the image of God consisteth not in the substance of the rea|sonable soule.

* 4 That image of God, after the which Adam was created, is by his fall utterly lost and extinguished, for otherwise this image need not to bee renewed and revived in us, as it is by Christ, as the Apo|stle sheweth, Ephes 4.24. Coloss. 3.10. the fore-cited places: but the substance of the reasonable soule, with the naturall faculties and powers thereof are not lost, therefore therein is not expressed this image. To this purpose Augustine: that the whole man both in his inward and outward part, inveteravit, is waxen old and decayed by sinne, the inward man is renewed now by grace, the outward man shall bee restored in the resurrection. lib. 24. contr. Faustum.* Epiphanius therefore had no reason to note this as an heresie in Origen, for saying, that Adam had lost by his transgression the image of his creation, epist. ad Ioann. Hierosol. He might as well charge the Apostle with heresie, who saith the newe man is renewed after the image of him that created him: but there need no renewing, where is not first a decaying; nor a restoring of that, which is not lost.

QVEST. XXIX. Why it is added, God created them male and female.

Vers. 27. TH•• God created man in his image, &c. 1. To take away all ambiguitie, lest man might be thought to have beene created according to his owne image, it is added, in the image of God created he him. 2. Thrice in the same verse Moses maketh mention of the creation of man, left any might imagine with the Philosophers, that man had no beginning, but was eternall. 3. Mention also is made of male and female, that both man and woman should be knowne to be made according to Gods image: though man first, and as the more principall. Iun. 4. And Moses saith, he created them male and female, not created him: contrary to the conceit of Plato, and some Hebrewes, which thinke that Adam was at the first created both a man and woman, and afterward divided in twaine, Mercer.

QVEST. XXX. Of mans rule and dominion over the creatures.

Vers. 28. *RV*le over the fish of the sea, the foule of heaven, and over every beast. Theodoret thinketh, that the great Whales were exempted from the dominion of man, q. 20. in Gen. but his conceit is contrary to the text, which giveth man rule overall the fish: and Basil reporteth, that he had seene great whirlpooles of the sea taken and subdued by the will and industrie of man, hom. 10. in Genes. This rule and dominion of man was absolute before his fall, for then both man should have beene of more excellent go|vernment, by reason of his excellent wisdom, to keepe the creatures in subjection, and the beasts also by Gods providence should have had a naturall inclination to obedience: a president whereof we have Gen. 2. when all the creatures presented themselves before Adam, to receive their names of him.

Since Adams fall, this preeminence and dominion of man over the beasts is greatly diminished and im|paired, that as he first disobeyed his Creator, so they also have cast off mans yoake, yet not withstanding, though now men have not so absolute a command over the creatures, his Lordship and authority re|maineth still, which he exerciseth over the creatures by these foure wayes and meanes.

First, there remaineth yet a naturall instinct of obedience in those creatures which are for mans use, as in the oxe, asse, horse, wherein Gods mercy appeareth, that though man by his sinne be deprived of his authority over the wilde and great beasts, as lyons, beares,* yet the more necessary and serviceable creatures are kept in subjection still: such a naturall inclination toward man appeareth in the Dolphins, of the which Plutarch reporteth strange things, as how the body of that ancient Poet *Hesiod*e was borne up in the sea by the Dolphins, and brought to land: and how one. Evalus with a virgin, which was carried to be sacrificed, leaped into the sea, and were both preserved, beeing supported by the Dolphins, Plutarch. convival•. It is also most strange, that Plinie writeth of the Teutyrites, that inhabit by Nylus, that they are a terror to the Crocodiles, and leaping vpon their backes to bring them as captives to the shoare, Plin. lib. 8. c. 25.

Secondly, God by his extraordinary worke and miracle subdueth the fierce and cruell beasts vnto man: as when they all came unto Noah in the Arke: the lions mouthes were stopped against Daniel, the viper had no power to hurt Paul.

Thirdly, this dominion lost by Adam is restored by Christ, and the beasts subdued to the faithfull, when the Lord seeth it meet: as it is said, Iob 5.23. The beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee. Thus by Gods providence many of his children have beene preserved, as Ionas by his faithfull prayer was preserved in the belly of the whale: Hierome reporteth, or one under his name, in the life of Malchus, (if the story bee true) how he being pursued of his cruell master, fled into a cave where was hid a lionesse with her whelpes, which •irred not at him, but as soone as the Pagan entred, sending his servant in before, they were both soone by the beast dispatched.

Fourthly, man sometime by his strength doth subdue the beasts, as Sampson did slay a lion, and David a beare: or, where strength faileth, by his wit and policy, as Saint Iames saith, c. 3.7. The whole nature of beasts and of birds, and of creeping things, and things of the sea, is tamed and hath beene tamed of the nature of man: so Augustine saith, when all other beasts are tamed by man, hee himselfe is tamed of none. de Genes. cont. Manich. c. 18.

QVEST. XXXI. How all things are said to be good that God made.

Vers. 13. GOd saw all that hee had made, and loe it was very good. The Manichees here objected, that God created many things hurtfull and pernicious to man, as herbs, and beasts, venomous and noysome, many things superfluous, whereof man hath no use, how then were all things created good? Augustine to this objection most fully in this manner answereth: 1. God hath made nothing superfluous, although we know not the use thereof: like as in an artificers shop, we condemne not those instruments and tooles, which we are ignorant of, though wee cut our hands with them. 2. Wee need not to complaine of those things, which are profitable, or superfluous, for these hurt not, and the other are for our use, and by those which are pernicious, we are either punished, or exercised, or terrified: usurpa utilia, cave pernicioso, relinque superflua, use the commodious creatures, take heed of the pernicious, leave those which thou thinkest superfluous. de Genes. ad liter. c. 22. To this answer of Augustine, thus much may bee added: that these noxious creatures, which now serve for the correction of man, should not have beene hurtfull, if man had not fallen by his transgression: and againe, they are not now altogether unprofitable, for even those creatures, which are venomous, and not fit for food, are yet profitable for medicine.

There remaineth yet one question of weight concerning the creation of the Angels: first, it is not doubted of, but that God created the Angels, Coloss. 1.16. By him were all things created which are in heaven and earth: things visible and invisible, &c. But there are two other questions, wherefore Moses omitted the creation of the Angels, and when they are thought to have beene created.

QVEST. XXXII. Why Moses omitted the creation of the Angels.

FOR the first: 1. Moses neither passed over the creation of Angels in silence, for feare lest the Israelites should have committed idolatry in worshipping of them, as Chrysostome, and Theodoret thinke: for the Israelites could not be ignorant that the Angels had divers times appeared to their fathers the Patriarkes, and so could not bee ignorant of them. 2. Neither are they omitted, because Moses only treateth of those things, which had their beginning with this materiall world, but the Angels were created long before the visible world, as Basil and Damascene thinke; for it shall even now appeare; that this is a false supposition, that the Angels were created so long before. 3. Neither yet is the creation of the Angels comprehended under the making of heaven and the light, as Augustine and Beda thinke, for this were to leave the literall sense which is to be followed in the history of the creation. 4. But the only reason is this, because Moses applyeth himselfe to the simple capacity of the people, and describeth onely the creation of visible, and sensible things, leaving to speak of spirituall, which they could not understand: and this seemeth to be Hieroms opinion, epist. 139. ad Cyprian.

QVEST. XXXIII. When the Angels were made.

For the second: 1. We neither receive the opinion of those that thinke the Angels to have beene made long before the world, as Origen affirmeth, tract. 35. in Matth▪ and Damascen. lib. 2. de fid. c. 3. with others. For the Scripture testifieth, that the evill angels fell, as soone as they were created. Ioh. 8.44. He abode not in the truth: and as soone as the Angels had sinned, they were cast downe to hell. 2 Pet. 2.4. But before hea|ven was made, there was no hell, neither any such distinction of place, before the world was founded. 2. Neither is their opinion currant, that thinke the Angels to have beene created the same day with man: as Gennadius, and Achacius: because of that place, Iob 38.7. Where wast thou, saith the Lord to Iob, when the Starres praised mee together; and all the children of God reioyced? From hence it is evident, that when the starres were made, the Angels also had then their being, and rejoyced before God, which was upon the fourth day of the creation. 3. There is a third opinion, that the Angels were created, when in the begin|ning God created the heavens, Gen. 1.1. August. lib. 1. de Genes. ad lit. c. 4. And whereas it is said, that dark|nesse was upon the face of the deepe, Origen thinketh that was the deepe, whither the Devill and his An|gels were cast. This opinion seemeth most probable, because together with the heavens were created the heavenly host of Angels: c. 21. & 148.2. Where the same word tzaba host or army is used.

QVEST. XXXIV. Whether all trees in the beginning bare fruit.

Vers. 29. I Have given unto you every herb, &c. It shall all bee to you for meat: likewise to every beast of the earth. &c. Wee mislike the conceit of Beda in Hexemer: upon these words, that before mans fall every tree did beare fruit, fit for food, none was barren or unfruitfull, because the text saith, I haue given you every tree, &c.

For 1. it is evident out of the Scripture, that divers kinds of trees were created in Paradise for beauty and ornament, which bare no fruit for food: as the Cedar, and Firre tree, Ezek. 31.8. The Ced•rs in the garden of God could not hide him, no Firre tree was like his branches. 2. This generall permission to eat of every tree, concludeth not a necessity of fruit-bearing in every tree, but a liberty to eat of all which were fit for food, excepting only the tree of knowledge of good and evill, Gen. 2.17.

QVEST. XXXV. Whether the flesh of beasts were eaten before the flood.

Likewise we refuse the opinion of Beda, that neither man nor beast did eat of any flesh, but onely of the fruits of the earth before the flood: neither doe wee allow the iudgement of Thomas Aquinas, who thinketh that the beasts which are now devourers of flesh, should have used that kind of food in the state of mans innocency. 1. part. quaest. 96. artic. 1.

The latter opinion wee reiect, because if man had not transgressed, there should have beene no death in the world, Rom. 5.12. Sinne entred into the world by one man, and death by sinne*: if there should have beene no death in the world, because no sin, I see not how death should have entred upon other creatures, espelcially this violent death by slaughter: as the Apostle also saith, Rom. 8.22. That every creature groaneth with us, and travelleth in paine together to this present: so that this bondage of paine and corruption, which maketh man and beast groane together, was laid upon them together. Neither doe I see how Basils opinil|on can stand, hom. 11. in Gen.* that man in his innocency, though hee should not have used the beasts for food, yet might haue slaine them, to take knowledge of their inward parts, and to helpe his experience that wayes: or it should have beene lawfull unto him to kill them in hunting for his delight, as Pererius thinketh, lib. 4. in Gen. p.663. for this slaughter, and killing of beasts, upon what occasion soever, whether for food, for knowledge or pleasure, belongeth unto the bondage of corruption, which by sin was brought into the world.

The other opinion seemeth probable, especially because of these two places of Scripture; first, for that the beasts and fowles lived in the Arke, not of flesh, but of other food than usuall, as Noah is bidden to take of all meat that was eaten, Gen. 6.21. for there being only one couple of unclean beasts, and seven couple of cleane preserved in the arke: out of these there could not be food of flesh sufficient for the rest: and after the cattell went out of the Arke, there was no other food for them, all flesh being destroyed, but onely by the fruits of the earth. Secondly, the first permission to eat flesh, that we reade of, was after the floud, Gen. 9.3. Everything that moveth and liveth shall be meat for you as the greene herb.

But these objections may be easily answered. To the first we answer: 1. that the beasts which did devour flesh, did also feed of herbs: and so Noah might provide for them according to their eating: * 2. Though they did use altogether to live of flesh, yet I thinke that for that present time, and some while after, all beasts might returne to the first food appointed in the creation, this being a second creation and renewing of the world; so that upon this extraordinary occasion and urgent necessity, it cannot be gathered what was the ordinary food of beasts before, no more than it can be inferred, that because beasts of contrary natures, as the lion and calfe, beare and cowe, wolfe and lambe, leopard and kid, did lye together, Isay 11.6. that there was no enmity betweene them before.

To the second place our answer is, that there that liberty is onely renewed, as is the blessing to increase and multiply, vers. 1. and the prohibition of shedding mans blood: vers. 5. at the hands of a mans brother will I require the life of man: for before the floud, the blood of Abel was required at the hands of his brother Caine.

Notwithstanding therefore these objections, I thinke it more probable, that both man and beast after the transgression before the floud, did use indifferently both the fruits of the earth, and the flesh of beasts for food: the grounds of this opinion are these.

1. That one beast did not raven upon another in the state of mans innocency, * two principall reasons may be given: one, because as yet no death was entred into the world; the other, for that man bearing perfect rule and dominion over the creatures, did keepe them in order: but after mans fall, both these causes were taken away; for not onely death entred upon man, but the other creatures were brought into the same bondage, and were killed for sacrifice: as Abel offered of the fat of the sheep, Gen. 4 3. if it were lawfull then to slay beasts, why not to eat of their flesh? And againe, man having lost his sovereignty over the creatures, they then began one to rage upon another, as not standing now in the like awe and feare of man as before: this cause is touched by the Prophet, Habbac. 1.14. Thou makest man as the fishes of the Sea, and as the creeping things that have no rule over them: that is, which doe one consume and devour another, because they have no governour: this rule the beasts, fishes, and fowles, had shaken off immediately upon mans fall, and not only after the floud.

2. Seeing in the old world two great sinnes abounded, carnall lust, and concupiscence, Gen. 6.2. and tyranny and oppression: vers. 4. there were gyants or tyrants in the earth: and tyranny and oppression brought forth bloodshed; for which cause the prohibition of shedding of mans blood is so straightly forbidden after the floud, that God will require it at the hands of every beast, and of a mans brother; Gen. 9.5. How is it like, that they would abstaine from killing of beasts, that spared not to spill the blood of men? or from eating of flesh, which is more apt to provoke unto lust, than the simple fruits of the earth?

3. If the flesh of beasts was not eaten before the floud, what then became of the increase of cattell? how was not the earth over-run with them? This reason was given, why the Lord would not at once but by little and little destroy the Canaanites before the Israelites, lest the beasts of the field should increase upon them, Deut. 7.22. because they both helped to destroy the cruell beasts, and did eat the unclean, as swine and such other, both which by their multitudes otherwise might have beene an annoyance to the Israelites. But greater feare was there, of overspreading the earth with increase of beasts before the flood, if no such provision had beene made to diminish their number.

4. But that place most of all confirmeth our opinion. Gen. 7.2. where mention is made of cleane and unclean beasts: which difference was observed before the flood, and continued by tradition; not in regard on^y of sacrifice, but also for their eating, as it may appeare in the reviving of this law afterward. Levit. 11.47. That there may be difference betweene the unclean and cleane, and betweene the beast that may be eaten, and the beast that may not be eaten: that then is said by the definition of the law to bee a cleane beast, that might be eaten, that unclean, that might not be eaten. So I conclude this question, with the sentence of Ambrose, Quiconvivium adornat, &c. he that prepareth a feast, doth kill his oxen and fat cattell before, and then biddeth his guests: so the Lord, ante homini caeterorum animalium praeparavit epulas,^{*} before prelpared the meats of other beasts, and then as his friend invitavit ad convivium, bid him to the banquet, Epist. 37. His opinion is, that the cattell were provided of God to bee meat for man. Mercerus is of another judgement, that the eating of flesh was generally forborne before the flood, which is also the opinion of the Hebrewes: 1. both because it was necessary for the preservation of the kinds of cattell: 2. as also herbs being then of greater vertue and strength before the flood and after, might suffice for mans sustenance. Mercer. in v. 29.1. ch. Gen.

But these reasons conclude not. 1. Like as after the flood, when liberty was granted to eat flesh, as the greene herb, yet they did forbear for a time, till the breed of Cattell was increased, upon the like reason before the flood, immediately after the creation, they might abstaine for a time from the eating of flesh, but not altogether. 2. The great vertue and strength of herbs concludeth, that the eating of flesh was not so generall, or necessary, then as afterward, but the whole abstinence from all kind of eating of flesh, it concludeth not.

I rather preferre Musculus opinion, who upon the sacrificing of beasts, and wearing of their skins, inferreth, that beasts were killed before the flood, and consequently their flesh eaten. in 1. Gen. v. 29.

4. The didactica, that is, places of doctrine observed out of this first chapter.

1. Doct. Of the Trinity proved.

1. AGainst the Jewes that deny the Trinity, and the Sabellians, which affirme but one person in the Deity, we have evident prooffe in this chapter, vers. 1. where the word (God) or, in the hebrew elohim, gods, is joyned to a verbe of the singular number, [bara] created, noting the singularity of the Godhead, and plurality of the persons. But exception is taken against this argument by Cajetanus, for the which he is reprov'd of Catharinus another Popish writer, lib. 4. animad ver. and by Bellarmino. lib. 2. de Christ. c. 6. for that it is the use of the Hebrewes to joyne words of the plurall, with a verbe of the singular number, upon which reason this collection is misliked also by Calvin and Mercerus: but it may be replied, that it is not the use of the Hebrewes to put in the plurall number, that which hath no plurality in nature: as to say (Gods) if there were but one person in the godhead.

^{*}But yet this argument for the Trinity is more evident, vers. 26. Let us make man after our image, &c. where God neither speaketh to himselfe, saying, let us make, not I will make: neither yet to the earth, as though that wrought together with God: nor to the Angels, for God only created man, vers. 27. nor yet doth God speake in the plurall number, according to the fashion of great men, for that use of speech, was not yet knowne: but in this forme of speech is set forth the consultation of the blessed Trinity, the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost.

2. Doct. That the heavens and earth had a beginning.

2. Out of the first verse wee conclude, that the world had a beginning, and that it was created by God: contrary to the opinion of Xenophanes, who held the world to bee without beginning or end: and of the Epicures, who did impiously hold, that the world was made by chance, by the concurrence of bodies together: and of Aristotle among the heathen, and Eugubinus in Cosmopeia among Christians, who affirme Coelum empyraeum, the highest and supreme heaven to have bene eternall.

*Likewise wee condemne the folly of the lying Aegyptians and Chaldees, who extend the age of the world many thousand yeares before it was made. The Aegyptians boasted that they had a continuall succession of Kings. 70. thousand yeares. Augustine maketh mention of a letter that Alexander writ to his mother Olympias, wherein he reporteth, that hee heard of an Aegyptian Priest, that the Kingdome of the Assyrians exceeded 5000. yeares: of the Persians, 8000. yeares. Pompeius Mela writeth, that they have chronicles of 13000. yeares. Diogenes Laertius, from Vulcan to Alexander, accounteth. 48860. yeares, August. lib. 12. de civitate. dei. cap. 10. The Aegyptians also reckon 100. thousand yeares since they first learned Astrology, de civitat. dei. 18. c. 40. All these are lying fables, seeing by just computation of yeares it is found, that the world hath not yet continued since the first beginning thereof, 6000. yeares.

3. Doct. The word from the beginning.

3. Vers. 3. Then God said: hence Servetus would confirme his wicked error, that the word was not from the beginning, because the heavens and earth are here said to bee made, before God spake. But wee have an evident testimony, that the word was in the beginning with God, and that nothing was made without it, Ioh. 1, 2, 3. and seeing the light was made by this word, the word must needs be before the light: the cause goeth before the effect: so that the heavens and earth were in the beginning made by the word of God: but in this place first onely it is added▪ And God said, because now more manifestly the wisdom and power of God appeareth in the distinction and perfection of the creatures, which before were confused together. Calvin. Mercer. Further, another heresie of Servetus is confuted, who thinketh that this was a new quality in God to speake, which spake not before, for this speaking in God, was no quality in God, as in man, but it signifieth only his will and decree, though Ab. Ezra doe without cause finde fault with R. Saadian for so expounding: this word of God was nothing but Gods decree and commandement, whereby the heavens also and earth were first made, Psal. 148.5. so that then God thus spake also. Calvin. Mercer.

4. Doct. Of the different beginning of the soules of man and beasts.

4. Vers. 24 Let the earth bring forth every living thing: animam viventem, the living soule: from hence it was gathered, that not only the bodies of bruite beasts, but their life also, and as it were soule, were derived out of the earth: whereby a manifest difference appeareth betweene the originall of mans soule, which was breathed of God, and of the soule or life of beasts, which was produced out of the earth: contrary to the opinion of Porphyrius, and the Pythagoreans, who taught that the soule of man tooke beginning from the elements, as the life of other creatures.

5. Doct. That God hath no humane shape.

5. Let us make man after our image. vers. 26. which image was shewed before to be in the graces of the soule, and not in the body, against the heresie of the Anthropomorphites, who imagined God to be of a humane shape like unto man.

6. Doct. God not the author of evill.

6. Vers. 31. GOd saw all he had made, and •oe it was very good. From hence we conclude, that God onlly is the author of good: and that whatsoever the Lord doth, is very good. Against the Manichees, who affirmed, that the God of the law was the Prince of darknesse, and anchor of evill.

7. Doct. Marriage made free for all men▪

7. Vers. 28. BRing forth fruit and multiply] This Scripture sheweth, 〈◇〉 marriage had the institution in mans innocency, and that this blessing to increase, should have taken place though 〈◇〉 had not fallen: against the heresie of the Tati••i and Ma•ichees, which condemned marriage as a work of the devill.

Againe, seeing God giveth here a liberty to all men and women by marriage to increase and multiply, it maketh strongly against the Popish inhibition of marriage in Ecclesiasticall persons, and Monasticall enforced vowes: for by both these, this generall liberty given of God is restrained.

To this argument divers answers are framed. 1. That this precept of multiplying was onely to hold •ll the world was replenished. Magister, lib. •. distinct. 2•. 2. This precept was not given to all, but onely to the multitude▪ Thomas 2.2. quast. 152▪ art. 2.3. This precept was not for all times, but only in case of necess•lty, when propagation failed, Scotus. 4. Some say this precept did hold onely till Christ. 5. Some that this increasing is to be understood of ••ctifying in the soule, not in the body. But all these answers mislike the moderne Papists. And therefore now their answer is, that these words, increase and multiply, * containe not a precept, but an institution of nature, and a promise of fecundity • for the same words are uttered unt•olther creatures, which are not capable of precepts; and if i• were • precept, i• should binde all to increase and multiply by marriage, and so injury should be offered to Christ, to Mary and other holy Virgins: thus Bellarmino de Clericis, lib. 1. c. 21. Pererius in Genes. lib. 4. p. 657.

Contra. 1. Our adversaries fight here with their owne shadow: for neither doe wee say, that this is an absolute precept binding all to marriage: but a liberty granted to all that will marry, that thereby man|kinde may still be propagated: like as where Christ faith, if they persecute you in one City, flye into ano|ther: hee doth not take away this liberty, that flyeth not, having received a greater gift of strength and patience to stay and endure the utmost triall▪ but he, which shall deny this remedy to the weake. So they offend not against this grant of marriage for increase, that need it not, but are indued with a more excell|lent gift of continency, but they, which deny it to those that are apt to generation. 2. Though bruit beasts are not capable of mans precepts, yet when God biddeth, the creatures understand in their kind and obey. Ion 2.10. God spake to •he fish, and it cast up Ionah upon the dry land. 3. If it bee an institution of nature, then they tyrannize by their superstitious lawes over the bodies of men, forcing them to single life against the generall inclination of nature.

5. The 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 ; that is, places of confutation out of this first chapter.

I. Confut. Against the Manichees and Atheists.

I Will briefly first set downe the objections of the Manichees and ancient Pagans, concerning the creati|on, because they are sutable to the impious conceits of the Atheists in these dayes.

1. Object. If God in the beginning made the world: what did hee before? was hee weary in doing of nothing? Ans. God, as Augustine saith, nec cessando torpuit, nec operando laboravit, neither was idle in relsting, nor weary in working: neither received he any happinesse by the things created, without which he was happy: but when it pleased him, he made the world to manifest his glory, and declare his mercy. Aug. cont. aedvers. leg. lib. 1. c. 2.

2. Object. If God created light, hee was before in darknesse. Answer. God needeth no corporall light, which was made, but dwelleth in a spirituall and uncreated light. Aug. de gⁿ. cont. Manich. cap 4.

3. Object. If God made the light, who made darknesse? Answer. Darknesse is nothing, it need no creation, being but the absence of light, as nakednesse is the want of cloathing, silence the ceasing of a sound. ibid.

4. Object. If the spirit moved upon the waters, then were they the habitacle or mansion of the spirit. Ans. The Sunne is carried above the earth, yet is not the earth the habitation thereof: and the spirit did so move upon the waters, as the workman over the worke which he intendeth to make. Aug. ibid. c. 5.

5. Object. But who made the waters whereupon the spirit moved? Ans. It is comprehended under the name of the earth, which was covered with the waters, made at the first, as an unformed lumpe or matter, whereout other creatures were made. Aug c. 7.

6. Object. God saw that the light was good, it should seeme he knew it not before. Ans. It followeth not, that because God approveth the light being made, he knew it not before. Christ wondred at the Cen|turions faith, which he himselfe had wrought: God saw it before in his intention, and now approveth it, brought forth in action.

7. Object. How could there be light, or the distinction of daies and nights▪ before the Sun was made? Cels. lib. 6. Orig. and so object the Manichees. Ans. Augustine answereth, that there was a division of the day and night before the sunne, but a more exact division afterward: de genes. cont. Manich. c. 15. Ambrose saith, the light of the day is one thing, the light of the sunne another: as wee see by experience, that there is a light before the sunne rise, and after he is set, lib.4. Hexemer. c. 3. But we doe againe say, that God is not tyed to the creature, as though hee could not make light without the sunne: •ee that made the •unn•, was able to make light before and without the sunne: see more hereof, in the Theologicall explanation upon vers. 3. I will now touch some of the Papists objections.

2. Confut. Sacraments doe not conferr• grace.

Bellarmino by the moving of the spirit upon the waters, enforceth, that the Sacrament of Baptisme con|ferreth grace, as those waters concurred to the making of naturall things, so the water of baptisme to|ward spirituall regeneration: lib. 2. de sacram. ca. 4. Ans. This collection maketh against his opinion: for like as the waters were dead without the spirit, so we say that it is the spirit in baptisme, and not the ele|ment that doth regenerate us.

3. Confut. Not lawfull to make the image of God.

MAN is the image of God, but it is lawfull to make the image of the image of God: ergo, to make the image of God, lib. 2. de imaginib. sanct. c. 8. Ans. Man is made according to Gods image in his soule, not in his body: that therefore in man, wherein he is like unto God is spirituall and invisible, and therefore cannot be by a visible image deciphered.

4. Confut. Man created immortall.

BEcause the Lord said to man, increase and multiply, Bellarmino collecteth, that man was created of a mortall and corruptible nature, yet should he have beene preserved by a supernaturall grace, if he had not sinned, lib. de grat. primi hom. c. 9. Ans. 1. His collection is weake, for man should have increased in the state of innocency, where no corruption was, and Mary was increased with her holy Sonne Christ, whose flesh saw no corruption, Act. 2. 27. 2. Neither needed Adam to have had any supernaturall gift, beside his creation, to have beene preserved from death, if hee had not sinned: for death entred onely by sinne, Rom. 5. 12.

5. Confut. Against the Anabaptists.

Vers. 26. LEt them rule over the fish of the Sea, &c. Hence the Anabaptists would prove their confused community and free use of all creatures: because God giveth unto Adam and all his posterity, rule, and dominion over them. But it is a grosse collection: for the gift must be used according to the mind of the giver: now the Lord, who first gave this liberty unto man, hath also set an order, appointed Magi|strates, forbidden to steale: that every man should content himselfe with his owne portion, and not usurpe upon anothers right. Muscul.

6. The 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, places of exhortation and comfort.

1. THE great wisdome of God appeareth in the creation of the world, as the Prophet noteth, Psal. 104. 24. In wisdome hast thou made them all, &c. for all things were ordained of God in excellent order, * and disposed with great wisdome.

2. The great bounty of God appeareth toward man, for whose cause hee hath made all these things, which the eye beholdeth: that we againe should magnifie the mercies of God toward us: thus the Prophet exhorteth, Psal. 8. 3. When I behold the heavens, &c. what is man say I then, that thou art so mindfull of him?

3. Seeing man was created after the image of God in righteousness and holinesse, and since by his transgression hee hath lost this image, Eccles. 7. 31. God hath made man righteous, but they have sought many inventions: we should labour to repaire this image, and to be renewed in the spirit of our minds, to put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and holinesse, Ephes. 4. 24.

4. As God hath given unto man rule over the creatures, vers. 28. as the Prophet saith, The ox knoweth his owner, &c. Isay 1. 3. So man should endeavour to know his Creator and Maker, and to bee obedient to him. *

5. As God commanded light to shine out of darknesse, so we should pray to God to illuminate our minds with the knowledge of Christ, * 2 Cor. 4. 6.

6. All things which God created were good, so we should delight in doing of good, and overcome evill with goodnesse, Rom. 12. 21.

CHAP. II.

The Analysis, or Methode.

T His second chapter containeth 〈...〉 of somewhat not ordained before, and 〈...〉 .

The 〈...〉 of the Sabbath, the sanctification thereof, 〈◇〉 3. the reason of the sanctifying, Gods rest, vers. 2.

The 〈◇〉 is generall, of the creation of the whole world, and the things therein contained, vers. 4.5. Particular in the description of paradise, and the rehearsall of things concerning 〈◇〉 .

Paradise is described by the situation of the place, 〈◇〉 ▪ by the 〈◇〉 parts thereof, the pleasant trees, vers. 9. the river divided into 〈...〉 from vers. 9. to vers. 1▪.

Four things are rehearsed concerning man: 1. his vocation 〈...〉 the garden, vers. 15. the prohibition to eat of the tree of knowledge, &c. with a permission to eat of the rest. vers. 16, 17. 3. The nomination of the creatures: their bringing to Adam, vers. 16. his naming of them. vers. 20. 4. The creation of woman: where we have 1. the consultation of God, vers. 18. 2. The conf•r•tion, or manner of the womans making, vers. 21▪ 22. 3. The approbation of Adam, vers. 23. The Exegesis, or Theologicall ex|plication.

QVEST. I. How God is said to have rested.

1. God rested from all his worke. •. Neither as being weary in working, but resting is here taken only 〈...〉 , or leaving to worke. 2. Neither did he rest from his workes, to receive any use thereof or benefit to himselfe: but the wiseman sheweth how God taketh delight in his workes: Prov. 8.31. I tooke my solace in the compasse of the earth, and my delight is in the children of ma•: he made all things for 〈◇〉 use, and man for his owne glory: not that by man there is any new accession of glory to God, which he had not: for infinite was the glory of the blessed Trinity before the world was. Ioh. 17.5. but by man▪ Gods glory in the world is manifested, not to Gods benefit, but to his owne everlasting reward. 3. Neither is God said simply to rest, but only from the workes of the creation: by his providence he worketh still in the preservation of those things which he hath made. Iohn 5.17. My father worketh hitherto▪ and I worke.

QVEST. II. How the Lord is said to have made an end of his worke the seventh day.

Vers. 2. IN the seventh day God finished his worke, &c. 1. Not that God made any of his workes upon the seventh day, as Hierome urgeth this place against the Iewes: tradition. in Genes. 2. neither is it so said, because God in the last point of the sixt day finished his worke, which therefore is counted of the seventh: as the Hebrewes. 3. Neither need we with the Septuagint to read sixt for seventh; which were a corrupting of the text. 4. Nor yet with some Hebrewes to understand the creation of the seventh day: for God had already appointed the dayes to follow in order: and the dayes are not properly said to bee created, but the workes made therein. 5. Neither yet doe wee approve the conceit of Aben Ezra, who saith, that the end or absolution of a worke is no worke. 6. But without any more controversie, the meaining is no more but this, that God had now already upon the seventh day finished his worke: the finish|ing was done before, but now the Lord beheld it as complete and perfect. Mercer. Iun.

QVEST. III. The meaning of these words, vers. 3. which he created to be made.

Vers. 3. WHich he created, to be made.] 1. This is neither to bee referred to the eternall purpose of God to create those things, which after were made, as Rupertus, lib. 2. de Trinitat. c. 18. for Gods decree and purpose to create the world, is of like eternity to himselfe: but the creation had a begin|ning. 2. Neither by these words [to be made] is signified the power of generation given to the creature, to make like to it selfe: for from this worke Gods providence ceaseth not still. 3. Neither is insinuated there|by the end to the which, and order wherein every thing was made: as Cajetanus: for this was done in the creation, that beside it, there need no new making. 4. But either it is a phrase of the Hebrewes, who for more certainty and emphasis of speech, doe use to double the word: as vers. 16. in eating thou shalt eat. vers. 17. in dying thou shalt dye: that is, shalt freely eat, and surely die: so God created in making: that is, powerfully and wonderfully made: Mercer: or the words are inverted, and may be placed thus, in setting, making, before created, as Tremellius and R. Isaac: he rested from making the work which he had created. 5. Or if we make any difference, the creation was in the beginning of heaven and earth, as the matter and substance, the making was of the forming of the creatures on the six dayes out of that substance before by God created and prepared. Muscul. 6. But most ridiculous and blasphemous is that fable of some Hel|brewes, * that this worke which God created to make, and made not, were the Faunes and Satyres, which God made in the evening upon the sixt day, and being short of time, could not finish them. ex Muscul.

QVEST. IIII. The Sabbath instituted of God, after the creation.

Vers. 4. GOd blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it.] Here wee have the institution of the Sabbath, which afterward was revived by the promulgation of the morall law. We refuse therefore the erronious opinion of Tostatus and Pererius, two Popish writers, who do think that this sanctifying of the Sabbath, is here mentioned by way of anticipation, being not instituted till the time of Moses: for every day to man in the state of innocency should have beene a Sabbath, neither was there any positive precept given to Adamin Paradise, * but only that of not eating the forbidden fruit. Perer. in Genes. lib. 1. p. 223. But in this affirming they are grosly deceived. 1. Man had now transgressed, before the Sabbath was instituted as afterward shall be proved, and therefore they doe out of time urge the state of mans innocency. 2. If man had continued in that state, seeing he was appointed to keepe the garden, and not to live idly, no not in Paradise, it is most like, that even then he should have kept the Sabbath, as a rest & intermission even from such labour, as became that place, and as a symbole unto him of a further perfection to bee attained unto. 3. That the Sabbath was instituted now, the creation finished, it may appeare by the fourth commandment, Exod. 20. 11. where this reason of the law is given: For in six dayes the Lord made heaven and earth, &c. 4. It is also evident, that the Sabbath was kept by godly tradition, before the morall law was given, as Exod. 16. 23. To morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath to the Lord. 5. Thus the fathers ground the institution of the Sabbath upon Gods example in this place: as Hierome, trad. in 2. Gen. Augustine, Psal. 80. and Origen thus answereth. Celsus, lib. 6. objecting, if God were weary, that he needed to rest. God rested (saith he) ut nos ab operibus quiescentes, &c. that we resting from our works should celebrate that day.

QVEST. V. Of the generations of the heaven and earth, how to be understood.

Vers. 4. These are the generations, &c. 1. This word, generations, is not here to be taken actively, as some of the Hebrewes, for those things, which the heaven and earth brought forth of themselves, but passively for the beginning and originall of the heavens and earth. * 2. The Masorites note that this word toldoth, which signifieth generations, is twice only found fully written, with vau in the beginning, in this place after the world was finished, and in the generation of Phares in the end of Ruth: and they yeeld this reason thereof, because this generation in the perfection of the world was complete, and that other whereof Messiah should come, but all other generations are imperfect, and therefore they are defective in letters: but these observations are curious: ex Mercer.

QVEST. VI. Of the name of God Iehovah.

Vers. 4. IN the day that the Lord God. 1. This is the first place of Scripture where the Lord is called by his name Iehovah. 2. The reason whereof the Hebrewes make to be this: that as Elohim is a name of power and justice, given unto God in the creation: so now Iehovah a name of mercy, is attributed unto God, the whole worke being finished, because therein his mercy appeared: or rather now after God had made his worke full and complete, he is also set forth in his full and complete titles. Iun. 3. The Hebrewes very superstitiously forbear the reading or naming of this word Iehovah, and use in stead thereof Adonai: which word we confesse is soberly to be used, and that it conveniently cannot be pronounced, because it borroweth all the prickles from Adonai: and wee condemne also the heathens profanation of this name. who derive from them the oblique cases of Iupiter, Iovis, Iovi. 4. This name Iehovah, some would have to expresse the Trinity, because it consisteth of three kinds of letters, some by He, double understand the two natures of Christ, but this is too curious. It is derived of haiah, which signifieth Gods being and essence: and therefore hee is called Iehovah, as by whom man and all things else have their being, ex Mercer.

QVEST. VII. The world made in six dayes, and not all at once.

Vers. 4. IN the day that the Lord made the earth and the heavens] From this place Augustine would gather that all the world was made in one day, and that Moses doth divide the creation into six dayes worke, that it might be the better understood of the simpler sort. l. 4. de genes. ad lit. c. 21. the same was the opinion of Philo Iudaeus, Procopius, and Cajetanus, a Popish writer.

But this opinion cannot stand. 1. It is contrary to the Scripture, Exod 21. 11. For in six dayes God made heaven and earth. And Moses writing the story of the creation, must be taken plainly as he writeth. For if the world was made at once, how can it be true, that it was made in six dayes? 2 Augustine other-where holdeth the contrary, that the world was not made in one day, but in order, and he giveth this reason, because if the creatures had beene made together, non haberent sensum, infirmitatis, &c. they should not have the like sense of their infirmity, as now they have, one seeing another made before them. quaest. 106. ex vet. testam. Ambrose giveth the like reason:

ne increata crederentur, the creatures were not made at once, lest they might be thought not to have been made. lib. 1. Hexem. c. 6. 3. Whereas Moses here saith, in the day: we will not answer with Gregory, that it is so said, because the matter or substance of the creatures was created at once in the beginning, Gen. 1. 2. though they received their forme and perfection afterward. lib. 32. moral. c. 10. this also is Iunius opinion in his last edition: for as yet the day was not created, nor the light, when the heaven and earth were made in the beginning: and Moses here directly speaketh of the plants and herbs, that were not made before the third day. I allow rather Tremellius judgement in the first edition, who translateth, for in the day, be•om: in the time: a part being taken for the whole: as afterward, vers 17. in •he day, thou eatest thereof, (that is, in the time, whensoever thou shalt eat thereof,) thou shalt dye the death: so also Mercerus.

QVEST. VIII. Of the mist that went up from the earth.

Vers. 6. BVt amyst went up] because the Latine text readeth a fountaine, Augustine being unskilfull of the originall, much busieth himselfe about this matter, sometime thinking that one fountaine is here taken for many, whereby the earth is overflowne: other while that some great river, as Nylus, might water the earth. lib. 5. de genes. ad lit. c. 9. Others taking that to be impossible, doe only understand Paradise to have beene watered with this fountaine, as Albinus, contrary to the text, which saith, it watered all the earth: yea, to make this matter more doubtfull, the interlineary glosse saith, that there fell no raine before the floud, but that all the earth was watered with the fountains and springs of the earth. Wherefore to cleare these doubts, we are to resort to the originall word, gnedh, which signifieth a vapour, or a myst: * and let it here be noted, that Per•tius a Jesuit writing upon Genesis in this place, forsaketh the vulgar latine text, and cleaveth to the Originall.

It being then agreed, that wee are to read, not a fountaine, as Hierome translation hath, and the Septuagint, but a myst or vapour, yet there remaineth another doubt: for some read affirmatively, but a vapour ascended, as all the interpreters, but Tremellius, who understandeth it negatively, joyning it thus with the former verse, there was not a man to till the ground, or any vapour had ascended, &c. and so he would have the negative (ain, not) used before, to be supplied here. This I take to be the best reading, both for that it is most agreeable to the text, which sheweth that God created the plants without any naturall helpe, either of raine or mysts, or artificiall of mans labour: that neither raine had yet descended, nor vapours ascended. As also because the manner of Scripture phrase will beare it: as Exod. 20.4. Thou shalt not make to thee any graven image, or any similitude, &c. where throughout the whole verse, the negative particle, lo, not, must be supplied, which is but once in the beginning of the verse expressed.

This interpretation we preferre before either that of the Hebrewes: 1. who referre this verse to that which followeth, and joyne it not with that, which goeth before, but make this sense: that as yet there were no plants or herbs that appeared above the earth, but lay yet hid, till God sent raine, whereby the earth was prepared for the creation of man, and the plants watered: so R. Sel. But this is a vaine conceit: for upon the third day trees were made, which appeared above the earth: and the earth having beene so lately covered with the waters, * was yet moist enough. 2. Either that of Eugubinus, who saith it rained the second day, and then the plants were brought forth the third: for upon the second day the waters were gathered together from covering the earth, so that no raine was then needfull. 3. Mercerus distinguisheth the times: the 5. verse hee understandeth of the first growing of the plants in the creation, which was done without raine or dew: but the 6. verse hee referreth to that ordinary course, which God appointed afterward, by dewes and raines to refresh the earth. 4. Musculus will have the 6. verse, of the ascending of vapours, to be understood of the very time of creation: that God used those helps of nature, but this were to tie God unto meanes: wherefore I take it with Iunius to be an explanation of the former verse: that it had neither yet rained, nor any mist had ascended, when God onely by his word caused the plants to grow out of the earth: this is the exposition of R. Saadia, which Kim•i preferreth before all the rest.

QVEST. IX. Whether Paradise were terrestriall.

Vers. 8. The Lord planted a garden eastward in Eden, &c. Hierome readeth for eastward, à principi•, from the beginning, whereas the word is Kedem, the East, translated by the Septuagint < in non-Latin alphabet >, so that Hieromes conceit that God made Paradise before the heaven and earth, tradit. in 2. gen. is grounded upon the false interpretation of this place: and how could Paradise which was upon the earth be planted, before the earth was founded? 2. Their conceit is removed, that imagine Paradise to bee no terrene or corporall place, but to be spiritually understood: as Philo, lib. de mund. op•fic. and Origen, whom Epiphanius confuteth by this reason, that where there are true rivers, as Euphrates, which is confessed of all to bee one of the rivers of Paradise, where were also very trees and plants, there Paradise must bee a terrestriall place. epist. ad Ioann. Hieros•l. 3. Neither can the whole earth be taken for Paradise, as some have thought, because it is said here to bee planted in Eden, which was the name of a speciall country. Esech. 27.23. Harah, Canneth, Eden, are joynd together.

QVEST. X. Where Paradise was situate.

Likewise for the situation of Paradise: 1. it was neither in a remote place beyond the Ocean, which opinion is attributed to Ephrem. 2. nor a place higher than all the earth, Damasc. lib. 2. de fid. orthodox. c. 14. 3. nor next unto heaven, as Rupertus, de Trinitat. c. 37. 4. nor reaching up to the Moone, as some other have imagined. 5. nor in the aire, though not so high as the Moone, as Alexander, Hales, and Tostatus. 6 nor under the Equinoctiall. Bonavent. in 2. senten. c. 17. for these rivers, Tigris, and Euphrates, which flowed out of Paradise, and the country Eden, where Paradise was, came not neare the Equinoctiall: and they are knowne to be in Asia, not in any remote and unknowne countrey, in earth, not in the aire, or next to the Moone. All these are ridiculous & childish fancies, and need no long confutation.

QVEST. XI. Of the tree of life.

Vers. 9. The tree of life, &c. 1. This was a visible tree, planted in the midst of Paradise, in a visible place, not spiritually or allegorically to be understood, as Origen thinketh. 2. neither is it called the tree of life, because it was able to give immortality, and to preserve from death for ever, as Tostatus, or onely because it was able to preserve man from death, till such time as hee should bee translated to immortality, as Scotus in 2. lib. sent. dist. 19. qu. 1. and Thomas, with others. 4. Neither need it bee disputed, whether the tree of life had this power to preserve from death, by a supernaturall gift, as Bonaventure: or by a naturall faculty, * as Hugo, Thomas, Pererius upon this place. 5. For it is evident that this tree had no power to give immortality at all, by the taste of the fruit thereof: 1. because that no corruptible food can make the body incorruptible: but the fruit of this tree could not nourish nature without corruption and alteration, and without nourishment it could not give life to the body. 2. Againe, man had by his creation power given him to dye, if he had not sinned wherefore immortality was the gift of his creation, not effect of the eating of the tree. 3. And if it could have givē immortality, it must have had a power to preserve from sin: for by sinning, man became mortall: so that if it could not defend him from sin, it was no more the tree of life in regard of the effect, than any other tree of the garden: for if he had not sinned, he should not have dyed, what fruit soever he had eaten of, that only tree of knowledge of good and evill excepted.

* 6. Then our opinion is this, that it was called the tree of life, not so much for the operation (though we confesse it might give strength and vertue also to the body: Mercer.) but chiefly for the signification, because it was both a signe of life received from God, and a symbole of Christ, who is our true life: and herein we approve rather the opinion of Augustine, Eugubinus in Cosmopeia, who thinketh it was called the tree of life, not effective, but significative, not effectually, but significatively, as a signe of true immortality, which he should receive of God, if he continue in obedience: First, it is the tree of life, as the other was of knowledge of good and evill, which was not so called, because it gave knowledge, but was a seale unto them of their miserable knowledge, which they should get by experience in their transgression, Magister.

lib. 3. distinct. 17. therefore the tree of life must be so called, because it was a seale and pledge of life: secondly, thus the Scripture significatively and symbolically expoundeth the tree of life: Prov. 5.18. Wisdome (which is Christ) is a tree of life. Revel. 2.7. To him that overcommeth will I give to eat of the tree of life: see more of this, Synops 17. cont. err. 5.

vers. 9. The tree of knowledge of good and evill. First we affirme, that this was a visible materiall tree, not spiritually to bee interpreted, as some have thought, because Eva was tempted with a visible object, it was pleasant to the eyes, Gen. 3.6. Secondly, we hold it a curious matter, to search what kind of tree it was. 1. whether a vine tree, as some thinke, because of the institution of the Sacrament, where wine is used: which is a signe of Christs blood, not a remembrance of mans transgression. 2. or a fig-tree, as Theodoret. qu. 28. in Gen. because they made them aprons of fig-tree-leaves: whereas they had cause rather to abhorre that tree of all other, and therefore not to use the leaves. 3. or whether any tree rather than a fig-tree, as Tostatus, or an apple tree, because it is said, Cant. 8.6. I raised thee under an apple tree, &c. which words have an allegoricall sense. None of these certainly bee affirmed, * the Scripture having not expressed it.

Thirdly, it was called the tree of knowledge of good and evill: 1. Neither because it endued them with reason and understanding, as some of the Hebrewes: and Oukelos translateth, of whose fruit they which eat shall know good and evill: for being created according to Gods image, they are made reasonable soules. 2. Neither because it gave them indeed, sharpnesse of wit, as Iosephus, 1. lib. antiquitat. for God then would not have forbidden man the use of it, being for his good. 3. neither, as Ramban, * because before only by a naturall instinct, as other creatures they were led: for then, as R. Moseswell noteth, they should have gained and not lost, by eating of the tree of the knowledge of good and evill. 4. neither was it so called, because of the lying and enticing words of Satan, that promised they should be as Gods, knowing good and evill: as Tostatus, Pererius upon this place: for it was thus called before the tentation, Gen. 2.9.17. and God forbiddeth them to eat of it under that name: so that it is most like to have beene so called by God himselfe. 5. We thinke rather it was so called of the event, because by transgression of Gods commandement, in eating of the forbidden fruit, they had an experimentall knowledge, (a speculative knowledge of good and evill, they had before, as the rich man hath of poverty) what good they had lost, and what evill they were fallen into: and this is the sentence of most of the fathers. Neither doth that place hinder this interpretation, Gen. 3.22. because the Lord saith, man is become as one of us to know good and evill: that seeing man in knowledge was now become like unto God, (and this experimentall knowledge is not in God) therefore it cannot be so taken: for here the Lord speaketh (ironically) not that man was now become like indeed in knowledge to God, (for it is not to be thought, that mans knowledge was increased by his sinne, and if it were so, Sathan had not lied, in promising them to bee like unto God) but the Lord derideth mans folly, that was brought into such a foolish conceit to thinke by breaking the commandement, to be made like to God. 6. This tree of knowledge of good and evill may bee also mystically understood of that perfect and absolute knowledge, which God hath reserved to himselfe: the which they are forbidden to search after, but to content themselves with that gift and portion of knowledge, which God had already abundantly given unto them. Mercer. in Gen. 2. v. 16.

QVEST. XIII. Of the river of Paradise.

Vers. 10. OVt of Eden went a river, &c. and from thence it was divided into foure heads. 1. These foure heads had not their beginning in Paradise, as some have thought: but the river out of the which these foure heads of branches issued forth, came out of Eden, and is found to have his head or foun|taine in the mountaines of Armenia the great: there this river Euphrates, is called Pac Perath, the flowing out of Euphrates. Iun. 2. Neither was this river divided into foure heads in Eden before it came to Para|dise, which seemeth to be the opinion of Eugubinus: for from thence, that is, when it had passed thorow the garden, it parted into foure streames. 3. Neither doe I thinke that the two great rivers Tigris and Eulphrates, doe first run together thorow Paradise, and then divide themselves into foure brookes, as Merce/rus thinketh: for this is but one river, that came out of Eden to water the garden: and beside the rivers Tilgris and Euphrates touch not together, till they come to the Towne Massica, not farre from Babylon, and then they part againe, and one streame runneth along by Seleutia, another by Babylon, Calvin. ex Plin. lib. 6. c. 26. but Paradise is supposed to have beene situate more eastward than Babylon. 4. Neither can I subscribe to their sentence, that make Physon and Gihon, to bee the two doores or passages, whereby the river Tigris entreth into the Sea: for they are too remote from Paradise, and therefore serve not fitly for the description of the river of Paradise. 5. Nor yet can we properly make these foure heads, to be the two rivers Euphrates and Tigris, before they enter into Paradise, and the two streames, whereinto they are parted againe beneath Paradise: which is the opinion of Calvin, and Iunius edition 1. which else-where I have approved as most probable. But these reasons make against it. * 1. wee must have but one river that commeth out of Eden into Paradise, not two. 2. These too rivers joyning together and parting againe, are still not foure but two streames. 3. The text saith, that from thence, that is, as the river runneth out of Paradise, it is divided into foure heads: wee must then seeke for these foure heads, at the comming forth, not at the entring. 6. Tostatus thinketh, that this river made a great lake, after it passed Paradise, and from thence branched forth into foure streames: but then not the river, but the lake should be divided. 7. Barcephashath this conceit, that this river ran under the Ocean, and so brake forth in divers places of the earth, lib. de Paradis. But Moses description is against him: who maketh this river immediatly to divide it selfe from Paradise, and sheweth what countries every one of them compasseth▪ 8. Wherefore I thinke it more probable, that this river which runneth through Paradise, is the river Euphrates, which afterward streameth into foure rivers, as they are here described by Moses. Of this opinion is Iosephus, who best knew the situation of those countries, as he is cited by Ambrose, Iosephus historiographus paradisum, &c. di/cit rigari slumine, qui divid•ur in 4. fluvi•s: Iosephus the historiographer saith, that Paradise is watered with a floud, that divideth it selfe into foure rivers. epist. 42. First then it is certaine, that Euphra•es that great river, did send forth divers chanel and streames out of it, more than one or two, as Iunius proveth out of Ptolomy, lib. 5. Geogr. c. 23. C•lvin out of Arrianus, lib. 7. Secondly, it is evident, that there were such rivers so called, as Moses here describeth them. For Pliny maketh mention of a river called Phasitigris, lib. 6. c. 27. as compounded of Phasis (which seemeth to be derived of phishon) and Tigris: and a part of Tigris was called Digli•o, Plin. lib. 6. c. 27. for 〈...〉, which was this Hiddekel. Thirdly, Iunius very learnedly sheweth which were these foure streames issuing out of Euphrates: Pishon is that part which runneth with Tigris about Armenia, and was corruptly called Phasitigris: the same also is Nahar mal[•]ha, Ptolomy calleth it Basilaeon, the Kings riu^{er}: Gihon is the riu^{er} Naharsares, that emptied it selfe into the Caldean fens: Hiddekel, is that branch, which above Seleucia falleth into Tigris, which was corruptly called Digllito: Perath is the river Euphrates, that ran along by Babylon, and at the first had his proper passage into the Persian gulph, but now falleth in with Tigris.

But whether these are those foure heads or streames of Euphrates, it may be doubted: because the riu^{er} Nahar malcha, the Kings riu^{er}, was thought first to be cut out by Gabaris the governor of that province, to stay the swiftnes of Euphrates, as it falled vpon Babylon: which river was afterward scoured & ditched by Trajanus and Severus. It is certaine then, if the current of this river were not naturall, but made by the in^dustry of man, and that long after Moses time, that it can be none of these foure heads here described; unlesse we say with Calvin, that mans industry only here helped nature, and that G[•]baris caused the naturall current, landed vp, to be opened and enlarged. Wherefore I hold it the best resolution with Mercer^{••}, to say, that seeing not only the names, but the channels and currents of rivers and streames may be altered & changed in time, that it can hardly now be defined, which are these foure streames of Euphrates: it sufficeth us to know, that sometime this river was so divided by branches, where the situation of Paradise was: the particular place whereof is not now knowne.

QVEST. XIV. Of the river Pishon.

Vers. 11. THE name of one is Pishon.] Most of the ancient writers, as Hierome, Ambrose, Epiphanius, with others, did take this Pishon for the river Ganges in India, which they understand here by Havilah, from whence great store of gold is brought. But this cannot be so: 1. Ganges hath his originall, as Strabo writeth, from the mountaine Caucasus, lib. 15. and is found to bee 70. degrees, that is, 4030. miles distant from Tigris and Euphrates,* and therefore these rivers can have no concurrence together, as these are described by Moses to run through Paradise. 2. Havilah is not here taken for India, but for a countrey much nearer: as Gen. 25.18. Ismael is said to dwell from Havilah to Sur, that is toward Aegypt: and Saul is said to have smote Amelech from Havilah, as thou comest to Sur. 1 Sam. 15.7. but neither Ismael dwelt in India, nor yet Saul pursued the Amalekites so farre. 3. And though India be fertile of gold, from whence it is supposed Salomon had such store, yet the neerer countries yeelded great plenty of gold unto David, Mo[•]b, Ammon, Amalech, 1 Chron. 17.11. 4. Wherefore it is most like, that this river Pishon was a branch of the river Tigris, which also was called in a certaine place, Phasis, as witnesseth Curtius, lib. 5. and Pasi^lgris, a word compounded of Phasis and Tigris, as Pliny saith, lib. 6. c. 27.

QVEST. XI. Of BdeUium.

BDellium. 1. It is neither a precious stone, as the Hebrewes thinke, for it is like Moses would have so called it, because he nameth the Onix stone in the same place with it. 2. Neither was it a kind of Mar^lgarite or pearle, as Eugubinus and Oleaster suppose. 3. but a kind of tree, which Pliny describeth to be of a blacke colour, leafed like an oake, of the bignes of an olive tree, bearing fruit like a wild fig tree, grow^ling in Bactriana lib. 12. c.9. Dioscorides calleth it bdolchon, comming very neere the hebrew word bedoloch, lib. 1. 4. Neither doth that place make any thing against this sense, Numb. 11.7. where Manna, which was white, is said to be of the colour of bdellium: by the which, some gather, bdellium to be pearle rather for the whitenesse, than the tree called bdellium, which is blacke. But this doubt is easily removed, for though the tree was black, yet did it beare a bright gumme like vnto wax, somewhat whitish. Plin. lib. 12.9. so then Man[•]a is likened for colour not to the wood, but the gumme of the tree bdellium.

QVEST. XV. Of the river Gihon.

Vers. 13. The name of the second is Gihon] 1. This cannot be Nilus a river of Aegypt, as many have supposed: for this river had not affinity with Tigris and Euphrates, neither did ever meet with them, being so farre asunder: for Tigris and Euphrates had their beginning in the mountaines of Armenia, Nilus from the mountaines in Aethiopia: * and they run into the Persian Sea, and Nilus into the Mediter|anean. Againe, Nilus is named to be a river of Aegypt, not of Aethiopia. 2. Where that place is objected, Ierem. 2.18. what hast thou to doe in Aegypt, to drinke the waters of Geon, as the Septuagint read? the he|brew hath not Geon, but Sichor, which signifieth blacke or troubled, as Hierome translateth, which some take for Nilus, which was called Melas, blacke: some for another river that divided the land of promise from Egypt, falling into the lake Sirbon. Iosu. 13.3. 3. Aethiopia here is not that great countrey beyond Aegypt, but another countrey neere unto Palestina, called Arabia deserta, in hebrew Cush, which is a com|mon name both to that large kingdome called Aethiopia, and to Arabia. And this may appeare, Gen. 10 7. where the sonnes of Cush are rehearsed, Seba, Chavila, Sabteca, who all inhabited about Arabia: likewise Zipporah, which was a Madianitish woman, Exod. 2.16. is Chusitis, an Aethiopian, or Cushite, Numb. 12.2. so that the Madianites about Arabia were also called Aethiopians or Cushites. 4. Neither is this Gihon, that river, that ran by Jerusalem, 1 King. 1.33. though it beare the same name: for the head of that river was not farre from Hierusalem, whose springs Hezekiah stopped, and turned them another way. 5. Wherefore this Gihon compassing the land of Cush, that is, Arabia deserta, was a part or branch of the river Euphrates, called Naharsares, with Ptolomy, Baarsaris, Iun.

QVEST. XVI. Of the rivers Hidekel and Perath.

TO other two rivers, Chidekel and Perath, are confessed of all to bee the river Tigris and Euphrates: the first is so called of his swiftnesse, for Tigris in the Median language signifieth a sha••: the other retaineth the hebrew name: for whereas Moses here saith, hu Perath, this is Perath, both these joyned together, make Huphrates, or Euphrates: so called, because by the inundation thereof, as Nilus, it maketh the land fruitfull, of the root phara, which signifieth to fructifie. These two rivers taking beginning, from divers parts of the Mountaine Taurus, doe run asunder a great distance, Tigris by Ninive, Euphrates by Bal|bylon, and then ioyning together, and parting againe, doe compasse Mesopotamia, so called, because it is betweene the rivers. These then are the foure heads or streames of Paradise, as hath beene shewed.

QVEST. XVII. Whereof Adam was made, and of the excellent constitution of his body.

Vers. 7. The Lord God made man of the dust of the earth. First, it is evident that God only made man, not the Angels, they were not so much as preparers, or temperers of the matter, whereof man was made, as some have thought: for God himselfe said, Gen. 1.26. Let vs make man. 2. Man was made of the dust, as the thinner and purer part of the earth, not of a slimy matter mixed of earth and water, as some thinke: and this is evident by this reason: Man was made of that element to the which he is last resolved, but his body falleth at the last to dust. Gen. 3.19. Dust thou art, and to dust thou shalt returne. Wee deny not, but that out of dust God might prepare a second matter compounded of the elements, and thereof frame mans body, but it is curiosity to inquire after that, which is not in Scripture expressed, or out of the same by some collection may bee gathered. 3. It is also evident, that God made mans body of a more ex|cellent constitution, than any creature beside, and of a fit temper to be a convenient instrument for his soule. 1. Mans body hath the preheminance in respect of his upright stature, whereas other creatures looke downewards, whereby he should be admonished to looke upward toward his Creator, and to behold the heavens, as also thereby is signified the lofty dominion and command, which is given unto man over other creatures. 2. The temperature of mans body is most excellent, whereas other creatures, * by reason of their grosse and cold humours doe grow over, beasts with haire, fowles with feathers, fishes with scales. 3. The fashion of mans body, and the ready use of his members, surpasseth all other creatures: as God hath given unto man his hands, whereby he worketh, and perfecteth the invention of many profitable art. 4. Though other creatures in the quicknesse of some senses exceed man, as the vulture in seeing, the dog in smelling, the moule in hearing, the spider in feeling: and in strength, many beasts goe beyond man: yet herein is mans excellency, that he both better discerneth and judgeth of the outward sense, and is endued with rea|son, wherby he subdueth all other creatures to his service: and so maketh use unto himselfe of their strength, sense, or what other naturall faculty they have. Lastly, it was fit that mans body should bee made of an earthly, not of an •ethereall or celestia|l matter, because he was to live in the earth: and for that such a bo|dy was fittest to bee capable of sense, by the which the soule being sent into the body as a naked table, might gather experience, and by experience knowledge.

Perer.

QVEST. XVIII. In what state or age Adam was created.

1. FVrther, that Adam was created in a perfect age, it is without question, because his body was in the first instant apt to generation: for the Lord said unto them, increase and multiply: and immediately after his transgression Cain was begotten, Genes. 4 1, 2. But in what age, and stature of body Adam was created, it is not so certaine: some think, that he was made about the yeares of Christs age, between 30. and 40. but I rather approve their collection, that thinke his body was in the creation, of the same growth and per|fection, wherein those long lived Patriarks were fit for generation, which was about 65. yeares, for at that •ge Kenan & Henoch begat children, and none under those yeares, Genes. 5.12. whereupon it followeth, that <◇> Adams bodie did shew as it were 50 or 60 yeares in his creation, * he might well bee thought to bee •ongest liver of all the Patriarks: for he lived after his creation, 930 yeares, to the which adde 50 yeares, •ll which time his bodie if it had beene borne would haue beene growing to that state, wherein he was •reated: and so he shall exceed the age of Methuselah, who lived but 969 yeares. 3. But that is a ridiculous conceit of Ioannes Lucidus, lib. 1. de emendat. tempor. c. 4. that Adam was the biggest Giant that ever was: and *Moses Barceph*a reporteth the like fansie of some, that iudged Adam to be of that bigge stature, that <◇> could wade ouer the Ocean. This fansie is grounded vpon the Latin text, Iosu. 14.15. the name of He|orn was before Ciriatharbe, or citie of Arbah: Adam the greatest among the Anakims is there placed. * and •hose Anakims, say they, were Giants. Contra. But the text in the Hebrew is thus: he was a great man among the Anakims: meaning Arba before mentioned the word indeede is Adam, which is here no proper name, but a common name for a man, as it is taken in the Scripture, he, a great Adam, or man among the Anakims: if Adam should be taken properly, then must they make the Giant Arba and Adam all one, which is im|possible, the one living before the other after the flood.

Verse. 7. And breathed in his face the breath of life, and the man was a living soule. 1. We neither thinke, that Adams soule was created before his bodie, as Plato among the heathen, and Origen among the Christians thought, that all soules were made together in the beginning, and after sent into the bodie. 2. Neither that Adams bodie and soule were created in the same instant together, as Damascen, lib. 2. de fide. c. 12. & Thomas Aquina with others are of opinion. 3. But wee rather judge with Chrysostome, hom. 12. that Adams bodie was first framed out of the dust, and then God breathed into it life: and this opinion is most agreeable to the text: that God first made man out of the dust and then breathed the breath of life, and so he became a living soule: so that he was not a living soule in the first instant of his creation, but after God had breathed into him the breath of life: such also is the generation of Adams posteritie, the bodie is first framed in the wombe, and then the soule is infused: as David describeth the manner of his conception, Psalm. 138.15.16. I was made in a secret place, and fashioned beneath in the earth, thine eyes did seeme, when I was yet without forme: where David may seeme to allude to Adams creation, who properly was framed beneath in the earth, and of whom also it may truly bee said, that God saw him, when hee was yet without forme.

QVEST. XX. What is meant by breathing the breath of life.

Vers. 7. THE Lord had formed man, &c. 1. The word is jatsar, which signifieth to fashion or to give shape: & so the Lord here doth perfect the feature of man. 2. He is made not of the dust as some read, but dust of the earth: to shew that man is nothing else but du•t: as the Lord afterward said unto him, Dust thou art: the Lord compounded the bodie of man both of the dust, & red clay of the earth called adamab whereof Adam had his name. 3. But where God is said to breath into man the breath of life, we neither thereby understand with Ramban, that God inspired into Adam his reasonable soule, as part of his owne substance: neither yet doe we thinke that God used any materiall blast: nor yet is it only a metaphoricall speech, uttered according to our capacitie, as Mercer: neither doe we understand here only the vitall and sensitive facultie to be given to man, with Musculus: for the words following, he was made a living soule, which S. Paul setteth against a quickning spirit, 1. Cor. 15.45. doe shew more, than life and sense: therefore I thinke that properly, the breathing of the breath of life, is to be referred to the vitall power, yet so, that the soule of which that facultie dependeth, must be understood together to have beene infused and inspired by the spirit of God, which is here signified by the breathing of God: so that mans creation is set forth in three degrees: the forming of his bodie, the giving of it life, the endewing of him with a reasonable soule created after Gods image. Gen. 2.26.

QVEST. XXI. Whether Adam were created in Paradise.

Vers. 15. THEN the Lord tooke the man and put him into the garden of Eden, that he might dresse it, and keepe it. Wee reject their conceit that imagine that Adam was created out of Paradise, as also Eva: as Iosephus. lib. 1. antiquit. c. 1. and Rupert. lib. 2. de Trinitat. c. 22. because it is said, the Lord tooke the man, &c. Contra. 1. God is said to take him, not as remooving him out of another place but shewing him what he should doe, namely, to keepe the garden. 2. The word javach signifieth to leave, as Iud. 3.1. These are the nations which God left: God then left Adam in Paradise, where he had made him: as before is expressed, vers. 8.3. It is evident that Eva was made out of Adams side in Paradise, by the order of Moses narration: it is therefore most like, that Adam also was made there. 4. Where it is objected, Gen. 3.23. that God sent Adam out of Eden to till the earth, whence he was taken: as though he were taken from the earth out of Paradise: there by earth, is not understood any speciall kind of earth, but generally that element out of the which he was created: for as well that ground within, where Paradise was planted, as that without, was earth.

QVEST. XXII. Wherefore Adam was placed in Paradise.

TO dresse and keepe the garden. 1. Though man should not have toyled or wearied himselfe with any labour in Paradise, for that was laid upon him as a punishment afterward, to eat his bread in the sweat of his browes, Gen. 3.19. yet it is evident that hee should have exercised himselfe in some honest labour, even in Paradise. 2. As his charge was both to dresse the garden in planting and nourishing of trees: in which kinde of husbandrie many even now doe take a delight, and hold it rather to bee a recreation, than any wearinesse unto them: as also to keepe it from the spoile of the beasts. 3. This labour was enjoyned Adam, 1 that beeing thus occupied in continuall beholding of the goodly plants in Paradise, he might thereby bee stirred vp to acknowledge the goodnesse and bounty of the Creator. 2. as also thereby the Lord had respect to our instruction, that if Adam was not to live idly in Paradise, much lesse should we spend our daies now in doing of nothing.

QVEST. XXIII. Whether the precept given to Adam were only negative.

Vers. 16. AND the Lord commanded him saying, Thou shalt eat freely of every tree of the garden, &c. From these words divers questions are moved. First, wee doe not thinke with Thomas Aquinas, par. 1. qu. 97. art. 3. that this precept was as well affirmative in commanding Adam to eat of all other trees, as negative in forbidding him to eat onely of one tree. 1. This precept to eat of every tree should have beene burdenous to Adam, and a restraint to his liberty, if hee should have beene tyed to eat of all, and not where him liked, 2. It had beene superfluous, seeing his owne naturall appetite would have moved him to eat of the food appointed for him: for though Adam in the state of innocency should not have beene pinched with such hunger and thirst, as wee now are, yet a naturall appetite to his meat hee should have had: for otherwise his food would not have beene pleasant unto him. 3. Evabest sheweth, what Gods precept was, Gen. 3.2. We eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden, but of the fruit, which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said ye shall not eat of it. Gods charge then was only negative, not to eat: the other to eat of the trees, was left unto their choice.

QVEST. XXIII. Whether the precept was given both to Adam and Eve.

SEcondly, though Augustine doe thinke, that this precept of not eating was given only to Adam, and by him to Eva, lib. 8. de genes. ad lit. c. 17. yet we hold it more probable, that God gave this charge un|to them both together. 1. Eve confesseth, that God spake unto them both, and said, Yee shall not eat of it. Gen. 3.2. 2. The Lord saith unto both of them together, Gen. 1.19. Behold, I have given unto you, every herbe, and every tree, &c. at which time also, it is like, that he gave them the other prohibition, of not eat|ing of that one tree: for if God had made that exception before, he would not have given a generall per|mission after, or if this generall grant had gone before, the exception comming should seeme to abrogate the former grant. 3. The Septuagint seeme to bee of this minde, that this precept was given both to Adam and Eve, reading thus in the plurall number, In what day ye shall eat thereof, ye shall dye: and so doth Gregory read, lib. 35. moral. c. 10.4. But though in the originall the precept be given in the name of Adam only, that is so, for that Adam was the more principall, and he had charge of the woman: and for that the greatest danger was in his transgression, which was the cause of the ruine of his posterity: or as Mercerus well noteth, Adam was the common name both of the man and woman, Genes. 5.2. and so is taken, vers. 15. and likewise here.

QVEST. XXV. Why the Lord gave this precept to Adam.

THirdly, if it be asked, why the Lord gave this precept to Adam, 1. we answer with Gregory, lib. mo|ral. 35. c. 10. that for the better triall of Adams obedience, it was fit he should bee prohibited to doe that, which of it selfe was not evill; that Adam in abstaining from that which was good, might shew his humility to his Creator. 2. In that God gave Adam so easie a precept to keep, only to refraine to eat of one tree, having liberty to use all the rest beside, not like in hardnesse and difficulty to the commandement gi|ven to Abraham, to sacrifice his only sonne: herein the transgression and disobedience of Adam appeared to be the greater, in transgressing a precept so easie to have beene obeyed. This Augustine, lib. 14. de civit. dei. c. 15. Thirdly, we answer with Tertullian, that this precept, though in shew but easie and light, yet containeth the very foundation of all precepts, and of the whole morall law: for therein was contained both his duty toward God, in obeying his will, and love toward themselves, in escaping death, which was threatned, if they transgressed. Tertul. lib. con. Iud. So that in this precept Adam might have shewed both his love toward God in his obedience, faith in beleeving it should so fall out unto him, if he disobey|ed, as God said, hopein expecting a further reward, if he had kept the commandement. The Hebrewes here are somewhat curious, as R. Isaach: that if they had tasted only of the fruit, and not eaten it, they had not transgressed: but the commandements of God doe concerne the very thought: R. Levi, by eating, * under|standeth the apprehension of things spirituall, which is here forbidden: but we take it rather literally and historically, that God giveth them so easie a precept to try their love and obedience. Mercer.

QVEST. XXVI. How a Law is not given to a righteous man.

BUT the Apostle saith: The law is not given to a righteous man, but unto the disobedient, &c. 1 Tim. 1.9. And Adam was now just and righteous, and therefore he needed not a law: for answer whereunto, I say; that the law in two respects is said, not to be given to a just man: 1. in respect of the negative precepts, as to abstaine from murther, theft, adultery: but in regard of the affirmative precepts, to retaine them in obedience and doing of good workes, so the just man had need of a law, and so had Adam. 2. A just man need not to feare the punishment of the law: as S. Paul in another place saith of the Magistrate, which is the speaking or living law: he is not to be feared for good workes, but for evill, Rom. 13.4. And in this respect so long as Adam remained in his integrity and justice, the punishment in the law concerned him not. 3. And a righteous man rather of a voluntary disposition, than by compulsion of law yeeldeth his obedience.

QVEST. XXVII. Why God gave a precept to Adam, fore-seeing before that he would transgresse it.

FOurthly, A question will here bee moved, why the Lord gave this precept to Adam, which hee knew hee would not keepe: for answer whereunto, first wee say, that God gave him a precept, which was possible to be kept, and Adam had power to keep it, if he would: it was then not Gods fault, that gave him free will, but his owne, that abused that gift. Secondly, if it be replied, why God did not give him grace and stay him from transgression: I answer, that God could have given him such grace, and to the Angels likewise, that they should not have fallen: but it was fit that God should leave the creatures to their free will, and not hinder the course of nature, which hee had made. Thirdly, though God foresaw mans transgression, yet that was no reason to withhold the precept: for then God should neither have made the Angels, nor man, because he saw, that some of both should bee reprobates: and by the same rea|son God should not have given his written word, because many heretikes doe pervert it to their destructi|on. Fourthly, as God foresaw mans transgression, so he knew how to turne it to good, as in shewing mer|cy to sinners, and in sending Christ to restore what man had lost: so that notwithstanding Gods foresight of Adams transgression, he was not to forbear to charge Adam with this commandement, in regard of the great good, which God also did foresee should ensue.

QVEST. XXVIII. What kind of death was threatned to Adam.

Vers. 17. IN the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt die the death. The first question here moved is, what death God threatneth to Adam, whether the death only of the body, or soule, or of both. 1. We neither think that the spirituall death of the soule is here only signified, whereby the soule is separa|ted by sinne from God, which was the opinion of Philo Iudeus, lib. 2. de allegor. Mosaicis: and of Eucherim lib. 1. in Genes. for wee see that the Lord himselfe threatned the death of the body to Adam, Genes. 2.19. Dust thou art, and to dust thou shalt returne. 2. Neither is the death of the body here onely im|ply^d, as some have thought, but the death of the soule by sinne also, which bringeth forth the death of the body, as the Apostle sheweth. Rom. 5.13. Death went over all men, for as much as all men have sinned. There was first sinne in the soule, before there followed death in the body. 3. Neither doe we think, that everlasting death is here excluded,^{*} as Pererius seemeth to insinuate; lib. 4. in Genes. qu. 4. of this matter. For the Apostle saith: We were by nature the children of death, as well as others. Eph. 1.5. by Adams transgres|sion we were the children of wrath, hee therefore much more, that made us so: and if Adam had not by sinning made himselfe guilty of eternall death, why was the promise of the Messiah presently upon his fall made unto him? Gen. 1.15. whose office is to redeeme us from sinne and everlasting damnation. 4. Wee therefore thinke with Augustine,^{*} that by death here is understood, whatsoever death either of the soule or body, temporall or eternall, lib. 1. de c^ov^o. dei c. 12. for Augustine maketh foure kinds of death: the temporall death of the soule, when it is for a time separated from God by sin: the eternal death of the soule, when it is separated from the body: the temporall death of the body, when it is separated from the soule: the eternall death of the body in hell. So Adam first died in soule, by losing his innocency, he died in body, returning to dust, he was subject also to everlasting death both of body and soule, but from that he was redeemed by Christ. 5. Beside under the name of death, are comprehended all other miseries, calamities, and sorrowes, which are the forerunners of death: so that we may fitly compare death to the center, all other miseries, as the circle, or circumference about the center: or as the Scripture resembleth it, death is as the burning coale, other sorrowes and miseries are as the sparkles that doe rise from the coale, Iob 5.7. Man is borne to travaile, as the sparkes flye upward.

QVEST. XXIX. When Adam began to die.

SEcondly it is inquired, when this sentence began to take place, that in what day soever Adam did eat of the tree he should dye the death. 1. Some thinke, that a day is not here to bee taken, according to mans account of dayes, but as it is before God, with whom a thousand yeares are but as a day: and so Adam died within a thousand yeares after: so Iustinus dialog. cum Triph. but this sense seemeth to bee strai|ned. 2. Neither doe we refer these words [in what day soever] to the first clause only [thou shalt eat] and not to the second, thou shalt dye the death: as though the meaning should not bee, they should dye the same day, wherein they did eat, but at any time after: for this seemeth also to be but a forced sense. 3. But we rather allow Hieromes interpretation, that Adam began in the same day to dye, not actually, but because then he became mortall and subject to death: lib. tradit. in Gen. so Symmachus readeth, thou shalt bee mortall. 4. And beside that; then actual^y Adam entred into misery and sorrow, labour, hunger, thirst, which are the forerunners of death. 5. Adde unto this also, that in the same day, death entred by sinne into the soule of Adam, in the very same day of his transgression.

QVEST. XXX. Whether God made death.

THirdly, seeing that by Gods sentence death seased upon Adam, the question is, whether God made death, and whether this corporall death be a punishment of sin. We answer. 1. that as death is a defect of nature, beside the first intention of the Creator, brought in by sinne into the world, that God is not the ^outhor of it, but it is so only the fruit and effect of sinne. 2. But as death is a just punishment inflicted for sinne, so it is of God: who though hee first made not death, yet now hee disposeth of it, thereby shew|ing his justice upon mans transgression: so that as Augustine saith, speaking of the beginning of darke|nesse: Deus non f^oot tenebras, s^od^oordinavit: God made not darknesse, but ordered them: so may it bee said of death. 3. Eugubi^o subjecteth, that death is not properly a punishment of sinne, because it re|maineth in the faithfull, and it is not taken away by Christ. in Cosmopeia. To which we answer. 1. That death also at the last shal be destroyed by Christ,^{*} 1 Cor. 15.26. The last enemy that shal be destroyed is death. 2. That although the death of the body remaine yet in the members of Christ, in them it is not now as a punishment, but as a consequent of their corruptible nature, because all flesh is now as grasse, Isa. 40.6. and death now unto them is not a curse, but turned to a blessing in Christ, being both a cessation from labour, and an entrance into rest, Rev. 14.13. Blessed are they that dye in the Lord, they rest from their labours, and their workes follow them.

QVEST. XXXI. Why it was not good for man to be alone.

Vers. 18. IT is not good for man to be alone] 1. not, as R. Sol. left if man would have beene alone, hee might be thought to be chiefe Lord in earth, as God was in heaven: for if man had beene alone, who should have so thought or spoken? 2. Neither was it not good in respect of God, who by his infinite power and wisdom could otherwayes have multiplyed and increased man, but in respect of that order and course of generation which God appointed for other creatures. 3. Neither is this so said, as though no man could live without a woman: as the Hebrewes have these sayings, nothing is good but a woman: •e that hath not a wife, is not a man, for God hath given unto some a speciall gift, which may supply this want. 4. Neither is S. Paul contrary to Moses, where he saith, it is not good to touch a woman: for he speaketh in respect of those present times of persecution, wherein their wives might have beene a let unto them. Mer/cer. 5. But this is so said, 1. in respect of mutuall society and comfort: 2. in respect of the propagation of the world: 3. especially for the generation and increase of the Church of God: 4. but most of all it was meet that woman should be joyned to man, because of the promised seed of the woman, of whom came our Saviour Christ after the flesh.

QVEST. XXXII. Wherein woman was a meet helpe for him.

Vers. 18. LEt us make an helpe meet for him] The word cen•gd•, signifieth, as one before him, or against him. But we neither allow the conceit of some Hebrewes, as R. Solamon, that the woman is said to be against man, because she is contrary to him. 2. Nor yet doe wee like of Tostatus conjecture, because the male and female in respect of their naturall parts are contrary. 3. Nor yet doe wee approve Da/vid Kimchi his collection, that the woman is said to be as before man, that is, as a servant to attend vpon him: for shee is appointed to be his fellow-helper, not his servant: neither is it like, that if shee had beene ordained to any base use, or service, that she should have beene framed out of Adams side. 4. Therefore shee is called a helpe like to man, as Hierome readeth, or according to him as the Septuagint, or as before him as the Hebrew: both because shee was made like unto man, as well in proportion of body, as in the qualities of the mind, being created according to the image of God: as also for that she was meet for man necessary for the procreation & education of children, and profitable for the disposing of household affaires 5. This maketh a manifest difference betweene woman, which is alwayes before man, cohabiting and con|versing with him, and other females which after their copulation, forsake their males. Luther.

QVEST. XXXIII. When the woman was formed.

A Further doubt is moved by some: at what time the woman was made: where 1. wee reject the conceit of Cajetanus, who making an allegory of this story, of the framing of the woman out of Adams side, is forced to affirme, that God made man and woman together upon the sixth day, and not the woman out of the man: for thus the history of Moses is called into question, and as well may the whole discourse of the creation of the world be allegorised, as this narration of the making of woman. And again, it is contrary to the Apostle, who saith, that the woman was of the man, 1 Cor. 11.9. 2. We likewise refuse the opinion of Catharinus, who thinketh the woman to have been made the seventh day: for this also is contrary to the Scripture, Exod. 20.11. In six dayes the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is. 3. So then we hold, that the woman was made of a rib out of Adams side, as Moses setteth it downe, neither made together with him out of the earth, nor yet made so long after him upon the seventh day: but she was formed upon the sixth day; as is expressed, Gen. 1.27. God created them male and female: which story being briefly set downe in the first chap. is by way of recapitulation, rehearsed more at large in the second chap.

QVEST. XXXIII. How the creatures were brought to Adam.

Vers. 19. GOd brought them unto man, to see how he would call them. 1. We neither thinke that Adam gathered the cattell together, as the shepherd his sheep. 2. Nor yet, that they were brought to Adam by the Angels: for the text saith, that God, that formed of the earth every beast of the field, brought them: by his secret moving and stirring of them to present themselves to Adam, as they did afterward to Noah, when they went into the arke. 3. Neither was this imposition of names done mystically, nor historically as some thinke. 4. Nor yet doe wee thinke that the beasts were not brought before Adam, but his eyes so illuminate, that hee saw them every where in their places: for this is contrary to the text, which saith, God brought them. 5. Nor yet is it to be imagined, as Barcephah reporteth it, to be the conceit of some, that Adam sate in some high place in Paradise, his face shining as Moses did, and that every beast come as he was called, and bowed the head as he passed by, not being able to behold Adams face for brightnesse: for these are but mens conceits. 6. But we thinke that all the beasts,* by Gods secret instinct were gathered to Adam, for these causes: 1. that man seeing his excellent creation farre surpassing all other, might there|by be stirred up to praise his Creator. 2. that there might be a triall of Adams wisdom: hee brought them to see how he would call them. 3. that by this meanes the Hebrew language, wherein those names were gi|ven, might be sounded. 4. that mans authority and dominion over the creatures might appeare: for howsoever man named every living creature, so was the name thereof. 5. that man finding among all the creatures no helpe or comfort meet for him: v. 20. might have a greater desire thereunto, and more lovingly embrace his helper, which should be brought to him.

QVEST. XXXV. How an helpe could not be found meet for Adam.

FOr Adam found he not an helpe meete for him, &c. 1. not as Rambannoteth: Adam could finde none to whom to give his name, as he did to the woman, calling her, of ish, ishah: but it must bee understood of the nature of man,* that an helpe could not bee found answerable to him. 2. R. Eliezer, doth so inter|prete, as that God could not finde an helpe: but God knew that alreadie hee needed not for that cause to bring the creatures before Adam: hee then, that is Adam, could not finde one for himselfe. 3. But impious is the conceit of R. Sel. that man companied with every sort of beast, and so could finde none apt and meet for him. Mercer:

QVEST. XXXVI. Of the excellent knowledge and wisdom of Adam.

FURther, by this imposing of names upon the creatures, appeareth the great knowledge and wisdom of man. 1. in naturall things: for names were given at the first according to the severall properties and nature of creatures: and if Salomon had such exact knowledge of beasts and fowles, of trees and plants, even from the Cedar to the hysop, 1 King. 4.33. no doubt Adam had greater knowledge, whom we may safely hold to have beene farre wiser than Salomon, notwithstanding that place, 1 King. 12. where Salomon is said to bee the wisest of all before him, or after him: for that is spoken of the common generation of men, where both Adam is excepted,* created after Gods image, and Christ that holy seed borne without sinne: this place then needed not to have forced Tostatus to preferre Salomon before Adam in wisdom. 2. Adam had also the knowledge of supernaturall things: as he was not ignorant of the mystery of the Trinity, according to whose image he was made, one part whereof is knowledge, Coloss. 2.10. 3. It may also be safely held, that Adam had knowledge of Christ to come, though not as of a redeemer, for that promise was first made after mans fall, Gen. 3.15. but as of the author and fountaine of life, whereof the tree of life in Paradise was a symbole.* 4. And whereas some thinke that Adam and the woman were not ignorant of the fall of the Angels, as Catharinus upon this place; yet it seemeth to bee otherwise, as may appeare by the conference of Sathan in the serpent with the woman, wherein she is altogether without suspition, and the knowledge of the fall of Angels, would have made her more cautelous, not to have committed the same sinne of pride, in desiring to be like unto God, though not in the same measure or degree.

QVEST. XXXVII. Of Adams sleepe.

Vers. 22. GOd caused an heavy sleepe to fall upon man, and he slept.] 1. This was not a naturall sleepe, as some thinke, which Adam fell into by reason of his wearinesse, in taking view of the creatures: but an extraordinary sleepe caused by the Lord: who could otherwise have effected his purpose, but it pleased him to use this meanes. Mercer. 2. This was an heavy sleepe: the word is tardemah: teuni/vah, signifieth a light sleepe, shenah a more profound sleepe: but thardemah is the deepest sleepe of all. 3. R. Isaac Cara thinketh that man was cast into a sleep, to signifie, that he should be as asleep in the house, not given to contention and strife. 4. We doe thinke, that as this was a sound, heavy or deepe sleep of the body, so the soule of Adam was in an ecstasis or trance, being illuminated of God, as it may appeare by this, that when he awaked, he knew that the woman was taken out of him. 5. And this was done (Adam sleeping rather than waking) both that neither Adams sight might be offended, in seeing his side to be opened, and a rib taken forth, nor yet his sense of feeling oppressed, with the griefe thereof, which was not only by sleepe mitigated, but by the power of God concurring with the ordinary meanes: for we see by experience, that sleep is a binding of the sense.

QVEST. XXXVIII. Why the woman was made of one of Adams ribs.

And he tooke one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh in stead thereof.] First, the reason is evident, why it pleased God to make woman out of the body of man, not of the earth as he had made man. 1. That hereby might appeare the preheminance that man hath over woman: as the Apostle noteth, 1 Cor. 11.7, 8. that as man is the image and glory of God, so the woman is the glory of the man, because shee was taken out of man. And therefore also the woman hath her name and denomination of man, because she was taken out of him. v. 23. 2. Another cause of this worke was, that it might be a surer bond of love, that the man knowing the woman to be taken out of him, might more firmly set his affection upon her, being flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bones. v. 23. 3. Other reasons are given, why the woman was taken out of mans side: as not out of his head, that she should not be proud: nor out of his feet, as though she were mans vassell: but from his side, to shew the love and conjunction betweene them. Muscul. R. Iosue giveth this reason, why she was taken from under the armes, that shee might acknowledge her selfe under subjection to man: but that is ridiculous, which some Hebrewes note, that the woman was made of a bone, to shew her hard and intollerable nature. ex Mercer.

QVEST. XXXIX. Whence the bone was taken, whereof the woman was made.

SEcondly, we hold that a curious question, which is disputed of the Schoolemen, how Eva was fashioned out of a bone, whether by multiplication of it, as Hugo thinketh, or by addition of some new matter taken out of the earth, as Tostatus, or created of nothing; as Thomas that seemeth more probable, that God used no other matter, in the making of woman, but out of the man, because the text saith, she was taken out of man, which had not beene true, if shee had beene taken out of any other matter. Wee therefore thinke •he first opinion probable, that this was done by multiplying of the matter: August. Mercer. but we must not curiously seeke to finde out a reason of Gods omnipotent power.

QVEST. XL. How many ribs, and whence taken.

THirdly: 1. We neither thinke with Oleaster; that God tooke two ribs, out of each side of Adam one, because the scripture saith, v. 21. God tooke one of his ribs. 2. Wee also deride that fable of the he|brewes: that God made man and woman together, but joyned by their sides, and after parted and separa|ted them: for the text is contrary, which saith, that God tooke a rib out of Adam to make the woman (for the word (•selang) properly signifieth a rib, and not the side) and so R. Iosua taketh it. 3. It is also a super|fluous question, out of what side of Adam Eva was taken, whether out of the right or left: it is resolved by most, out of the left, because Adams heart lay there: but these are frivolous and needlesse matters.

QVEST. XLI. Whether this rib were a necessary or superfluous rib.

FOurthly: so also is that question unnecessary, and more curious than profitable, whether this rib were any one of Adams necessary and substantiall parts, or one supernumerary and superfluous: some think, that whereas a man hath now 24. ribbes, on each side 12. that this rib was one of them, and that God crea|ted a new rib in stead thereof: but this opinion seemeth to be contrary to the text: because it is said, God closed up the flesh in stead thereof: if flesh were in stead of the rib, then another rib was not made in stead thereof. Againe, God had already done with the creation of Adam, v. 7. hee made man of the dust of the earth: but if Adam had a rib created afterward, then was he not before perfectly created. Wherefore it is more like that this rib was above the usuall number of ribs created of purpose by the Lord, not as a su|perfluous or monstrous part, but as necessary for the creation of the woman, which God intended. Mercer. Calvin. And therefore Cajetanus needed not so to have beene perplexed with this question, as not finding a solution thereof, to have left the veritie of the story, and styed to allegories.

QVEST. XLII. Of the womans soule.

Fifthly, though no mention be here made of the creation of the womans soule, yet it may be gathered, that she had her soule from God immediately as Adam had, because they were both created accord|ing to Gods image, Gen. 1.27.

QVEST. XLIII. How God is said to have built the woman.

Vers. 22. HE made or built a woman, and brought, &c. 1. God is said to have built woman: neither because of the frame and fashion of her body, which is made broadest and lowest downe|ward, like the building of an house, as Rab. Sel. which though it be so, that God framed the womans bo|dy as fittest for procreation of children, yet Moses in thus speaking aimed not at it. But by this is mea|•, both that man was yet as an unperfect building, before woman was made: and that by the woman the house and family is builded by procreation of children: and thereof the hebrewes call a sonne Ben, of Banah, to build. Mercer.

2. Shee is called Ishah, woman, by a figure called Prolepsis, for this name was afterward given her by the man.

3. She is said to bee brought to man, not as though shee were made in some other place; but God doth present her and offer her to man, and as it were, marrieth and joyneth them together.

4. But the Hebrewes have here some ridiculous observations: as upon the word lisgor; * in the former verse, he closed up: which is the first word with Samech used hitherto by Moses: because Samech answereth to the first letter of Satan in sound, which is Shin, with a left pricke, they note, that Satan came into the world, and so the occasion of evill by women: so likewise out of the word Iebi•ah, which letters make 24. in number, they note that the woman was brought to man with 24. ornaments: whereas they cannot deny, but that she came naked.

QVEST. XLIII. How Adam knew the woman to be taken out of him.

Vers. 23. THE man said, this now is bone, &c. 1. Adam understood this, that the woman was taken out of him, not so much by the contemplation of the similitude and likenesse of her shape. Mercer. or that he felt some alteration in his body, as though somewhat had beene taken from it: Reuchlin. but hee had this knowledge especially by divine revelation. Calvin. 2. Adam looking upon the woman, did not presently desire her company, but sincerely with a cheerefull minde acknowledgeth how fit a mate God had provided for him. Reuchlin. 3. This now, or for this time: which words are not to bee referred with the Hebrewes to the time to come, that though at this time a wife was prepared out of man, yet it should not be so afterward, but it hath relation to the time past: that although before among all the creatures he could not find a fit companion, yet now hee had obtained one. Fagius. 4. Hee giveth the woman her name, to shew the authority of man over the woman: and in the derivation of the word ishah, from ish, the antiquity of the Hebrew tongue appeareth: the like is not to be found in any other language. 5. The Hebrewes wel note, that ish with Iod, signifieth a man, without Iod, which is the first letter of the name, Iehovah, it is fire, so where God is not the director of the inward parts, there is nothing but fire & contention. Mercer.

QVEST. XLV. How a man is said to leave father and mother.

Vers. 24. THerefore shall a man leave, &c. 1. These are not the words of Adam, as Epiphanius thinketh or immediatly uttered by the Lord to Adam, but of Moses directed by the spirit of God, who inserteth here a perpetuall law concerning marriage, 2. The man is said to leave father and mother, either comparatively and in degree, that he is rather to leave them than his wife: Oecolamp. or conditionally, if they shall seeke to dissolve the knot of marriage, therein the sonne is to leave them: Muscul. as also the leaving of the father and mother, signifieth the erecting of a new family: as the Chalde readeth, hee shall leave his father and mothers bed: for the ancient use was for children unmarried to lye in their parents chambers. Mercer.

3. They shall be one flesh, not only in respect of carnall copulation, as R. Sel. for so bruit beasts may be said to bee one flesh: but in respect of their perpetuall society, the conjunction both of their bodies and minds. Now whereas the Apostle saith, that he which is joyned to an harlot, is one flesh: the Apostle there applieth not that which is proper to marriage, * to fornication: but sheweth, what injury they doe to marriage which commit fornication, yeelding that to harlots, which is peculiar to wives, to be made one flesh with them. And yet this difference there is, that the man and wife are joyned together both in flesh and spirit: as it followeth in the same place, he that is joyned to the Lord is one spirit. 1 Cor. 6.17. but the harlot though joyned in body, is severed in heart and affection.

QVEST. XLV. How man was not ashamed of his nakednesse.

Vers. 25. They were both naked, and were not ashamed] 1. Adam was not ashamed▪ not, as some Hebrewes say, because Hava was of his owne flesh, for afterward they were one ashamed to behold the nakednesse of another: neither doth Moses set them forth as impudent and unshamefast persons: such as the Adamites are, pretending this example, companying together like brut beasts: but this nakednesse of their bodies, sheweth the nakednesse and simplicity of their minds: for shame is the fruit of sin: and therefore before sinne entred, they were not ashamed. 2. Some thinke, that there remaineth yet in children that are not ashamed of their nakednesse, some shadow of our first estate: but children are therein unshamefast for want of reason, as the like is to be seene in brut beasts. But in the kingdome of heaven, we shall be all naked, and without shame as Adam was: and without feare or danger of sinne which Adam was not. 3. Further, notwithstanding their nakednesse, they should not have beene offended with the weather, either heat or cold: not that their skin was like unto the nailes of the fingers, as R. Eliezer thinketh, which was taken away after their fall: but God would have so tempered the elements, and the quality of their bodies, as that all things should have beene serviceable unto them.

4. The places of doctrine.

1. Doct. The Dominicall or Lords day, is grounded, not upon tradition or Ecclesiasticall institution, but upon the scriptures.

IN that the Lord sanctified the seventh day, and made it a day of rest: we inserre, that as the Sabbath kept then upon the seventh day in remembrance of the creation, was of the Lords institution: so the Lords day is now observed by the same authority, in remembrance of the resurrection of Christ, and our redemption by the same: contrary to the Rhemists, who count the observation of the Lords day, but a tradition of the Church, and Ecclesiasticall institution. Rhemist. Matth. 15. sect 3. Our reasons are these.

* 1. The observation of a Sabbath or day of rest unto the Lord, is commanded in the moral law, which is perpetuall, and not to be abrogated: if this bee denied, it will follow, that there are but nine commandments, if that of sanctifying the Sabbath doe not binde now. And although wee observe not now the same day for our Sabbath, which the Jewes did, yet the seventh day we keepe still, retaining the substance of the law, which is to keepe one day holy of seven. The manner of computation and account of seven, where to begin, where to end, and to bee tied to the very same prescript of the day, was ceremoniall and a circumstance of the law, and in that behalfe doth not conclude us.

* 2. That which was by the holy Apostles by precept enjoyned, and by example observed, was of a diuine institution: thus the Lords day is prescribed by Saint Paul. 1 Cor. 16.2. where the Apostle enjoyneth them to make collection for the poore in their meetings upon the first day of the weeke, which then began to be observed for the Lords day: he himselfe, also Act. 20.7. observeth the same day, and preacheth in it. Saint John calleth it the Lords day: Revel. 1.10.

* 3. Every symbole significative or representing signe mentioned in scripture, had a diuine institution: but so is the Sabbath a symbole or type of our everlasting rest. Heb. 4.9. There remaineth therefore sabbatismus, a sabbath rest to the people of God: which words doe conclude, that both the type remaineth, that is a sabbatisme, and the signification of the type, everlasting rest.

* 4. No constitution of the Church doth simply bind in conscience: for Gods commandments only do so bind, Iam. 1.12. There is one law giver, which is able to save and destroy: but the keeping of the Lords day bindeth in conscience: for therein we are commanded not to doe our owne wayes, nor to seeke our owne will, nor to speake a vaine word, Isay 38.13. which duties, are alwayes commanded, so especially upon the Lords day: but these precepts, the observation whereof is properly incident to the Lords day, doe bind in conscience, Ergo. &c.

*5. If the Lords day were but a tradition of the Church, there should be no difference between that and other festivall dayes, but all of the like necessity, and with as great strictnesse are to be observed and kept, these as the other. But that were very absurd, seeing we find the Lords day by the Apostles to have beene observed, whereas no mention at all is made of the other in the scriptures: and the Church of God in her practice hath alwayes made a difference betweene the observation of the Lords day and other festivals: enjoying that with greater devotion alwayes to be celebrated, than the rest.

6. This also hath beene the constant doctrine of the Church of God, and the judgement of the fathers, that the Lords day is of the Lords institution: as may appeare by this sentence of Augustine: Dominicum diem, apostoli & apostoli • i vir • religiosa sanctitate habendum sanxerunt, &c. The Lords day the Apostles and

Apostolicall men have ordained with religious holinesse to bee kept, because in the same our Redeemer rose from the dead, and therefore it is called the Dominicall or Lords day, that in it we onely may attend upon the divine service: this is the first day in the world, in it were created the elements, and the Angels: upon this day Christ rose, the holy Ghost was given, and Manna descended from heaven first on this day: serm. detempor. 251.

Wherefore I cannot wholly condescend to Mercerus judgement, who saith, politiae causa retinuerunt Apostols diem dominicum Sabbato subrogatum: that the Apostles for policy sake have retained the Lords day in stead of the Sabbath: in 2 Gen. vers. 3. A policy I grant in the use of the Lords day, but that is neither the only nor chiefe reason of the institution thereof.

There are three causes of the observation of the Lords day: a religious and holy use: for the Lord to this end did consecrate this day by his owne example and commandement to bee spent in holy exercises: the Civill or politicall use of the Lords day is for the rest of our selves, our servants, and catte•ls the ceremoniall or symbollicall end, was to shadow forth our spirituall rest in Christ: in this last respect, I confesse the ceremony of the Sabbath in part to be abolished: for it is a symbole still of our everlasting rest in heaven. Heb. 4.9. But in the other two respects, the law of the Lords day is perpetuall: for that as Philo saith, it is 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, festum popolare, a popular or generall festivall to be observed of all people for ever.

I doe wonder then, this doctrine of the Sabbath, and day of rest, now called the Lords day, having such evident demonstration out of the scriptures, and being confirmed by the constant and continuall practice of the Church in all ages: that any professing the Gospell, specially being exercised in the study of the scriptures, should gainsay and impugne these positions following, as erroneous.

1. That the commandement of sanctifying the Sabbath is naturall, morall, and perpetuall: * for if it be not so, then all the commandements contained in the decalogue, are not morall: so should we have nine only, and not ten commandements: and then Christ should come to destroy the Law, not to fulfill it, contrary to our Saviours owne words, Matth. 5.17.

2. That all other things in the law, were so changed, that they were cleane taken away, as the priesthood, the sacrifices, and the sacraments: this day (namely the Sabbath) was so changed, that it yet remaineth: for it is evident by the Apostles practice: Acts 20.7. 1 Cor. 16.2. Apocal. 1.10. that the day of rest (called the Sabbath,) was changed from the seventh day, to the first day of the weeke: and so was observed and kept holy under the name of the Lords day.

3. That it is not lawfull for us to use the seventh day to any other end, but to the holy and sanctified end, for which God in the beginning created it:* for this were presumption to alter Gods appointment: and the will and ordinance of the Creator, must stand in the use of the creature: otherwise the Apostle had not reasoned well for the use of meats from the end of the creation: which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving.

4. As the Sabbath came in with the first man, so must it not goe out, but with the last: * for if the keeping of a day of rest holy unto the Lord, bee a part of the morall law (as it cannot bee denied) then must it continue, as long as the Lord hath his Church on earth: and the morall Sabbath must stand, till the everlasting Sabbath succeed in place thereof.

5. That we are restrained upon the Sabbath from work, both hand and foot, as the Jewes were: * though not in such strict particular manner as they were, for whom it was not lawful to kindle a fire upon the Sabbath. Exod. 35.2. yet in generall wee are forbidden all kind of worke upon the Lords day, as they were which may hinder the service of God: saving such workes, as either charity commandeth, or necessity compelleth▪ for it is a part of the morall precept: in it thou shalt doe no manner of worke.

6. That the Lord would have every Sabbath to be sanctified by the Minister and the people, and that in the Church he ought to preach the word, and they to heare it every Sabbath day:* (but not each of these under paine of condemnation, as the place is misconstrued,) is confirmed by the practice of our blessed Saviour, Luke 4.16. and of S. Paul: Act. 13.14. and 20.7. And hereunto are the Canons of our Church agreeable,* which require that every Minister preach every Lords day, and likewise catechise the youth.

7. That the Lord hath commanded so precise a rest unto all sorts of men, that it may not by any fraud, deceit, or circumvention whatsoever, be broken, under the paine of his everlasting displeasure:* who doubteth of this, but that every breach of any part of the morall law, especially by deceit and circumvention, deserveth in it selfe Gods curse, and everlasting displeasure: as the Apostle saith, *the wages of sinne is death. and the Law saith: Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the booke of the law, to doe them: as the Apostle citeth this text.

This doctrine of the Sabbath first grounded upon the authority of scripture, hath accordingly beene ratified by the constant and perpetuall practice of the Church.

Origen saith; In nostro Dominico die, semper pluit Dominus Manna de coelo: in our Lords day,* the Lord alwayes raineth Manna from heaven. Hierome; Dominicus des orationi tantum & lectionibus vacat: upon the Lords dayes, they onely give themselves to prayer and reading.

*Ambrose: tota dies sit vobis oratio vellectio, &c. nulle actus seculi, actus divinitatis impediunt, &c. Let us all the day be conversant in prayer, or reading: let no secular acts, hinder divine acts, let no table play carry away the mind.

*Augustine: quomodo Maria mater Domini, &c. As Mary the mother of our Lord is the chiefe among wo/men: so among other ♡ , this is the mother of the rest: the whole grace of the Sabbath, and the ancient festivity of the people of the Iewes, is changed into the solemnity of this day.

Concil. Tullen. cap. 19. Oportet eos qui praesunt Ecclesiis &c: it behoveth those which are set over the Churches, upon all dayes, but especially upon the Lords dayes, to teach the people, &c.

Matisconens. 2. cap. 1. Exhibeamus Deo liberam servitutem, &c. Let us exhibite unto God our free service, not because the Lord requireth this of us, to celebrate the Lords day by corporall abstinence, but he looketh for obedience: whereby we treading downe all terrene rites, might be raised up to heaven.

* But these allegations are here superfluous, seeing there is a learned Treatise of the Sabbath already published of this argument: which containeth a most sound doctrine of the Sabbath, as is laid downe in the former positions, which shall be able to abide the triall of the word of God, and stand warranted there|by, when other humane fantasies shall vanish: howsoever some in their heat and intemperance, are not afraid to call them, Sabbatorum errores; yea hereticall assertions, a new Jubile, Saint Sabbath, more than ei|ther Jewish or Popish institution: God grant it bee not laid to their charge, that so speake or write, and God give them a better mind.

2. Doct. The soule is not part of Gods substance.

SEcondly: where it is said, God breathed into the face of Adam the breath of life: we are not there|by to gather, that the soule of man is part of the divine substance, to the which opinion Lactantius see|meth to have inclined. lib. 2. divinar. institution. for as the breath is no part of his substance that doth breath, so neither is the soule of Gods essence, that gave it: for then, the soule of man, if it were of the divine nature, it should be immutable, and without beginning; from all eternity, as God is.

3. Doct. There is but one soule in a man.

THirdly, from hence it may be concluded, that there is but one soule in man, and that all the other fa|culties of sense and powers of nature are but handmaids to the soule, waiting upon it, and departing with it: therefore God is said to have breathed into man the spirit of l••e, that is, the reasonable soule, be|cause the body, no longer doth breath or live, than the soule is present. We doe therefore refuse Origens conceit, * upon these words Mat.24.51. The Lord will divide or cut him off: that is, the spirit of the wicked shall returne to God, and their soule shall goe to hell: hee maketh A difference betweene the spirit and soule: con|trary to the Apostle, who saying, be ye renewed in the spirit of your soules and minds, Eph. 4.24. sheweth <◇> the spirit belongeth to the mind or soule, as the purer part thereof.

4. Doct. Paradise was a place not altogether unknowne.

FOurthly, whereas Bellarmino is described by the countrey of Eden where it was situate, and by the knowne rivers of Tigris and Euphrates, we inferre that Paradise then was not a place secret and un|knowne, as Bellarmino supposeth, lib. de grat. prim hom. c. 12. for if it had beene unknowne in those dayes, the Lord needed not to set the Cherubims to keepe it with A sword shaken. And if it be objected, that Pa|radyse was never found out by any, the answer is easily made: 1. because it was kept by the Angels with great terrour, that none durst approach. 2. The Infidels and incredulous persons regarded it not. 3. The faithfull looked for a much better Paradise in heaven, and therefore sought not after it. And herein we have the judgement of Pererius against Bellarmino: one Jesuit against another, lib. 3. in genes. qu. 5. de paradis.

5. Doct. The terrestriall Paradise is not now extant.

FIfthly, whereas Bellarmino affirmeth, that the terrestriall Paradise is yet remaining, and that Henoch and Elias are there kept: it appeareth by the description of Paradise to bee a meere fable. 1. Paradise was planted where the knowne rivers Tigris and Euphrates ran together, which is either in Armenia, or Mesopotamia, or some of those knowne countries: then if Paradise were now extant in the world, it is like that in all this time it should have beene found out by the inhabitants of those places. 2. The floud over-flowed the highest hils, 15. cubits, Gen. 7.20. then Paradise also was covered with the water, where if Henoch then was, he must have also perished in the waters, being out of Noahs Arke. 3. The scripture maketh mention now of no other Paradise,* but heaven, 2 Cor. 12, 13. S. Paul calleth it the third heaven Pa|radise. 4. Pererius sheweth Ruperius and Gregory to have beene of this mind, that Henoch was not translated to the terrestriall Paradise: to the which he subscribeth against Bellarmino.

6. Doct. Marriage is not to be prohibited to any.

Sixthly, whereas the Lord saith, vers. 18. It is not good for man to bee alone: wee enforce this text against the popish forced virginity: for whereas God saw it was not good neither for Adam, then present, not for his posterity, which should have more need of the remedy, to bee alone: they contrariwise constraine their Priests and votaries to live alone, depriving them of that mutuall helpe and society, which God hath appointed for their comfort; and to be a remedy against sinne: and that this place is understood not of the marriage of Adam only, but of all the faithfull, Bellarmino confesseth, lib. de Matrim. cap. 2.

7. Doct. Polygamie condemned.

SEventhly, vers. 24. They shall be one flesh: and as this place is alleaged, Matthew 19. 5. They two shall bee one flesh: This place sheweth the corruption of polygamie, which is the having of many wives: for if God had seene it good for one man to be joyned to two, or divers women, he would have made at the first to one man, more helpes than one.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Experimentall knowledge of evill not to be desired.

1. THE Maniches objected, why did God forbid man to eate of the tree of the knowledge of good and evill, would he have him like unto bruit beasts, that cannot distinguish betweene good and evill? Augustine answereth this experimentall knowledge of evill, which Adam got by transgression, was not the wisdom of an happie, but the experience of a miserable man: for Christ knew no sinne by his experience, though he knew it by his sapience or wisdom.

2. Confut. Why God gave a commandement that man would not keepe.

2. WHY did God give a commandement, that man should not keepe, and why did he not make him so, that man should not have fallen? Ans. 1. God gave man this precept, that hee might shewe his obedience, and though he foresawe he would sinne, yet he also provided a remedie and redeemer for his sinne. 2. Though hee be in a better state, that cannot sinne at all, yet his state is good, and not to be complained of, that if he will, cannot sinne: lib. cont. adversar. leg. c. 14.

3. Confut. against Celsus.

3. CElsus derideth this storie, of the making of the woman▪ and counteth it a fable: Origen answereth, if you will not beleieve Moses, why doe you credit Hesiod your Poet?* who hath the like nar|ration, how Vulcan made a woman out of clay, whom all the gods adored, Venus gave her beautie, Pallace comelinesse of bodie, Mercurius wit, whereupon she was called Pandora, which opening the lidde or cover of the tunne, divided care and grieffe unto men, that lived without before. Origen. lib. 4. cont. C^olsus.

4 Confut. Paradise planted in a knowne place.

4. THE Papists object thus: Bellarmino would proove that Paradise was an unknowne place, because it is said, the river that went out of Eden, did divide it selfe into 4. heads. But there is no such river in Mesopotamia. Bellar. lib. 1. de grat. prim. homin. c. 12. For further answer to this objection, * I referre the reader to q. 13. before these 4. streames might be known in former time, though not now.

5. Confut. Adams sinne pardonable.

5. WHEREAS we say that all sinnes are veniall to the faithfull and elect: Bellarmino replieth that Adam committed a mortall and damnable sinne, because it was said vnto him, in what day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt die the death: lib. 1. de. amiss. grat. c. 7. Ans. Wee say, that though this sinne was damnable in it owne nature, yet by Gods grace through Christ it was made veniall and pardonable to Adam, unlesse Bellarmino say with the hereticke Ta^oiane, that Adam was damned.

6. Confut. Adam lost not his faith.

6. BY this place also he would proove that Adam and Eve lost their saith, because they beleaved not the sentence of God, that they should die, if they transgressed the commandement. lib. 3. de amis/sion. great. c. 6. Ans. This prooveth, that they failed in faith, not that their faith was utterly lost and extinguished: for if Adam had no faith remaining, to what purpose should God have propounded the promise of the Messiah to a faithlesse man?

Places of Exhortation.

1. IN that God sanctified the Sabbath, and rested therein from all his works he did it for our example, * that we therby should learne religiously to observe the Lords day. 1. in abstaining from all bodily and servile workes: 2. in keeping our selves undefiled and unspotted of all sinnefull works. 3. in sanctifying it to holy exercises, to the praise of God, and our owne comfort.

2 v. 7. In that God made man of the dust, and put the breath of life into his nostrils: * man is here to learne humilitie, by the consideration of his base and poore beginning, and to remember how brittle his state is, whose life is but a blast of the breath, a puffe of the aire: Isay, 2.22. Cease from man whose breath is in his nostrils.

3 Seeing that goodly garden of paradise, replenished with such goodly plants, * and fruitfull trees is now destroyed, and not to be found in earth, we are taught to sequester our affections from all earthly delights, and to seeke for a paradise much better in heaven.

4 v. 15. Seeing man even in the state of his innocency was not to live idly, but God assigned him to keep the garden: we are thereby admonished, * that now much more every man should occupie himselfe in some honest labour of a lawfull vocation.

5 In that God made the woman out of man, from whom shee had her beginning: * thereby is described the dutie of the wife, to be obedient to her husband, as her head and principall, for whole cause shee was made.

6 And seeing the woman is bone of mans bone, and flesh of his flesh: * thereby the husband is put in remembrance, to love, tender, and cherrish his wife, even as his owne flesh.

7. verse 18. It is not good for man to be alone: in that God first taketh care to provide an helper for man, before he saw his owne want: * and while Adams slept, and thought nothing, the Lord prepared him an helpe: we see how Gods providence watcheth over us, foreseeing for us, many things, which we see not our selves, yea taking care for us, while we sleep, as it is in the Psalme, Hee giveth his wel-beloved sleepe, Psal. 127.3. Mercer.

CHAP. III.

The Analysis or Method.

T His Chapter describeth the fall of man, first his sinne and transgression, from verse 1. to verse 9. then his punishment, verse 9. to the end. In their transgression is to be considered, the temptation of Sathan, verse 1. to verse 6. the seduction of the man and woman, verse 6. thirdly, the effects and fruits of their sinne, verse 7, 8.

In Sathans temptation wee haue his subtile insinuation, verse 1. the womans simple confession, verse 2, 3. the suggestion it selfe, verse 4, 5.

In their seduction, verse 6. first are set downe the inducements, or provocation: the goodnesse of the tree for meat, the pleasantnesse to the eye, the fruit thereof, supposed to be knowledge: then the pravarication, or offence, they did eat.

The effects of their transgression, are shame, which causeth them to cover their nakednesse, verse 7. feare, which maketh them to hide themselves, verse 8.

In the punishment, there is first their conviction of the man and woman, verse 9. to 14. then the malediction or curse: denounced first, then executed.

The sentence is denounced against the tempter, or parties tempted.

The tempter is either the necessary, that is the serpent, which was the instrument; whose punishment is set forth, verse 14. or the principall, namely Sathan, who is censured, verse 15.

The persons tempted: first, the woman is punished, with sorrow in travaile, subjection to her husband, verse 16. secondly, the man is judged: the cause is first shewed, his transgression, verse 17. then his judgement, in the cursing of the earth with thornes and thistles, in cursing of man with misery in his life, mortality in his end verse 19.

The sentence lastly, is executed, in the expulsion of man out of Paradise, verse 23. with the consultation going before, verse 22. and his perpetuall exile from thence: the Angels keepe the way to Paradise with a sword, that Adam should not returne thither.

The Exegesis, or theologicall explication.

QVEST. 1. Whether it were a true serpent that talked with Eva.

vers. 1. NOw the serpent was m•re subtile, &c.] 1. we neither thinke with Iosephus, that it was in the beginning naturall to the serpents, as to other beasts, * to have the use of speech and under|standing: which was the conceit also of Plato, that under Saturne men used to speake & conferre by lan|guage with beasts. Euseb. lib. 12. de prepar. Evang. c. 9. for if it had beene naturall to beasts to speake, they should no more after the fall have beene deprived of their naturall faculties, than the Angels or 〈◇〉, that fell: and beside, this opinion is contrarie to the Scripture, which saith, that man onely was created according to Gods image: that is, with reason and understanding, which guideth the speech.

2. We refuse also the opinion which Barcephas ascribeth to Ephrem. lib. de paradis. c. 27. that the use of speech was given unto the serpent onely for this time, as it was to Balaams asse: that the Devill spake in the serpent, as the Angell did in the Asse we grant: but the serpent could not speake of himselfe, wanting the instruments and organs of the voice which man hath.

3. Neither is Cyrrillus opinion to be received, that it was not a true serpent, but a shew onely and apparition. For then it should not have beene said, that the serpent was wiser, than all the beasts of the field: and afterward God layeth a curse upon the serpent, that he should goe upon his bellie and eate the dust of the earth: it was a true serpent then, not a shadow onely.

4 Cajetanus conceit also is to be rejected, who by a continued allegorie, by the serpent, would have the Devill understood: that there was neither serpent in truth nor in shew that appeared to Eva, but this tentation was altogether internall and spirituall: for by this meanes, the whole storie of the creation may as well be allegorized, and so the truth of the narration called in question, and beside, whereas the Devill internally tempteth onely two wayes, either by alluring the sense by some object, or else by moving and working the phantasie, our parents before their fall could not be so tempted, having no inordinate motion.

5 Some thinke that the woman did understand the speech of the serpent, such as beasts use, to expresse their minde, and not otherwise: but it is evident, that the serpent did verily speake.

6 Aben Ezra is of opinion, that it was the serpent, and nothing else: but the curse afterward pronounced upon the serpent, and that prophesie, that the seed of the woman should breake the serpents head, sheweth, that the Devill spake in the serpent, who is principally accursed.

7 Our opinion then is, that it was a true serpent which talked with Eva, as may appeare by the punishment inflicted upon this kind: and that the Devill used the serpent, a subtile beast, as his instrument, and spake out of him. This our Saviour confirmeth in the Gospell, that it was Satan, which was a murtherer from the beginning, and caused the death and fall of our parents, Iohn 18.44. And Saint Paul affirmeth, that the serpent beguiled Eva through his subtiltie: but the woman was not deceived by the serpent, but by the craft of the Devill, speaking and working by the serpent. Of this judgement are most of the auncient fathers, Basil, Chrysostome, Augustine, Damascene, &c.

QVEST. II. How the serpent is said to have beene more subtile, &c.

The serpent was more subtile than any beast of the field: 1. These words cannot be understood of the Devil, as Cajetane thinketh, who here by a metaphore is called a serpent: for betweene the Devil and the beasts of the field, there is no comparison, who in subtiltie farre exceedeth man, who is wiser than any brutish nature. 2. Neither was the serpent more subtile onely for this time, as Augustine seemeth to thinke, lib. 11. Genes. ad lit. c. 29 for Satan could not infuse more subtilty into the serpent, than by nature it had: and the text it selfe seemeth to insinuate, that the serpent by nature was more subtile than other beasts. 3. wherefore the truth is, that whereas the serpent is a most subtile beast, it was not by chance, that Satan used him as his instrument, beeing by his naturall subtiltie apt thereunto: and the serpents subtile nature appeareth, both by the sleights he useth in helping himselfe, as to let passe what Plinie reporteth, that by the juice of fennel, he strippeth himselfe of a certaine skinne, wherewith he is overgrowne in winter, and with the same hearb cleareth his dimmed sight: the Scripture sheweth, that the serpent stoppeth his eare against the voice of the charmer. Psal. 58. As also his craft appeareth in his enmitie against man,* whom he assaileth secretly and in silence: as biting the horse by the heele to cause the rider to fall, Gen. 49.17. And further, concerning the naturall wisdom of the serpent, our Saviour witnesseth, saying to his disciples, bee yee wise as serpents, innocent as doves. Mat. 10.16. 4. Some thinke, that this is set forth as a praise and commendation in the serpent, that he had such a gift of wisdom & subtilty given him in the creation: but the contrarie appeareth, that although this naturall gift in the serpent was good, yet here relation is made to Satans craft, whereby he seduced Eve: Adam and Eve are said before to be gnarumim, naked simple: and here the serpent is said to be gnarum, in the contrarie sense, craftie covert, not smple: for the Hebrew word admitteth a contrarie sense. Mercer.

QVEST. III. Why Satan in the serpent beginneth with an interrogation.

vers. 1. YEa hath God indeed said. &c. 1. Some doe take this to bee an ironieall speech, as though Satan in the serpent should scoffingly say: it is a like matter that God careth what you eat. 2. Some make it an interrogation, as though Satan should aske the reason, why God had so said, &c. as the Latine and Septuagint. 3. Some make it a naked question: Is it true that God hath said: Chald. 4. R. Sel. expoundeth it, for san, perhaps: and would have it doubtfully spoken. 5. Some make the emphasis or force of the sētence in this word God: it is not like that God would give you any such precept. 6. Aben Ezra interpre|teth aph ci, by quanto magis, how much more: that after Satan had shewed many reasons to perswade the woman, that God loved them not, hee urgeth this above the rest that God had given them this pro|hibition. 7. But the best interpretation is this, that after long communication had with the woman, at length the serpent commeth to that which he intended, to draw from the woman some answer, whereupon he might worke further: and therefore with some admiration saith in effect; it seemeth very strange, or I much wonder, that God would give any such prohibition unto you. Mercer.

QVEST. IIII. Why Satan tempted man, and that by the woman.

NOW the Devill thought to supplant man in Paradise, not because he did foresee that the Messiah should take flesh of Adam: for as yet man was not fallen, nor Gods counsell revealed concerning the Redeemer, that should breake the serpents head: but the envie of Satan was the cause that moved him to this tentation, that he might bring man into the same state of damnation: and he sheweth his malice against God, in seeking to deface his image. Calvin. 2. Hee setteth upon the woman first, not because, as Ambroseth thinketh, the precept was given onely to Adam by God himselfe: for it was spoken to them both: but because he saw her to be the weaker, and so fittest for him to worke by. Mercer.

QVEST. V. How Eva indured to talke with the serpent.

NOW whereas it will bee questioned, how it came to passe that Eva was not afraid to talke with the serpent: 1. which was not, either because this serpent, which Satan vsed, had a pleasant countenance and virgins face, which opinion is imputed to Beda, which is rather to be held a painters fancie, than the worke of nature, there beeing no such serpent to be seene in the world: 2. neither for that the serpent was more familiar with man, than any other creature, as thinketh Damascen: 3. neither can the very kind of the serpent be described, as Eugubinus saith it was the Basiliske, which poisoneth hearbs and plants with his very breath. Pererius saith, it is most like to be the serpent called Scytala, which hath a backe of divers colours: for this is too great curiositie, seeing the Scripture onely generally nameth a serpent, noting no speciall kind. 4. But as Chrysostome well observeth the sight of the serpent, which after sin became terrible & hatefull to man, was now not abhorred, neither were any creatures as yet in the state of mans innocencie, loathsome unto man, and therefore Eva might well indure the sight of the serpent.

QVEST. VI. What mooved Eva to give eare to the serpent.

BVt whereas Eva was not astonished to heare the serpent speak: 1. it was neither as Rupertus thinketh, because the woman imagined, that some powerfull spirit caused the serpent to speake, and therefore gave reverent eare: for this had not beene farre from Idolatrie, to yeeld any such reverence to any but to the Creator. 2. Neither did shee thinke, as Bonaventure holdeth, that some good spirit intending her good, thus spake in the creature. For then shee would not have said, the serpent, but the spirit or Angel deceived me. 3. Neither is it like, that Eva, as Cyrrillus seemeth to thinke, was ignorant, whether the use of speech were given unto any creature beside man: to the which opinion Tostatus and Pererius subscribe: for seeing that Adam had before given names to all creatures, which God brought unto him, they could not be ignorant by this experience, that man onely had the gift of calling and giuing names. 4. But Eva knowing well, that God had created angelicall powers, was carried away with the voice and goodly promises delivered from the serpent, not beeing so much intent from whom they came, as what was spoken, not considering, while shee was ravished with an ambitious desire of bettering her estate, whether a good or a bad Angell might thus speake out of the serpent: for to say, that man was either ignorant of the creation of Angels, or of the power and facultie of beasts, was too great a defect of know|ledge, to be incident to that perfect estate.

QVEST. VII. Whether the serpent went vpon his bellie before the curse.

vers. 14. VPon thy belly shalt thou goe, dust shalt thou eate, &c. 1. It is neither to be thought with Barcephus, that the serpent before went upon his feete as other beasts: for God would not alter the nature and shape of his creature, having given power to every creature before to multiply his owne kinde, & this had beene to mislike the worke of his owne hands. 2. Neither is it to be supposed with Didymus Hieromes master, that the serpent, during onely this time of tentation, was caused by the spirit to stand upright, for it had beene no punishment for the serpent to returne to his first nature. 3. Neither doe we approve the sentence of the fathers, as of Augustine, Gregory, and others, who by an allegorie doe ap|ply these words to the Devill: that he goeth upon his belly when he tempteth men to gluttony & leachery, whereof the bellie is the instrument: and he eateth earth, having power over earthly minded men: for after this manner, the whole storie may likewise be allegorized. 4. Neither with some others, as Pererius, doe we approve both an historicall sense of this malediction in the serpent, & an allegoricall in the Devill: but the whole is historicall; the first part whereof concerneth the serpent the instrument, the other Satan the principall, that his head and power should be broken by this meanes: and where he had thought to gained, he should sustaine a greater losse.

5 Our sentence then is this, that the curse denounced against the serpent, consisteth not in the thing it selfe, but the manner of it: the serpent did from his creation creepe upon his brest, and feede of the earth, but now, this is made ignominious and accursed unto him, which was not before: as weeds and thistles were created before mans fall, but after beganne to bee a curse to the earth: and man was naked before his transgression, but was not ashamed of it till after: so the raine-bow was before the floud, but then onely ordained to be a signe of the covenant, that God would no more destroy the world with water.

QVEST. VIII. Why the Devill spake out of the serpent.

IF it bee further demanded, why the Devill spake out of the serpent, rather than appeared in any other shape. 1. I say with Augustine, because God permitted Satan to use no other beast as his instrument, but the serpent. 2. That it was neither fit that hee should have appeared in humane shape, for Eva knew well enough, that her selfe and Adam, were all mankind, and none beside them: neither if Satan had framed a voice out of the aire, would Eva have endured so familiar a conference: and for that the serpent, in regard of his subtilty, was the fittest instrument, that would soone winde himselfe in and out, and creepe away, that he should not be seene of Adam. 3. In that Moses maketh no mention of the Devill, but of the serpent only, it was both in regard of the weaknesse and rudenesse of the people, who could not well conceive any other but the visible creatures, and for that Moses writing a story, reporteth things as they appeared, as the story of Samuels apparition to Saul, calleth it Samuel, whereas it was Satan in Samuels shape, because it so appeared. 4. The Hebrewes here are not to be approved,* that say the serpent coveted to have company with the woman: for that is against the nature of beasts.

QVEST. IX. Of the manner how the woman was tempted of Satan.

COncerning the tentation of Satan▪ and seduction of the woman: 1. he beginneth subtilly, hath God in/deed said, yee shall not eat of every tree? whereas God onely forbad them one tree, as though God had dealt hardly with them, in abridging them of their liberty. 2. The woman reporteth not the words of the prohibition truly: some thinke, that shee added of her owne; ye shall not touch it, as Ambrose: some, that she changed the words, as Rupertus, for the tree of knowledge of good and evill, saying, the tree in the midst of the garden: but certaine it is, that she taketh somewhat from Gods words, pronouncing doubtfully,* lest ye die, which God had denounced most certainly, ye shall dye the death: that is, surely dye. 3. Satan in his relply, v. 4, 5. heapeth up many lies together, 1. that they shall not dye: 2. that God did envy their happi|nesse: 3. that knowledge might be had in eating of fruit: 4. that they should thereby bee made like unto God. Beside, Rupertus conceit is here excellent, that the Devill in every one of these points speaketh doubt|fully, as he gave the Oracles of Apollo, that every word which he spake, might have a double meaning: * ye shall not die: that is, not presently the death of the body: though presently made subject to morrality: your eyes shall bee opened, so they were to their confusion: knowing good and evill, not by a more excellent knowledge, but by miserable experience after their transgression: ye shall bee as gods, either as Angels, or like unto us, sinfull and wicked spirits. 4. The woman seeth the tree to be good for meat, there is her vo|luptuous desire: pleasant to the eyes, there is her curiosity: and to be desired for knowledge, there is the va|nity of her minde. Thus as the Apostle saith, whatsoever is in the world, is the concupiscence of the flesh: the concupiscence of the eye, the pride of life. 1 Ioh. 2.

QVEST. X. Adam tempted and deceived as well as the woman, though not in the same degree.

THE order then and manner of the tentation was this. 1. It is evident, that neither Adam nor Eva, had committed any sin before this congresse with Satan, for the Scripture saith, that til then they were both naked, and were not ashamed, Gen. 2.25. So that herein both Rupertus and Ferus are deceived. 2. Satan first assaileth the woman, both being as the weaker, more easie to be seduced, & as a fit instrument also to entice Adam. 3. Adam did not only incline unto her, amicabili quadam benevolentia, of a loving mind, and there|by enticed as Sampson was by Dalilah, and Salomon by his wives: but it is like he was seduced by the same flattering and false perswasions, whereby the woman was first beguiled, being carried away with an am|bitious desire in knowledge, not to be equalized, but made like unto God: this may appeare out of the 22. verse, Behold man is become like unto us, to know good and evill: where the Lord reproveth also mans affe|cted and curious desire to attaine to a greater perfection.

Neither doth that place of the Apostle contradict this opinion: Adam was not deceived, but the woman was deceived, and was in the transgression. 1 Tim. 2.14. for whether we expound it with Epiphanius and Calvin, that the Apostles meaning is, the woman was first deceived, not the man: or with Mercerus, that the man was not deceived, but entised by the womā: or with Hierome, that Adam was not deceived by the ser|pent, but by the woman: or that Eva did not wittingly deceive Adam, as the serpent beguiled Eva: where|of the two first expositions, being one in effect, are most agreeable to the Apostles minde: by this text Adam is not wholly exempted from being deceived, but only in that manner as Eva was perverted and seduced.

QVEST. XI. Whether Adams sinne was the greatest of all sinnes.

NOW as touching the greatnesse of Adams sin, simply it was not the greatest sin of all committed in the world: neither in respect of the kind of the sinne, as adultery is greater than fornication, for so we hold blasphemy and Idolatry to be greater sins than Adams was: neither in respect of the affection of the offender; for many are with a more ungodly, violent, and sinfull desire given over: then Adam in this tentation: neither was it the greatest, in respect of the quality of the sin, for it was pardonable in Adam, where|as sinne against the holy Ghost is impardonable. But yet it may truly bee said to bee the greatest, 1. in regard of the fruits and sequele of that sin, the contagion and infection of all mankind. 2. in respect of Adams person, who in his excellent gifts considered, might have more easily resisted. 3. in regard of the facility of the commandement, which required no hard or difficult thing. 4. the place also it selfe being considereth namely in Paradise, where there was no provocation, or allurement unto sinne.

QVEST. XII. Whether Adams or Eves sinne were the greater.

NOW if Adams sinne be compared with the womans: in some things it will be found equall, in some things superiour, in some inferiour to it. 1. Both Adam and Eva sinned in their infidelity, in not belee|ving the word of God, but giving credit to Satans faire promises, that they should not dye. 2. in their con|cupiscence, in coveting the forbidden fruit. 3. in their ambition in desiring a further state of perfection. Se|condly, in respect of Adams person, who was appointed to be the womans head, and of his gifts of know|ledge and wisdom, the man was more faulty than the woman. Thirdly, yet simply, the womans sinne was greater, because beside other sinnes common unto them, this was proper unto her in seducing her hus|band: so that as Augustine well noteth, de Genes. 11.42. the man sinned onely against God and himselfe, the woman, against God, her selfe and her neighbour: beside, the woman was first deceived, and became the author and beginner of transgression.* Therefore the opinion of them is not here to bee allowed, who doe either aggravate Adams sinne, or extenuate the womans: of the first sort is the author of the questions upon the old Testament under Augustines name, who ascribeth idolatry to Adam. quest. 83. whereas hee desired not to be worshipped as God, but onely in knowledge to be like unto God: neither can Adam be properly charged with covetousnesse, as Hugo S. Vict. doth, unlesse it be taken for an immoderate desire of any good thing, more than is fit: of the other sort is Cajetan, who would lessen the womans offence, both in the thing desired, which was the knowledge of good and evill, the externall act, in coveting the fruit which was faire to the eye, in regard of her sex, being a woman, and the weaker vessell. But this not|withstanding, the womans offence in the nature thereof, was the greater, as before is shewed.

QVEST. XIII. Whether Eve added to the commandement, and spake doubtfully.

Vers. 3. NEither shall ye touch it lest ye dye, &c. 1. Ab. Ezra. noteth, that the serpent useth the name Elo|him, speaking of God, not Iehovah, because hee knew it not: But that is not the reason, for the woman useth also the name, Elohim, who was not ignorant of Iehovah: but Satan of purpose forbeareth to use that name Iehovah, which is a name of mercy, and urgeth in the name Elohim the severity of God. Mercer. 2. Neither doth the woman adde any thing to Gods precept, that they should not touch it, but faithfully expoundeth the meaning of the precept: some Hebrewes think, that Satan took occasion hereby to move the woman to touch the fruit; that seeing she died not by touching, shee should though the Hebrew particle pen, be not alwayes so taken; yet it appeareth so to bee used by the woman: because Satan hereby taketh occasion to put her out of doubt, that shee should not dye at all. See Muscul. Iun. though Mercerus herein dissent from them.

QVEST. XIII. Why Eve gave to her husband.

Vers. 6. She gave to her husband with her; &c. 1. This sheweth not, that Adam was at this time with Eve, as some Hebrewes thinke, he might come before the tentation was finished. The meaning is, that he might eat with her; that is, as she had done. 2. Some thinke that before the woman did forbear to eat of the fruit, supposing it was poyson, and so present death: but the truth is, that hitherto she had abstained in obedience to the commandement. 3. Neither did she give it to Adam, lest, if she died, he might have taken unto him another woman, as some Hebrewes imagine; for shee was the onely woman in the world: but she was desirous to make her husband partaker of her happinesse, as she thought. Mercer.

QVEST. XV. How many wayes the eyes of the body and minde are said to be opened.

Vers. 7. Their eyes were opened. Their eyes of the body and minde are said divers wayes to bee opened, the eyes of the body three wayes. 1. When they that are blinde, are made to see, as Christ caused the blind to see. 2. When he that hath his eyes, seeth somewhat, which he saw not before, as Ba/laam his eyes were opened, when hee saw the Angell, with a naked sword. 3. When they which see di|scerne that which they perceived not before; as the Disciples discerned Christ in the breaking of bread. The eyes of the minde are opened likewise three wayes. 1. When men are brought from ignorance and darknesse to the knowledge of Christ. Act. 26, 18. 2. When men are brought by affliction to know them|selves, as the prodigall childe is said to come to himselfe, Luke 15.17. 3. When a mans sinne, when it is committed, presenteth it selfe, as Iudas sinne did, when hee had betrayed Christ. Thus the eyes of Adam and Eves minde were opened to see their sinne, and the eyes of their body were opened to see and discern the deformity of those parts, which were comely before: Muscul.

QVEST. XVI. How their eyes are said to be opened.

Vers. 7. Their eyes were opened, and knew that they were naked. 1. Not that they were either blinde be|fore, for how could Eva have seene the fruit of the tree that it was faire to the eye, if shee had beene blinde? 2. Neither as Iosephus thinketh: lib. 1. antiquit. c. 1. by the eating of the forbidden fruit had they gotten a sharper wit and understanding, for then the eating thereof, had bin a gaine unto them. 3. Nei|ther is it so said, as R. Salomon conjectureth, because now first they began to have knowledge of evill; for as they had knowledge of good before, so as by the contrary, they had the knowledge of evill also: but now indeed they know evill by miserable experience. 4. But now their eies were opened, the eyes of their minde and conscience, to see and acknowledge their sinnes and disobedience, wherein they were blin|ded before, and to feele the rebellion and disobedience of their members in their disordered and unruly motions, which maketh them for shame to cover them; which use of vailing and covering the secret parts, even nature hath taught the barbarous nations, which even in their baths, as Augustine writeth,* will not have their unseemely parts uncovered: the like Strabo reporteth of the Indians, and Diodor•• Siculus of the Aethiopians, that going naked in the rest of their body, use to cover their secret parts.

QVEST. XVII. Why they made aprons of fig-leaves.

And they sewed fig-tree leaves:] 1. Not because the fruit thereof, whereof they had tasted was forbid|den, for they would so much more have abhorred the leaves thereof. 2. Neither to betoken the desire of the flesh now procured by sin, which they say is provoked by the rubbing of the fig leaves. * 3. Nor yet as the testimony of repentance, because fig leaves doe pricke and sting the flesh. 4. Neither yet need wee run to allegories: that this covering with leaves or with fruit, betokeneth the vaine excuse and defence of sinne. 5. But they made them aprons of fig leaves, both being fit for their breadth, and ready at hand, for no other cause than to hide their nakednesse, whereof they were now ashamed.

QVEST. XVIII. Why man was created naked.

NOW if it be further asked, why man was created naked. I answer, 1. with Basil, lest his mind might have beene occupied in seeking for outward things, and so withdrawne from better meditations: God halving a purpose to cloath his body with some excellent brightnes, such as is in the Angels. 2. Or with Am|brose, that being not naked and destitute of the ornaments of vertue, they lesse needed outward ornaments. 3. Whereas clothing serveth for necessity, to defend from the cold, and for honesty and comelinesse, * Adam before his fall in neither respect needed cloathing, being neither subject to heat or cold, nor yet having any uncomelinesse in his members. 4. Adde hereunto, that whereas other creatures were created with their naturall cloathing, birds with feathers, beasts with haire and wooll, fish with scales, man was created naked, that hee might exercise his wit and be profitably occupied in the invention of arts for the necessary use of man.

QVEST. XIX. Why the voyce of the Lord was heard in the coole of the day.

Vers. 8. They heard the voyce of the Lord walking in the garden in the coole of the day.] 1. This was neither some great wind, or terrible voyce, which went before God, as when he spake to Elias, to betoken the Lords comming: for the Chalde paraphrast translateth [the voice of the word of God.] 2. Neither yet need we run to allegories, as with Iren•u•, that this walking of God in the coole of the day, * did shal|dow forth the comming of Christ toward the end, as the evening of the world. 3. Nor with Gregory, that man having lost the fervent heat of charity, did now slumber in the shadow of sin, as in the coolnesse of the aire. 4. Nor with Rupertus, that as men risen from sleepe doe walke in the coole aire, so God now awalked commeth forth, having beene as it were asleepe before while hee suffered Satan to tempt our parents. 5. But the meaning is plaine, that after man had transgressed, in the eventide, or sunne-set, when the winde in those countries adjoyning to the sea, useth most to be stirring, the Lord sheweth himselfe to Adam, and calleth him to account, the winde of the day brought the sound of Gods voice to Adam. Iun. So then, this word walking, is neither to be referred to Adam, nor yet properly to God, but he heard Gods voyce wal|king, and comming toward him afarre off: Aug. And this winde was no extraordinary tempest, as Mer|cer: shewing Gods approaching; neither doth it properly describe the time of the day: neither the mor|ning, as Calvin: noonetide, as the Septuagint or eventide, as the Hebrewes (although I thinke it most pro|bable, that Adam fell in the evening of the same day of his creation) but it expresseth only the manner▪ how Gods voyce was brought by the whisking wind to Adam: some, doe take hai•m•, not for the day, but the sea, from whence the lowdest winds doe come; but that is not so proper in this place. The voyce which Adam heard, was not a sound only of Gods comming, as Iun. but it was the same voice, which is expressed, v. 9. when God called to Adam, first afarre off, when Adam hid himselfe, and then neere hand.

QVEST. XX. Why Adam hid himselfe.

ADam hideth himselfe, when God first began to call unto him, 1. not for that as Irenaus thinketh,* hee thought himselfe unworthy to come into Gods presence: 2. or, as Augustine, did he it only as a man amazed, not knowing which way to turne himselfe: 3. but being guilty of transgression, he thought simply to hide himselfe from the presence of God, as Iob expoundeth, If I have hid my sin as Adam. &c. Iob 31.33.

QVEST. XXI. How God diversly speaketh unto man.

Vers. 9. The Lord called to the man] God diversly hath used to speake unto man: either by himselfe by his secret inspiration and revelation, as he did to Isaiah, 2 Kin. 20.4. or by his messengers the An|gels: who spake sometimes by voyce only, as Ioh. 12.28. there came a voice from heaven: sometime by v|sion internall, such as was the ladder, that Iacob saw in his dreame, Gen. 28. externall, sometime in humane shape, as to Abraham, Gen. 18. by other creatures either without sense, as by fire in the bush to Moses, or having sense, as the Angel spake in Balaams asse. Now the questiō is, which of these waies God talked with Adam: for I neither thinke with Gregory, that Adam per Angelū increpationis verba audivit, that Adam was rebuked by an Angel: for v. 17. the Lord saith, because thou hast eaten of the tree, wherof I cōmanded thee, &c.* the same God now speaketh to Adam, that gave the first commandement concerning the tree: neither with Augustine, to whom subscribeth Mercerus, per creaturam visibiliter factum, in that Adam heard the voice of God, it was done visibly by some creature: for mention onely is made, that they heard the voice of God,* vers. 8, 10. they saw him not, that spake to him. Therefore it is like, that as God spake to Elias, 1. King. 19. to our Saviour Christ, Iob 12.28. to Moses in the mount: yee saw no image in the day that the Lord spake unto you, Deut. 4.15. so Adam onely heard the voice of God, he saw him not.

QVEST. XXII. Why God asketh Adam, where art thou?

WHere art thou? 1. God was not ignorant where Adam was, for no place be it never so secret, is hid from God, but by this question God draweth Adam to confession and acknowledgement of his sinne: as afterward the Lord for the same cause asked Cain, where his brother Abel was. 2.

Neither doe we refuse Ambrose collection,* who saith it was not tam interrogatio, quam increpacio, so much an interroga|tion, as an increpation, that Adam should consider not in what place, but in what state he was now, and from whence fallen. 3. Pererius upon this place noteth well, that God by thus saying, did declare that Adam was one of those, to whom the Lord saith, I know not whence yee are, Luk. 13.27. that by his sinne he was separated and estranged from God.

QVEST. XXIII. How the Serpent is accursed.

Vers. 14. The Lord said to the Serpent, because thou hast done this, &c. 1. God curseth the Serpent be|cause hee was Satans organ and instrument: as this standeth with Gods justice to punish the instrument with the principall: and he that lay with a beast, they were both to bee burned, Levit. 20.15. And though the Serpent had no understanding, yet God curseth him for mans instruction, that he might see how much this their action in seducing him, was displeasing to God, Mercer. 2. Some doe referre the whole curse to the Serpent, some apply it wholly to Satan, by way of allegory: some understand the whole, l|terally of the Serpent, mystically of Satan, Mercer. But the better course is, to give part to the Serpent in this verse, part to Satan in the next, Iun. Calvin. 3. Some doe understand the Serpents curs|, of the shortnesse of life: but other beasts are as of short continuance: some Hebrewes understand the going upon his belly, of the Serpents long being with young, which is seven yeares together: the Wolfe, Lion, and Beare, and the Ape, bring forth once in two or three yeares, the Viper in seven yeares: but if this were the curse, then woman •hat goeth nine moneths with childe, should be of worse condition in this belhalfe, than other beasts, as the Fox that goeth but six moneths, the Sow sixty dayes: the meaning of the curse is, that the Serpent should be detested of all other creatures, as noxious and poysonfull, and should be marked with this ignominie▪ to creepe upon his breast, Mercer: 4. Gechon by Hierome is translated breast, Onkeleus readeth the belly, the Septuagint both belly and breast: because the Serpents breast and belly is altogether, and he goeth upon them both: the word Halach, to walke, is not only given to those crea|tures that walke on foot but to other things that move howsoever: as to Rivers, Gen. 2.14. to Noahs Arke, Gen.7.18. Muscul. 5. The Serpent did neither goe upright before, neither at that instant onely when Sa|tan used him: but whereas he did extoll himselfe against man, he is brought to his first condition: and his creeping and feeding of the earth, which should not have beene ignominious before, is accursed and made reproachfull now, Mercer; Calvin.

QVEST. XXIV. Of the enmity betweene the seed of the woman and the Serpent.

Where the Lord saith, I will put enmity betweene thy seed and her seed. 1. This first is truly understood of Christ,  quia solus ita semen multeris est, ut non etiam viri semen sit*, who was so the seed of the woman, as he was not of the man: and betweene Christ and Satan the greatest enmity was, who consen|ted to him in nothing. 2. We may also understand by the seed of the woman, all the Elect, and by the seed of the Serpent, all the wicked, who are the sons of the Devill, as Christ said to the unbeleeving Jewes, Yee are of your father the Devill, Ioh. 8.44. betweene whom, the Elect and the wicked, there shall be perpetuall enmity: and therefore Rupertus saith, the Scriptures are called the booke of the battells of the Lord, Num. 21. which declareth the continuall combate betweene the Church of God and the world.  3. Part of this sentence is literally true in the Serpent: for as Rupertus noteth, if a woman tread upon the Sepent with her bare foot, he presently dieth; but if he first bite her heele, the woman dieth of that poyson. But how|soever this be true, it is most certaine, that betweene man and those venomous creatures, there is a naturall hatred, that one cannot endure the sight and presence of the other. 4. Some doe marvell, why the Serpent is not made mute and dumbe,  seeing Satan abused his tongue and mouth to tempt the woman: the He|brewes thinke that the punishment is included, in that dust is appointed to bee his meat: for such whose mouthes are filled with earth, cannot speake. And to this day we see that the punishment remaineth upon the Serpent, who maketh no perfect sound as other cattell doe, but hisseth onely. 5. Satan was accursed before God before, nor any hope of recovery remained, but now the sentence is declared to the comfort of man,  and Satans state declared to be irreparable: for his punishment shall endure all the daies of his life, that is, for ever. 6. Some by the heele, understand the end or extremity, as Onkelos: that in the end the Devill as a Serpent shall bite the heele: some the inferiour part of the soule, some the humanity of Christ, which Satan pinched at when Christ was put to death: but thereby Christ gave him a deadly blow upon the head. But generally it signifieth, the weaker parts of Christs body, which is the Church: that Satan shall bee nibling and biting at the heele,  as a Serpent doth, when hee is overwhelmed and turned upon his backe: that is, hee shall touch the members of Christ, and trie them with many temptations, but hee shall not be able to hurt them, Mercer. 7. By the dust also, some understand terrene and earthly things, wherein the Devill is conversant, being cast downe from heaven: some the graves and sepulchers of dead men, where the spirits appeare: but this clause is properly referred to the Serpent, who as he was Satans instrument, to cause man to sinne and returne to the dust, so that he should feed of the dust.

QVEST. XXV. Of the sorrowes of women.

Vers. 16. I Will greatly increase thy sorrowes.] There is a threefold punishment inflicted upon the woman, as Rupertus well noteth, pro seductione, conceptus multiplicitas, pro gulae oblectamento vter• do/lor, pro scandalo, quod viro exhibuit servitutis poena, &c. because she was seduced, she hath sorrow in con|ceiving, for the delight of her eye, the paine of her wombe for the offence in enticing her husband, sub|jection unto him. But where the Lord saith, I will multiply thy sorrowes and conceptions.] 1. It is neither with Oleaster to be referred to the bearing of the child so long in the womb, for that is agreeable to nature, * and our Saviour was so borne in his mothers womb, and therefore this was no part of the curse. 2. Neither doth the curse consist in the multiplicity, as Rupertus, because many are borne, which are ordained to destruction: for simply the fruit of the womb is a blessing, Psal. 27.3. * 3. But hereby the many sorrowes are signified which women doe endure in the conception of their children: as faintnesse, loathing of meat, longing for strange things grieve, ache, unwilsomnesse, perill of abortion, and such like. Secondly, whereas women should before have brought forth without pain, now their travaile is full of labour, in so much as many have miscarried in the birth of their children, as Rachel: and it is well observed of Aristotle, * that no other creature with such difficulty bringeth forth her young, as woman doth, which is an evident demonstration of this punishment laid upon them. Thirdly, where it is said, the womans desires shall bee to her husband, and he shall rule over her: 1. It is not understood of the naturall desire the woman hath eftsoone of her husbands company, notwithstanding her painfull travaile, * which is no punishment but a delight unto them: 2. But of that subjection, whereby by the law of nature practised among Pagans, women doe depend upon their husbands. The woman should before have beene obedient to man, but of a loving society to be made partaker of all his counsells, nor of an urging necessity as now: whereby the woman in re|spect of her weaknesse, both with her will dependeth of her husband, for her direction and provision of things necessary, and against her will she often endureth the hard yoke of an unequall commander.

QVEST. XXVI. How the earth was cursed unto man.

Vers. 17. Cursed be the earth, &c. 1. It is to be observed, that the Serpent is onely pronounced accursed, because his state is remedlesse and desperate: but neither the man or woman are accursed, for whom there is hope. 2. The earth is accursed not in it selfe, but in respect of the use of man: as S. Paul saith, that the creatures doe yet groane with us together. 3. Some Hebrewes note, that some men are exempted from this punishment, to eat their bread in the sweat of their browes, as Kings and Princes: but no women are exempted from their punishment, because the woman both sinned her selfe, and enticed the man, so did not Adam: but this sentence is generall against all men, that although one particular onely be expressed of the labour and toyle in tilling of the ground, yet therein are contained all other the cares and troubles of this life; from the which none are free. 4. Some Hebrewes thinke that in mans innocencie, he should not have travelled so for his bread, as in threshing, grinding, bak•ng of it: and it may very well bee, that although man should not then have lived idly without labour, yet his labour should have beene pleasant, rather for delight than necessity, Mercer.

QVEST. XXVII. Of the growing of Thistles.

Vers. 18. Thornes also and thistles, &c. 1. The earth should have brought forth thornes and thistles before; but now it bringeth them forth as noxious and hurtfull to man: 2. And whereas he is bid to eat the herbe of the field, this is neither interlaced as a consolation, as Calvin, for all this here uttered belongeth unto mans punishment; neither is man here deprived of the eating of all other fruit saving hearbs. But here the Lord sheweth, how man had deserved by his sinne to bee deprived of the pleasant fru[•]t of Paradise, and to live of the herb, as other bruit beasts: though by herb, corne is especially signified, ordained for the use of man. 3. But where mention is made of the sweat of the browes, by this par|ticular all other kinde of labour in severall vocations, as of Magistrates Ministers, handi-crafts men is implied, Luther. Likewise under one kinde of labour and sorrow, * all other miseries and cares of this life are comprehended, Calvin. 4. Yet God sheweth mercie in inflicting of these punishments, in turning them from eternall to temporall. 5. And whereas the Lord giveth this as a reason, that man should re|turne to dust, because he was taken out of it; this is not so to be understood as though he should have tur|ned to dust if hee had not sinned: for as S. Paul sheweth, death came in by sinne (Adam should have beene translated and changed, as Enoch and Elias were, and they shall be, that remaine alive at the comming of Christ.) But while man stood in his integrity and happinesse, he remembred not his terrene beginning, as hee considered not his nakednesse; but now the Lord maketh it an argument of his mortall conditi|on, and bringeth it to his remembrance, to humble him thereby, Mercer.

QVEST. XXVIII. Why Eva is called the mother of the living.

Vers. 20. AND the man called his wives name Hevah.] 1. Neither as Lyranus thinketh, is she so called, * because she was the mother of all which live in sorrow and miserie. 2. Neither (as Rupertus) that Adam of incredulity so named her, not beleeving that shee should returne to dust, as the Lord had said, but that he and his posterity should live. 3. Neither need we referre it to the birth of Christ, who brought true life into the world: the woman cannot be truly said to be the mother of the spirituall life, she was the mother of him that was the Author of spirituall life. 4. And it is but a fond conceit to derive Ave, the first word of the Angels salutation to Marie of Eva, as though she repaired what was lost by Eva, for the one is a Latine word, the other Hebrew: neither did the Angell say Ave, all haile, but the translater, and the right word is not Eva, but Hevah. 5. Neither is Adam here to be noted of insolency and pride, that having received sentence of death, doth give unto the woman a name of life: but Adam being confirmed by Gods promise concerning the seed of the woman, that although they themselves were mortall, yet by them mankinde should be propagated, so calleth his wife. 6. But the conceit of R[•] Levi here hath no ground, that shee is called the mother of all living, that is of bru[•]t beasts, in respect of the stupidity and dulnesse of her minde: for by living, man is here understood, as sometime he is called flesh, because of his excellencie among the rest. 7. Neither was this name given unto Eva before they had sinned, when Adam gave the names to the rest of the creatures, as Pererius thinketh with the Hebrewes, nor yet was it given so long after, when he had some children, as some other thinke; but the name was given at such time and place, as is here set downe; before Adam called her Ishah, as if you should say, Mannesse, as a name of the whole sex, but here he calleth her Hevah, as by her proper name; so that these words, because she was the mother of all living, were not the words of Adam, who yet by prophesie did foresee that it should so bee, but Moses inserteth this sentence. Mercer.

QVEST. XXIX. What the coats of skinnies were which God made for Adam and Eve.

Vers. 21. VNto Adam also and his wife did the Lord God make coats of skins and cloathed them. 1. These coats of skinnies were not their bodies, as Origen, with some other of the fathers seeme to thinke: for God had made man before of the dust of the earth, cap. 2.7. 2. Neither were these coats made of the barks of trees, as Barcephas, and Gregor. Nazianzane: for the Hebrew word gnor; is no where found in that sense. * 3. Neither is Theodore's reason sound, that they could not be the skinnies of beasts▪ which were created but two and two, and so if any of them had been slain, the generation of that kinde should have been hindered; for that there were no more created but two of a sort is not extant in Scripture. 4. Neither need we imagine with Hugo, that these skinnies might be made of the Elements, or some other matter: we are not to runne to miracles, where an ordinary course is offered. 5. Some would have these skinnies made of sheepes wooll, but that is not skinnies. 6. Jonathan of the Serpents skin, but this is too curious. 7. Neither did the Lord onely teach man how to make him garments for his necessary use afterward, for the text is, that he cloathed them, that is actually, presently. 8. Therefore there is no inconveniencie to say, that God caused skins, whether of slain beasts, or otherwise, by the ministry of his Angels, or how else it pleased him, to be brought to Adam; whereof he made them coats.

QVEST. XXX. Why God cloathed man in beasts skinnies.

AND thus it pleased God to cloath man, not for any such typicall signification, as either to betoken the incarnation of Christ, that was cloathed with our flesh, or the cloathing of the nakednesse of the soule by repentance. But for these causes, 1. to shew him how his mortall body might be defended from cold and other injuries: which use of skinnie or leather cloathing was first used in the world. 2. To cover his nakednesse for comelinesse sake: and therefore the Chalde Paraphrast calleth them vestimenta honoris, garments of honour. 3. To teach man, that it was lawfull to use the beasts as for meat, so for cloathing. 4. And to give a rule, that modest and decent, not costly or sumptuous apparell should be used. * 5. And that he might know what difference is betweene Gods works and mans invention, betweene coats of leather and figge leaves. 6. And to put him in minde of mortality, by his cloathing of dead beasts skins: as Origen well noteth: talib. indici oportebat peccatorem, ut essent mortalitatis indicium.

QVEST. XXXI. How Adam is said to become as God.

Vers. 22. BEhold man is become as one of us. 1. Not as one of the Angels, as Oleaster interpreteth, or that the Lord speaketh in the plurall number, as is the manner of great persons: for this phrase of speech, was not used in those dayes, neither are the Angels and God alike. 2. But by us the Trinity is vnderstood; and the rest is uttered, ironice, by way of derision Adam is rebuked: that he came farre short to be as God, as Sathan promised him: either as God the Father in power, or as the sonne in wisdom, or as the holy ghost in goodness, holinesse. Verba sunt insultantis, as Augustine saith, *quod non solum factus fuerit, * qualis esse voluit, sed nec illud, quod factus fuerat conservavit*: they are as the words of one that insulteth, because he was so farre from being made that which he desired, that hee could not keepe that which he was made. And as Rupertus, non solum nequaquam sicut Deus, sed penefactus erat, sicut diabolus. He was so farre from being as God, that he was almost become as the Devill: if Gods mercie had not prevented him. 3. I rather preferre this sense, with Mercerus and Calvin, that God speaketh ironically, * even in Adams hearing: then either with Iunius and Paguine to referre these words to the time past, when man was in the state of innocencie: or to make it an affirmative speech of the time present, with Onkelos: that Adam now of himselfe knew good and evill, as God: for then he had gained, and not lost by his transgression; he knew evill by experience, as he did not before, but he had no such perfect knowledge, as in the Angels: therefore the Lord here derideth mans folly, and alludeth to the vaine words of Satan, who promised they should be as God. 4. And where he saith, lest he put forth his hands, &c. by living forever. 1. Neither long life is meant. 2. Nor that God herein had compassion of man, that being brought to so miserable an estate, he should not alwayes live in it. 3. Neither that if he did eat of the tree of life, he should have lived for ever, as Calvin thinketh, that God vitam conjungit cum externa tessera: did joyne life with the outward signe, for the tree of it selfe gave not life, but was a symbole only of immortality, which man should have received of God, if he had persevered in his obedience. Muscul. * 5. But seeing the Lord had deprived man of life, he taketh away also the symbole of it: and speaketh according to the judgement of man, who foolishly might thinke to recover his estate by eating of the tree of life: and therefore by putting forth his hand, is expressed that voluntary action, whereby man of purpose would have eaten of the tree of life, to releve himselfe, Mercer: 6. Now although it had not beene materiall, though Adam before his fall had eaten of the tree of life, for it could not have helped him now: yet I rather thinke with Ramban, that he did not eat of it at all.

QVEST. XXXII. At what time Adam fell.

Vers. 23. Therefore the Lord sent him forth from the garden of Eden.] Here a great question is moved, how long Adam continued in Paradise, and when he was cast out of Paradise. Some would have Adam to continue so long in Paradise, as Christ lived yeares on earth: others the space of forty dayes, and that Christ fasted so many dayes for a remedy against Adams intemperancie in Paradise so long: others thinke that Adam fell the next day after his creation, upon the day of rest, as Tostatus: but it is not like, that God upon that day which was a time of rejoycing, would execute judgement, nor curse in that day, which he blessed: some thinke that Adam fell upon the eighth day of his creation, that day seven night wherein he was made, as Pererius: but the most approved opinion is, that Adam fell the same day of his creation, which seemeth to be most probable for these reasons.

1. The Angels that fell, presently after their creation sinned: as our Saviour saith, that the Devill, non stetit in veritate, did not stand or continue in the truth, Ioh. 8.44. Hereunto Augustine consenteth, Factus continuo se à luce veritatis avertit: as soone as he was made he presently turned aside from the light of truth: unde angelicae vitae dulcedinem non gustavit, quam non acceptam fastidivit, sed nolendo accipere, de servit & amittit: so he tasted not the sweetnesse of the angelicall life, which he loathed not, being received but by disdainning to receive it, lost it. So it is like, that man also eftsoone lost the benefit of the creation. 2. Our Saviour saith, that the devill was a murtherer from the beginning, Ioh. 8.44. not of the world, but of mans creation: therefore at the very first he set upon them. 3. The subtilty of the Devill doth insinuate as much: who would then assault them, when they were least able to resist, before they by experience were confirmed in their obedience. 4. And it was fit, that man sinning should be cast out of Paradise, before he had fully tasted of the pleasure thereof, lest he afterward might have beene tormented with the losse, and attempted to returne. 5. And it is cleare by the serpents first onset: Hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree; &c. that they had not yet tasted of any fruit, but at the very first the forbidden fruit was offered before their appetite had beene served with any other. 6. Adam had not yet eaten of the tree of life, as is evident, vers. 21. lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life: and therefore Augustine is in an error, that he did eat of other trees, and specially of the tree of life: * but if they had stayed any time in Paradise, it is not unlike, but they should have tasted of the tree of life, it being in the heart of Paradise, where Adams schiefe aboad was. 7. Likewise seeing presently after the creation, they were bidden increase and multiply; it is not other like but the man should have knowne his wife in Paradise, if they had stayed there so long, and so they should have gotten children without sinne. To this purpose Augustine saith, Quasi in eate facti credendi sunt, ut expectanda esset maturitas pubertatis, aut non illud tunc legitimum esset, eum primum fieri potuit: as though they were created of such an age, which was not fit for procreation, or that it had not beene lawfull (for them to come together) as soone as might be. 8. What became of Lions and Beares, that lived of flesh, all this while of Adams being in Paradise? they could not fast so long, and flesh they did not eat, because there was no death before mans fall: and they did not feed on grasse: for then their nature should not so soone have beene changed to devoure flesh. 9. Never any man in earth (Christ onely excepted) kept the Sabbath without sin: the Apostle saith, He that is entred into his rest, hath also ceased from his owne workes, as God did from his, Heb. 4.10. it is the rest onely of Christ, where there shall be cessation from all the workes of sinne. But that rest which Adam should have kept in Paradise, was not Christs rest: therefore he kept no rest there without sin: he fell then before the Sabbath. 10. That place lastly maketh to this purpose, Psal. 49.13. Adam lodged not one night in honour: for so are the words if they be properly translated: the word is lun, which signifieth to lodge or stay all night: and thus di|vers of the Rabbines doe expound this place of Adam.^{*} Upon these reasons it seemeth most probable that Adam did not continue one night in Paradise, but fell in the same day of his creation. Of this opinion are Irenaeus, Cyrillus, Epiphanius, Moses, Barcephas, Philoxenus, Ephrem. with others, rehearsed by Pererius upon this place: though he himselfe be of another opinion.

That objection, that so much businesse, as the giving of names to the creatures by Adam, the temptation of Eva by the Serpent, and seduction of Adam by woman,^{*} could not be dispatched in so small a time of six or seven houres, may easily bee answered. 1. It is evident by the text, that the imposition of names was performed the day of his creation before the woman was made, Gen. 2.20. and it asked no long time in regard of the singular wisdome and knowledge of Adam, who was able at the first sight of the crea|tures without any long search or triall of their nature, to give them fit names. 2. Of Satans nimblenesse in hastening the tentation, and insinuating himselfe to the woman, there need bee made no doubt; the cele|rity and agility of spirits is great. 3. It was the coole of the day, about the Eventide, when sentence was given against Adam: so that in the space of eight or nine houre from his creation to his fall, all these mat|ters might easily be done.

QVEST. XXXIII. Whether Adam was cast out.

Vers. 24. TH•• hee cast out man, &c. 1. Where the Septuagint adde, and placed him before Paradise: whereupon some writers have descanted of the causes why Adam was placed before Para|dise,^{*} that by the sight thereof, he remembring from whence he was fallen, might more effectually repent his sinne: the originall is otherwise, that not Adam, but the Cherubims were placed before Paradise. 2. Whereas *Theodore*t thinketh, that these Cherubims were not Angels, but certaine terrible visions set to feare man from that passage, it may be otherwise gathered out of Scripture, where wee read, that the Cherubims pictured over the Arke, were beautifull faces representing Angels: and therefore the Prophet compareth the king of Titus glittering in his pretious stones to the Cherub. Ezech. 28.14. 3. Concerning the fiery shaken sword, we refuse, 1. either the collection of Tertullian, who taketh it for torrida z••a, the parching countrie under the aequinoctiall: or of *Lirani*us, who would have it to be a certaine wall of fire about Paradise: or of Rupertus, that understandeth it of purgatorie fire: for all these are deceived about the translation; the word signifieth not a fiery sword shaken, but rather a sharp sword shaken, as the Chald• paraphrast readeth, which by the shaking seemeth to glitter as the flame of fire: or because the word La|hat signifieth to inflame, it is not unlike, but that some fierie inflammation, in the likenesse of a sword, might be set as a terrour in that place, Iun.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Spirits have power to possesse bodies, and speake out of them.

WHereas Satan useth the serpent, and out of his trunke frameth a voice: we neede not thinke it strange, that the Devill hath this power to possesse the bodies of beasts, and to speake out of them: which though Iul•a• the Apostata counted a fable, Cyrillus learnedly sheweth the like to have beene done out of the heathen writers, as how in Homer, Achilles horse inspired by Iuno, foretelleth his death: P•r/phyrius writeth, that the river Causus saluted Pythagoras, saying; Ave Pythagora: and Phylostratus, that a certaine Elme saluted Apollonius. Isogonus Cithiensis saith, that in Rhode• a certaine bull consecrate to Iupiter did speake. The Pagans therefore and Atheists finding the like in their owne writers have no reason to deride this storie of the Devils speaking in the serpent. Perer.

2. Doct. Adam and Eva sinned not, before they were tempted.

WHereas Satan was the first that inveigled the woman with ambitious desire, saying, yee shall bee as Gods,* vers. 5. The opinion of Prosper is discovered not to be sound, that our first parents were tickled with pride before the tentation, and therefore were permitted of God to fall into it: for this difference is made betweene the sinne of man, and of the Angels: he fell being seduced, but the other of their owne pride without a seducer transgressed.

3. Doct. Adam if he had not sinned, should not have died.

Vers. 19. DVst thou art, and to dust thou shalt returne: hence it is gathered, that death was not naturall to man, but hapned because of sinne: contrary to the opinion of Iosephus, that thinkleth, that man should have died though he had not sinned, but his life should have beene much longer. It was the opinion also of the Pelagians, that death was in mans nature, and sprang not from sinne. Not much differing is the sentence of the Popish writers,* that man was created mortall by the condition of his na|ture, yet preserved by a supernaturall gift: the contrary is evident from hence, because it was never said to man before he had sinned, that he should returne to dust.

4. Doct. The Trinity proved out of the Old Testament.

Vers. 22. BEhold the man is become as one of us. This is an evident place against the Iewes, to prove the Trinity: for here the Lord speaketh of more than one: neither can it be answered, that it is but a phrase of speech to use the plurall for the singular: for here is more than a phrase: this speech could not be true, to say, one of vs, if there were no more than one person in the God-head.

5. Doct. Why God suffered Adam to be tempted and fall.

FURther, whereas the question will be demanded, how it stood with Gods justice and holinesse, to sullfer man to be tempted, whom he foresaw should fall. Our answer is this: 1. we say with the Apo|stle, O the deepenesse of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how vnsearchable are his judge|ments, and his waies past finding out? R•m. 11.33. And Augustine maketh the same answer to this que|stion; Altitudinem consili•e•us penetrare non possum, &c. I cannot enter into the depth of Gods counsell. 2. Yet for as much, as God had given man free-will and sufficient strength to resist this tentation, if he would, it was fit he should be left to exercise his strength: * as Augustine againe saith, Administrat om•ia, qua crea|vit, ut etiam ipsa proprios motus exercere sinat: God doth so governe all things, which he created, that yet hee suffereth them to exercise their owne motions. 3. God might justly suffer this to be done, because hee did know how to turne Adams fall unto good.* Deu• permisit hominem tentari, qu•m sciebat esse casurum quid simul videbat, eo casu s••ti posse ad misericordiam, &c. God suffered man to be tempted, whom he knew should fall, because he saw how to use his fall, to declare his mercy and justice, while he justly punished some out of the same damned masse, and delivered others in mercy.

Doct. VI. Adam not damned.

Whereas v. 15. a promise is made concerning Christ, that the seede of the woman should breake the serpents head: from hence we infer, that our first parents, though they sinned▪ yet were by faith in the Messiah to come restored, and not utterly condemned which was the heresie of the Tatians. August. de haeres. c. 23. In the booke of wisdome we read, that wisdome preserved the first father of the world, and brought him out of his offence, c. 10.1. which is agreeable to the Canonically scripture: because Adam is called the sonne of God. Luke 3.38. he was not then the child of death and hell, everlastingly to perish.

Doct. VII. Wherein Adam transgressed.

Now because carnall men doe extenuate Adams sinne, that he was cast out of Paradise for eating an apple; I will briefly shew the greatnes of our first parents transgression, wherein many sins concurred. 1. There was in them both incredulitie, in not beleeving Gods words to be true. 2. Vnthankfulnesse, in not being contented with their estate. 3. Pride, in desiring to be like unto God. 4. Wantonnes, in sinning without any necessitie, having all the trees in the garden beside to eare of. 5. There was the sinne of gluttonie, in pampering the desire of the belly. 6. Disobedience in transgressing the commandement. 7. Curiositie in coveting to know the operation of the fruit, in bringing them to knowledge. 8. Presumption, in that they presumed of Gods mercie, that they should not die though they did eate. 9. Then followed the concupiscence and rebellion of the flesh, in being ashamed of their nakednesse. 10. They excused their sinne. 11. They are guiltie of homicide, in bringing death not only upon themselves, but all their posteritie. 12. Beside Eva seduced her husband. 13. Adam sinned in his inordinate affection to his wife, in listning to her. 14. The easines of the commandemēt maketh the transgression more heinous, as Augustine well noteth: * answering to this question, why God forbad them to eate of that tree: Si bona est, quare non tango? si mala est, quare in Paradise? ideo in Paradiso est, quia bona est, sed nolui tangere, qui obedientem te volui: if it be good, why doe I not touch it? if it be evill, why is it in Paradise? therefore it is in paradise because it is good, but I will not have thee touch it, because I would have thee obedient. God could not then make better triall of mans obedience, than in forbidding that which was good.

Confut. I. Infidelity not pride, the first sinne of our parent.

1. The opinion of the Popish writers is, that pride was the first sinne, that Eva was tempted unto, because Satan saith unto them, ye shall bee as gods: but it is rather evident, that their first sinne was infidelitie: first Satan telleth them, ye shall not die at all: * and so perswadeth them not to give credit to the word of God: for if they had verely beleevd that to come to passe, which was threatned, they would never have given any credit to Satan.

Confut. II. Our parents lost not their faith.

2. Bellarmino also holdeth, that our first parents in their transgression lost their faith, because by the seducement of Satan, they beleevd not what God said unto them; ye shall not die. Ans. 1. It followeth not if in this one act of faith they failed, that therefore totally their faith was extinguished: he that shall be seduced in one article or point of faith, is he presently stripped of all faith? 2. It was no formall infidelitie, as though wittingly, they rejected Gods word, but they were materially deceived onely, and their sudden & violent affection over-shadowed their knowledge & judgement. 3. So Peter denied Christ through feare and frailtie, yet in his judgement, he could not so at once cast off all opinion of Christ: his faith was shaken and winnowed, but it failed not, as our Saviour testifieth of him, that he had praied for him, that his faith faile not, Luke. 22.32. and so was the case in our first parents.

Confut. III. Not Marie but Christ brake the serpents head.

3. vers. 15. THE vulgar latine translation readeth; shee shall breake thy head, &c. which the Popish writers understand of the virgin Mary, as Pererius doubteth not to give this marginal note; * B. virgo contrivit caput serpentis, the blessed Virgin did break the head of the serpent: and Bellarmino also justifieth this translation: whereas in the original it is his, ipsum, it, in the neuter gender, which must be referred to seed: the Septuagint, and the Chaldee, read, he, in the masculine, understanding it of Christ: for none else but Christ broke the serpents head.

Confut. IIII. The tree of life, could not actually give life, but was a symbole of it.

4. vers. 22. LEst he take of the tree of life, and live for ever. Bellarmino would proove from hence, that this tree by eating the fruit therof, might bring true immortalitie. * Ans. 1. As the Lord saith (by way of derision) man is become as one of vs to know good and evill. So in the same sense is this other part of the sentence uttered, that as a man simply thought to get knowledge by eating of the one, so he might imagine to obtaine life by the other. 2. For if Adam might have lived by eating of this tree, now after he had sinned, how would that other saying have taken effect, in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt die the death. Gen. 2.17. These speeches had beene contrarie the one to the other. 3. It was therefore the tree of life as the other was of the knowledge of good and evill, that is significative, non effective, not in operation, but in signification: it was a signe or symbole of life received from God, and by Gods gift should have beene reserved, if a man had not sinned: and therefore man beeing deprived of life, lost also the signe thereof.

Places of Exhortation and practice.

* 1. WE have here set forth unto us from v. 1. to v. 7. the degrees of tentation: 1. the suggestion of Satan. 2. delectation, the woman saw the tree was pleasant, &c. 3. Consent, shee tooke of the fruit. 4. The effecting of the thing desired, shee did eate. 5. the contagion or infecting of others: shee gave to her husband.

* 2. v. 7. Their eyes were opened: till a man hath sinned his eyes are shut, but afterward they see the greatnesse of it; as David did acknowledge his sinne of adulterie after he had committed it.

* 3. v. 10, Because I was naked I hid my selfe, &c. He was more ashamed of his nakednesse, than of his sinne, so many doe feare rather to offend because of publike shame, than for any conscience of sinne • as Caine rather grieved because he was made a vagabond, than for that he had killed his brother.

* 4. v. 12. Adam putteth off the fault to his wife, she to the serpent: so it is naturall to us to excuse our sinnes, and to seeke to colour them, and lay them upon others.

5. v. 21. In that God made them coats of skinnies, not of silke or any such costly or curious stuffe, it sheweth, that sober and plaine apparell best becommeth Adams sonnes.

CHAP. IIII.

The methode or parts of the Chapter.

IT consisteth of two parts. 1. of the historie of Caine and Habel. 2. the genealogie: the first to the 17. verse, the second from thence to the end.

In the historie there is set forth, 1. Their life; both their birth and beginning, v. 1. Their vocation and calling, v. 2. Their divers manner of worship, v. 3, 4. Their divers successes: Abel is accepted. 4. Caine is rejected and reprov'd, v. 6, 7. 2. The sinne of Caine is killing his brother. 1. the manner of the fact, under pretence of friendship, v. 8. 2. The examination and conviction of Caine. 9. 10. 3. His punishment, v. 11. 12. 4. The mitigation thereof, containing the privilege or exemption of Caine from being murdered of others, v. 14. 15.

The genealogie is either of the Cursed, or of the righteous seed: In the first are set forth their names and persons, v. 18, 19. Their gests or acts, which are either civill or morall: their civill, as building of cities, v. 17. The inventing of cents, v. 20. Of instruments of musicke, v. 21. Of carving in iron and brasse, v. 22. Their morall acts, namely the sinne of the flesh in Lamech in taking two wives, v. 19. Of murther and revenge, v. 23.

The generation of the righteous sheweth the birth of Seth, v. 25, Their conversation, in invoking the name of God, v. 26.

The difference of translations.

* vers. 7. IF thou hast offered aright, and not 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 divided aright, hast thou not sinned? S. if thou doest well, thou shalt receive. H.B. thou shalt be accepted. v. 23. I have slaine a man to my wound. S.H. or to the wounding of my selfe. B. I would slaie a man, proper vulnus, because of my wound. T. in my wound and hurt. G, P. I have not slaine a man, that for him I should beare my sinne: nor a young man, that for him my seede should be consumed. Ch.

* v. 26. This man 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, trusted to call. T. began to call. H. then begun men to call upon the name of God. Ch. B.G. captum est profanari, began to be profaned. T.P. challal, (signifieth both to begin & profane. But Iuniu•hath in his last edition amēded that reading, translating with the rest: then began the name of God to be called upon.

The Theologicall explication.

QVEST. I. At what time Cain and Abel were borne.

Vers. 1. Whereas Heva saith, I have obtained a man by the Lord, per Deum. * 1. We refuse Rupertus conceit, that thinketh this to be an oath: it only signifieth that she had received a son by the Lords gift, or coram D^omino, before the Lord, as the Chalde paraphrast, 2. Neither is it to be thought that she had other sonnes before Cain, because she nameth him a possession: because he was the first, which she possessed from God. 3. we reject that fable, which is ascribed to Methodius, that Cain was borne 15. yeares after Adam was cast out of Paradise, and Abel 15. yeares after that, and that an hundred yeare af|ter Cain slew Abel, and then Adam and Eve mourned another hundred yeare after for Habel, and then Seth was borne. 1. For neither is it like, that they continued so long without children. * 2. Or that there was such distance betweene the birth of the children: seeing God had made them fruitfull, and said unto them, increase and multiply. 3. And it seemeth that Seth was presently supplied in the place of Habel, be|cause the woman said, God hath given her another seed for Habel. 4. And the text is plaine, that Adam at an 130. not 230. yeares begat Seth. 5. But that these sonnes of Adam were borne in Paradise, as R. Sel. and other Hebrewes thinke, it is but a dreame: for Adam in the state of innocency should not have gotten so ungracious a sonne, as Cain was: and whether Cain and Abel were both borne together, as Calvin thin|keth, it is uncertaine: it is more like that they were borne at two sundry births. Mercer.

QVEST. II. Wherein Abels sacrifice excelled Cains.

Vers. 4. 1. THOUGH no mention be made of Adams sacrificing, because no such notable accident fell out therein, as in the sacrifice of his sonnes, yet it is not to be doubted, but that he used to sacri|fice, and that of him his sonnes learned to doe the like. 2. Abels sacrifice was preferred before Cains in three respects: 1. it was more plentifull, as the Apostle calleth it, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, a greater sacrifice: Cain brought sparingly, ex fructu, of the fruit, not fruits of the earth: Abel brought plentifully. 2. Abel brought of the fat and the best. 3. hee offered in faith, Heb. 11.4. 3. It should seeme that God by some outward testimony approved Abels sacrifice, whether it were by kindling it by fire from heaven, as hee did to Moses sacrifice, Levi. 9.24. and Elias, 1 King. 18. as Hierome thinketh, and Theodo^oion readeth; Deui inflammavit, &c. God set on fire Abels sacrifice: or by the rebounding of the flame of Cains sacri|fice upon himselfe, as the fire of the furnace, whereinto the three children were cast, slew those that made it. Dan. 3.22. It is like, that by some visible signe God delivered his acceptance, as the Apostle saith, God testifying of his gifts, Heb. 11.4. Iunius, Mercerus, and Calvin, referre this to Abels prosperous successe, but I approve rather the other opinion. 4. Ambrose note may well here be received: ubi nascuntur hi fra/tres &c. that in the birth of these children the order of nature is observed, the eldest is named first: * ubi ex/primitur disciplina vivendi, seniori junior antefertur: but when mention is made of their religion, the yon|ger is preferred before the elder, and first named: ex Perer.

QVEST. III.

Vers. 7. IF thou doe well, &c. 1. The Septuagint here translate very corruptly, as is before shewed, which while some of the fathers followed, they did weary themselves with many interpretations. * Am/brose saith, he divided not aright, quia ante omnia Deo debuit offerre primitias, because hee offered not the first fruits unto God, but kept them to himselfe: be quiet, that is, erubescere, be ashamed of thy sin. Chrys^ostome expoundeth it of Cains intention, that it was not good: and be quiet, that is, tranquilitatem facito cogitatio/num, appease thy thoughts, and *proceed not to adde sin unto sin against thy brother. Augustine, * non recte dividen/do. i. non recte vivendo: he divided not aright, because he offered a good sacrifice in it selfe, leading an evill life: quiesce. i. manus á scelere contine, be quiet & keep thy hands from mischief. Thus, while they justifie a corrupt translation: if thou divide not aright, which the Hebrew hath not, they are divided among themselves: * the sense is evident: that if he did well, upon his repentance he should finde forgiveness, if not, * sinne lay at the doore, both inwardly gnawing upon his conscience, and outwardly drawing speedy punishment. To lye at the doore, sheweth, that the punishment of sinne is ready at hand, so that it cannot properly bee referred to the day of judgement, as the Chaldee paraphrast, which is prolonged and deferred.*

QVEST. IIII. How Abels desire was subject to Christ.

*VNto thee his desire shall be subject. Which is not understood of sinne, as Ruper•us, * that sinne while it is in the desire, and not effected, a man may subdue it: as Ol•aster, because the punishment of sin committed, hath a desire to lay hold of the offender: as Ambrose expoundeth; the turning thereof shall bee toward thee: in te revertetur crimen, quod à te •pit, the sinne returneth upon thee, where it began. And so Augustine, that then a man hath dominion over sinne, when non defendendo sibi praeposuerit, sed penitendo subjecerit: he doth not advance it by defence, but subjecteth it by repentance. But this clause, as Chrysostome well taketh it, is understood of Abels subjection to his brother as the elder, post peccatiam hoc per/mitto ut primig•nitura privilegi•• gandeas: though thou hast sinned, I deprived thee not of the privilege of thy birthright: and so the Lord would appease the wrath of Cain towards his brother, by shewing his ready and willing subjection unto his elder brother, both by the law of nature, and his owne ready disposition, Iun. Mercerus with the rest expoundeth it of sin, but the other exposition is more proper.*

QVEST. V. Of the talke betweene Cain and Abel.

Vers. 8. THEN Cain spake to his brother Abel. .1 It is superfluous to inquire what Cain said to Abel: the Septuagint and the vulgar latine doe make these to be his words: Let us goe into the field: but they are added to the text: Hierome thinketh he rehearsed those words which God before spake to Cain: the paraphrast of Hierusalem supposeth this to have beene the talke: that Cain affirmed, there was no Judge, that governed the world, nor no other life but this, nor reward for the righteous, or punishment for the wicked, because his oblation was not accepted, as well as his brothers: Abel did hold the contrary: some thinke that Cain provoked Abel with angry and furious words into the field, but then it is not like, that Abel would have gone with him: but it is more probable that Cain dissembled and spake friendly to his brother, till he had him in the field, where seeing they were alone, he might execute his wicked purpose.*

QVEST. VI. How Cain killed Abel.

2. AS touching the manner of death: it is not like, as the Hebrewes imagine, that Cain worried Abel with his teeth: it was such a death, whereby Abels blood was abundantly shed, and that in many places: for the word is in the plurall number vox sanguinum, the voyce of his bloods: so that it is like to have beene done with bats or stones, or by some such meanes: and when he had slaine his brother, he buried and hid his body, because the Lord asked him, where his brother was: Pererius. But the Hebrewes conceit, because it is said that Cain rose against Abel, that Cain was first downe, and then rose againe, hath no ground.

QVEST. VII. The sinne and punishment of Cain.

Vers. 9. 1. Concerning Cains sin: hee sheweth himselfe a lyer, in saying▪ I know not: wicked and prophane, in thinking, that he could hide his sin from God: unjust, in denying to be his brothers keeper, or that hee ought to have any care of him: obstinate and desperate, in not confessing his sinne, but stubbornly complaining of the greatnesse of his punishment. 2. Hee sustaineth a threefold punishment: he is cursed in his soule: a vagabond in his body, unprosperous in his labours, the earth should not yeeld her fruit: thus as the Devill was cursed, so Cain is the Devils minister: to Adam God said not, cursed art thou, but cursed is the earth for thy sake: Genes. 3.17. and as Cain for slaying righteous Abel is made a runnagate, so the Iewes, for shedding the blood of Christ the most innocent Lamb of God, are vagabonds to this day over the face of the earth.

QVEST. VIII. Whether Cain confessed his sinne.

Vers. 13. MY sinne or punishment is greater: this was no confession of his sinne, as Chrysostome thinketh: sufficiens confessio, sed intempestiva: a sufficient confession, but unseasonable, because God had given sentence upon Cain, and therefore his confession came too late: for no confession in this life is unseasonable: neither doth Cain complaine of the greatnesse of his sinne, as some translators have it, but rather of the greatnesse of his extreme punishment, because he feared lest every man might have liberty to kill him, as he himselfe expoundeth, v. 14.

QVEST. IX. Whether Cain, or he that did slay him should be punished seven-fold.

Vers. 15. HE should be punished seven-fold.] 1. We neither receive Rupertus exposition, that by seven-fold is understood everlasting punishment,^{*} but with a secret condition, unlesse they repent: for he thinketh Lamech who is supposed to have killed Cain, did repent, confessing his sinne to his wives. 2. Neither are the words so to be taken, as meant of Cain, that he should, septem vindictas exolvere, pay selven punishments, as the septuagint translate, for so many sinnes committed. 3. Or as Lyranus, Tostatus, because Cain was in the 7. generation slaine by Lamech: for these two last expositions are forced to divide the words: whosoever slayeth Cain, &c. that is, shall be punished, which must be understood: and then the other words, he shall be punished seven-fold, are referred to Cain. But the sentence in the originall is joyned together, neither distinguished in sentence, nor in sense. 4. So the plaine meaning is this, that he which killed Cain should be more deeply punished than Cain himselfe, because beside homicide, hee should expressly transgresse Gods commandement, who would have Cain to live, for the example of other.

QVEST. X. What marke God set upon Cain, and to what end.

Vers. 15. GOd set a marke upon Cain.] 1. Not as some read: posuit Cain in signum: God made Cain a signe or marke. 2. But God set some visible marke upon Cain, whether it were an horrible trembling and shaking of his whole body, as the septuagint translate, who for, thou shalt be a vagabond and runnagate, read he should sigh and tremble: or an exceeding shame and confusion, in that hee ran from place to place to hide himselfe: or some visible mark set in his face, as Lyranus thinketh: some Hebrewes think it was an horn in his forehead, some a letter, some that a dog lead him, these are mens conceits. 3. Certainly whatsoever it were, it was a signe of Gods wrath, not as Iosephus thinketh, a token, that God appeased by Cainss sacrifice, forgave the punishment of his fratricide: for if God accepted not his sacrifice before, much lesse after.^{*} 4. Neither was this marke set, to exempt Cain from the invasion of beasts, as though there were none alive on the earth but his parents: for this murther falling out, as is supposed about the 130. yeare of Adams age, the world was by this time much replenished: And where the Lord saith, whosoever slayeth Cain, &c. he speaketh of men, not of beasts. 5. Wherefore God set this visible and fearefull marke upon Cain, both that other men, seeing apparant signes of Gods wrath upon him, might feare to commit the like, and that he might have the greater punishment, in prolonging so wicked and miserable a life.

QVEST. XI. How Cain was cast out of Gods presence.

Vers. 16. Cain went from the presence of the Lord.] 1. Hee both was excluded from Gods favour and protection, which is signified by Gods presence, from the which otherwise no man can es|cape. 2. He also was expelled from that Countrey where he was borne, and where God was first worshi|ped by sacrifice, and shewed visible signes of his presence. 3. And where it is said, that Cain dwelt in the land of Nod: wee neither approve Catharinus conceit, that this land, from the which Cain was expelled, was the land of Judea, whether Adam and Eve came, after they were exiled out of Paradise: for the text is, * that the land of Nod, was on the east side of Paradise: whereby it appeareth, that neither Adam and Eva, nor Cain had their habitation farre from thence: neither yet is it like, as Iosephus, that Cain built a City and called it Nod: for Henoch is the first City mentioned in Scripture. *

Vers 17. 4. But the Land was called Nod of Cains vagrant and vagabonds life: which sheweth, as Iosephus well conjectureth, that Cain was not amended by this punishment, but waxed worse and worse, gi|ving himselfe to rapine, robbery, oppression, deceit.

QVEST. XII. Wherefore and for whom Cain built a city.

Vers. 17. AND he built a City.) 1. Cain neither built him a City, to be defēded against wild beasts, which was the first cause, as Plato thinketh, that moved men to build Cities: * for this reason might as well have moved the righteous seed to have done it: neither because man is a sociable creature and loveth company, as Aristotle: for this reason might as well have caused Adam to build, as Cain: but it is most like because Cain was a fugitive and runnagate, he would build him a City to stay in, and to be a defence unto him, as though Gods curse should not have taken place: but as Iunius well writeth upon the words, erat adificator: or as the 70. aedificans, he began only to build, but hee finished it not, leading still a runna|gate life, and so often constrained to leave the worke, as the giants, that built the Tower of Babell were constrained to give over. 2. It may be doubted for whom Cain built a City, there being no more yet in the world but himselfe, his parents, and his sonne: the answer is ready: that it is not like that he built this Ci|ty presently after his sonnes birth, much lesse before his condemnation, as Mercerus: but now when the world was replenished, for if Abrahams stock in lesse than 400. yeares amounted to 600. thousand, Cains posterity in the like time might arise to the like multitude, which might suffice not only to inhabite a City, but a country. And Lodovicus vives, maketh mention, that in the memory of his parents, there was a town in Spaine consisting of an 100. housholds, which were all inhabited by the progeny of an old man then li|ving, which was so old, that the youngest of his stock could not tell by what name of kindred to call him.

QVEST. XIII. Lamechs speech to his wives, and the meaning thereof.

Vers. 23. I Would slay a man in my wound.) 1. This place is neither inexplicable, * and not possibly to be un|folded, as Catharinus a popish writer thinketh, and as it seemed to Origen, who as Hierom witnesseth writ two whole bookes, the 12. and 13. of his commentaries upon Genesis, in interpreting this place. 2. Neither doe these words shew, as Suidas expoundeth, that Lamech had killed two men; an elder and a younger, the brethren of Henoch, that was translated. 3. Or one man as Theodore thinketh, for the which fact Lamech repenteth: for the words are, I would slay a man, not I have. * 4. And we hold that to bee a fable, that Lamech killed two men, the one was Cain, whom hee shot at in a bush, supposing it to be a beast, and the other was his boy, that led him being blinde, whom for anger hee all to beat and so kil|led him: this exposition seemeth most probable to Cajetanus and Pererius, having no probability in it: both because Cain was privileged by God not to be killed; and for that no mention is made of Lamechs seven-fold punishment, which should not in this case have been omitted. 5. Neither can this place be so taken as the Chalde and some Hebrewes expound, which read those words with a negative, or interrogation, as though Lamech should plead for himselfe before his wives, which intended to kill him, that hee had not killed a man, as Cain had, and therefore they should be more grievously punished, that killed him. 6. Further, these words of Lamech are not uttered enuntiative, as shewing that Lamech, had committed any murther already: nor yet interrogative: by way of interrogation, as if Lamech should say thus to his wives, have I yet slaine a man in my wrath, as Cain did? yet he was privileged that none should kill him: therefore ye need not feare, that any such thing should happen unto mee, that have killed none: some read these words conditionally: supposing Lamech to have beene a good man: as though the sense should be this: If I should kill a man, as Cain did, I should be punished more than he that should kill Cain, because I did not take heed by his example. 7. But the best exposition is with Ramban to expound Lamechs speech 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, potentially: hee to reconcile his wives, that were alienated from him, doth boast of his strength and tyranny, that this, and this he could doe, and that he would not take the least wrong, at any mans hand. Sicetiam Calvin.

Now concerning the occasion of these words of Lamech spoken to his wives. * 1. It was not by reason of any conspiracy intended by his wives against him, and therefore hee should excuse himselfe, that hee had not killed a man as Cain had; and therefore, they that killed him should be more severely punished. 2. Neither was it by reason of some brawle betweene his wives, as Iunius, and therefore Lamech threatneth them, that should set any division betweene them, and offer him the least wrong. 3. Nor yet because his wives feared lest the sinne of Cain might be punished in Lamechs posterity, and therefore he maketh them secure in promising impunity. 4. But the most likely occasion is this: that whereas his wives feared, lest because of his cruelty, some evill should happen unto them: hee boasteth of his strength, that rather than any should doe him any hurt, he would not spare to kill in his wrath.

QVEST. XIII. How Lamech is said to be avenged seventy times seven times.

*Vers. 24. IF Cain shall be avenged seven-fold:] 1. Chrysostomes exposition is not here to be received, who thinketh, that Lamech confessed his sinne, and condemned himselfe for murther committed: Ipse sua lingua confessionem peccatorum facit, & poenam sibi definit: he confesseth his sinne himselfe, and defineth the punishment. So also thinketh Theodoret: for the Scripture propoundeth the example of Lamech, not as of a penitent, but a licentious disordered person, who first presumed to breake the law of wedlocke in taking two wives. 2. Neither is their conjecture of any weight, that imagine Lamech to speake of his 77. children, which hee had by his two wives, as Iosephus writeth, that they should be punished for their fathers sinne. * 3. But among the rest Rupertus misseth the marke, that by seventy times seven-fold, understandeth a temporary, by seven-fold eternall punishment, this Cain had because hee repented not, the other Lamech for his repentance: * for that 70. times seven is more than seven times, our Saviour sheweth in the Gospell, where he saith to Peter, that he should forgive his brother not only seven times, but seventy times seven. 4. But the meaning is, not that Lamech should be punished 77. times 7. times, but hee that killed Lamech, as he that killed Cain, 7. times: and so Lamech boasteth of impunitie: that though hee committed murther as Cain did, yet hee should be exempted from punishment as Cain was. 5. To expound it of the 77. generations to Christ, rehearsed, Luk. 3. in whom Lamechs sinne should be expiated is a forced and improper sense.

Quest. XIII. How the name of God is said in Enos time to be called upon.

Vers. 26. MEn begin to call, &c. 1. Neither the Septuagint here translate aright: that hee, 1. Enos holped to call, or as Hierome, hee begun to call: for neither doth the word signifie hope, nor can it be referred to the person of Enos. 2. Neither could hee be said now to begin to call upon the name of the Lord, either as Cajetan thinketh, because Enos first used to call upon the name Iehovah; for Cain and Abel are said to have offered to Iehovah, v. 3. either for that Enos was more religious and given to prayer, than any before him, or that he found out some forme or order of prayer, as Pererius judgeth: for it is not like but that Adam, and Abel, in the spirituall exercises of prayer and sacrifice, were as zealous, as any of the succeeding age. 3. But now, when as the worship of God began to be corrupted and prophaned in the wicked posterity of Cain, then Adam, Seth, and other of the righteous feed began publicly to exercise religion, and to have their holy meetings and assemblies for the service of God. 4. Some read, then the name of God began in calling upon to be prophaned, as by giving the name of God to beasts, trees, and plants. But here invocation is taken in the better part 1 and Moses describeth the practice of the Church and righteous seed in those dayes. 5. Wee likewise refuse that sense, that the name Iehovah began now to bee called upon, whereas he was invocated by the name Elohim before: for Cain and Abel offered sacrifice to Iehovah, v. 3. 6. Wherefore the true meaning is, as is before expressed, that now the Church of God being increased to a full number, did make a publike separation in their worship from the generation of the wicked: and began apart in a solemne manner to worship God. Mercer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. A man is first accepted for his faith before his workes.

1. Vers. 4. THE Lord had respect to Abel, and to his offering: hence it is inferred, that works make not a man acceptable to God: * but first a man is accepted by faith, and secondly his workes are respected, as Gregory upon this place: Deus non habet gratum offerentem propter numera, sed numera propter offerentem: Abel is not accepted for his gifts, but his gifts because of him.

2. Doct. Paradise planted in a knowne place.

2. Vers. 16 CAin dwelt in the Land of Nod, toward the east side of Eden.) Hence it is gathered, that Paradise was planted in a known place contrary to the opinion of Bellarmino: * for Eden was the name of a knowne Country in Mesopotamia: as may appeare, Ezech. 27.23. Bellarmino answereth, that Eden is here no proper name, but a name of pleasure, unlesse wee will say that Cain was punished to dwell in Paradise: Cont. 1. Neither was Cain exiled into a place of pleasure. 2. It is not said that Cain dwelt in Eden, but over against it, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, as the Septuagint translate, on the east side: now Paradise is said to be planted not on the east side of Eden, but in Eden toward the east, in respect of the situation, as it was then to the Israelites being at that time, when Moses wrote this story in the desert. 3. all the translators in this place take this word Eden for a proper name.

3. Doct. Henoch the first city in the world.

3. V. 17 HE called the city Henoch.) Hence it is apparāt, who was the first founder of cities: that they were not frō the beginning as Aristotle thought. 2. Neither that they first began to be built under the reigne of Iupiter; who was after the flood. 3. Neither that Athens, or Cecropia built by Cecrops as the Greeks. 4. Or Argos as the Argives. 5. Or Thebes as the Aegyptians were the first Cities▪ but this City built by Cain, and called Henochia: whereof Berosus▪ Annianus writeth, that it was built about the mountaine Libanus▪ and that in his time, some part of the foundation did appeare being called by the inhabitants, the city of Cain.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Man hath no power of himselfe to rule ever sinne.

1. Vers. 7. VNto thee his desire shall be subject, &c. From hence Bellarmino and Pererius understand[ing] these words of subjection of sin, would prove,^{*} that man hath free will by nature to sin, and not to sin, & dominari peccato, to rule over sin. Answer. 1. It is evident, that this place is understood not of the subjection of sin, but the submission of Abel to his brother, as Chrysostom expoundeth. 2. For of sin it was not true that Cain had dominion over it, as he had over his brother. 3. Neither can it properly be said, that sin hath a desire to the soule, but the soule rather to it. 4. The Septuagint translate, the conversion < in non-Latin alphabet > thereof, making no mention before of sin at all, whose conversion then is it but Abels, who was spoken of before? 5. And if they will understand it of sin it would follow that man by his naturall power only could resist the temptation of sin, which yet Bellarmino is ashamed to affirme.^{*}

2. Confut. Monkerie not knowne to the old world.

2. Vers. 26. Then began men, &c. This place is urged by Bellarmino to prove the institution of Mon[k]ery: that Enos brought in a more strict kind of life, than was used before. Ans. If the text be thus read, they began to profane the invocation of the name of God, then they have no colour of monkerie from hence. 2. If the other reading be admitted, it followeth not, that because Enos began after a more strict manner to worship God, that therefore he was a Monke. 3. And his begetting of sonnes and daughters, Genes. 5.10. sheweth, that he was no monke.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Vers. 5. Cain was exceeding wroth.) Wee see the cause,^{*} why the righteous are hated of the wicked, is for their innocent life: as Cain hated his brother, as the Apostle saith, because his workes are evill, his brothers good. 1 Iohn 3.12.

2. Vers. 14. Thou hast cast me from thy face, &c.^{*} This is the greatest punishment of sinne to bee forsaken of God, and given over to a reprobate sense, as Cain was: and as the Apostle saith, the Gentiles were delivered over to a reprobate mind, Rom. 1.28. as Ambrose noteth well: nihil gravius quam •rra•t•m a deo deseri, ut se revocare non posset: nothing is more grievous, than for him that erreth to be forsaken of God, that he cannot recall himselfe.

3. Vers. 14. Whosoever findeth me shall slay me, &c. Bernard well noteth here, consolationem miseram obtinuit, quam querebat: he obtained that miserable comfort which hee desired: that is, not to be killed: as Saul desired the Prophet to honour him before the people: Sam. 15. such are the momentany solaces of worldly men which are farre from the true and ever-during comforts.

4. Vers. 17. In that Cain built a City, and his posterity were the inventors of humane acts, of tents,^{*} musicke, carving: we see that saying of our Saviour to be verified, that the children of this world are wiser in their generation, than the children of light. Luke 16.8. and Gregory well observeth: •iquimentem in amore presentis vitae figunt: that wicked men doe fire their minde in the love of this present life. Kaine buildeth a city and calleth it Henoch, by his sonnes name, which signifieth dedication: but Henoch in the righteous line is the seventh: so the wicked doe dedicate worldly possessions in the first place, the righteous in the last.

5. By this example of Cain and Habel, we learne, that we are not to measure Gods favour by the accidents of this life: as Ambrose well sheweth, that Abel, justus, innocens, immortalis sublatu est, &c. a just, ^{*}innocent, devout man in his young yeares is taken away: whereas wicked Cain liveth long, begetteth children, buildeth Cities: which is an evident demonstration of another life after this, wherein God shall measure to every man according to their workes.

CHAP. V.

The Method.

IN this Chapter there is a rehearsall of the yeares of the Patriarkes before the floud, and of their acts: there is a threefold account of their yeares: before they begat children, and after, and the summe of both joynd together.

Their acts are either generall, in begetting sonnes and daughters, or speciall, as of He/noch, his godly conversation, he walked with God in earth, v. 22. his translation, he walked with God in heaven, v. 24. of Lamech: his consolation in his sonne Noah v. 29.

3. The Theologicall explication.

QVEST. I. Booke of generation, how to be understood.

Vers. 1. THis is the booke of the generation. 1. Moses setteth downe the genealogy of the fathers before the flood,* because of Christs line, which Luke deriveth from Adam: Matthew goeth not beyond Abraham: not, as some thinke, because of the rest of that line beyond Abraham might easily bee supplied out of Moses books, which were then well knowne, but for that the most conspicuous and manifest promises of the Messiah, were made to Abraham: all the generations to Matthew, supplying ••enty from Adam to Abraham, make but 72. but Luke reckoneth 77. The Reason is, because Matthew omit|teth some of purpose, to make the numbers equall, which Luke supplyeth, and Matthew maketh his ac|count by Salomon, Luke by Nathan: so that there might bee more persons in the one discent than in the other. 2. Moses beginneth now to set downe Adams generation by Seth: because Cain was rejected, and Abel died without issue. 3. It is called a booke, that is, an enumeration, for so Sepher signifieth a booke, because things are rehearsed in it: not because, as R. Isaac, Carus, Moses beginneth his booke here, and the other 3. chapters should bee as a preface. 4. Generation is here taken actively, for the posterity of Adam increased by him: as in Matthew, the booke of the generation of Iesus Christ, is taken passively, for the generations of whom Christ came. 5. And whereas it is added, in the day that God created Adam: we need neither with Lyranus, to understand day generally for time, and wee refuse the opinion of the He|brewes,* that hold that Adam in the same day of his creation began to have generations, for so they fable, that Adam and Eve had foure or five children the same day they were created: but in the day; is to be re|ferred to the latter part of the verse, wherein mention is made, of Adams creation, according to the image of God. Mercer.

QVEST. II. How Adam begat a Sonne in his owne likenesse.

Vers. 3. ADam begat a sonne in his owne likenesse, &c. 1. which is neither to be understood of the shape and image of his body, for so Cain was in outward shape like to Adam. 2. neither is it to be taken for the image of vertue and piety in his soule, for Adam had lost that image: neither is vertue in|gendred by nature: and Abel had the image of his fathers vertue before Seth. 3. neither is it so said, be|cause the image of mankind was continued and preserved in Seth: whereas both Abel died without issue, and Cains posterity was extinguished in the flood; for this notwithstanding, seeing the world was increa|sed by Cain, he might be said also to be after Adams image. 4. But hereby is signified that originall cor|ruption, which is descended unto Adams posterity by naturall propagation, which is expressed in the birth of Seth, not of Abel, because hee had no of-spring, nor of Cain, because it might appeare, that even the righteous seed by nature are subject to this originall depravation: and yet Seth was otherwise after the image of Adam, than Cain, because his seed was sanctified of God, who purposed in Seth and his seed to make good the promise made to Adam, as touching the seed of the woman, that should breake the ser|pents head. Iun. 5. And whereas Adam was an hundred thirty yeere old before he begat Seth, wee ab|hor the lewd fables of the Hebrewes,* that thinke in this meane space, that Adam companied with female spirits or devils, and begat male spirits, and Eva with male spirits, and brought forth masculine or male devils: neither doe I thinke with Mercer, that in the meane time Adam begat other sonnes and daugh|ters: but God by this meanes (Adam staying so long without children) did try his faith in looking for the promised seed, and his patience in seeing the wicked stocke of Cain so mightily to increase. Iun.

QVEST. III. Wherefore it is added, and he died.

Vers. 5. ALL the dayes that Adam lived, &c. 1. Neither were these yeares otherwise accounted than by 12. moneths, as it may appeare in the story of Noahs flood, where mention is made of the 7. moneth, and 27. day of the moneth. 2. Neither did these righteous fathers onely live thus long by miracle, as thinketh R. Moses, but it was usuall in those dayes. 3. And the conclusion of every ones life is, & mortuus est, he died: not as some think, because it should appeare, that they dyed not in the flood, but by their owne naturall death: and therefore they say, this clause is not added after the flood in the genealog|y of the fathers: but it is thus said, to shew what the condition of all mankind was after Adams fall. 4. It is said only of Adam, all the dayes that he lived: Whereby the Hebrewes inferre that Adam lived a godly life, and repented: his repentance we doubt not of, but not soundly hence gathered. Mercer.

QVEST. IIII. Whether Adam the longest liver.

NOW whereas Adam lived but 930. yeares, Mathuselah, 969. yeares, v. 27. yet may Adam be well supposed to have beene the longest liver, because he was created in a perfect state of body apt to gel|neration, which was not then under sixty yeares: for none of the Patriarkes began to have children under that age: Mahalalel begat at 65. yeares of age. v. 15. and none under: then adde unto Adams yeares, 60. more, in what age and state of body he was created, and he will bee found to have beene the longest liver of the Patriarkes: and to exceed Mathuselahs age, 21. yeares.

QVEST. V. The yeares of the Patriarkes full and complete yeares, consisting of twelve moneths.

CONCERNING the long life of the aged Patriarkes. 1. Neither is the conceit of the Aegyptians to bee re|ceived, that a man cannot live above an 100. yeares; for they say, that a mans heart increaseth till he come to 50. every yeare two drachmaes in weight, and then decreaseth every yeare as much, till he come to an hundred, and then for want of heart hee can live no longer. For this fancy of theirs is confuted by experience: for Pliny maketh mention, that in Vespatian the Emperors time; there were found in Italy,* two men of an 105. yeares: foure of an 130. three of an 140. and two of an 150. yeares. And in these dayes some are found farre to exceed an hundred yeares: as I have seene my selfe an old man of 124 yeares of age, at Eversden in the County of Bedford, who died about ann. 1600. or, 601. he could remember Bos|worth field at the comming in of Henry the 7. being then as he affirmed some 15. yeares old. 2. Neither is it to be thought, that the yeares of the Patriarkes were accounted, as the Arcadians reckoned their yeares by quarters, or the Aegyptians by moneths, as some have thought, for then Henoch begetting children at 65. yeares, should by this reckoning not exceed six yeares and a halfe, when hee had a child. And this Ael|gyptian yeare consisting of the age of the moone, will not allow above two dayes and a halfe to a moneth, whereas mention is made of the 17. and 27. day of the moneth, Gen. 7.11. and 8.14. It is evident then that the yeares of the Patriarkes were numbred by complete and full yeares, consisting of twelve moneths, and not after the Aegyptian account. And hereunto Pliny giveth testimony, who remembreth in the same place before recited, that Alexander, Cornelius, Xenophon doe write that some lived 500. some 600. some 800. yeares, Iosephus also alleageth Manethan, Berosus, Mochus Estias the Aegyptian, Chalde,* Phenician Chronologers, who testifie, that those old fathers lived toward a thousand yeares.

QVEST. VI. The causes of the long life of men before the floud.

The causes of the long life of the Patriarkes may be thought to be these foure. 1. The naturall cause, the sound constitution of their bodies, not yet decayed, and the wholesome aire, not yet corrupted with terrene exhalations, as after the floud. 2. The morall cause, for the invention and finding out of arts and sciences, which as Iosephus writeth, they caused to bee graven in two great pillars, one of bricke,* another of stone, that if the world were destroyed with water, the second pillar might remaine: if with fire the first, (for so had they learned of Adam, that the world should be twice destroyed) and he saith further, that the pillar of stone was to be seene in Syria in his time. 3. The civill or politke cause of the long life of the Pa|triarkes, was for procreation and peopling of the world. 4. The Theologicall, that God by giving them such long life, might make triall of their obedience, to see if they would use this benefit of long life to the glory of God, which they did not, and therefore he shortned the age of man. Yet the Lord, while they enjoyed this long tearme, would not suffer any of them to attaine unto a thousand yeares: not for that as the Hebrewes suppose, God granted of Adams thousand seventy yeares to David, not for that reason, which seemeth to be too curious, whereof Ireneus maketh mention, to make good that saying to Adam, in what day soever thou eatest thereof, thou shalt dye the death: because a thousand yeares with God is as yesterday.* Psal. 90.3. And so Adam died in the first day, before he came to a thousand: But God hereby would put the fathers in minde of mortality, that although they lived many hundred yeares, yet none of them filled up a thousand, lest they might have too much flattered themselves in long life: and seeing a thousand is a number of perfection, God would have none of them attaine to 1000. that we might know that nothing is perfect here. Mercer.

QVEST. V. Of the false computation of the 70. Interpreters, and whence it is thought to proceed.

FURther, whereas the Septuagint doe much differ in the account of yeares from the Hebrew text, adding to the age of the old world, which in true reckoning maketh but 1656. five hundred eighty six yeares more, so making the whole number of yeares 2242. It is diversly conjectured, how this error should arise. 1. Some impute it to the malice of the Jewes, that of purpose corrupted the greeke text, that the Gentiles should not know the secrets of the Scriptures. 2. Some to the prudency of the 70. transla|tors, or of the writers and scribes, who knowing that the Aegyptians would count it but a fable, that the fathers lived so many Astronomicall yeares, made a way for them to take it after the count of the Aegypt|tian yeares, whereof ten make but one yeare, and therefore they added an hundred yeares to the fathers age before they begat children, to make them apt for generation. But where the yeares will serve without any such addition, they adde none. As Iered lived an 162. yeares, which because it maketh by the Aegypt|tian calculation sixteene yeares, and some what more, the Septuagint there alter nothing. This is Augu|stines conjecture.*

But howsoever the Septuagint came to be so corrupt, it is apparantly in many points erroneous. 1. They adde unto six of the Patriarkes ages before they begat children,* to each of them, *Adam, Seth, En*s, Cainon, Malaleel, Henoch*, an 100. yeares, and detract them againe in the remainder of their life, that the whole summe may agree. 2. They take away from Methusalems age before hee had children 22. yeares▪ and adde to Lamechs age 6. yeares, as is shewed before. 3. They misse in their calculation, in Methusalems yeares: they make him to live an hundred sixty five before hee begat Lamech, and 802. after in all 969. whereas the other numbers put together want two of this summe, making but 967. 4. They detract from Lamechs age 24. yeares: his whole age according to the Hebrew is 777▪ according to the septuagint, but 753. 5. By their computation Methusalem must live 14. yeares after the flood: for they make him to live 802. yeares after Lamech was borne: and Lamech lived 188. yeares before Noah was borne, and in the six hundred yeare of Noahs age came the flood. Lamech and Noah make but 788. yeares after the computation of the Septuagint: there remaineth yet 14. yeares of Methusalems life: who according to the Hebrew computation, died the same yeare in the beginning before the flood came: for in the arke hee could not be, where only were eight persons, Noah and his wife, his three sonnes and their wives: Genes. 7.7. and S. Peter witnesseth, that in the arke eight soules only were saved. 1 Pet, 3.20. and to say that Methuselah was saved in the terrestriall Paradise with his father Enoch; is a fabulous fiction without ground. Mercerus.

QVEST. VI. The reason of the inequality of generation in the fathers.

Whereas the Patriarkes at divers ages began to beget children, Mahalaleel and Enoch at 56. yeares, Ired at a hundred sixty two yeares: Lamech at two hundred eighty two. Noah at five hundred. 1. Neither is it to be imputed to Noahs holinesse, that so long abstained from mariage: seeing Enoch, that for his godly life was translated, had children at 65. yeares. 2. Neither, as Pererius conjectureth, is it like that Noah had other elder sonnes, which were dead before the flood came: for whereas it is said of all the Patriarkes beside, that they begat sonnes and daughters, beside those, which are expressed, no such thing is mentioned of Noah, that beside these three he begat sonnes and daughters: and the Septuagint read: Noah begat three sonnes, &c. insinuating in so reading their opinion, that these were all their sonnes: yet it is evident. Genes. 6.9. That these were all Noahs seed: the words are, these are the generation of Noah, Noah begat three sonnes, &c. 3. I rather thinke, not that either Noah deferred his marriage till hee was 500. yeeres old, or that hee being married, abstained from the company of his wife all that time: but that God so disposed, seeing he purposed to save Noah and all his sonnes from the flood, that Noah did not so abound with posterity as his fathers before him, lest they also should have followed the wickednesse of that age, and so perish with the rest: the Lord saw that there might bee sufficient for the replenishing of the world againe: and it was more to Gods glory to increase the world afterward by so small a number.

QVEST. VII. Wherein Noah was a comfort to his parents.

7. Vers. 29. This same shall comfort us concerning the workes and sorrow of our hands. 1. Not because the course of sinne should be stopped, and the grievous workes of sinners stayed by the destructions in the flood, as Chrysostome. 2. Or because Noah found out the use of the plow, whereby the earth was tilled with more ease, as R. Solomon. 3. or for that the use of flesh was graunted to Noah after the flood, as some thinke. 4. Nor yet onely for that, the seminary of the world was preserved in Noahs arke, which otherwise should have perished. 5. Nor yet onely because God renewed his covenant with Noah, promising that the world should never be destroyed with waters againe. 6. But the chiefe scope of this prophesie hath relation to Christ, in whom we finde true rest to our soules, and who hath delivered us from the curse, Galath. 3.10. who was prefigured in Noah, and his baptisme, wherein is exhibited the remission of sinnes, shadowed forth in Noahs arke as the Apostle sheweth. 1 Peter 3.22.

1. Doct. Originall sinne by propagation, not imitation.

1. vers. 3. IN that Adam begat a sonne in the likenesse of his owne image, which before is interpreted of originall corruption, the heresie of the Pelagians is confuted, who denied any such originall sinne or depravation of nature to be in infants, by propagation from their parents: but that it commeth onely by a corrupt imitation: this was the heresie of the old Pelagians, who affirmed, Peccatum prima transgressionis in alios homines non propagations, sed imitatione transisset: * that the sinne of the first transgression passeth unto other men not by propagation, but imitation: which heresie seemeth to have beene revived by Catherinus a Popish writer who denieth, * that the sinne of Adam is propagated or transfused to his posterity: But the Scripture evidently overthroweth this assertion. David confesseth hee was conceived in sinne, Psal. 51.5. the Apostle saith, That death went over all, in as much as all have sinned: children then if they had not sinne, should not die: and here Seth is begotten in his fathers image.

2. Doct. Originall sinne not a substance.

2. Their opinion is confuted, that hold originall sinne to be a substance: for like as the image of God, wherein Adam was created was not the substance of the soule, but the quality, as the Apostle expoundeth, which consist in holinesse and righteousness, Ephes. 4.24. so the image of Adams corrupt nature, consisteth in the contrary qualities of impurity and injustice.

3. Doct. The state of originall sinne in soule.

3. The opinion of Papists is refuted, who affirme, that this originall corruption hath the seat and place in the flesh, not in the soule: for this image of corruption was in Adams soule: * and therefore the Apostle saith, he renewed in the spirit of our mindes, Ephes. 4.24. and put off the old man, &c. and put on the new, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him, Coloss. 3.10. there the corrupt image of Adams succeeded, where Gods image is decayed, which was in the soule, for there the place of knowledge is.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Henoch was no licentious liver at any time.

IN that vers. 21. after the generation Henoch is said to walke with God, and not before, Procopius Gazeus thinketh, that Henoch was before a wicked liver, but after repented: But the contrary is evident, in that it pleased God with such extraordinarie favour to take Henoch out of the world, that he saw no death: that he was as a shining starre for vertue and holinesse in that age.

2. Confut. Henoch died not.

WHEREAS vers. 23. it is said all the dayes of Henoch were 365. Albin Ezrawith other Hebrewes, thinke that Henoch died: for if he were still alive, these should not be all his dayes, Cont. 1. The Scripture maketh mention onely of the yeares of his life upon earth: his yeares with God are not to bee accounted among men: as the Apostle saith of Christ: who in the dayes of his flesh, Heb. 5.7. he is now in his flesh in heaven: but these are counted the dayes of his flesh, when he walked in his flesh among men. 2. The Apostle evidently witnesseth, that Henoch was taken away, that he should not see death, Heb. 11.5. he therefore died not.

3. Confut. Henoch not alive in his flesh.

BECAUSE it is said that God tooke away or translated Henoch, * the Popish writers doe imagine that Henoch is yet alive in his flesh in Paradise together with Elias, Contra. seeing that Elias is said to bee taken up into heaven, or that he went into heaven, 2 King. 2.11. where Henoch also walked with God: we can|not beleeeve that they entred heaven in their whole humanity, but that prerogative was to be reserved for Christ: seeing the Apostle saith, that he hath prepared a now and living way into the holy place for us, by his vaile, that is, his flesh, Heb. 10.20. Christs flesh therefore must make a way into heaven before any mans flesh beside can enter.

4. Confut. Henoeh not in the terrestriall Paradise.

BUt because they also affirme, that Henoeh liveth in his flesh, not in heaven, but in the terrestriall Para|dise, and it is against the faith as some of them say, to thinke otherwise, the vanity of this opinion shall easily appeare. 1. Because the Scripture saith, that every thing was destroyed upon the face of the earth, and onely eight persons were saved in the Arke: therefore Henoeh if he had beene upon the earth, * must have perished. 2. The waters prevailed fiftene cubits over the highest mountaine, Genes. 7.20. therefore the earthly Paradise must needs also have beene ouerflowne and destroyed. 3. If they answer that Paradise might be hemmed in with the water, which might stand as a wall round about it, as the wa|ter in the red sea did, or that, though it were covered with water, it might be preserved, as the Olive tree, whereof the Dove tooke a branch, or that God might restore Paradise againe after the flood: the first is presumptuous to imagine a miracle without warrant of Scripture, and if it had beene so, Noah needed not to have made an arke, he and his sonnes and the cattell might have beene preserved there: the second is not sufficient, for though Paradise, which is not like, had beene so preserved, yet Henoeh must have beene drowned. The third is frivolous, for if the terrene Paradise had beene planted againe, seeing it was situ|ated in a knowne place in Mesopotamia, * it could not have beene hid. In this question Pererius is an ad|versary to Bellarmino, Senens. and the rest, that yet dreame of a terrene Paradise.

5. Confut. Henoeh shall returne into the world to die.

IT is also the constant opinion of the popish writers, that Henoeh shall come againe toward the end of the world, * and then shall die, being to be slaine by Antichrist. Pererius, cum Bellarm. Cont. But this is contrary to the Apostle, That Henoeh was taken away, that he should not see death, neither was found, Heb. 11.5. Ergo, Henoeh shall not see death, nor bee found in a mortall state in earth: whereas they object that place, Heb. 9.27. It is appointed unto men that they shall once die. The answer is ready, like as they which are alive at Christs comming shall not die but be changed, 1 Cor. 15. which notwithstanding shall bee in stead of death: so Henoeh was changed in his taking up, though he died not a common death.

6. Confut. Henoeh shall not returne to preach repentance to the world.

COncerning the end and causes, wherefore Henoeh was translated. 1. Wee admit that God hereby would put the righteous in comfort, that notwithstanding the sentence pronounced against Adam, there was a way of righteousness whereby to recover Adams lost state. 2. To minister comfort to the afflicted members of Christ, that they should not doubt, but that their reward is with God, as Ha|bel, * though he had an untimely end, yet lived with God as Henoeh did: thus Theodoret. 3. Wee refuse not the collection here of Thomas Aquinas: that God both by Henoehs translation before the law, and Elias under the law, would nourish the hope of life in his Church, as by types representing the ascension of Christ, in whom the promise of salvation should be accomplished: These causes of Henoehs translation may safely be received. 4. But we neither thinke, as it is in the booke of Wisdome (which is no Ca|nonicall Scripture, * and therefore we may safely dissent from it) That hee was taken away, lest wickednesse should alter his understanding, for as he walked with God before, God kept him in his feare, and preserved him from evill, so he could have guided him still, as the Apostle saith: He shall be established, God is able to make him stand, Rom. 14.4. speaking of the faithfull servants of God, as Mathuselah the sonne of Henoch,^{*} being the longest lived of all the Patriarkes, continued righteous to the end. 5. Neither is that surmise fit to be received, that Henoch is kept alive to preach repentance in the end of the world, and to maintaine the Gospell against Antichrist, which is the common opinion of the papall professors. For of Henochs preaching in the end of the world there is no mention in Scripture, but only of the sending of Eli/as,^{*} which is not understood of Elias person, but of his spirit and zeale. And this Elias the Angell expoundeth to be Iohn Baptist, who should goe before Christ, in the spirit and power of Elias. And there is no such necessity, that Henoch should be preserved so many yeares by miracle to that end, seeing the Lord is able to raise up Prophets and Ministers, as he did Iohn Baptist, in the spirit of Elias and Henoch, to maintaine the truth against the Pope and Antichrist, which we see plentifully performed in these dayes.

7. Confut. Of the Prophetie and booke of Henoch.

Whereas S. Inde in his Epistle, vers. 14. maketh mention of the Prophetie of Henoch, the seventh from Adam, which is not found in any other part of the Canonick Scripture, lest the adversaries might hereupon build their traditions and unwritten verities, I will briefly declare what is to be thought of this Prophetie of Henoch.

^{*} 1. I neither thinke with Tertullian, that there was any such propheticall booke of Henoch, then extant, who conjectureth that though it perished in the flood, yet it might be restored againe by Noah, thereunto inspired. ^{*} 2. Neither yet with Hierome, that this booke of Henoch was an Apocriphall booke, yet some part of it might be true, which the Apostle might alleage. For it is not like that the Apostle would derive a testimony from an hidden and obscure booke of no authority in the Church. 3. Neither yet is it like, as Michael Medina thinketh, that there was no such booke at all under Henochs name: for the fathers, Origen,^{*} Hierome, Augustine, doe in many places make evident mention, that such a booke there was, but thought it to be forged. 4. And it is as unlike, that the true book of Henoch was extant in the Apostles time, which was afterward corrupted with fables, and so rejected of the Church; for then the Church would rather have purged the true booke from such errorrs, and preserved the rest pure, as they did discern the true Gospels, from the forged and adulterate.

Our opinion then is, 1. With Augustine, that the booke of Henoch, which in his time was produced by Heretikes, was altogether forged, and no part of it of Henochs writing: Non quod eorum hominum, qui Deo placuerunt reprobetur autoritas, sed quod ista non creduntur ipsorum: not that, saith he, we refuse the authoritie of such men,^{*} as pleased God, but for that they were thought not to be theirs. 2. We judge it not unlike with Origen, that there might be such an authentick booke of Henochs prophetie, out of the which Iude did take his testimony, which is now lost, as some other parts of the Canonick Scripture are: as the books of God, Nathan, Idd,^{*} and other Prophets, mentioned in the Chronicles. 3. Or this prophetie of Henoch might be preserved by faithfull tradition in the Church of the Iewes, which is approved by the Apostle. But this is no warrant for other unwritten traditions, unlesse some had the like Apostlike spirit to judge of them, as Iudas had: and further this prophetie of Henoch, is a greeable to the Scriptures, so are not many unwritten traditions urged by the Church of Rome.

1. IN that the line only of the race of the faithfull is rehearsed in this chapter, it both sheweth, * that God will alwaies have his church in the world, and that in the most corrupt times, God will have a remnant, that shall worship him: as also this line is continued, to shew the accomplishment of Gods promise, that the seed of the woman should breake the serpents head: and so S. Luke doth fetch the peti|gree of Christ after the flesh from these fathers before the floud.

2. Vers. 22. In that Henoch first walked with God in earth, before he walked with him in heaven: * it sheweth, that we must first seeke Gods glory in earth, before we can bee admitted unto that everlasting glory: so Saint Peter reasoneth; that because we looke for new heavens and a new earth, we should bee diligent to be found of him without spot, &c. 1 Pet. 3.13.

3. Vers. 29. In that Lamech said of his sonne Noah, this same shall comfort us, &c. it appeareth, that the faithfull then looked for a comforter, that should deliver them from the curse, and give them true rest: * of which comforter and deliverer, Noah was a figure: who both by faith was made heire of righteousnesse him|selfe, Heb. 11.7. and by the arke, which was a type of Baptisme, 1 Pet. 3.21. did preach and testifie to the world the true deliverance by the Messiah.

CHAP. VI.

The Method.

T His Chapter hath two parts: 1. Gods determination to destroy the world: 2. The pre|paration or making of the Arke.

In the first part there is set downe: 1. the occasion, which provoked God to pur|pose mans destruction, which was the sinne of that age, described in particular: the sinne of carnall pleasure, vers. 1. of oppression and tyranny, v. 4. in generall, vers. 5. 2. In Gods determination, there is first his repentance that hee had made man, vers. 6. then the limitation of one hundred and twenty yeares, to see if they would amend, vers. 3. 3. Gods full resolution to destroy all flesh, vers. 7.

In the second part, there is first set downe the ground of this favour of God towards Noah: which was Gods mercy and grace towards him. Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord, vers. 8. and Noahs iustice and righteousnesse, vers. 9. which was by faith, Heb. 11.7. then followeth in the next place the com|mandement of God, concerning the making of the Arke: and Noahs obedience thereunto, vers. 21.

In the prescription or commandement for the Arke, there is described, 1. the forme and fashion there|of: both of what matter it should be made, vers. 14. of what length, breadth, height, vers. 15. in what order, for the cabbines, vers. 14. window, doore, vers. 16. 2. The use thereof, for the preservation of man, vers. 18. of beasts, vers. 19. of foules, vers. 20. and their sustentation in laying up their food, vers. 21.

The explanation of doubts or theologicall explication.

QVEST. I. Of the greatnesse of the sinne of the old world.

1. The sinne of the world was very great, seeing God could endure the wicked inhabitants no longer, but swept them away with the flood: which may appeare by these severall considerations, 1. their wickednesse was universally spread, vers. 12. all flesh had corrupted his way. 2. Their sinne exceeded in greatnesse, it was come unto the very height, vers. 5. God saw that the wickednesse of man was great. 3. Not onely the wicked race, but the righteous seed, the sonnes of God fell to folly, vers. 2. 4. They were exercised a long time in doing evill, a thousand yeares and more, that they were growne to such an habite, that they could doe nothing but thinke evill in their heart. 5. Unto this may be added their gracelesse obstinacie, that having an 120. yeares given them by the preaching of Noe to call them to repen|tance, yet despised Gods long suffering.

QVEST. II. When the world beganne to be so wicked.

2. This overflowing of iniquity beganne when men beganne to be multiplied upon the earth, vers. 1. not so soone as the world began to be peopled, which might bee within two or three hundred yeares after the creation: for then they began to build Cities. Ninus King of Assyria who reigned there some 230. yeares after the flood, is reported to have had in his armie 70. hundred thousand footmen, and 200. thousand horse men: in the like time after the creation might the world be exceedingly replenished. 2. But it seemeth, that this great defection was about the seventh age: for then Lamech of Cains race, tooke unto him two wives: then the Lord tooke away righteous Henoch, that he should bee no longer grieved with the wickednesse of the world. * Then the world being replenished with great multitudes, which are ring-leaders for the most part unto evill, as it is written, thou shalt not follow a multitude to doe evill: began to give themselves to all kinde of wickednesse, adultery, oppression, cruelty, multiplicity of wives, unlawfull lust even against nature, and to fill the earth with uncleannesse. 3. And although in this seventh age iniquity was come to the full height, * yet it began long before, even in the dayes of Enos, when as the righteous abhorring the great wickednesse of Cains posterity, separated themselves, and a part beganne to call upon the name of God. Iun. 4. The Hebrewes note, that at the beginning wolmen were not so multiplied as afterward, by whom they tooke occasion to sinne: and therefore it is added, there were daughters borne unto them, &c. vers. 1. but this clause sheweth not a more speciall multiplying of that kinde, but that when the world began to be stored both with men and women, then they gave themselves to wantonnesse.

QVEST. III. The particular sin of the old world here noted.

Vers. 2. They saw the daughters of men that they were faire, &c. 1. Their fault was not onely in that they of the righteous seed matched into Cains stocke, Calvin. 2. Or that they respected onely beauty, having no regard to their piety and vertue, Marlorat. 3. But they by violence tooke unto them, not to their wives, but women, for so with Mercerus and Iunius I rather interpret the word nashim, from all men whatsoever, as Iunius readeth: both virgines and wives, they cared not whom. 4. Some Hebrewes here understand also the filthy sinne of buggery: that they tooke all they liked, even from among the bruit beasts: but Moses speaketh onely of the daughters of men.

QVEST. IV. Who were these sonnes of God.

Vers. Then the sonnes of God. 1. These sonnes of God were not the Angels, which some have supposed to have fallen for their intemperancie with women, and to have begotten of them spirits, as Ioseph, Philo, Iustine, Clemens Alexandrinus, Tertullian conjectured: who so expoundeth that place of S. Paul, that women should be covered, because of the Angels, lest they should bee tempted with their beauty: This opinion is easily confuted: 1. Because the world was punished, and God was angry, not for the sinne of Angels, but of men: vers. 3. My spirit shall not alway strive with man. 2. Chrysostome urlgeth that place, * Matth. 22. in the resurrection, they neither marry, nor are married, but are the Angels: Er/go, Angels are not subject to carnall affections, as men are. 3. If Angels fell first for the love of women, then they sinned not for 1000. yeares after the creation, whereas the Scripture sheweth, that the Devill was a murtherer and a liar from the beginning, Ioh. 8.44.

QVEST. V. Devils not corporall nor mortall.

IT is also absurd, and improbable, that these were devils which did company with women, and of them came Gyants, * as thinketh Franciscus Georgius, who affirmeth devils to have bodies, and a generative faculty, and to company with women. Of the like opinion is Psellus, that the devils have bodies, and they are nourished by sucking and attraction as sponges: and that they are males and females at their pleasures:

some are of a fiery, some ayrie, some a watery, some of a terrene nature. But these are fables and ficti|ons, fit rather to be laughed at, than worthy to be confuted.* 1. The Devils are of a spirituell not corpo|rall nature, it appeareth by that story, Luk. 8. where we reade, that in one man, there was a legion, that is, six thousand Devils: how could so many spirits if they were corporall, be included in one body? 2. If they were of a fierie, watery, or earthly, & so of an elementall nature, they should bee subject to corruption, mutability, and mortality: and so some have imagined also,* as Plutarch writeth of the death of the great Pan, a famous Devill among the Pagans: and Cardane reporteth, that he heard his Father say, who was above thirty years familiar with the Devils, that he learned of them, that they doe die, & decay, & revive againe: but this fancie is contrary to the Scripture: which testifieth, that the Devill hath beene a murthe|rer from the beginning of the world, Ioh. 8. 44 Ergo, he hath continued from the beginning of the world: and how should the soule of man be immortall, if these spirits, which are of a more subtill nature were mor|tall? 3. Though it were granted, that Devills have a kinde of airie bodies, yet could they not ingender:* for the power of generation agreeth onely to perfect bodies, which have their materiall and distinct parts, and receive nourishment. 4. And they being, as they say, male and female, should ingender among them|selves in their owne kinde. 5. Or if they did company with women, they could not beget men, but mull|tiply their owne kinde, or at the least a mixt kinde, as the mule is engendred of an horse and an asse: and so some likewise have conceited, that the Faunes and Satyres were the off-spring of such generation. As Hierom in the life of Antonie, reporteth▪ that such an one appeared unto him in the wilderness, with goats feet, long crooked nailes, and hornes upon his head, and spake unto Antonie: but either this may be held to be a fable, foisted under Hieromes name, or if there were any such thing, it might be some monster of the wilderness, which the Devill used as his trunke to speake out of.

QVEST. VI. Spirits doe not generate.

BUt much more absurd is the opinion of Paulus Burgensis, that thinketh these which companied with the daughters of men, were spirits, called Incubi, which doe assume bodies of the aire for a time,* rel|presenting the shape sometime of men, sometime of women, in the act of generation, and then they are called Succubi: and thus saith he, were the Giants engendred: and Tostatus approving this conceit of Incubi and Succubi, seemeth to give credit to that report of Merlin, that he was begotten by a spirit.* In these assertions and uncertaine conjectures of men, some what is true, some part false. 1. True it is, that the Devill may appeare in the shape of man or woman, and dissemble and counterfeit the act proper to both: not that the spirits have any delight in such carnall acts, having no true but assumed and counter|feit bodies: but they doe it more strongly to delude men and women, and entice them to that abomina|ble sinne of the flesh, which they know hath corrupted the hearts of many excellent men, as of David, Sa|lomon. 2. Though spirits can take upon them the shape of bodies, yet they are but so to the eye,* they are not true bodies, being easily discerned by the feeling: and therefore our Saviour saith, fee|le and see, a spi|rit hath not flesh and bones, as yee see mee to have. And some have reported, that they have felt such bodies assumed by spirits, as colde as yce, and of a divers substance from humane flesh, as Alexander ab A|lexandro, so writeth of another to whom a spirit appeared, and Cardanus of himselfe. If any man object, that Abraham washed the Angels feet, and yet discerned them not: I will not answer with Pererius whose judgement I refuse not in the rest, that Abrahams intent upon other things regarded it not. But I note a difference betweene the operation of good and bad Angels: that these never appeared with true bodies, and therefore were called Phantasmata, visions, fancies. Marke. 6.49. But unto the other God gave the use of true bodies for a time, during that ministerie or service, as appeareth, in that they did eat and drinke, were lodged, had their feet washed, &c. 3. But howsoever spirits may assume bodies, they are not such as can be instruments of generation, by conveying of humane seed, as some have imagined: be|cause the scripture saith, children are the inheritance of the Lord, Psal. 127.3. And Evah confesseth, when

Cain was borne, that she had obtained a son of God, Gen. 4.1. and if that were true, which is fabled of Mer/lin, such kind of birth should be oftner seene in the world.

Wherefore by the sonnes of God in this place. 1. Neither doe wee understand Angels good or bad. 2. Neither men of tall and great stature: as such things as are excellent in their kind, are so called, as high and tall trees, are said to be the trees of God. Psal. 104.16.3. Nor yet the sonnes of Princes, and great men as the Chalde readeth, to whom Mercerus subscribeth, which are called Gods in scripture. Psal. 82.6. I said ye are Gods, &c, 4. Neither yet are they so called, because they came of Seeth, who as Suidas thin|keth, was in respect of his religion and great knowledge, saluted as a God in earth. 5. But they are here na|med the sonnes of God, that were of the righteous seed, and worshippers of the true God, as the wicked are called the sonnes of the Devil, and he their father. Iohn. 8.44. ye are of your father the Devill: who al|though they were not indeed the sonnes of God in his eternall election, yet were they so in respect of their externall calling.

QVEST. VII. The meaning of these words, My spirit shall not alwaies strive, &c.

4. Vers. 3. MY spirit shall not alwaies strive, &c. 1. Not as the latine text is, My spirit shall not alwaies remaine; which some expound of Gods wrath, some of his providence, some of the holy Ghost, some of the soule and spirit of man inspired of God: and then the sense to bee, that Gods wrath shall not alwaies continue, but he will punish them at once, or he will no more protect them, or take care for them, neither his spirit shall be with them, or he will take away their life and spirit from them. For this variety of interpretation ariseth of the mistaking of the word, which signifieth to contend or judge, not to remaine.

2 Neither is Pagmines interpretation so apt, my spirit shall not alwaies bee sheathed, as a sword in a scabbard; and so hee would derive the word jadon, of neden, which signifieth a sheath. 3. The meaning then of these words, my spirit shall not alwaies judge or contend, is neither as Hierom expoundeth, non eos ad ternos servabo cruciatus, * I will not punish them for ever; but render unto them here that which they deserve: For S. Peter sheweth, that their soules are now in the prison of hell, and so everlastingly punished, 1 Peter 3.19. Neither as Cajetane, that God would no more punish them spiritually, as hee had done, by taking his grace and spirit from them, but now he would inflict a corporall punishment upon them: for God had not yet punished them, giving them the space of 120. yeares to repent. But either wee may understand these words with Oleaster, that God would no longer strive with them, in reprooving, and admonishing them, which they regarded not, or with Iunius: God would no longer consult, or dispute the matter as it were with himselfe, what to doe with them, but if they amended not within that space set, he would cer|tainly destroy them.

QVEST. VIII. What these Giants were.

5. Vers. 4. THese were Giants, &c. Some thinke that these were called Giants, not for their greatnesse of stature, but their cruell and beastly conditions: so thinke, Philo, Ioseph. Damas. Cyril, with others: so also Iunius. 2. But beside their fierce and cruell nature, it is most probable, that they were of huge and great stature, Mercer. for such there were also after the flood: as the sonnes of Anak, in com|parison of whom the Israelites seemed as grasshoppers, Num. 13.34. such were the Emmims and Za•zum/mims, Deut. 2.10, 17. and Og the King of Basan, whose bed was of iron, being nine cubits in length, and foure in breadth,* Deut. 3.11. and of this judgement are Ambrose, Augustine, Theodoret. 3. And these Giants huge in stature, men of great strength, as is shewed after in this verse, did most abound before the flood, and such also was the off-spring of this unlawfull copulation betweene the sonnes of God and daughters of men. 4. And they were men of renowne, that is, famous over all the world, because they did tyrannize over their neighbours, and brought them in subjection: of whom Berosius writeth, that they had a City called Enos, about the mountaine Libanus, which ruled over all the world: they did eat mans flesh, and had unlawfull company with their mothers, daughters, with mules, and bruit beasts. 5. Some, as Rasi, doe referre this generation of Giants to the times of Enos, further affirming, that the Lord sent the Ocean Sea, which destroyed the generation of these Giants, and the third part of the world: but the Giants which succeeded them, were as wicked as they. But of this inundation of the Ocean, no mention is made in Scripture: neither is it like that the generation of Giants began so soone in the world: neither with Aben Ezra, doe we understand this, of the generation of Giants after the flood: of whom came Og and the rest: as though any of the Giants had escaped the flood, to beget Giants afterward: and that Noe and his sonnes were Giants it is not to be thought. Mercer. Neither were these Giants onely in Noahs time: but when this violent rage of lust beganne to reigne in the world, then this off-spring of Giants came in,* which continued till the time of Noah. 6. Neither were these Giants onely of Seths race, as some thinke, nor yet onely of Cain, as R. Sel. but in both families there were Giants, after they thus coupled together with out the feare of God, Mercer; Calvin. 7. So that the ← Nephilim → here spoken of, so named of Naphal, which signifieth to fall, were not so called, either because they were fallen in stalture from the hugenesse of the first Giants, as Ramban: neither as R. Sel. because they were the cause of ruine of falling to themselves, or others: nor yet onely because they were Apostataes and sell from God, Iun. but they were so called in respect of their great stature, the sight whereof caused men to fall to the ground for feare, Ab. Ezra. Mercer. 8. Neither was their talnesse or greatnesse of stature simply evill, but because they abused their strength to lust and violence, and so became both monstrous in their body and soule, and begat a monstrous generation like to themselves, Mercer.

QVEST. IX. The space of an hundred and twenty yeares how to be reckoned.

6. His dayes shall be 120. yeares, &c. 1. Which is not referred to the age of man, as Tostatus and Rupertus thinke, because Moses the writer hereof lived no longer: for although it be true, that mans life was shortned after the flood, and thrice halfed from 900. and odde, to 400. and odde, as in Arphaxad that lived 425. yeares,* and then halfed againe from 400. and odde, to 200. and odde, as in Serug, that lived 230. and then almost halfed to 100. and odde, as in Abraham that lived an 175. yeares: yet wee see that many of these exceeded an 120. We rather with Hierome Chrysostome, and others, take this time set to be that space of yeares which God gave unto the old world for their repentance: which were not shortned by twenty yeares,* as Hieromethinketh, because of their wickednesse, for the flood came an 100. yeares after, when Noah was 600. yeares old, Gen. 7.6. Neither need we say with Augustine, that Noah was said to be 500. yeare old, when he was but 480. because he had lived the most part of it: for Sem was but an 100. yeare old two yeare after the flood, Gen. 11.10. but now he should be an 120. if Noah were then but 480. when he beganne to have his sonnes. Therefore this doubt is more easily reconciled, to say that this time was set before Noah was 500. yeares of age, but by way of anticipation, mention is made of Noahs sonnes before, because of the continuing of the story: as we see the like, Gen. 2. where the creation of the woman is recorded after the seventh day, being done the first. Mer. Per.

7. NOW as touching the originall of Giants, 1. first the opinion of Paulus Burgensis is to be refused, who thinketh they were Devills, called in Hebrew ← Nephilim →, cadentes of falling, because they fell from heaven: for these Giants were destroyed by the flood, so were not the Devils: and the Giants were called ← Nephilim →, both in respect of their terrible stature, which made men fall to the ground, and for their Apostasie in falling away from vertue and piety. 2. As absurd is the opinion of Franciscus Georgius, that these Giants were begotten of spirits companying with women,* and that otherwise they are not enlgendered: and that these are the seed of the Serpent, betweene whom and the seed of the woman the Lord put enmitie: for this cause (saith he) since the coming of Christ, who hath broken the Serpents head, we read of no such commixion of the spirits with women, nor of this generation of Giants. Thus Franciscus Georg. 6. tom. problem. 33. c. 33.1. But these fantasies may be easily controlled. 1. For Giants to be procreated of men, is no more against nature, than for Pygmees and Dwarfes, that are as much admirable for their smalnesse, as the other are for their talnesse: such an one was one Canopas in Augustines time, that was but two foot and a hand breadth high.* 2. That spirits have used the carnall company of men and women since Christ, Augustine sheweth, lib. 15. de Civit. Dei. c. 23. and experience confirmeth the same, though there|of there can be no generation. 3. And likewise it is evident, that there have beene men and women of Giants stature since Christ: Augustine maketh mention of a woman of admirable talnesse,* her parents being but of ordinary stature, lib. 15. de Civit. Dei. c. 23. and Pliny of a man in Augustus time, of nine foot and a halfe in height. 4. Neither are these Giants that seed of the Serpent:* for they are also begotten of women: neither were all Giants, men of great stature, wicked persons: for it is not unlike but that Adam,* Noah, and other Patriarks before the flood, much exceeded the ordinary stature of men now: and the Ecclesiasticall stories make mention of one Christophorus, a man of twelve cubits in height, that was put to death under Decius the Emperour, for the Christian faith. And further, all the naturall seed of women are not at enmity with the Serpent, but many of them he useth as his agents and instruments.* This place then is much abused to that purpose, wherefore it is alleaged. These Giants then, were no other but the naturall off-spring of men and women in those dayes before the flood: not that all were such, but these were such, which were so borne by this unlawfull conjunction betweene the seed of the righteous and the wicked race: for as the root was, so was the branch; the marriage unholy, and the issue ungratious.

QVEST. XI. How God is said to repent.

8. Vers. 6. IT repented the Lord. The ancient writers have diversly collected of these words, but all to good purpose. 1. Chrysostome saith, it is Verbum nostrae parvitati accommodatum.* a word appllied to our weaknesse, to expresse the greatnesse of their sinnes, Quae misericordem Deum indignari fecerunt, which compelled the mercifull God to be angry. 2. Theodoret, It repenteth me, &c. that is, I have purposed to destroy man, as the Lord saith, it repenteth me, that I have made Saul King, that is, I have decreed to depose him: and so as Augustine well saith; Non est perturbati, sed iudicium, quo irrogaetur poenitentia, it is no perturbation in God this repentance, but an imposition of punishment. 3. Rupertus.* in that it repented the Lord: pietatis est, it sheweth his piety, how loth the Lord is to punish: but in that the Lord purposeth to destroy them, severi iudicii est, it sheweth his just severity. 4. But Augustine more to the purpose saith, Paenitudo Dei est mutandorum immutabilis ratio: Repentance in God, is his unchangeable disposition of changeable things. God is not changed, but the things altered. 5. Iustinus Martyr hath most plainly opened this point: God is immutable. Sed cum ii quos curat, mutantur; mutat ipse res prout is expedit quos curat: but when they whom God careth for are changed, then God changeth the course of things, as he seeth expedient for them. For God immutabiliter ignoscit, unchangeably forgiveth those repent as the Ninivites, and immutabiliter non ignoscit, unchangeably forgiveth them not, which amend not, as Saul. So here the Lord holdeth on his unchangeable course of judgement in punishing sinne, yet seemeth to repent in undoing his worke, in destroying man, whom he had made, Perer.

9. Vers. 7. I Will destroy from man to beast, &c. Not onely man shall be destroyed,^{*} but the other creatures with him; and yet man onely had sinned. The reason is, 1. as Chrysostome sheweth, because all things were made for mans use: hic igitur cum e medio tollitur, quis illorum usus erit: and therefore when man is taken away, there should be no use of them. 2. Like as when the head is cut off, all the members die, so together with man the creatures, over the which he had power, are punished: not onely he, but his. Hereby the severity of Gods punishment appeareth, as also the greatnesse of mans sin, that brought destruction upon many, as Davids sin in numbring the people, did upon the whole land. 3. Because beastly men had abused the creatures to their filthy pleasure and riotous excesse, it standeth with Gods justice to punish the instrument with the principall. 4. The fishes are not also here threatned to be destroyed, because they lived in that element wherewith God purposed to overflow the earth: neither had man so much abused them, as the other kinds: and beside it pleased God to spare them among other creatures: at other times the Lord threatneth also to take away the fish of the Sea, Hosh. 4.3. Mercer.

Vers. 10. NOah was a just and perfect man, &c. 1. Noah, not yet any man living can be said to be perfect in respect of Gods justice, or in the sight of God, as the Psalmist saith: If thou O Lord markest what is done amisse, who shall be able to abide it? Ps. 130.3. 2. Neither yet in regard of that perfection, which the Saints shall attaine unto in the Kingdome of God: as the Apostle sheweth: Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect, Phil. 3.12. 3. Neither yet is any so perfect, as that he can be found in this life without sinne; which was the heresie of the Pelagians: for the Preacher saith: there is not one just man upon the earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not, Eccles. 7.20. 4. Neither is any said to be perfect, because they can keepe the commandements, and doe more than is commanded, in observing the Evangelicall counsell; as Pererius, and other Popish Writers. 5. But Noah is said to be perfect, in comparison of others:^{*} and therefore it is added, in his generation, or in regard of the perfection which may be attained unto in this life, which is rather in the will and desire to be perfect, and in increasing and going still forward, than in any actuall accomplishment of the desire: and in this sense the Apostle having a little before denied himselfe to bee perfect, yet saith to the Philippians, Let as many as be perfect be th^o minded, Philippians 3.15. and so our Saviour biddeth us be perfect, as our heavenly Father is perfect, that is, that we should more and more labour for perfection. As Augustine saith, Ingredi sine macula non a^o. surde dicitur,^{} non qui jam perfectus sed qui ad ipsam perfectionem irreprehensibiliter currit: Hee is not amisse said to walke without spot, not who is already perfect, but runneth unto perfection without reproofe.* Thirdly, how Noah is said to be perfect, is expounded, vers. 8. Noah found grace in the sight of God: it was the perfection then of faith, whereby Noah was excepted as just and perfect in the sight of God being by faith cloathed with the perfection and justice of Christ.

11. The earth was corrupt before God. 1. That is the inhabitants of the earth, where corrupt, as Chrysostome saith, Homo terra appellatur, quia totus terrenus, Man is called earth, because he was become wholly earthly.^{*} 2. Or, they had infected the very earth with their abominations, and made it accursed, Iun. as the Psalmist saith, A fruitfull land is turned into barrennesse, for the wickednesse of them that dwell therein, Psal. 107.34. 3. The earth may be said to be corrupt, that is, defiled, with those sinnes of unclean|nesse, which they committed: as the Scripture testifieth, that the land is defiled with such abominations, Levit. 18.25. 4. The earth was corrupt before God, that is, they were growne to such impudency and bold|nesse in their sinnes, that they would commit them, even as in the presence and sight of God, as the Pro|phet saith, They declare their sinnes as Sodome, they hide them not, Isay. 3.9.

QVEST. XV. Whether they which died in the flood perished everlastingly.

Vers. 13. I Will destroy them with the earth, &c. Here a great question ariseth, whether all they which were destroyed in the flood, perished everlastingly: that is, both in body and soule. 1. For answer to this question, we neither thinke that most of the old world were onely temporally punished: which seemeth to have beene the opinion of Hierome,* that they which perished in the flood, as likewise the Sodomites, receperunt in vita malasua, received their punishment in this life. To the which purpose he urgeth that place, Nahum. 1.9. Non consurget duplex tribulatio: Affliction shall not rise the second time: and therefore it standeth not with Gods justice, to punish twice for the same sinne, both in this world,* and the world to come. To this place I answer first: that the Prophet speaking of the destruction of the Assyrians, sheweth onely, that thei• overthrow should be finall, that God should not need to smite them againe. As Abishai said to David, when hee found Saul asleepe, Let mee smite him and I will not smite him againe, 1 Sam. 26.9. Thus Theohpylact, and *Theodore*t expound this place. Secondly, if it bee expounded, as it is alleaged, it must be understood onely of penitent persons, that such being afflicted in this life, shall not need to be punished againe: as we may see in the repentant theefe: but concerning the the other theefe, detemporalis ad aeternum transvectus est supplicium: he was carried from temporall to eter|nall punishment,* as Rupertus saith.

2. Neither doe we approve their opinion, that thinke many of the old world, though incredulous before, yet when they saw the flood comming, in fine vitae poenitentiam egerunt, did repent them even in the end of their life: sic Lyranus, Bellarmine. For S. Peter calleth them, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, the world of the wic|ked, 2 Pet.•5. They then that were wicked so continued to the end.

3. Neither is the opinion of Cajetanus to be received, that thinketh, non fuisse simpliciter incredulos, id est sine vera Dei side,* that they were not simply incredulous, that is, without the true faith of God, but on|ly beleevd not Noah in this, that the flood should come, but trusting to Gods long suffering, hoped, that it should not be so: for it is evident, Genes. 6. that beside this speciall point of incredulity, the old world was in many other sinnes outrageous: the earth was filled with cruelty, vers. 11. and in that they gave no credit to Noah, Gods Prophet, therein they were incredulous against God, as our Saviour saith of his Apostles: he that heareth you heareth me: and he that despiseth you despiseth me, Luk. 10.16.

* 4. Their opinion also is to be refused, which thinke, that though the wicked of the old world were con|demned to hell, yet they might be redeemed from thence by the descension of Christ: who is said by S. Peter, to have preached to the spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient: at which time also some have fabled, that Plato at the preaching of Christ, in hell beleevd: and that divers others have been delivered from hell, as the soule of Falconilla, by the prayer of S. Tacla, and of Trajanus the Empe|rour, at the intercession of Gregory: But these imaginations are contrary to the Scriptures: for out of hell is no redemption: as Abraham said to the rich man: They which would goe from hence to you, cannot, neither can they come from thence to us,* Luk. 16.26. And hell is thus described, Where their worme dieth not, and the fire never goeth out, Mark. 9.46. the worme of the conscience in everlasting fire, shall torment the wicked: that oration which goeth under the name of Damascene, is confessed by Bellarmino to be none of his: and that place of S. Peter hath no such meaning, as even now shall appeare.

5. Neither is their conceit any thing worth, who thinke, that some of them which perished in the flood, did repent them before they died, and so went not to hell, but to purgatory, * from whence they were delivered by Christs descending thither, according to that saying of Peter, but was quickned in the spirit, by the which he went and preached to the spirits in prison, which were in time passed disobedient, &c. But this place in Augustines opinion cannot be understood of the descending of Christs soule into hell. 1. Au|gustine objecteth, that Christ cannot be said to be quickned, or made alive in his spirit, that is, his soule, because it was not subject to death. And therefore by the spirit he truly understandeth the divine power of Christ, whereby hee preached in Noah. 2. If there be preaching in hell, then it will follow, * that there is a Church there, and repentance and conversion of soules. 3. The Apostle speaketh onely of such as were disobedient, but they were not delivered by Christ. 4. It cannot be shewed in all the Scripture, where the receptacle of the soules of the faithfull and beleivers is called a prison.

6. Wherefore our opinion is: that all those which were disobedient and incredulous in the dayes of Noah, were first destroyed in their bodies in the flood, and after in their soules perished everlastingly: * but from this number both infants must be excepted, such as were of the sonnes of God, who are not capable of faith and obedience, and therefore were neither unfaithfull, nor disobedient; and such also as were ignorant of the preaching of Noah, and framing of the Arke. Of these God might have mercy. The rest continuing still in unbeleeve, everlastingly perished. For it is not like, that they which by the space of an hundred and twenty yeares would not repent, but remained obstinate, would relent in the instant of the flood. Herein therefore we refuse not the judgement and reason of Rupertus, Primo & ultimo iudicio soli re|probi condemnantur, & soli electi servantur, isto medio nec soli elects conservantur, nec soli reprobi suffocantur: In the first judgement, when the Angels fell, and the last onely the reprobates shall be cens•red, the elect saved: but in this judgement comming betweene, neither the Elect onely were pr•served in the Arke (for there was Cham accursed of his father) nor the reprobate onely suffocated in the waters. And hereunto agreeth S. Peters comparison, that resembleth baptisme to the Arke, 1 Pet.3.21. but all dying without baptisme are not damned, neither is it to be supposed, they were all reprobates which died without the Arke.

QVEST. XVI. Of what manner the Arke was made.

Vers. 14. MAke an Arke of Pine trees.] 1. Some thinke that no certaine kinde of wood is expressed, but generally the matter whereof the whole Arke should be made, which was not one kinde of wood, but divers, Perer. 2. But some take it for squared wood, as the 70. 3. Some for wood pitched: pro lignis bituminatis, Hierom. tradit. in Genes. 4. Some for the Pine or Pitch tree, because from the word gopher here used, seemeth to be derived gaphrith, taken for brimstone, *Gen. 19. sic Oleaster: for gaphrith, brimstone, is digged out of the earth; pitch which commeth from the tree hath another name, * it is called copher*. 5. Some thinke the Arke was made of the Firre tree, which is the highest and straitest of all other, or the Cypress tree, because of the continuance. 6. But it is most like to be the Cedar, * as the Thargum readeth: which is commended in Scripture for the height, and therefore is called the Cedars of God, Psal. 104.16. and beside, it is most durable. * Plinie maketh mention of Cedar beames in the Temple of Apollo at Utica, which continued from the first foundation untill his time, almost 1200. yeares. 7. Nei|ther need it be doubted where Noah should have timber of sufficient length to serve for the breadth of the Arke, for Plinie reporteth of a beame of the Larix tree, in Tiberius reigne, seene at Rome an 120. foot long, * and of a Cyprus tree, 120. foot long. He maketh mention also of the Indian trees to be so high, that un|neath an arrow cannot be shot over them: Ex Perer.

QVEST. XVII. Of the measure of the Arke.

Vers. 15. THis length of the Arke shall be 300. cubits.] The Arke was six times so long as broad, and ten times so long as high: after the proportion of mans body, as Augustine well writeth: * for the length of mans body from the crowne to the foot, is six times the breadth from one side to another▪ and ten times the thickness from the backe to the chest: But many have doubted, that the Arke being de|scribed to be no larger, was not sufficient to containe all the beasts with their severall food: and Apelles the disciple of wicked Marcion, tooke occasion hereby to cavill at the whole story. But this doubt may easily be removed: 1. Yet we are neither forced with Origen to make of one cubit six, which he calleth a Geometricall cubit: for neither is there any such cubit in use, * which in length containeth six ordinary cu|bits: neither doth the Scripture in other places reckon according to such cubits: for whereas the Altar is prescribed to be made five cubits long, three cubits high, Exod. 27. by this account, taking one cubit (which containeth a foot and halfe) for six, it should be 27. foot high, and 45. foot long, which were no fit prop|ortion for an Altar to sacrifice upon: and further, the Arke would now bee as much too great, and too huge for any use, being by this computation 22800. cubits in length: that is, 900. yards. which almost maketh a mile: and in height an 180. cubits, that is 90. yards.

2. Augustine alloweth for every one of the three lofts the same proportion for each: 300. cubits in length, 50. in breadth, 30. in height; so that the length of the whole should be 900. cubits, * the breadth an 150. the height 90. but this agreeth not with the text, that saith, the length of the Arke (not of the lofts or divisions) shall be 300. cubits, the breadth 50. &c.

3. Some to helpe the matter, understand the cubit of the Sanctuary, which was much greater than the common and ordinary cubit. 1. Some thinke that the measure and weight of the Sanctuary, * was no big|ger than the ordinary, but more certaine, and so as it were the stander to forme other vulgar measures by: sic Perer. but this shall afterward appeare to be otherwise. 2. Some would have the cubit of the Sanctua|rie, to be a cubit and an hand breadth, * Ezek. 40.5. but that rather is understood to be regius non sacer cu|bitus, the Kings cubit, not the Temple cubit. By this reckoning the Arke shall be in length 350. in breadth 58.

in height 35. cubits, or there about. 3. Some other thinke the Temple cubit was a foot larger than the com|mon, and somewhat more, and so the Arke should containe in length 525. common cubits, and 87. in breadth, and 52. with an halfe in height: but of this opinion there is no good ground. 4. But it is more like, that the cubit of the Sanctuary was twice so much, as the common and usuall cubit: as may appeare by these reasons: 1. Because the weight of the Sanctuary, was double to the usuall: as the sickle of the San|ctuary weighed 20. gerah, * Exod. 30.13. Whereas the common sickle was esteemed at the one halfe. 2. Where the Temple of Solomon was but 60. cubits in length, and 20. in breadth, this had beene too small a proportion for such a goodly place, if it had beene but 30. yards long, and 10. yards broad, for two com|mon cubits make but a yard: therefore a cubit of the Sanctuary could be no lesse than so many yards: and so by this estimate the Arke should be 600. common cubits, that is 300. yards in length, 50. yards broad, and thirty high.

4. Some doe understand the ordinary cubit, which is the measure from the elbow to the top of the middle finger, but doe thinke it to have beene much bigger than it is now, because their stature of body before the floud was much greater, Mercerus. But it should seeme, that Moses taketh the cubit for the measure of ordinary men, not of Giants, as Deut. 3.11. The bed of Og is said to be nine cubits in length, &c. after the cubit of a man: that is, not after Ogges arme, but the measure of ordinary men.

5. But we need not use any of these helps (though the third and fourth are not much to be misliked, any man that will may so account for the proportion of the Arke) for if we take the cubit here after the common estimation, the Arke will be found to be of sufficient capacity: three hundred common cubits make an 150. yards, which containe 400. and 50. foot, almost two furlong in length, which make the eight part of a mile; and multiplying the length by the breadth, 50. times 300. make 15000. cubits, which being increased by the height of 30. cubits, there will arise in the whole capacity of the Arke, thir|ty times 15000. cubits. Beside, if the Arke be divided into cels and cabbins, or nests, as the word chinnim signifieth, v. 14. there will be in one of the chambers or divisions, foure hundred mansions, whereof evelry one shall be six cubits in breadth, and as much in length, and the height eight or nine cubits: for every six cubits in length of the Arke, carrying fifty in breadth, will make 8. cabbins, and two cubits to spare. And in the length of 300. cubits, we finde fifty times six: so shall we have fifty times 8. cubits, which ma|keth foure hundred: which mansions will be sufficient for the divers kinds of beasts and cattell, and many will remaine over for other necessary uses, as for passage from place to place, and such like.

QVEST. XV. Of the time how long the Arke was in making.

1. THe received opinion is, that the Arke was in preparing an hundred yeares, because Noah is said to have beene five hundred yeare old, Gen. 5.32. before he was commanded to make the Arke, and the floud came, when he was six hundred yeare old, Gen. 7.6. Thus thinketh Origen, lib. 4. contr. Celsum. Augustine lib. 15. de Civitat. Dei, c. ult. Gregor. hom. 15. in Ezech. with others, Mercer.

1. But the truer opinion is, that it was an hundred and twenty yeares in making, Mercer: both for that this time is set for the repentance of the old world, Gen. 6.3. to the which they were invited by the prealching of Noah, as also because of S. Peters words, which in time past were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God aboad in the dayes of Noah, while the Arke was in preparing, 1. Pet. 3.20. This time of Gods long suffering, was 120. yeares, and all that while the Apostle saith, the Arke was in preparing.

2. It will be objected, that when Noah was commanded to make the Arke, he had sonnes borne unto him: for the Lord saith unto him, Thou shalt goe into the Arke, thou and thy sonnes, &c. But Noah had no sonnes till he was 500. yeare old. Answ. There is mention made not onely of Noahs sonnes, but of his sonnes wives: now wives it is like they had not before they were forty or fifty yeares of age, seeing Sem lived six hundred yeares; so that by this account, the Arke should not bee above 50. yeares in making, their father being five hundred yeares old before any of his sonnes were borne. We say then, that either these words were not spoken to Noah concerning his entrance and his sonnes, and their wives, into the Arke, t•ll it was finished, or that the Lord provideth for his sonnes that should be borne, or that Noah was some long time in preparing timber and stuffe before he began to build the Arke. Berosus conjecture is, that 42. yea•es were spent in that provision, and the residue of the 120. yeares in the building. But this is an uncertaine conjecture: like enough it is, that the providing of the matter would aske a long time.

4. And whereas Noah is said to be five hundred yeare old, cap. 5. that is there expressed for continuing of the Genealogie. And the story following in the 6. chapter is set downe by way of recapitulation: the 100. yeares there mentioned, taking beginning in the 480. yeare of Noahs age.

QVEST. XVI. Of the severall chambers and divisions in the Arke.

*Vers. 16. Thou shalt make it with the low, second, and third roome.] 1. There were neither foure roomes or regions in the Arke as Iosephus supposeth, lib. 1. antiquitat. 2. nor yet five, as Origen think|eth: the first, for the dung of the cattell, the second for their food, the third for the cruell and savage beasts, the fourth for the tame & gentle, the fifth for man. 3. Neither were there beside the three regions in the Ark, certaine cabbins without in the side of the Arke, for the beasts called Amphibia, that live both in the waters, and upon the earth, as the Crocodile, Sea-calfe, and such like, as Hugo thinketh: for all the beasts came into the Arke,* which were preserved, Gen. 79. 4. Neither beside the three partitions in the Arke, was there a bottom beside to receive the filth of the Arke, as Pererius: for conveyances might bee made otherwise in the side of the Arke for that use, and it would have beene a great annoyance to have kept the dung of the cattell one whole yeare in the Arke. 5. All these opinions are repugnant to the text, which prescribeth but three ranks, the lower second, and third: so is that Hebrew text, and Chaldee Paraphrast:

and the Septuagint are so likewise to bee understood: facies inferiora, bicamerata: tricamerata: thou shalt make the lower roomes, the second chambers, and third chambers: and so doth Augustine interpret them:* taking these words not joyntly, wherein Origen was deceived, as though there should bee two chambers below, and three above, but distinctly and severally.

QVEST. XVII. Of the severall use of the divisions in the Arke.

Concerning the distinct use of these chambers, 1. Some make the lowest for the dung, the next for the food, the third for the cattell, as Origen, and some Hebrewes. 2. Some the first for the beasts, the second roome for their food, which might bee put downe into their cabins with ease, as Pererius. 3. Some will not have the cruell and tame beasts together, but make two severall regions for them, as Origen. 4. Some doe place men and beasts together in the upper and third roome, dividing it into three parts, leaving both the ends for the beasts, the middle for men: Sic Lyranus, Tostatus. 5. Some doe place the beasts together in the lowest, which they make also the draine of the ship, their food in the middle, and men together with the birds and foules in the uppermost. Mercer. 6. It is most like that the food and provender was in the lowest roome, and the beasts in the middle, because of the fresh and more open aire, as also for the better conveying of their dung by the sides of the Arke into the water: for this second region was ten cubits from the bottome, (allowing for every partition as many) and so much of the Arke may be supposed to be under the water: otherwise if the cattell were in the lowest roome, we must be forced contrary to the text to make a fourth place in the bottome, to bee as the sinke and draine of the Arke. But I rather subscribe unto Calvins judgement, that the order and disposition of these three partitions is to us unknowne.

QVEST. XX. Of the window in the Arke.

Vers. 18. A Window shalt thou make, &c.] 1. This was neither a precious or shining stone, as the car|buncle, as some of the Hebrewes thinke: for Noah is said to open the window, Gen. 8.5. 2. neither was it shut all the time of the floud, and gave no light, as Tostatus thinketh, for to what use should it then have beene made? 3. Neither was this window, but of a cubit in length, as Oleaster following Aben Ezra: for such a small window would not have sufficed for all the Arke: and those words that follow, in a cubit shalt thou finish it above, cannot bee referred to the window, but to the Arke: because the gender agreeth not in the Hebrew, and otherwise the description of the Arke should bee unperfect. 4. Neither was there one onely window made, as Mercerus, Buteo, gesseth, and other parts to bee lightned with candles. 5. But it is most like, that divers lights were made: for so the word Isarsignifieth, a cleare light: but where mention is made of opening the window, Gen. 8.6▪ there another word Chalon, is vsed, which was some principall window which Noah opened. Iu•.

QVEST. XXI. Of the doore in the side of the Arke.

The doore shalt thou set in the side thereof.] 1. It was not in the end or the breadth of the arke, as Pereri conjectureth, but in the side: for the side of an hose is rather said to be in the length than the breadth: as in a mans bodie we call that his side, which is part of his length, the top of the head, and the foot, are the two extreme ends, not the sides of mans bodie. 2. Neither was the doore so situate, as it might be even with the waters for the beasts to come swimming unto, as Hugo thinketh: for the beasts ere all come into the arke before the waters fell. Gen. 7.6. 3. Neither was the doore five cubits from the bottome, as Pererius, but it was placed lowest of all, for the more easie entrance of the beasts, which being entred, might ascend by staires and other passages to their cabbins: and the custome of building is such, to make the doore and entrance lowest: and this doore was after closed up, to keepe out the waters: as it is said, that the Lord shut him up. Gen. 7. v. 16.

QVEST. XXII. Of the forme and fashion of the Arke.

IN a cubit shalt thou finish it above.] Concerning the forme and fashion of the Arke, it was 1. neither like unto a ship, gathered in at the bottome, and so waxing wider: for it had not beene of such capacity to receive such a multitude of creatures: and it is called Teebah; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, an Arke, a chest: whereas a ship, is called annijah, in Greeke 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉. Gen. 49.13. Chrysostome giveth another reason: non dicere potes, quod fuerit ad modum navis, ut arte quadam illius iter dirigi potuerit: you cannot say that it was like a ship, as though it should have beene guided by art. 2. Neither was it square onely in the bottom and gathered in a narrower both in length and breadth till it came to a cubit breadth in the top, as Origen. who might be deceived in the translation of the Septuagint, who read, v. 16. thou shalt make it gathering in, collegeteam: which words are not in the Hebrew. 3. Neither was it gathered in long-wayses from the bottom, till both sides touched within a cubit, as Cajetanus: 4. Nor yet did it keep square 15. cubits, and then was gathered in 15. cubits more, as Hugo: for in all there formes the capacity and rounth of the Arke within should be much lessened: neither should the Arke hold out in every part to be 300. cubits long, 50. broad, and 30. high, according to the description. 5. Neither doth Lyranus fitly expound these words, in ummitate latera non distabant, nisi per cubitum: that the sides were gathered in together in the top, being distant but a cubit: his meaning is, that in the top or ridge there should bee left a certaine plaine or square of a cubit in breadth, which were to no use at all: and againe, if hee would have the sides gathered into this cubit, before they had risen the full height of 30. cubits, the Arke should not be so spacious, if after, the Arke should farre exceed in height the measure prescribed of 30. cubits. 5. Some thinke that the Arke was gathered in the top every way like a pyramis, taper-wise: so that the very top was a cubit in length, and the sixt part of a cubit in breadth, as Buteo, Mercerus. But this is not like: for then the Arke should not hold his proportion to be 50. cubits high throughout, if it should so farre be carried small and narrow toward the top. 6. Iunius referreth this prescription of a cubit, to the eaves of the Arke, which he would have hang over an each side a cubit, for better defence from the weather. But it is more like, that the more principall part, namely, the cover and rooffe of the Arke should be prescribed what fashion to be made of, (which otherwise should bee here omitted) than the lesse principall: likewise the word, which signifieth to consummate or finish, better agreeth to the top, where the worke is finished. Like it is, that the eavings hanged over: but Moses described not every circumstance, and somewhat ought to bee left to Noahs discretion: neither can this place be fitly so applied. 6. Wherefore for the body of the Arke, Augustine well conjectureth, rectis limeis longe laeque porrectam, that it was builded upright both in length and breadth: and then the cover was so made sloping, that the ridge all the length of the Arke was but a cubit higher than the sides or eaves of the Arke, which falling or declining to the rooffe by the distance of a cubit, was sufficient to shed the water: for the whole breadth containing but 50. cubits, the ridge being just in the midst was equally distant 25. cubits from each side: so that the rooffe on each side did rise for 25. cubits in breadth, one in height, which might fully suffice for the fall of the raine.

1. Doct. Even a carnall minde is flesh.

1. Vers. 3. BEcause they are flesh.] here we learne, that not only the body but even the soule of carnall men is called flesh: quia se totos carnalibus operibus, dant: because they give them/selves wholly to carnall workes as Chrysostome saith: * and Gregory, caro quippe homo efficitur quando sensui carnis ratio subjugatur: man is become flesh, when reason is subdued to the carnall sense: for two wayes this word (flesh) is taken in scripture, as he well distinguisheth, secundum naturam, secundum culpam, according to nature, and according to the corruption of nature.

2. Doct. No free will to good by nature.

2 Vers. 5. ALL the imaginations of the thoughts of his heart, are onely evill continually.] From this place we conclude. 1. That originall concupiscence is properly sinne (which is denied by Bellarmino) because the imagination of mans heart is only evill. 3. That man hath no free will by nature to any good, seeing his thoughts are only evill. 3. That there is no good worke so perfect, but that it is blemished with mans naturall corruption: because it is said, their thoughts are continually evill, &c. all these conclusions are denied by the papists, and therefore they have devised two answers to this place: 1. That Moses useth here an hyperbolicall speech, * because mens thoughts were for the most part evill, not altogether and onely evill. 3. Hee speaketh only of the wicked, not of the righteous, for Noah is here excepted, who is said to be a just and upright man. * v. 9 This answer Bellarmino and Pererius: Contra: 1. This generall speech admitteth no exception: for by nature mens thoughts are only evill: for our Saviour saith, that which is borne of the flesh, is flesh. Iohn 3.6. and in this chapter. v. 3. they are said to be flesh: all their thoughts then by nature, were carnall and fleshly. 2. Yea even Noah and other righteous men by nature, are altogether corrupt: as S. Paul saith, we were the children of wrath by nature as well as others. Ephes. 2.3. Noah his righteousness was by grace, not by nature.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. None exactly perfect in this life.

Vers. 9. Where Noah is said to be a just, upright, or perfect man: the Pellagians doe use this and such other places, to prove that a man might attaine to an absolute perfection in this life, to be without sin: But I have shewed before, in what sense we are said to be perfect, either in respect of the wicked, because the righteous are not defiled with such grosse sins, or for that they do still increase and goe forward to perfection, as also because by faith they are cloathed with the righteousness and perfection of Christ: so before, quest. 8.

2. Confut. The capacity of the Arke, sufficient to containe all that entred.

Vers. 12. THE length of the Arke shall bee three hundred cubits. Apelles. Marcio's scholler, cavilled at this, that the Arke could not be big enough to containe so many divers kinds of beasts, being hardly able to receive foure elephants. Origen. hom. 2. in Genes. But this cavill I have answered before: quest. 14. where I shewed that the Arke was of sufficient capacity, even after the measure of the common cubit, to hold all that entred into it.

* Others tooke exception at the bignesse of the Arke: tantae magnitudinis arcam non potuisse compingi, that an Arke of such greatnesse could not be made, Augustine, lib. 15. de civitat. cap. 27. and thus Celsus objected, Orig. l. 4. contra. Cels. But Augustine answereth: 1. that they need not wonder at this, seeing such huge cities have been builded, and considering it was an hundred yeares in preparing. 2. And it need not seeme strange that so many yeares were spent in this worke: seeing Pliny writeth, that the temple of Diana at Ephe|sus was 200. yeare in building by the helpe of all Asia. * 3. It was indeed too huge a vessell to bee go|verned by the skill of man: and therefore Augustine saith, Quam nullus in mare mittat conatus hominum sed levet unda cum venerit, magisque divina providentia, quam humana pruden•ia natantem gubernet. * It was so made, that it could not by mans helpe be set aflote, but lift up by the water, to bee governed by divine providence, not humane prudence. 4. And yet Athenaeus reporteth, that Hiero King of Sicilie, caused a ship to be made of such bignesse that there went unto it as much timber, as sufficed to make 60. other ships: three hundred workmen beside labourers were employed one whole yeere in this worke: there were in it three divisions one above another, and twenty rankes of oares: it had also within it a fish-pond, wherein were great and small fish: the received report of this great galliasse, may move them not to be so incredu|lous concerning the Arke.

Vers. 10. Noah begat three sonnes, &c. Because Noah was five hundred yeare old, before he begat any children, and afterward abstained an hundred yeare, for so long it was to the floud, and begat no more children: hence Pererius inferreth, that the gift of continency is not impossible, against certaine heretikes, * as he calleth them, meaning protestants: Contra. 1. It is untrue, that we affirme this g•ft to be impossible: but we say that it is rare, neither is in every mans power to obtaine, as they teach, that any man that will, may have that gift: it followeth not, because Noah had that gift of abstinence, that all therfore are capable of it: S. Paul saith, every man hath his proper gift of god, one after this manner, another after that. 1 Cor. 7.7. it is then a proper gift to some, not common to all. 2. And though Noah was a chaste and temperate man in marriage, yet it may be doubted whether he continued so long unmarried, or did forbear so long after.

6. Places of exhortation and morall duties.

nt. 1. Vers. 2. The sons of God saw the daughters of men, that they were faire.] We see the fruits of such mar|ri•ge, as is enterprised only upon a carnall appetite, and with persons of a diverse profession, * therefore the Apostle saith, be not unequally yoked, &c.

2. Vers. 3. My spirit shall not always strive, &c.] Gods mercy appeareth, that threatneth before he puln|nisheth, that by his threatning men might learne to amend •ut nobis correctis mi•as ad opus minime perducatur: that we being amended, his menacing need take no effect, Chrysost. so the Apostle saith: despisest thou the riches of the bountifulnesse of God, &c. not knowing that the bountifulnesse of God leadeth thee to repentance, Rom. 2.4.

3. Vers. 4. There were Giants.] By this we see, that they which fall away, doe run •rom one extreme to another: as these which were in outward profession the sonnes and worshippers of God, falling away, be|came cruell and outrageous tyrants: of such the Apostle saith, that it is impossible, that they which were once lightned, if they fall away, should be renued by repentance. Heb. 6.5, 6.

4. Vers. 9. Noe was a just man in his •ime.] Though all the world, even where Noe lived, were given un|to wickednesse, yet the Lord preserved him. We learne therefore, * that although we be environed on every side, with the wicked, yet we should not doubt but that the Lord is able to preserve his: and that therefore as the Apostle saith, we should shine as lights in the world in the midst of a naughty & crooked nation. Phil. 2.15.

CHAP. VII.

1. The Method.

T His Chapter hath two parts: 1. of the entrance of Noah, and the creatures into the Arke, from v. 1. to v. 10. 2. concerning the flood.

1. God prescribeth what Noah should doe for himselfe, vers. 1. for the beasts and fowles as touching their number, of some to take seven, of some two for their kinde, male and female, vers. 3. the reason expressed, vers. 4. Then Noah sheweth his obedience in entring himselfe, vers. 6.13. and the beasts, vers. 8, 9. the creeping things and fowles shew their obedience in comming, vers. 14.15 Gods providence in shutting of them up. vers. 16.

2. First, the causes of the flood are set forth, vers. 11. secondly, the man|ner, in the time when it came, after seven dayes, vers. 10: how long it pre|vailed, forty dayes, vers. 12. how farre it exceeded, vers. 20. how long it con|tinued before it abated, that is, an 150. dayes, vers. 24. thirdly, the effects of the flood: it beareth up the Arke, vers. 17. it destroyeth all flesh beside those in the Arke, vers. 21. to 23.

2. The grammaticall or literall sense.

v. 5. yet 7. dayes. S. before 7. dayes, that is, expired. T. after 7. dayes. cater.

v. 4. I will destroy all the resurrection, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉. S. all the substance, caet. heb. te•hem, * a substance or living body, any thing that riseth from the ground.

v. 8. the seven and twenty day. S. the seventeenth day. caet. *

v. 10. and upon the seventh day. T. after seven dayes, caet.

v. 13, in this day, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, S. in articulo, in the point or article of this day. H. Ch. in the selfe sa•day. B.G.T. in the body of this day, heb. gne•sem, a body.

v. 14. every bird of every feather: wanting in the S. the rest have it.

v. 16. God shut his Arke 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, without: S. God shut him in (deforis) without. H. God protected over him. Ch. shut him in round about. * B. shut him in. G. God occlusit pro eo, shut up for him. T. bagnado, over him, heb.

The explanation of doubts or theologicall explication.

QVEST I. Why Noah prayed not for the old world, as Abraham did for Sodome.

Vers. 1. They have seene righteous before me, &c. 1. He was not onely righteous in respect of men, but before God: his righteousness was in truth. 2. Whereas before Moses added, that hee was just and upright, Gen. 2.9. the Hebrewes hence gather, because he is not here also said to bee upright, but only just, that he is commended only, because hee was not unjust and cruell towards men. But seeing it is said, he was just before God, the other addition need not: for God seeth the heart. 3. The Hebrewes doe further extenuate Noahs faith: some saying, that he thought not, that God would destroy the world, but that he threatned onely some, that Noah only prayed for himselfe, and not for the world, as Abraham did for the Sodomites: and therefore for these his oversights hee afterward offered sacrifice. But they blame Noah without cause: the reason why he prayed not, as Abraham did, for others, for that hee saw them incorrigible, and already God had given sentence, that the world should be destroyed: but when Abraham prayed for Sodome, no sentence was as yet gone forth against them. The sacrifice which Noah offered afterward, was an oblation of thanksgiving for his deliverance, not a deprecation for any such particular offence.

Mercer.

QVEST. II. Of the difference of cleane and uncleane beasts.

Vers. 2. OF every cleane beast, &c. 1. Some beasts were counted cleane, some uncleane, not simply ◊◊ respect of their nature and creation, for God saw that all things were good: neither in regard onely of mans use, because some were more fit for food than others, but chiefly by the institution of God, some were set apart for Sacrifice, and therefore were called cleane. 2. And this distinction of cleane and uncleane beasts is not inserted by Moses by way of anticipation, as though hee spake onely in respect of the times wherein hee writ: but this difference was knowne unto the Patriarkes by revelation from God, in some godly tradition delivered from one to another: as we see the use of sacrifice, the oblation of tithes, the observation of the Sabbath were practised before the law. 3. Whereas this distinction of cleane and uncleane, is not repeated in the rehearsall of the fowles, v. 3. it is not for that, as some thinke, they were not so distinguished before the law: or for some mysticall signification, that not in celestiall things, but in terrene only, this distinction holdeth of cleane and uncleane: but this distinction must bee supplied out of the former verse, which for brevity sake is omitted in the third: yet in that the fowles are sorted out by sevens, it is evident, that he meaneth only the cleane.

QVEST. III. Why the cleane are taken by sevens.

Vers. 2. Take thee seven and seven: for so are the words in the originall. 1. Not that there were of the cleane fourteene, seven of the male and female, which seemeth to have beene the opinion of Iustine and Origen,^{*} with others, because they could not see how there should be an odde, if there were but seven: but it is certaine there were but seven: three male, and three female, and the odde was for sacrifice. This is the opinion of Ambrose, Chrysostome, Augustine, with others. And this repetition, seven, seven: is not to be taken collectively, for many sevens of one kinde, but distributively for divers kinds, according to the use of the Hebrew speech. 2. Neither were the cleane taken by sevens, for any mystery in that number;^{*} as Ambrose saith, that numerus septenarius est sacer, that seven is a sacred number. But Chrysostome reproveth those that observe numbers, and saith, they doe but fabulari, & ex suo capite introducere fable, and devise such things of their owne head. But therefore the cleane were chosen by sevens, for the more plentifull breed both for mans food, and for sacrifice, and but two of the uncleane were taken, left their number might increase to the annoyance of man,^{*} as Musculus well observeth: and yet God would have the kind also of hurtfull beasts preserved, for the punishment of man. For the noysome beast is one of Gods 4. great judgements,^{*} Ezech. 14.21. 3. Whereas before, chap 6.20. the Lord saith, two of every sort shall come unto thee; but here Noah is bid to take of the cleane by sevens: the solution is easie: for there the kind and sex is expressed, that for every male there should be a female, they should come by couples: here the number is prescribed, they must be taken by sevens.

QVEST. IV. Whether Noah and his sonnes lived in abstinence in the Arke.

Vers. 7. SO Noah entred and his sonnes and his wife, &c. 1. It is but a point of curiosity to enquire how Noah and his sonnes wives were called, whether Noahs wife were named Noria, as the Gnosticks, or Barthenon, as Epiphanius, or Tytaea, as Berosus Annianus saith: and his sons wives, Pandora, Noella, and Noegla, seeing the scripture is silent herein, it were a vaine labour for us to search. 2. Where|as here Noah and his wife are not named together going into the Arke,^{*} but comming forth, they are joyned together, chap. 8.16. Come forth thou and thy wife. Ambrose thus noteth, Non commiscetur sexus in ingressu,^{} sed commiscetur in egressu, The sex is not mixed in the ingresse, but in the egresse.* Whereupon he thinketh, that Noah and his sonnes refrained the company of their wives, all the while they were in the Arke: which his opinion is most probable, though not upon this ground, but upon better reasons, which he adjoyneth in the same place; as he further saith, maroris tempus erat non laeticea, it was a time of sorrow, not of mirth. Againe, because they knew that the deluge came because of the intemperancy of the world: as also the rest of the creatures generally did forbear the act of generation, (which I rather think than with Mercerus, that the cattell ingendred in the arke) either because the place was not fit, or the seasons of the yeare were altered, it being as a continuall winter for the space of an yeare, by the coldnesse of the over-flowing water, or God so disposing their naturall inclination.

QVEST. V. Whether Noah gathered the beasts into the Arke.

Vers. 9. There came two and two to Noah, &c. 1. Neither as Philo thinketh did Noah gather the creatures together, as the shepherd his sheepe, for that had beene an infinite labour: Neither (as Hugo) did the beasts come swimming to the arke, seeking for succour from the water, for they were entred before the waters fell. But as God is said to have brought the beasts to Adam, Gen. 2.19. so the Lord caused them to come unto Noah: non fuit ista cura illius hominis, as Augustine saith, sed divina, This was not mans care but Gods.

QVEST. VI. What creatures came not into the Arke.

NEither came there of every kind of living thing, for these are excepted. 1. All that liveth in the water, either wholly, or partly in the water, partly in the land: for such creatures onely came which moved upon the earth. 2. Such creatures as come of corruption, not by generation, as flies of the water, wormes of dung, bees of bullocks flesh, hornets of horse flesh, the scorpion of the crab, or crevice, moaths of putrified herbs, and certaine small wormes of the corruption of wood and corne, &c. for those creatures onely entred, which increase by generation, Mercer. 3. Such creatures are excepted, which are of a mixt kinde and ingender by the male and female of divers kinds, as the mule which commeth of a mare and asse. Car/danus also maketh mention of a certaine beast, which he saw at Papia, of the bignes of a fox,^{*} with feet like a beare, a taile feathered like a goose, with prickles upon the backe like an hystrix or porcupine, bar|king like a dog, which appeared to be of no certaine kind, but by a mixt generation. Concerning such mixt kinds, Augustine saith well; that they needed not to be preserved in the Arke, sod ibi parentes eorum fais/se sufficeret, it might suffice their parents (that is, the severall kinds, whereof they are ingendred) to be there 4. R. Sel. because Noah is bidden to take of every living thing, Gen. 6.19. would inferre that the spirits of the aire were preserved in the Arke: but this is ridiculous,^{*} for neither are they to bee counted among these living creatures, neither are they male and female: nor yet are spirits subject to the danger of waters; and their kinde were to be wished rather to be extinguished, than preserved. 5. R. Levialso, because Noah is bidden to take of all meat that is eaten, would inferre that Noah preserved of all kinds of plants and seeds in the Arke; but that was not needfull, except onely for present food: for the seeds of herbs might by Gods providence bee preserved in the earth: as plants were kept under the water, as was the olive: ex Mercer.

Concerning the Phoenix, the question is, because there is but one of that kind, whether it were pre|served among other foules in the Arke: but I thinke it may be more worthily doubted, whether there bee any such Phoenix, or no, 1. *Plix*y saith, this bird is in Arabia. Cardanus and Scaliger in the Mediterra|nean parts of India, being called Semenda. 2. Some say, that after 500. yeares it dieth. * Pompon. Mela. lib. 3. c. 9. Ambrose: others, that it liveth 660. yeares. Plin. ibid. 3. Some, that the Phoenix having made her a neast of divers spices, intrare & emori, goeth in and dieth. Ambr. Pompon. ibid. other, that motu alarum with the flittering of her wings, she setteth the stickes on fire, and is burned to ashes. * 4. Pliny addeth out of Cornelius Valerianus, that the Phoenix was brought to Rome, and openly shewed when Ir. Plantius, and Sex. Papinius were Consuls, the 800. yeare of the City. As this may seeme to bee a fable, so also the rest. For if the Phoenix dye upon her neast, how could she be brought to Rome. 5. Some also write, that the Phoenix hath rostrum trifistulare, a bill with three pipes, * wherewith she singeth melodiously before shee dieth: sic Cardanus. But Scaliger holdeth this to bee but a fable. 6. No other like is that, which Pompon. Mela, and Pliny write, that of the ashes of the Phoenix commeth a worme, and thereof another Phoenix, which being now ready to flye, taketh the bones of the old Phoenix with the neast, and carrieth it to the City of the Sunne in Aegypt, called Heliopolis, and there layeth it upon the Altar, as it were solemnizing the funerall thereof: who seeth not how fabulous a fiction this is, devised to countenance Pagan Idolatry, and not agreeing with it selfe: for if the Phoenix bee burned to ashes, how can the bones and neast bee so carried? 7. But among the rest, this seemeth to be most unlikely, that there should never be but one Phoe|nix at once? for what species or kinde of any creature can they rehearse, whereof there is never but one; and whereas the Lord said to all his creatures, increase and multiply, this benediction should take no place in the Phoenix, which multiplieth not: and beside, seeing of all creatures there came two and two, the male and female, into the Arke, the Phoenix by this meanes should have perished, seeing there was not of this kind male and female to be preserved in the Arke. 8. But whereas Ambrose thus writeth, Phoenix cum mortua fuerit, reviviscit, solos non credimus homines resuscitari: the Phoenix being dead, reviveth, * can we think then that man only shall not be raised? Ambrose in so writing, delivereth not his opinion, but ex concessis, as we say, by the received report of the Phoenix among the heathen, out of their owne grounds he proveth the resurrection.

IT is further doubted, how the Arke could containe so many severall kinds of beasts and birds, and be|side sufficient food for them all. 1. For the divers kinds of beasts, they are reckoned not in all to bee above an hundred and fifty: whereof there are 30. kinds of serpents and other creeping things, 40. kinds of ravenous beasts, which live with flesh, which one with another exceed not the bignes|se of wolves: there are 40. more of other great beasts, which one with another in quantity may be thought to bee equi|valent to oxen: and 40. kinds beside of small beasts, which may one with another in proportion answer unto so many sheepe: the whole number maketh an 150. All these severall paires of beasts were lodged in the middle region of the Arke; which contained 400. cells or cabbins, being each in breadth 6. cubits as much in length, * and nine in height, as I have shewed before: these roomes are large enough to receive the greatest paire of beasts: or if some, as the Elephants require a large space, many of the rest might bee re|ceived in a lesse: so that there were cabbins enough twice told to place all the beasts in. 2. And if the mid|dle part of the Arke were large enough for the beasts, there is no doubt, but that the upper story being of the same bignes|se sufficed for the birds, which though they bee more diverse and variable in their kinds, yet are they of farre lesse quantity, and so might bee contented with smaller cages. 3. And whereas of the cleane beasts, there were seven taken of every sort, whereof there are ten severall kinds reckoned, Deuter. 14. beside the paires counted before, we must number five more for every sort of the cleane beasts, which will make 50. single, and 25. couples: which added to the rest, will make 175. couples▪ which if they did arise unto 200: there might be found roome enough for them all in the middle division, as before is said. 4. Now that there was capacity sufficient in the lowest region of the Arke, wherein to lay up food for the cattell, thus it may appeare. 1. Let it bee supposed, that there were about 60. paire of beasts, as great as oxen, 50. paire of the bignes of wolves, and 60. more of the like quantity unto sheep. 2. Allow to every wolfe as much food in quantity because they are ravenous, as to an ox, and to 4. sheep, as much: wee shall have as it were an 125. paire, and 250. single oxen. 3. Then admit, that all the beasts did eat of hey, which asketh a large roome to lye in, whereas other food, as of graine and such other may bee layed in a narrower compasse. 4. Then allow for every ox, 40. l. of hey in a day, as Columella doth apportion it: lib. 6. de re Rustic. c. 3.50. and 40. l. of hey will easily bee contained in the space of a solide or square cubit; so much hey then, as will serve 250. oxen in a day, will require for layer, 250. cubits: the layer then for so much hey, as will suffice a whole yeare, which consisteth of 365. dayes, will have no lesse roome, than of 85250. cubits, it commeth not to 90. thousand cubits: 5. Now take the capacity of one of the chambers, being 300. cubits in length, 50. in breadth, 9. in height, (allowing one cubit for the partition above, for otherwise it should be 10. cubits high,) and it will arise to an hundred, five and thirty thousand square cubits: for every ranke of cubits containeth 15. thousand, so much maketh the length of 300. cubits, multiplyed by the breadth of 90. this summe of 1500. being multiplyed by 9. which is the height, will produce the said number of an 135000. whereas fodder for the cattell occupieth not above 90000: ex Perer.

QVEST. VIII. Whether the ravenous beasts lived of flesh in the Arke.

Whereas it is also questioned, whether the ravenous beasts were fed with flesh according to their naturall use, while they were in the Arke. 1. Neither is it like, that all the beasts did eat of one common food: for the text saith, Genes. 6.21. take with thee of all meat that is eaten: 2. Neither is it like, as Origen thinketh (of which opinion also is Bucer) that Adam brought into the Arke a great number of cattell, * to be food for the ravenous beasts; for there came no more but two of the uncleane, and seven of the cleane. 3. Neither is it probable, that these beasts did not live of flesh, but herbs and other fruits of the earth, before the flood: as I have shewed at large: quest. 23 in 1. cap. of Genes. 4. Wherefore I approve rather Augustines resolution, to the which Mercerus subscribeth, which is to this effect: 1. that these devouring beasts, * as they doe live of flesh, so also they use to eat of the fruits of the earth. 2. That it might be revealed to Adam, what food besides flesh was convenient and apt for them. 3. That hunger will enforce beasts to eat that, which otherwise is not usuall. 4. But his best answer is, quid non suave faceret Deus, qui etiam, ut sine cibo viverent, divina facilitate donaret: What could not God make pleasant, who could have given them power to have lived without meat, much more then could God by his power dispose them to live for that time of other food than flesh.

QVEST. IX. How the yeare is to be counted wherein the flood came.

Vers. 10. SO it came to passe after seven dayes, that the flood was upon the earth in the six hundred yeare of Noahs life, in the second moneth, &c. 1. Noah went seven dayes into the Arke, before the flood came, not as the Hebrewes conjecture, to lament for the death of Mathuselah: for it is certaine that Mathuselah died the same yeare the flood came, so whether hee died seven dayes or seven weekes before it is uncertaine: but it is more like, that Noah entred before to dispose of every thing in the Arke, before it should be tossed of the waters: as also as Ambrose noteth, that the rest of the world seeing him enter, before there was yet any apparant danger, might have beene drawne to repentance. 2. Neither was the 600. yeare of Noahs age now onely begun, as Lyranus, Tostatus, with others thinke, but complete: for otherwise there should not bee

1656. yeares from the creation to the flood; neither should Noah have lived 900. and fifty yeares, whereof he lived but 350. after the flood, if hee had not beene full 600. yeare old before. 3. This second moneth, was neither the second moneth of the yeare considered a part from Noahs age, as Rupertus thinketh: for it hath a coherence with the 600. yeare of Noahs life, whereof mention is made immediatly before: neither is it to be taken for the second of Noahs 600. yeare, without respect of the season of that instant yeare as Cajetan seemeth to thinke: but it was both the second moneth of the usuall yeare, and of Noahs 600 yeare, which concurred both together, for Noah his 600. yeare was the 1656. yeare, of the age of the world from the Creation. Mercer.

QVEST. X. Whether the flood came in the Spring or Autumne.

THis second moneth some thinke to have beene in the Spring, answering to the moneth of May.

1. That it might be the more grieffe to the wicked, to be taken away from their pleasure, as our Salviour sheweth, that they were taken away in the midst of their mirth, Matth. 24.37. Luther.

2. That the flood might not be imputed to any naturall causes, but onely to the power of God, the waters increas|sing in the time of Summer, which is a season of drought, and decreasing in Winter, when as the waters naturally increase. 3. And againe, because the Dove brought the leafe of an Olive in the 11. moneth after the flood beganne; some doe gather that the flood came in the Spring, Rupertus. *

4. But better arguments than these may be produced to shew it more probable, that the flood came in the Spring: because that then the world is supposed to have taken beginning, as is before proved, Quest. 10. in 1. chap. Gen. and from the creation to the flood are reckoned 1656. even yeares. 5. The flood came in the second moneth of the yeare: now it cannot be shewed in any place of Scripture, where the moneths are accounted in order, the first, second, third, but from Nisan, which answereth to part of March, part of Aprill: Moses ordaining this moneth to be the first, Exod. 12. doth make no new institution, but reneweth the old account, which was discontinued in Egypt, by reason that the Egyptians indeed beginne their yeare from the moneth Ptho▪ which answereth to our September. And this reason, from the order and account of the moneths, I con|fesse, hath much prevailed with me, to thinke it more likely that the flood came in the Spring. 6. And if it had beene Autumne when the Cattell came forth of the Arke, when the herbs and plants doe fade, whence should they have had food till the Spring? 7.

As also, the cattell presently increasing and multiplying after their comming out of the Arke, this might seeme rather to fall into the Spring time, which is the ap|test season for the copulation and ingendring of cattell; but most especially of the fowles. Of this opini|on are most of the

Ecclesiasticall Writers, though divers of the Hebrewes hold the contrary: as Ambrose among the rest thus resolveth: Secundum mensem verni temporis fuisse non ambigitur, quando augentur na|scencia, ager parturit, &c. tunc ergo fecit diluvium, quando dolor eorum major foret, qui in abundantia punie|bantur, &c. It is not to be doubted but that the second moneth was in the Spring time, when things increase and grow, the field bringeth forth, &c. God therefore then sent the flood, when their grieffe should be the greater, to be punished in their abundance. The chiefest reason that moved Ambrosethus to thinke, was the account of the moneths, which alwayes in

Scripture are reckoned from the Spring: yea that moneth which some would have the beginning of the yeare, when the feast of blowing the Trumpets, and of Tabernacles was kept, is called the seventh moneth, Levit. 23.24.34. Of th|s opinion also is learned Mercerus, that when the second or third moneth is simply named, it must be accounted from Nisan, which is in the Spring.

QVEST. XI. What is vnderstood by the great deepe, and the windowes of heaven.

Vers. 10. The fountaines of the great deepe were broken up. 1. By the deepe here is not understood the Tartarean waters about the center of the earth, as Plato imagined: for by this meanes the waters should ascend three thousand and 500. miles (for so farre it is from the Center of the earth to superficies) which is against the nature of water. 2. Neither was the Sea this great depth, which some thinke is higher than the earth, and kept in onely by the power of God, which now was suffered to over|flow the earth: for neither is it true that the Sea is higher than the earth, as is before declared: neither doth Moses make any mention of it: which might have beene sufficient by the overflowing to have drowned the earth, if naturally it were so much above it. 3. Wherefore the fountaines of the deepe,* were the deepe heads and springs of water within the earth, which were opened and enlarged, to make this in|undation: so that the Rivers that runne in the earth were cast up, and the deepe gulph gushed forth: and these may be the waters under the earth, mentionod; Exod. 20. vers. 4.

The windowes also of heaven, signifie not the irruption or breaking forth of any waters in the Chry|stall heaven, (as it is called) above the starrie skie, as Eugubinus and Oleaster imagine: for neither are there any such wat•rs above the heavens, as hath beene before declared: and if there were, how could they passe thorow the starrie heaven without the dissolution and corruption thereof? and it would follow that the watery heaven should be now a vaca•t and emptie place, the waters being descended from thence. But the opening of the windowes of heaven, betokeneth the breaking of the clouds,* where the water is contained: that whereas at other times, The Lord bindeth the waters in the clouds, and the cloud is not broken under them, Iob 26.8. Now the Lord loosed the clouds, which being made as full of windowes powred forth all the water that was kept in them, Mercerus. Perer.

QVEST. XII. Of the causes of the flood.

THese three were the causes of the flood: 1. The issuing forth of the waters beneath out of the earth. 2. The continuall raine for forty, not onely dayes but nights together, not onely powring from the clouds, but increasing by the liquefaction and distilling of the aire into water. Seneca writing of the generall deluge, which he speaketh of, not as past, but to come, addeth unto these three other causes:

1. Crescunt maria super solitum, &c. the extraordinary swelling and overflowing of the sea. 2. Incipit terra putrescere & laxata ire in humorem: The earth also it selfe did putrifie, and resolve into water. 3. He maketh the conjunction of the celestially bodies another cause, that like as he thinketh the world shall be burned when the starres shall concur in the signe Cancer, sic, inundationem futuram cum eadem siderum iurba in Capricornum convenerit: so hee thinketh there shall bee a generall inundation when the same company of starres shall come together in the signe Capricorne: These causes may bee admitted as helping and neces|sary, though not as principall, saving that, the conjunction of the starres in Capricorne, seemeth rather to be a curious inquisition, than to depend of any certaine demonstration.

QVEST. XIII. Vpon what day Noah entred into the Arke.

Vers. 13. IN the selfe same day, &c. 1. Lyranus reading according to the latine text, in the article of that day: thinketh that the noone point of day is hereby expressed, and so also Oleaster. 2. Tosta/tus taketh it rather for the morning or twilight, which is more properly a point, parcell, or article of the day. It betokeneth nothing else, but in the same day as I shewed before in the interpretation. 3. Some Hebrewes think that this was wednesday, when they say that the Sun is strongest, that Noah might have some rest before the Sabbath, but this is too curious. 4. Some doe take this for the day before the flood, being the sixteenth of the moneth that Noah entred then, and his family before. 5. Others thinke, that Noah entred seven dayes before, according to the text, v. 1. Enter thou into the Arke. &c. v. 4. for seven dayes hence I will cause it to raine. v. 7. so Noah entred, &c. v. 10. and so after seven dayes, &c. And thus Ambrose expoundeth: * so that here by way of recapitulation, mention is made of the entring of Noah: and Iunius to make the sense more full, readeth thus: In the same day when Noah was entred, &c. v. 13. &c. God shut him in. v. 16. He maketh the 13, 14, 15. verses to depend upon that clause, in the 16. verse, where|by is shewed how the providence of God watched over Noah and the rest, when they were entred, so shutting them up that the waters could not enter. 6. But Iunius inserteth one word, v. 13. which is not in the Hebrew, * quum ingressus esset, when he was entred (when) is added: so that according to the true reading; the selfe same day Noah entred, &c. it is evident, that Noah with his sonnes entred the same day, wherein the raine began to fall: God so providing that against that day all kind of cattell and fowles were pre|sent to enter with him. And whereas Noah is bid to enter, v. 1. before the seven dayes, that is to bee un|derstood of the preparing and making all things ready for his entrance: Mercerus. Now whereas Iunius thinketh, that in the very seventh day the flood came, and so readeth, v. 10. I thinke rather, that the se|ven dayes were fully expired, and that upon the 8. day, it began to raine: because the text is, that after seven dayes the waters were upon the earth. Mercer.

QVEST. XIII. How Noah was shut up.

Vers. 16. GOd shut him up, &c. 1. Not that after Noah was come into the Arke, and his sonnes with their wives, and the rest of the creatures: God by the ministry of the Angels did shut the doore without, and pitched it up: occlusit pro eo; God shut it up for him, as Tremelius and Cajetanus read: that is, whereas Noah being within, could not shut up the doore without God did it for him: for as Noah opened the doore at his going out, so it is like he shut it at his going in: but hereby •s signified, that what was wanting in Noahs labour, was supplied by Gods providence, and that it was Gods worke to preserve Noah in the Arke. Mercer. 2. And this was done not so much to keepe him from the sight of the destructi|on of the world, which might have ministred grieffe unto him, as Chrysostome collecteth, for there was a window, out of the which hee might behold that fearefull spectacle, but to keepe himselfe from the vio|lence and rage of the waters, as also from the rage of men. Mercer.

QVEST. XIV. The 150. dayes must be reckoned from the beginning of the flood, whereof the 40. dayes are a part.

Vers. 24. THE waters prevailed an 150. dayes.] This terme must not be counted from the end of 40. dayes: mentioned v. 12. all which time the raine continued, as Tostatus and Cajetanus thinke: but from the beginning rather including the 40. dayes: which seemeth to be the opinion of Ambrose: (and here unto assent Musculus and Tremelius) lib. de Noah & arc. 17. and it may thus appeare: Genes. 8.4. it is said that in the 7. moneth, the 17. day, the Arke rested upon the mountaines of Armenia, which was after the end of the 150. dayes, when the waters began to abate: v. 3. but if the 150. dayes bee added to 40. which make in all an 190. the waters should not abate till the 27. day of the 8. moneth: for from the 17. day of the second moneth, when the forty dayes must take beginning, to the 17. day of the 7. moneth are but five moneths, that is dayes 150. (counting 30. dayes to a moneth) whereas, putting, 40. and 150. dayes together, wee shall have 190. before the waters should begin to abate, which is contrary to the text: now whereas the Septuagint read the water 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 was exalted an 150. dayes, and Chrysostome saith, tot dies mansit sublimis illa aquarum altitudo, the height of the waters continued so long: unlesse they meane indifferently of the rising and increase of the water upon any part of the earth, which began at the first when the raine fell within the 40. dayes, it cannot bee agreeable to the text: for the waters increased by three degrees, first the Arke was lift up above the waters, v. 17. then it floted and went upon the waters, v. 18. then the waters prevailed so much: that the highest hills were covered, v. 20. this increasing, prevailing, and continuing of the water, was but an 150. dayes, from the first to the last; Mercer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. The flood not caused by any constellation.

1. Vers. 4. I Will cause it to raine upon the earth.] This raine then was not caused onely or chiefly by ordinary and naturall causes, as by the constellation of the starres, which was foreseene by Noah: which seemeth to have beene the opinion of Henricus Mechliniens. and Petrus ab Aliaco, and Gulielmus Parisiensis, cited by Pererius: Seneca also ascribeth inundations to a fatall necessity: and when the great deluge shall be, which (hee beleevd was to come) hee saith the starres shall concurre together in Capricorne: But it is evident, that this flood was caused, not by naturall and ordinary meanes, but by the extraordinary power of God: 1. The Lord saith, I will bring a flood of waters, Gen. 6.7. The fountaines of the deep, and the windowes of heaven were opened. This sheweth that it was Gods speciall worke by the ministry of his Angels, that the heavens rained, the earth gave up water after an extraordinary manner. 2. The sinnes of that age were the cause of this destruction, Gen. 6.13. It was then their iniquity, not any fatall necessity, that procured that judgement. 3. And seeing God made all things in wisdom and order, hee framed the world, that one part should concurre for the preservation of another, not to their destruction. 4. No constellation of starres can have a generall operation over the whole earth, but only in that place where their influence worketh: and when they are moved, they cease working. As Seneca rendreth this reason of the increase of some rivers in Summer, Quarta ratio est syderum, hac enim quibusdam mensibus magis urgent & exhauriunt flumina, cum longius recesserunt minus consumunt, &c. The fourth reason is in the starres, which in some moneths doe more worke vpon rivers, but when they are gone farther off, they have not that force. Constellations then may exercise their strength upon some speciall rivers and places, but not universally upon the whole earth.

2. Doct. The highest mountaines in the world covered with the waters of the flood.

Vers. 19. ALL the high mountaines that were under the whole heavens were covered. They then are confuted, which thinke that some high hills, as Olympus, were not overflowne: whom Augustine refelleth. lib. 15. de civitat. c. 27. and Cajetanus, who would have the mountaine of Paradise to bee excepted from this inundation. 1. The words are generall, all high mountaines, under (not the airie heaven only, as Cajetan collecteth, but the whole heaven) were covered: yea the high mountaines were surprised: whether Athos in Macedonia, which cast his shadow unto the Towne Myrinum in Lemnos, the space of 86. miles, or Atlas, whose top is higher than the clouds: or Olympus, which Zinagoras by Mathematicall instruments found to be ten stadia, or furlongs high: Or the mount Tabor, which riseth up 30. furlongs, as Iosephus writeth, or Caucasus whose top is said to be lightned with the Sunne, when day-light is shut in below. All these high mountaines were covered with waters. 2. Augustine thus reasoneth, Non attendunt omnia elementorum crassissimam terram ibi esse potuisse, &c. They consider not that the earth the heaviest of all elements, is in the top of these high hills. It need not seeme strange then, that the waters might ascend thither. 3. Where doth Cajetan find that Paradise was situate upon an hill? nay the contrary is gathered out of Scripture, for out of Eden went a river to water the garden. Gen. 2.10. But rivers use not to run upon hills. And Cajetan needed not to feare the drowning of Paradise because of Henoch: for he was with God taken up into Heaven, where the flood could not reach him. 4. Of the like conceit with Cajetan is Bellarmino, who thinketh that all the mountaines were not overflowen, but these onely where the wicked dwelt. And Iosephus reporteth out of Nicholaus Damascenus,* that there is a certaine hill in Armenia called Baris, in quo multos profugos diluvii tempore servatos ferunt, wherein they say, many flying thither for succour in the time of the flood were preserved. But these dreames and devices are overthrowne by the evident words of Scripture, that all high mountaines under heaven were covered with the waters. 5. Likewise that fabulous dreame of some Hebrewes is here refelled, who imagine that beside Noah and the rest of the eight persons, Og King of Basan, who lived till *Mose*stime, one of those Giants before the flood might bee preserved; for beside, that none after the flood lived so long, where should Og have beene kept in the flood? seeing the mountaines were covered fiftene cubits high, which exceeded the stature of any Giant. For the Hebrewes doe but fable, supposing those Giants to have beene an hundred cubits high. Neither is that report out of Pliny much to bee credited, of a Gyants body found in Crete of 46. cubits,* 6. Further, Ab. Extra confuteth the opinion of some in his dayes, that held this deluge not to have beene universall: for although it may bee all the world was not inhabited before the flood, but only the East parts, because they wanted the invention of ships to transport them from place to place (for Noah was the first that used a ship) yet it is without doubt that the whole earth was overflowne, seeing the highest hills were so farre under the water. Mercer.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. The generall flood past, and not to come.

First out of this Chapter, wherein the manner of the flood, the beginning thereof and continuance is set downe, the error of Seneca is refelled, who dreamed of two destructions of the world, to come, by fire and water: he did not beleve that the universall flood was past, sed inundationem futuram, that it was yet to come.

2. Confut. All perished not in the flood.

AGaine in that inundation, he imagined that all mankind, and beasts, should utterly be extinguished: for thus he writeth: Peracto exitio generis humani, extinctisque pariter feris, &c. omne ex integro animal gloriabitur, dabiturque terris homo inscius scelerum: the destruction of mankind being finished, and all beasts perished: every creature shall be renewed, and man restored to the earth without sinne*: But these fancies are refuted by Moses, who sheweth how man and beast in the Arke were preserved.

3. Confut. The fish perished not in the flood.

Vers. 32. EVERie thing in whose nostrells the spirit of life did breath.] By this that fancie of some of the Rabbines is confuted, who thinke that the fish also were destroyed by the waters, which they suppose to have beene hot in the flood: for onely those things perished which breathed upon the drie land: sic Vatablus in hunc locum.

4. Confut. The truth of Noahs flood, proved by testimony of the heathen.

Vers. 20. Fifteene cubits upward.] From hence some would gather that the flood did ascend to the middle region of the Arke: for it was higher than the mountaines, whose toppes doe touch the middle region, and sometime are above the clouds: as they gave instance of the hill Olympus, which is so high, that the ashes left of the sacrifices, are neither dispersed by the wind, nor dissolved by the raine: if then the flood was higher than that place where the raine is engendred, the waters could not increase so high by the raine: and thus they would impaire the credit of this storie, and consequently inferre, that there was no such flood.

Answ. 1. That report of Olympus is found to be untrue: as Lodovicus Vives affirmeth by the testimony of Philadelphius,* who went up to the hill, of purpose to try the truth of the report, but found no such thing. 2. No mountaine can bee so high as the middle region, which is distant 50. mile from the earth, whereas no hill exceedeth 4. mile in height: 3. Solinus reporteth, that in the top of the mountaine Atho, there was a towne situate, and divers inhabited there which lived halfe againe so long, as other men did: it seemeth then to have beene a most wholesome place for aire: then was it not in the middle region, which is full of clouds and foggy mists, and beside they affirme, that the top of the hill Atlas is alwayes covered with snow, then it will follow that the snow is not there engendred. 4. Though it bee granted, that the flood might rise to the neather and lowest part of the middle region, yet the upper part thereof was farre remote, from whence raine might be ministred abundantly. 5. Lastly, this universall inundation of the world wanteth not testimony from the heathen: as Iosephus alleageth out of Berosus, Hieronymus,* (which writ the antiquities of the Phenicians) Muaseas, and Nicolaus Damascenus, who writeth of one that was carried in an Arke, and did sticke in the mountaine Baris in Armenia: Eusebius reporteth out of Abidenus, how one Sissithras escaped in a ship to Armenia, being foretold of a great inundation by Sa/turne, and how by sending out of birds hee searched whether the earth were dry. Pererius in his learned commentaries citeth, beside Cyrillus who alleageth Alexander Polihistor for the same, and Plato in Tima•: Plutarch also maketh mention,* how Deucalion sent a dove out of the Arke: Pompon Melae, Plinius, Solinus, writ that Joppe was thought to be the most ancient City in the world, and to have beene before the flood: which must be understood of the generall flood in the time of Noah: for Ogyges flood was only in Attica, and Deucalions in Thessalia; which came not neere Palestina where Joppe was; and many Cities in the world were more ancient than those floods:* that of Ogyges being 500. yeares and more after Noahs flood, about the 90. yeare of Iacobs age: the other of Deucalion 230. after that, about the 50. yeare of Moses age, as Pererius sheweth out of Eusebius, and Orosius: thus the heathen were not ignorant of this great judgement of water upon the world: but they obscured the truth with their fables, giving oth• names unto Noah, as of Sissitheus, Ogyges, Deucalion. &c.

Vers. 21. And every man perished.] Like as from this generall proposition, some were excepted, as Noah, and the rest,* which were with him: so notwithstanding, all high mountaines are said to bee covered with the waters, v. 19. yet some may bee excepted, they only are mentioned, where the wicked inhabited: sic Bellarm. de gratia primi hominis, c. 14.

Contra. The comparison is not alike, betweene these two generall propositions: for from the first, Noah, and his company are by speciall words exempted, v. 23. Noah only remained, and they that were with him in the Arke: but no such thing concerning the hills is expressed in Scripture, that any of them were privile|ged from the waters.

* 6. v. 2. Of uncleane beasts thou shalt take of by couples.] From these words the Canon doth conclude most corruptly: Non esse bonum duplicem numerum, qui praefigurat foedera nuptiarum▪ &c. that a double number is not good, whereby marriage is prefigured: whereupon all the beasts that enter by two and two are un|cleane, impar numerus est mundus, the odd number is cleane.

Contra. 1. But the cleane and uncleane entred by couples: v. 8. of the cleane and uncleane, there came two and two: therefore this is a false note. 2. The uncleane are not such, because of their number, but for their kind. 3. By this rule, Noah and his sonnes should have beene uncleane, that went into the Arke by couples, namely with their wives.

6. Places of Morall observations.

* 1. Vers. 3. TO keepe seed alive upon the earth.] Hence Calvin noteth well, that God tempereth the afflictions of his servants with comfort: as here Noah, the destruction of the world being at hand, is put in hope, that it shall bee restored againe: so as the Prophet saith, thy rod and thy staffe doe comfort mee, as God correcteth with the rod of affliction, so hee upholdeth his, with the staffe of consolation.

2 v. 9. There came two and two, male and female.] By this, that to one male there is but one female pre|served both of man and beast, wee see the right use of marriage approved, * and Polygamy the marriage of more than one at once, condemned. sic Muscul. in hunc locum.

3. v. 10. After seven dayes, * &c. v. 12. And the raine was upon the earth forty dayes, &c. But these shew the Lords longanimity and patience: for Noah is warned seven dayes before of the floud comming, that by his preparation and entrance others might be warned. Oecolamp. and whereas God might have destroyed the world at once with water, it was increasing forty dayes, that the world seeing every day some perish, might at length have turned to God. Chrysost.

4. v. 16. The Lord shut him in.] God first provideth for Noah, before the wicked are destroyed: * so L•t was brought out of Sodome, before the City was consumed: sic Muscul. Mercer.

5. vers. 24. The waters prevailed an 150. dayes. Thus Noah continued in this desolate and darke place above an whole yeare: but God was his light and comfort. Thus God is able to sustaine his Elect, though they be shut up in the most darke and deepe dungeons: as a light did shine in prison, where Pe|ter lay bound at midnight, Act. 12.7. according to the Psalme, to the righteous ariseth a light in darknesse, Psal. 112.4.

CHAP. VIII.

I. The Method.

T

His Chapter hath two parts: 1. Of the ceasing of the floud, to v. 15. 2. of Noahs going forth, and such things as accompanied the same.

1. Here is set forth. 1. The causes of the ceasing of the floud from v. 1. to v. 7. 2. The manner how, and by what degrees the earth was dried.

The causes are the principall, the mercy of God in remembring Noah, v. 1.

The secondary meanes helping, the winde that God sent, v. 1. the letting causes, the raine and fountaines were staid, v. 2.

The manner of the ceasing of the floud, and drying of the earth is set forth, first generally, after an 150. dayes, v. 3. then particularly, to v. 15. by foure degrees declared with their severall seasons. 1. In the sel|venth moneth and 17. day the Arke rested, &c. v. 4. 2. In the tenth moneth the tops of the mountaines were seene, v. 5. 3. Then the waters were abated, v. 11. Noah to know it, once sendeth the raven after 40. dayes, v. 6. and thrice the dove, once seven dayes after the ra•en. v. 8. then seven dayes after, v. 10. and other seven dayes after that, v. 12. 4. Then the earth was dried, first in the upper part only, in the first day of the 1. moneth, v. 13. then it was perfectly dry in the 2. moneth, and twenty seven day.

2. In the second part we have, 1. Gods commandement for Noahs going forth, v. 15, 16, 17. 2. Noahs obe|dience, v. 18, 19. 3. His thankfulnesse in sacrificing to God, v. 20. Gods acceptance, v.

21. with his promise not to destroy the earth againe, v. 21. and his benediction, in restoring the state of things againe, v. 22.

2. The literall or grammaticall interpretation.

v. 3. the water abated going from the earth, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . S. the waters returned from the earth, going and coming. Ch. H.B.G.P. they went from the face of the earth, continenter recedendo, continually going away. * T. going and returning: haloch, vashub.

v. 4. the seven and twenty day. S. H. the seventeenth: caet. upon the mountaines of Armenia. H. G. B. the mountaines Cardu, Ch. upon the mountaines of Ararat. * P. H. upon one of the mountaines of Ararat. Tr.

v. 7. he sent out a raven, to see if the waters were abated. S. the rest have not these words: * and going forth hee returned not. S. which went and came: caet.

v. 10. waiting yet seven dayes. S. seven other dayes: caet.

v. 11. an olive leafe, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , with a dry stalke. S. a branch of an olive with greene leaves. H. an olive leafe, de|cerptum, pulled off in her mouth. T.B.G.C.P. taraph. plucked, pulled, in the evening: all read but the Sept.

v. 12. in the six hundred and one yeare, &c. in the life of Noe: this is added by the S. the cover of the Arke which he had made: these words likewise added, which the other have not.

v. 14. the seventeenth day. S. the seven and twenty: caet. the seven and twenty day he opened the Arke: added by the Sept.

v. 6. thou and thy sonnes, thy wife, and thy sonnes wives. S. thou and thy wife, thy sonnes and their wives.

v. 17. ingredimini, goe upon the earth. H. P. fill the earth, or ingender abundantly, or breed in the earth: caet. shara•se, to bring forth in multitude to creepe, to move.

v. 19. according to their kinds. H.B.G. their generations. Ch. families. T. P. mishphacah: family. H. this is wanting in the S.

v. 21. the Lord smelled a sweet savour. S. H. B. God accepted his offering. Ch. a savour of rest. * G. P. gratum odorem, an acceptable or pleasing savour. T. noach: rest: according to Noahs name.

God said, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , bethinking himselfe. S. said to him. H. said in his word. C. said in his heart. caet. *

because of mens workes. S. mens sinnes. Ch. because of man: caet. the cogitation of man is diligently bent to evill. * S. prone to evill. H. is evill from his infancy: c•t. rough, evill, Pl. v. 22. sommer and the spring. S. sommer and winter: caet. choreph: winter.

3. The explanation of doubts.

QVEST. I. How God is said to have remembred Noah.

Vers. 1. GOd remembred &c. not that there is oblivion or forgetfulnesse with God, but then God is said to remember, when he sheweth by the effects that he hath care of man: so God is said to remember mans sins, when he punisheth them, Mercer: as the widowe said to the prophet, art thou come to call my sinne to remembrance, and to slay my sonne? 1. King. 17.20. 2. God also remembreth the cattell: wherein Moses is not contrarie to Paul: doth God take care for oxen? 1. Cor. 9. where the Apostle denieth not that Gods providence watcheth over cattell, but that his care toward man is greater, and that he careth for beasts, for mans cause. 3. So then as the cattell perished in the flood together with the wic[k]ed, so they are preserved for the righteous sake. 4. Some of the Hebrewes thinke that God is said to remember the beasts, not the fowles, because they were not made the same day with man: but the reason is, because Moses having made so often mention of the birds, that were likewise preserved in the Arke, as Gen. 6.20. Gen. 7.3.14. needed not to speake of them here. 5. R. Sel. noteth, that God remembred the beasts, because they did not couple together in the Arke. I will not answer with Mercerus, that the beasts engendred in the Arke, both that they might be for sacrifice and for food afterward: for there were enough beside for sacrifice, seeing seven of the cleane entred into the Arke: and concerning food, they might for a while forbear the eating of flesh, till the creatures were increased: but if both cleane and uncleane beasts should have engendred in the Arke, neither would the Arke have contained them, nor the food by Noah provided have sufficed them. We answer then, that God remembred them, not for any such thing, but for mans cause.

QVEST. II. What manner of wind it was that God sent.

GOd made a spirit or wind to passe. 1. which was not the spirit of consolation, wherewith Noah was comforted, ^{*}Rasi. 2. Nor yet the holy Ghost, as Ambrose and Theodore suppose, Ambrose reason is, quomodo non evacuaetur mare ventorum vi: if it were then wind that dried up the flood, much more is it able to dry up and empty the sea: but this followeth not, because this was an extraordinary wind, not such as usually bloweth in the sea. Theodore saith further, non solent ventis aquae imminui, sed potius turbari, &c. the wind useth to trouble the water, not to dry it up: so did this wind cause the water to goe and come, but it had also a drying faculty, otherwise than ordinary winds have. 2. Neither was this wind the spirit and heat of the Sunne, ^{*} as Rupertus thinketh: but this was extraordinary caused, whereas the Sun kept his ordinary course still. 3. It was then a wind indeed, that was raised by the extraordinary power of God: for by exhalation out of the earth, (whereof winds are usually ingendred,) it being covered with waters, this wind was not caused: and God gave it also an extraordinary power, both to dry the waters, by rossing them to and fro, and to force them by going and comming, (as the property of the water is to ebbe and flow,) to their proper place, into the deepe fountaines from whence they came. And these two properties the Scripture ascribeth to the wind: 1. to force the waters, as in the division of the red sea, and to purge the ayre, to disperse the clouds, and dry up moysture. Prov. 25.23. as the North wind driveth away the raine. Perer.

QVEST. III. When the fountaines began to be stopped, and the raine to cease.

Vers. 2. THE fountaines of the deepe were stopped, &c. The raine ceased, and the current of the water was stopped immediatly after the forty dayes, as Augustine thinketh: 2. not after the 150. dayes spoken of before, as Oleaster imagineth: for then the waters had not continued in their height any time at all, but should presently have begun to decrease, for after the 150. daies they began to abate: and Moses saith, that the raine was upon the earth forty daies, and forty nights, chap. 7.21. then not an 150. daies and nights. 3. Wherefore I rather approve the opinion of some other Hebrewes, that it ceased to raine at all, after the forty dayes expired, then of Aben Ezra, to whom Mercerus seemeth to subscribe, that it rained though not continually, an 110. dayes, after the 40. dayes, that is in all, 150. dayes. 4. R. S^l. noteth, that where it is said, all the fountaines of the deep were stopped, not all the fountaines, as before it is said, all the fountaines, &c. were opened: that some fountaines remained unstopped for the procreation and sending forth of rivers and springs: so also Iun. But it is more like that all the fountaines which were extraordinarily opened to augment the flood, were stopped: the ordinary springs of water continued still, as before the flood.

QVEST. IV. How the seven moneth is to be counted.

Vers. 4. IN the seventh moneth, the seventh day, &c. 1. Whereas the Latine text and the Septuagint read for the seventeenth day, * the seven and twenty day; which reading is received of the popish in|terpreters, that are addicted to their vulgar latine text, and hereupon some of them reckon from the begin|ning of the flood seven moneths, that is, 207. dayes (counting twenty nine dayes and a halfe to a moneth,) whereof the flood continued one hundred ninety, and so there should be seventene daies betweene the bel|ginning of the waters to abate, & the resting of the Arke: sic Tostatus. Others beginning their reckoning from the beginning of the flood, till the waters abated, which make five moneths, and two dayes and a halfe, (accounting but twenty nine dayes and a halfe to a moneth,) and hereunto they put eight dayes more (which was the space between the abating of the water, and the resting of the Arke) which added to the two dayes, make up those ten, which the latin hath more than the Hebrew: sic Lyranus, Pererius. But wee refuse all these collections, which goe about to justifie the vulgar latin against the originall veri•y wherein S. Augustine giveth us a good rule: * ei lingua potius credatur unde est in aliā per interpretes facta tran|slatio: that tongue is rather to be credited, out of the which the interpreters have translated into another.

2. Receiving then the Hebrew text, that the Arke rested upon the 17. not the 27. day of the 7. moneth yet we refuse the opinion of Cajetan, who therein followeth R. Sel. that would have this moneth the se|venth from the beginning of the flood, not the seventh of the yeare: and the reason is, because hee maketh not the 40. dayes of the raine, part of the 150. dayes, as it is to be truly taken, as is shewed before, cap. 7. quest. 14. but he putteth them together, making of them both 190. dayes; which is the space of six mo|neths and sixteene dayes (counting but 29. dayes to a moneth) so that upon the 191. day after the begin|ning of the flood, which is the 17. of the 7. moneth of the flood, the Arke rested, &c. But this account can|not stand, to make this seventh moneth, the seventh from the beginning of the flood, not from the begin|ning of the yeare: seeing both the second moneth, chap. 7.11. and the tenth moneth, chap. 8.5. must of ne|cessity be referred to the yeare, not to the continuance of the flood. And this were to breed a confusion, in the story, to take some moneths according to the season of the yeare, and some according to the time of the flood: for seeing the moneths both before and after, are numbred according to the course of the yeare, there is no reason to understand the seventh moneth otherwise.

3. Neither doe we approve Lyranus conceit, that whereas hee maketh the 150. dayes to determine the 19. of the seventh moneth, after which time the waters began to decrease, he would have the Arke to rest upon the 17. day according to the text: but how is it like, that the Arke should rest, before the waters bel|gan to abate without a miracle?

4. Neither can I condescend to Mercerus judgement, wherein hee followeth a certaine Hebrew in his booke of the binding of Isaack: that the waters began to decrease before the 150. dayes expired; though the decrease was not so sensible as afterward: and so the waters might abate so much by the end of the 150. dayes, as that the Arke might well be staid from floting: but the text favoureth not this collection, which saith, that the waters prevailed an 150. dayes: but when they abated, they prevailed not: and againe, v. 3. after the end of 150. dayes the waters abated, Ergo, not before.

5. Wherefore we tooke this seventh moneth according to the order of the yeare being the sixt in num|ber from the second moneth wherein the flood began, and making in all but five compleat moneths, that is an 150. dayes from the 17. of the second, to the 17. of the seventh: so that wee make the 40. dayes of continuall raine to be a parcell of the 150. dayes mentioned chap. 7.24. All which time the waters prevail|led: so then upon the same day, the 151. from the beginning of the flood, which was the 17. of the se|venth, the waters abated, and the Arke rested upon the mountaines of Armenia: this exposition best agree|eth with the text: and thus Tremeliu• and Musculus doe truly expound.

But two objections are made, 1. saith Pererius, by this exposition the Arke shall rest the very first day of the abating of the waters, which is not like, seeing that it was above two moneths after, (the 1. day of the 10. moneth) when the tops of the mountaines appeared: thus also objecteth Mercerus. Answer 1, This doubt is easily removed, 1. seeing that the waters exceeded not the highest mountaines above 15. cubits: and the Arke might draw at the least a 11. cubits of water, as R. Sel. thinketh, so that the bottom of the Arke was but 4. cubits above the tops of the high mountaines: it is not unlikely but that the wa|ters might abate 4. cubits in depth the first day, that the Arke might well touch the tops of those high mountaines: which may very well be supposed to be the highest of the rest, because the Arke first touched there. 2. And that this great abatement the first day may seeme probable, let it bee considered, that in the sp•ce of an 160. and odde dayes from the 17. of the 7. moneth, to the 1. of the first moneth in the 601. yeare, v. 13. the very lowest parts of the earth were dried. Now the highest hils are thought to be 3. miles at the least higher than the low places, (as mount Tabor is 30. furlongs high) that is, 3000. yards,* which maketh 6000. cubits the eight part of that number, the eight part of the height of water must abate, which is 750. cubits: that is every day 37. cubits and an halfe, or thereabout: Now be it admitted, that every day the waters were not wasted alike: for the higher the water, and the greater the compasse or circumference, the smaller was the abatement, yet according to this proportion, the waters might very well sinke so much the first day, that the Arke might well be stayed upon the high mountaines of Ararat, or Armenia.

3. And if we say that these mountaines, whose tops appeared the first day of the 10. moneth, were the lower and inferiour hils, as some Hebrewes thinke, whom Mercer. followeth: then there remaineth no doubt at all: but that there might be the space of two moneths betweene the appearing of the tops of the highest, and of the lowest hils.

QVEST. V. How many dayes are to be counted to a moneth.

SEcondly, it is objected, seeing an 150. dayes make five moneths, and two dayes with an halfe (recko|ning 29. dayes and an halfe after the computation of Hebrewes to a moneth) it will be found that the Arke rested two dayes and an halfe before the waters began to abate, which was not till an 150. dayes ex|pired: but this is not like.

Answ. 1. We are not forced here, to adde ten dayes more, as the latine text, for 17. readeth 27. which is a corrupting of the Scripture. 2. Neither need wee say as some, that the waters did abate indeed before the 150. dayes expired, but that abatement was not sensible, evident, or apparant, and therefore it is not accounted of: for this were to contradict the text, which saith, after the end of the 150. dayes the waters abated: Ergo, not before: and beside, seeing the Arke rested and stayed at the very first abate|ment upon the mountaine, how was it not apparant and sensible?

3. Neither for the solution of this doubt, are we driven to take this seventh moneth according to the tearme of the flood, and not after the order of the yeare; which were to confound the storie, as is before shewed.

4. But our answer is, that a moneth here is neither taken for the space of 29. dayes, as Cajetane, nor of 29. and a halfe, as Pererius affirmeth, but for thirty dayes complete, Iunius: and so shall we have an 150. dayes just, from the second to the seventeenth of the seventh moneth: for unlesse this be admitted, we shall neither find a sufficient answer to this objection propounded, all those other conjectures being too weake. And beside, unlesse the Hebrewes should account 30. dayes to a moneth, and rather more, their yeares consisting of twelve moneths, should be very imperfect: for whereas a yeare according to the course of the Sunne containeth 365. dayes: if there be but 30. dayes in a moneth, there will be but 360. dayes: if but 29. dayes and an halfe, there will be but 354. so that by this reckoning the Hebrewes yeare should want 11. dayes, of a perfect yeare, which would worke a great confusion in the computation of yeares, and is not to be admitted.

QVEST. VI. What mountaine the Arke rested upon.

The Arke rested upon the mountaines of Ararat, &c. Some thinke that the Arke rested upon the mountaine Taurus, from whence commeth the River Araxis, which some understand hereby Ararath, and upon that part of Taurus which hangeth over Cilicia: and the rather, for that the City Tarsus is there situate, which seemeth to be derived of the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which signifieth to drie, because that part and tract of Cilicia, was soonest dried after the flood, Perer.

But the Chalde Paraphrast calleth that part of Armenia where the Arke rested, Kardu: Curtius Cor/daeos, the Cordeans, or Gordians, as Ptolomie: where is one hill higher than the rest, not called Baris, as Iosephus alleageth out of Nicholaus Damascenus, which Iunius out of Epiphanius sheweth must be read, Lubaris, which in the Armenian tongue signifieth a place of descending: because there was the place where Noah first descended out of the Arke: and this is most probable. But whether part of the Arke remained so long time after, as Iosephus, Berosus, Hieronimus, say it continued till their time, it is uncertaine, Marlorat.

QVEST. VII. How the tenth moneth is to be accounted.

Vers. 5. The waters were going and decreasing till the tenth moneth, &c. This cannot be the tenth moneth from the beginning of the flood, as Cajetane thinketh: for seeing there was one moneth, and 16. dayes of the second moneth past before the flood came: by this reckoning this first day of the tenth moneth, when the tops of the mountaines began to appeare should be the seventeenth day of the eleventh moneth: which cannot be, seeing after this, Moses accounteth 40. dayes. vers. 6. and thrice seven dayes, according to the thrice sending of the Dove, vers. 10. 12. which are in all sixty dayes, which make two moneths before the beginning of the six hundred and one yeare, vers. 14. But there should onely remaine after Cajetanes computation a moneth and a halfe, about forty five dayes. Wherefore this tenth moneth is to be accounted from the beginning of the yeare, and not of the flood.

QVEST. VIII. How much water the Arke drew.

Concerning the depth of water, which the Arke is supposed to have drawne. 1. I neither thinke that it went so small a depth in water, not above two or three cubits, as Ramban, whom Mercerus followeth: for the burthen of the ship was great, and must cause it to sinke downe deeper: neither need wee feare with Ramban, if the water tooke up the third part of the Arke, it being a flat bottomed vessell, lest it might have beene drowned: for who knoweth not, but that such vessels may bee loaden within a third part of the brimme, and yet not sinke. 2. Hugo thinketh it drew nine cubits, wherein he followeth Rasi, another Rabbin. 3. Lyranus maketh it to draw thirteene cubits, but that is too much: for the Arke floating but two cubits from the tops of the mountaines, might be in danger of dashing against the ground. 4. I subscribe rather to R. Sel. that the Arke did sinke an eleven cubits: so that it was lifted up foure cubits from the tops of the hills, which was a sufficient distance.

QVEST. IX. Whether all the dayes of the yeare of the flood are summed by Moses.

Vers. 6. After the end of 40. dayes, &c. Cajetan thinketh, that all the dayes of this yeare, wherein the flood prevailed, are numbred by Moses: as first 46. dayes before the flood came: 40. dayes, wherein the raine fell: 150. dayes, while the waters prevailed: then 70. dayes from the 17. of the seventh moneth, to the first of the tenth moneth: then 40. dayes here mentioned: and lastly, 14. dayes spoken of, vers. 10.12. when the Dove was twice sent forth: which in all make 300. dayes: for in the yeare of the flood, there were just so many dayes: and whereas there is in every yeare, five dayes and a quarter above that number, of ancient time they used to every sixt yeare to put in mensem intercallarem, an odde moneth to make up the number: sic Cajetanus. First Cajetane erreth in the reckoning of the dayes: 1. The forty dayes wherein the raine fell, are part of the 150. dayes, wherein the water prevailed, as I have shewed before: 2. after the forty dayes mentioned, chap. 8.6. there are not twice but thrice seven dayes to be accounted, according to the thrice sending of the Dove, as it may appeare, * vers: 10. Secondly, concerning the Hebrew computation, for the dayes of the yeare, whereas the Egyptians Gre|cians, and Romans, used three divers accounts for the dayes and moneths: for the first, in the end of the yeare beside the twelve moneths added five dayes, and every fourth yeare they put in a day more, as we use to doe in our leape yeare, as witnesseth Macrobius: the Greekes counted precisely but 360. dayes to a yeare, but then they every third yeare put in a moneth, as Herodotus testifieth: the Romans so divided the moneths of the yeare, giving to some 31. dayes, that they together made up the whole number of 365. dayes, it is most like, that the Hebrewes followed the ancient Calender of the Egyptians, making their yeare even with the course of the Sunne, saving that they had also their leape yeare, and so doth Moses here: and thus thinketh Aben Ezra, though other Hebrewes are of opinion, that there are ten dayes above a yeare added, to make it equall with the course of the Sunne. Wherefore he numbred not all the dayes of the yeare, (for from the first of the tenth moneth, to the first of the first moneth of the next yeare, are 90. dayes, whereas there are but 40. and thrice seven dayes spoken of) but onely those dayes are registred, wherein some thing fell out of speciall note and remembrance.

QVEST. X. Whether Noah opened the doore or window, and wherefore.

Vers. 6. Noah opened the window of the Arke which he made.] 1. This was neither the doore of the Arke, as some Greeke copies read 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which signifieth a doore: as Chrysost. hom. 27. in Gen. for the doore could not be opened without danger. 2. Neither as Cajetane thinketh, was this another window, beside that mentioned in the description of the Arke, because there the word (zohar) is used, which signifieth a light, here the word (chalon) which is a window: for it is no unwonted thing in Scripture, to expresse one thing by divers names. 3. Neither, as Oleaster conjectureth, did Noah beside the window, make a cleft or rift in the ship to looke out: for that had beene dangerous, in respect of the rage and violence of the water. 4. Neither doth Noah send out, rather than looke forth himselfe, either for feare to behold the terrible waters, as Chrysostome, for his heart was not so timorous; or for that the window was too little for him to looke out, as Tostatus thinketh: but because the fowles sent forth could give notice by their returne of the remote places, which Noah could not so easily see, Perer. 5. Now whereas the tops of the mountaines are said to be seene, vers. 5. before Noah opened the window, the question is, * of whom they were seene: for besides Noah and those which were in the Arke, there was no body to see them: the answer is, 1. that Noah might have opened the window before, though it be not expressed: as many things beside are not, which Noah is supposed to have done in the Arke: 2. Or it is so said, because the tops of the hils were to be seene, though no man saw them. 3. Likewise Noah might know it by revelation, as he did other things: as that the waters were 15. cubits above the hils, which no man could know but from God, Mercer:

QVEST. XI. Of the comming and going of the Raven.

Vers. 7. HE sent out a Raven.] The Hebrewes text hath, which went and came, the Septuagint and Latine, which went and came not, and so many of the Fathers doe reade. * 1. It is here no wise to be admitted, that the Hebrew text is corrupted: for neither could the Jewes conspire altogether to corrupt the Scriptures, but their falshood would have beene spied: neither doth this place make any thing for the Jewes against us, and therefore they had no cause to corrupt it: and beside it is well knowne, that the Jewes are most carefull to preserve the Scriptures, having all the words in tale, that are used in the text, and how often every letter of the Alphabet is found in the Scripture. 2. We also refuse their coniectures, who to justifie this erroneous reading, would have the Septuagint and Latine to keepe the sense, though not the words: as now the Crow is said not to returne, because he came not againe into the Arke, bur onely rested upon it: or for that he returned without giving notice of that, wherefore he was sent, as the Dove did, sic Lyranus, Tostatus. 3. Their conjecture also, which say that the Raven returned not, but lighted upon some carrion or dead body, cannot be allowed, as contrary to the text, and beside unlikely, seeing now it was the eleventh moneth, in which time all the dead bodies were either consumed of the water, or devoured of the fish. 4. Wherefore we hold the Septuagint and Latine to be corrupt: and that according to the Hebrew text, the Raven went and came to the Arke, both because there was his food, his mate or fellow, and his nest or resting place: though I thinke that Raven was not received into the Arke as the Dove was. 5. But the Hebrewes fables we refuse: how that the Raven was sent forth out of the Arke, because of his intemperancie with his mate: and that two other in the Arke, * were in the same case, Cham, and Canis, the dogge: likewise, they imagine, that the Raven should expostulate with Noah, why he was sent out from his mate: as though Noah should keepe her for himselfe: some thinke that this was the Raven that afterward fed Elias: but these ridiculous toyes are not worth the rehearsall. 6. The Hebrewes and some Christian writers doe here much stand upon allegories: some of them, which tend to edifying we refuse not: as that the simple hearted are signified by the Dove, who are to be recei|ved into the Church: but Hypocrites and carnall men, must not be admitted into the Arke of the Church, as the Raven returned not, Mercer.

QVEST. XII. Of the sending out of the Dove, and the computation of the seven dayes.

Vers. 8. HE sent also forth a Dove from him. &c. 1. Though the tops of the mountaines appeared before the sending forth of the Dove, yet she found no rest for the sole of her foot, * because the earth was not yet dry but muddy, and standing with water, as Chrysostome noteth: and Iosephus saith, that the dove returned with fowle and durty feet: and beside, the dove delighteth in the vallies and places, which were yet under the water. * Mercer: 2. whereas she brought an olive leafe, &c. I rather thinke with Chrysostome, that the olive tree yet keepe the leaves greene under the water, especially, seeing the olive, as Pliny noteth, is one of those trees, whose leaves are alwayes greene: then with Ambrose, that Deo iubente uno die, &c. germinavit terra, &c. at Gods commandement the earth in the same day wherin it began to be dry, did bud and bring forth: that this olive branch was fetcht forth from Paradise, or out of the land of Israel, is a Jewish fable,. 3. Where Moses saith, v. 10. he abode yet other seven dayes: I approve rather the opinion of Tostatus, and Lyranus, and Mercerus, that Moses observeth thrice seven dayes, then of Rupertus and Pererius,* that understand but twice seven, which Noah waited for the sending forth of the dove: for it is evident that he had staid 7. dayes before: not seven other from those forty dayes, as Pererius expoundeth it: but other seven from the first seven; as the seven other mentioned, v. 12. were other from the second seven.

QVEST. XIII. Of the account of the 601. yeare of Noahs age.

Vers. 13. IN the six hundred and one yeare, &c. 1. Whereas in the first moneth the upper face of the earth was dried, and yet v. 14. it is said the earth was dried the 27. day of the second moneth: wee need not with Cajetano reconcile this doubt, to say, that this was all one moneth, but divers in computation: the first in respect of Noahs age, the second of the yeare: for it was not like that Moses in the same place would use a divers computation, which would breed a confusion in the story: but the text expoun|deth it selfe, that in the first moneth, onely the upper face of the earth seemed to bee dry, but it was not firme and sound,* and fit for habitation, till the second moneth. 2. In that Noah removed the covering of the Arke, that is, part thereof, so much as might serve to looke forth, it followeth not that the window of the Arke was too little for Noah to looke out at, as Pererius noteth: or not convenient in respect of the situation for that use, for both Noah out of the window had perceived before the tops of the mounntaines to bee bare, v. 5. for how else and of whom were they seene? as also in that Noah put his hand out of the window and tooke in the dove, it appeareth it was not out of his reach: but from the top of the Arke No|ah might see round about, whereas the window opened but one way, and therefore he removed some part of the cover.

QVEST. XIII. Noahs floud of the longest continuance of all others.

Vers. 14. ANd in the second moneth, the 27. day of the moneth.] 1. This floud then which was in Noahs time, was of the longest continuance of all flouds and inundations, that ever were: that great inundation of Nilus under Prometheus, endured but a moneths space: that under Ogyges in Achaia, two moneths: another under Deucalion in Thessalia, three moneths: they make mention also of a fourth inundation of the Isle Pharos,* called therefore Pharonica, under the Aegyptian Proteus: but none of these were like unto this inundation in Noahs time, neither for generality of place, or perpetuity of time. 2. For this floud neither continued only nine moneths as Annia••sthinketh, or ten moneths as Cajetanus suppo|seth: but twelve moneths full and ten dayes, according to the course of the Sunne: for Noah went into the Arke, when the floud began, in the second moneth and 17. day of the six hundred yeare, and hee came forth the second moneth of the yeare six hundred and one, upon the 27. day of the moneth.

QVEST. XV. Abstinence in the Arke.

Vers. 18. ANd Noah came forth, &c. 1. Ambrose noteth, as some Hebrewes before, that whereas Noah is bid to come forth, he and his wife, his sonnes and their wives, v. 16. but when he is bid to come in, he and his sonnes, and his wife and his sonnes wives, are joyned together, chap. 6. v. 18. that they lived apart in the Arke, and companied not together, non commiscetur sexus in introitu sed commiscetur in ingressu,* although it is like that Noah and his sonnes lived in abstinence in the Arke, because it was a time of mourning: and therefore the Hebrewes note, that Ioseph had his children not in the yeares of famine in Aegypt, but before: yet this cannot be gathered out of the 16. v. where Noah and his wife, his sonnes and their wives are named together, when they are bidden to come out of the Arke: for here v. 18. they are againe named asunder. 2. But R. Isaac Carus, his note is too violent: that Noah doth not here as God bid him, but abstained still from the company of his wife, because hee feared lest men might kill one another, as Cain did Abel, or because he expected another flood, the simplicity of the text warranteth no such thing. 3. Musculus noteth the obedience in Noahs family, that they enter in, and goe forth according to Noahs direction. 4. Luther observeth also the singular order in the creatures that goe not forth confusedly together, but according to their kindes, or as the Hebrew word is, families, every one sorting to his like.

QVEST. XVI. Noah buildeth an Altar, not without Gods direction.

Vers. 20. NOah built an Altar, &c. 1. Though Noah had no expresse commandement now to offer sacrifice: for as Ambrose saith, non debuit Deus quasi avarus mercedem gratia postulare: it was not fit, that God, as one covetous, should require the reward of thanks: yet hee was not without direction in this case: Calvins reason is, because it is evident, that he in this story did nothing, without a warrant from God,* he would not come forth of the Arke, though the earth were dry, till God bid him: Oecolampadi•proveth it by these words, that God smelled a savour of rest: but every thing stinketh before God, that is not according to his word. Wherefore Noah knew by the example and practice of the Patriarkes, that God was pleased with this kinde of worship by sacrifices: as also he was directed thereunto, because to this end there were seven of the cleane creatures taken into the Arke by Gods owne appointment, and for the fashion of the Altar, which was made either of earth, or of unhewen stones, whereof first mention is made in this place, he had either the patterne from the practice of the elder Patriarks, or by instinct from God.

QVEST. XVII. To what end sacrifices were used.

*And so offered burnt offerings: three reasons are yeilded why the Lord pleased to be served with sacrifices: two are alleaged by Chrysostome. The morall end was, that the piety and devotion of the people might be stirred up by his externall note: a politicke end, that as circumcision was given as a marke of difference betweene them and other people: so the solemne use of sacrifices might containe them in the service of God, that they should not be enticed to the Idolatry of the Gentiles, by their pompous and magnificent sacrifices. A third end was mysticall, well touched by Calvin. Semper illis ante oculos symbola proponi oportuit, &c. These sacrifices were as symboles and signes to preach and prefigure unto them their Mediatour and atonement maker Jesus Christ, without whom nothing is acceptable to God. And further, although Noah gave thanks also to God for the preservation of the uncleane creatures, as for the cleane; yet he offereth onely of the cleane, because he had so learned from the Patriarks, that God was pleased with such sacrifices, before whom otherwise nothing is uncleane, but in respect of man: and where|as he offered of all cleane both beasts and fowles, it is like he tooke of more kindes, than those five used in the Law: that is, Oxen, Sheepe, with Goats, Doves, and Turtles. Further, he offered burnt sacrifices, rather than oblations, Eucharisticall, not as the Hebrewes imagine, for his owne sinne, but because such sacrifices were most used before the Law, and were best accepted, when as the whole sacrifice was consumed upon the Altar, Mercer.

QVEST. XVIII. How God smelled a savour of rest.

Vers. 21. GOd smelled a savour of rest.] 1. As men are delighted with pleasant savours, so this service and sacrifice of Noah was pleasing unto God, as the Chalde Paraphrast readeth. 2. Not that the externall act of sacrificing in it selfe pleased God, but the thankfull minde of the sacrificer, Calvin. 3. All our acts have a double smell, one outward before man, another inward before God: Cain and Abels sacrifice had one outward smell, but Abels had a sweet savour beside within, Muscul. 4. And this savour herein differeth from all sensible savours: for there may be society in the most pleasant odours, but with this sweet savour the Lord is never filled or wearied, but alwayes delighted with the prayers of the Saints, Cajetane.

QVEST. XIX. How the Lord will no more curse the earth.

Vers. 21. I Will not henceforth curse the ground any more for mans sake, &c. 1. The Lord speaketh not gene|rally of all kinde of cursing the earth: for those curses which are upon the earth for mans sinne, Gen. 3.17.4.12. are not taken away: but he meaneth this particular curse by waters, that all flesh shall no more perish by them: as is shewed, cap. 9.21. for the world notwithstanding shall bee destroyed by fire. 2. Where it is added as a reason, for the imagination of mans heart is evill, &c. it is not to be taken as Rupertus collecteth: that God will spare the earth, and beasts, because man is subject to sinne: but the promise is made specially for man. That seeing hee is by nature subdued to sinne, hee is to bee pitied, and not for every offence according to his deserts to be judged: for then the Lord should continu|ally overflow the world, Calvin. 3. And whereas this reason is given why the Lord would destroy the world, Gen. 6.6. because the imaginations of his heart were evill: it may seeme strange, that the same cause is alleaged here, why from henceforth the Lord would spare the world: therefore this is here added, to shew the originall beginning of this mercy, not to proceed from man, who is altogether corrupt by nature, but from Gods owne gracious favour, Mercer. 4. Further, whereas it is said, God said in his heart, * this was not only secretly purposed by the Lord, not uttered, but either revealed to Noah as a Prophet, or to Moses the Writer, as some Hebrewes: but it is cleare, that the Lord thus spake to Noah, who is said thus to speake in his heart, as taking counsell and deliberation with himselfe, Mercer. 5. From his youth: not only from his youthfull estate, which age is more prone unto sin, committing the same with rage and violence, as Tosta/tus: or when man beginneth to have use of reason, and free-will, as Rupertus. But mans thoughts are evill, even as soone as he is able to conceive or thinke any thing; yea our nature is evill from the cradle, * Calvin. Though as Ambrosewell saith, crescit cum aetatibus culpa, as age groweth, so sinne increaseth.

QVEST. XX. How the seasons of the yeare are promised alwayes to continue.

Vers. 22. SOwing time and harvest, &c. 1. The Lord doth not promise that for ever these seasons of the yeare shall continue: for after the end of the world they shall cease. But all the dayes of the earth: that is, so long as the earth continueth in this state, Muscul. 2. Neither is this to bee understood of every particular Countrey: for sometime and in some place, it falleth out through the just judgement of God, that there is neither seed time nor harvest, as it hapned under Elias, 1 King. 17. But it is referred to the generall condition of the whole earth, wherein there shall be a perpetuall succession of these sea|sons. 3. The yeare is not here divided into six parts, as the Jewes imagine, giving unto each part two mo|neths: but Moses divideth the yeare according to the popular estimation, into two parts, cold and heat, Summer and Winter: and by seed time and harvest, are understood the benefits that arise unto men by the season of the yeare, Luther, Perer, Mercer, or by them the two other parts of the yeare are im|plied the Spring and Autumne. 4. Further it is said, day and night shall not cease: not because there was no distinction betwene the day and night during the time of the floud, as some Hebrewes: for we see that Noah accounted the dayes, when he sent out the Dove, which could not have searched about in the dark: but there was not such apparant distinction of the day and night, as before: the whole frame of the world being then out of course. Like as when the skie is darkened in Sea tempests, as Act. 27.20. neither Sunne nor Starres appeared in many dayes: the Sunne and Starres then kept their course, but not to any such use of the inhabitants of the earth. And this is to be understood generally for the continuance of day and night in the whole earth: for in particular places the night may be altered, as in Egypt, and the day, as when the Sunne stood still in the times of Iosua, Mercer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Nothing acceptable to God without faith.

Vers. 21. AND the Lord smelled a savour of rest, &c. Because Noah offered up his sacrifice in faith, therefore it had a pleasant smell before God: whereby it is evident, that all service which is offered unto God being not mixed with faith, doth stinke before him: sic Oecolampadius.

2. Doct. Originall sinne not by corrupt imitation.

Vers. 21. FRom his youth: this place directly proveth originall sinne, against the Pelagians: who denied it to be a depravation of our nature, but a corrupt imitation: but here we see, that even in the very youth and first age of man, when he is not yet so apt to imitate, there is evilnesse and corruption in the heart: as it is in the Proverbs, 20.11. a childe is knowne by his doings, whether his worke bee pure or right.

3. Doct. Excommunication how to be used.

Vers. 21. I Will no more curse the earth, &c, neither will I from henceforth smite, &c. Here cursing and smiting goe together; first God curseth, then he smiteth: after this rule none ought to be smitten by the spirituall censures of the Church, but such as stand first accursed before God: not as the Pope smiteth with his thunderbolts, even those, that are the faithfull servants of Christ: but the Wise man saith, that a curse causlesse shall not come, Proverbs, 26.2.

4. Doct. The seasons of the yeare from Noahs time.

*Vers. 22. Cold and heat shall not cease, &c. That therefore is but a fabulous conceit of Ovid, that in Saturnes time it was a continuall spring: for we see that even these seasons of Winter and Summer began under Noah.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. The Latine translation corrupt.

Vers. 7. WHEREAS the Latine text readeth, that the Raven went out and returned not againe: where|as the true reading is, ^{*}that the Raven went, going forth and returning, Bellarmino would excuse it thus; that the Latine text in sense agreeth with the Hebrew: for the Raven returned to the Arke going and comming, but not into the Arke to Noah. 1. But Bellarmino might know, that there is difference betweene a Translator, and an Interpreter, the one followeth the sense, the other should keepe the very words and sense withall. 2. And as here the Latine varieth from the words, so vers. 21. it leaveth the sense, for whereas the Hebrew readeth, the thought of mans heart is evill, &c. the Latine doth mitigate the speech, and saith, prone to evill, such liberty that corrupt translation taketh, (which they make authen|ticall) to chop and change the originall text: As likewise in the fourth verse, for the 17. day of the mo|neth, the Latine readeth the 27. day.

2. Confut. God created nothing evill.

Vers. 21. THE imagination of mans heart, jetser, figmentum, the frame or fashion of mans heart, &c. which must be understood not Passively, for that frame of the heart, which was created of God, for that is good: but Actively, for that which the heart of man imagineth and frameth it to it selfe: which is called the imagination and framing of the thoughts,* chap. 6. vers. 5. and that is evill: wherefore this place neither giveth any advantage to profane persons, to conceive of God, as though he were Author of evill, for the heart as it is created of God is good, the substance thereof is of God, the evill quality thereof is of the corruption of our owne nature: neither doth this place serve to uphold Illyricus conceit, that originall sinne should be a substantiall thing.

6. Places of exhortation and morall use.

1. Morall. Compassion toward the creatures.

Vers. 1. GOd remembred Noah and every beast, &c. Gods mercifull providence appeareth, that watch|eth not onely over men, but over the inferiour creatures, for mans sake: according to the

Psalm 36.6. Thou O Lord savest man and beast: whereby man is taught to be like to his Creator in com|passion, to extend mercy even unto the bruit beasts: as the Wise man saith, a righteous man regardeth the life of his beast, Prov. 12.10. Xenocrates an Heathen Philosopher is commended for his pitifull heart, who succoured in his bosome a poore Sparrow, that came flying to him, pursued of an Hawke, and afterward let the bird goe away, saying; *Se supplicem non prodidisse, that he had not betrayed his poore suppliant.

2. Morall obser. Obedience.

Vers. 14. Then God spake to Noah: the earth was now perfectly dry, and Noah might have gone out if he would, but he waiteth upon God, that as he entred into the Arke by his appointment, so he will not goe forth without his commandement: so Ambrose noteth well: *siccata erat terra, exire po|tuit Noe de Arca, &c. sed justus nihil sibi arrogat, se totum sed divino committit imperio; * the earth was now dried, Noah might have gone forth, but the just man doth arrogate nothing to himselfe, he wholly committeth himselfe to Gods commandement.* By this wee are taught obediently in all our wayes to depend upon God.

3. Morall obser. Thanksgiving for benefits received.

Vers. 20. HE offered burnt offerings: to testifie his thankfulness to God, for this his great deliverance: so the godly are taught for all the benefits, which they receive, to yeeld due thanks unto God, and acknowledge him onely the author and giver of them: as David saith, What shall I render to the Lord for all his benefits? &c. I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord, Psal. 116.12.

CHAP. IX.

The Method and parts of the Chapter.

IN this Chapter two principall things are declared: 1. The restoring of the world, and renewing of Gods covenant, vers. 1.10. 2. The infirmitie of Noah in being drunke, and such things as accompany the same, from vers. 20. to the end.

In the first part the covenant is renewed with mankinde, from vers. 1. to 8. then with all flesh, vers. 8.10.20. In the covenant made with man, foure things are ex|pressed, his multiplication, vers. 1. domination and rule over all creatures, vers. 2. sustentation and food, vers. 3. preservation, in providing that mans blood be not shed: God will require it at the hand both of beast and man, vers. 4, 5, 6.

In the generall covenant made with all flesh: first, there is the promise, that all flesh should not be rooted out by the waters, vers. 10, 11. then the signe and token thereof; the bow in the cloud: which shall be • signe betweene the Lord and the world, that it shall be no more destroyed by water. And this is repeated foure times, from vers. 13. to 17. for the better assurance of it.

In the second part, first Noahs infirmitie is described, with the occasion thereof, his drinking of wine, vers. 21, the effects thereof, his nakednesse, 21. Secondly, the behaviour of his sonnes: undutifull of Cham, vers. 2•. reverence toward their father in the other two, vers. 23. Thirdly the verdict and sentence given by N•h by way of prophesie upon his sonnes: his cursing of Canaan of Cham, 25. his blessing of Sem chiefly, vers. 26. and of Iapheth next, vers. 27.

3. The Explanation of doubts.

QVEST. I. Of the benediction of increasing and multiplying after the flood.

1. GOd said to Noe and his sonnes bring forth fruit. 1. Though the Scripture make no mention of any sonnes that Noah begat after the flood, yet this benediction belongeth also to Noah, because he is increased in his sonnes, Luther. 2. This blessing doth properly and especially appertain to lawfull marriage, though there be a kinde of obscene fecundity also in unlawfull copulations, for God speaketh to Noah and his sonnes, Calvin. 3. This increasing, though by Gods blessing is extended to other creatures, yet it is specially directed unto man, for whose cause other creatures are multiplied: 4. In that this blessing is rehearsed againe, * vers. 7. it sheweth the certainty of it, and the mighty increase of mankind after the flood: for it is recorded, that within three hundred yeares, Ninus King of the Assyrians, had an army of seventene hundred thousand footmen.

QVEST. II. How man hath yet rule and dominion over the creature.

2. ALso the feare of you, &c. 2. Those three privileges which were given unto man in his creation: of increasing and multiplying, Gen. 1.28. of his rule and dominion over the creatures, ibid. of his food and sustentation, vers. 29. are here renewed in these three first verses, though not in that integrity and perfection: for the generation of man is with much difficulty and perill: his dominion over the creatures much impaired: his food more grosse, and with greater care provided. 2. Yet man retaineth still his dominion and sovereignty over the creatures, though not so absolute, as Adam had it: first we see though the savage and wilde beasts have cast off mans yoke, yet such as are more necessary for mans use, as Oxen, Horse, Sheepe, remaine in subjection still: secondly, even the wilde and unruly beasts are tamed by the wit and industry of man, Iam. 2.8. and the hand of man worketh many engines and instruments whereby they are taken and subdued: as here fitly they are said to be delivered into the hand of man: thirdly, though God doe often punish mans disobedience by the cruell beasts (which is one of the foure great plagues, Ezek. 14.21.) yet are they restrained by the power of God, in that they over-runne not the earth to destroy man, and partly they doe retaine a naturall feare and awe of man, whom willingly they use not to assault, but either provoked, or constrained by famine, or fearing some hurt to themselves.

QVEST. III. Whether flesh were eaten before the flood.

3. EVERy thing that moveth shall be meat for you. 1. Some thinke that flesh was not eaten before the flood in the families of the righteous, Mercer. 2. Some, that the eating of flesh was not at all in use before the flood: which is the opinion of Lyranus, Tostatus, Vatablus. But the liberty of eating of flesh is not here first granted, it is onely renewed. 3. Neither is their opinion to be approved, which thinke, that the eating of flesh was permitted before the flood, but yet not used among the faithfull: of which judgement seeme to be Theodoret, and Thomas Aquinas: for to what end should the faithfull restraints themselves of that liberty which God gave them? * 4. Neither yet doe we thinke that the eating of flesh was their usuall food before the flood, as it is now, as seemeth to thinke Dominicus à Soto, a Popish Writer for when as yet the earth and plants were not corrupted by the flood, but retained their naturall force and vigour, they yeelded more sufficient nourishment, so that the eating of flesh was not then so necessary: and as the more delicate use of some plants, as the use of Wine by Noah was brought in afterward: so much flesh of fowles and beasts did grow in request after the flood, which was not covered before. 5. Wherefore the sounder opinion is, that not onely the eating of flesh was permitted before the flood, but used not onely among the prophane race, but with the faithfull, though with greater moderation. Our reasons are these: 1. Because there is made no new grant, neither in this, nor in the rest, as of multiplying and bearing dominion, &c. but onely the ancient privileges granted to man, confirmed. 2. The distinction of cleane beasts, which it was lawfull for them to eat, and the uncleane, whereof they might not eat, Levit. 13.8.3. * It is evident by the oblation of Abel, who offered the first fruit of his sheepe, and the fat of them: but it had beene no praise to Abel, to offer the fatlings, if he used not to eat of them: it had beene all one to God, whether to offer leane or fat: but herein Abel is commended, because he preferred the service of God before his owne private use: and therefore Iustinus well collecteth, Si an•e posuit Abel utilitatis•a Deum, non dubium quia solitus fit ex labore suo utilitatem percipere: If Abel did preferre God before his profit, * certainly he did reape profit of his labour: and to the same purpose he alleageth that saying of the Apostle▪ Who feedeth a flocke, and eateth not of the milke thereof, 1 Cor.9.7. and by the same reason also of the flesh thereof. 4. In that expresse mention is here first made of eating of flesh, it is not, as one well resolveth, quantum ad usum, in respect of the use, sed quantum ad necessitatem, in regard of the necessity. The food of flesh beganne now to be more necessary, * because the plants and herbs had lost the first natu|rall vigour and strength.

QVEST. IIII. Wha• the meaning is of eating the flesh with the life or blood.

4. BVt flesh with the life thereof, that is, the blood, &c. 1. This word anima, in Hebrew nephesh, translated life, is taken foure wayes in Scripture: first, for man, as the soule that sinneth, shall die, Ezek. 18. Secondly, for the reasonable soule: feare not those that can kill the body: but cannot kill the soule, Matth. 10. Thirdly, it is taken for the inferiour part of the soule, that is, the affection: as thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart and soule, Matth.22. Fourthly, it is taken for the life: as a good shepherd will lay downe his life for his sheepe, Ioh. 10. and so it is taken in this place: for the blood is the seat and chariot of the life, and vitall spirics.

2. These words are neither figuratively taken, as Eugubinus thinketh, for the shedding of mans blood: because he that killeth a man, seemeth to devour his flesh: for in this sense the words should have no coherence at all with the former verse: and where words may be taken in their proper sense without any in|convenience, a figure is not to be enforced: neither is it all one to eat flesh with the blood thereof, and to eat things strangled, as Chrysostome collecteth: * for the Apstoles distinctly speake of blood and things strangled, Act. 15. Neither is the eating of live flesh here onely prohibited, as Cajetanus conjectureth: or of hot blood, as Mercer: for from this brutish kinde of food, the very nature of man abhorreth, and therefore it needed not so especially to be provided for by precept. But here generally the eating of the blood with the flesh is forbidden: whether together with the flesh alive or dead, or separated from the flesh, as to drinke it, or to eat it as now the use is in confected meats.

QVEST. V. Wherefore the eating of blood was prohibited.

NOW whereas the eating of blood was forbidden, both before the Law, and under the Law, Levit. 17. and after the Law in the beginning of the Gospell, Act. 15. it shall be profitable to consider the causes of this prohibition. First, it was forbidden before the Law: 1. Not so much for decencie and comeli|nesse, or for that blood is a grosse and heavy food: 2. But either that aforehand by these ceremoniall pre|cepts mens minds might be prepared the better to beare the yoke of the Law, which afterward should be promulgated. 3. Or rather that by this precept of abstaining from blood, * men might be the more ter|rified from the shedding of mans blood: sic Chrysost.

Secondly this law was revived, Levit. 17.11, 12. whereof two reasons are given: one civill, because the life of the flesh is the blood: that they should forbear from all shew of cruelty, and so much the more detest the shedding of mans blood: the other religious, because I have given the bloud to offer at the Altar: the bloud, the organ of life, is holy unto God the Author of life and therefore they should not pollute or prophane it by devouring thereof.

Thirdly▪ the Apostles did forbid the eating of things strangled, and bloud: 1. Not because among the Gentiles, suffocated things were held to be the food of evill spirits, as Origen writeth: * for it is not like that the Apostles would ground their decree upon such heathenish fantasies. 2. Neither by bloud is homicide forbidden, and by things suffocated uncleane, as some thinke: for the Apostles would not use obscure and mysticall tearmes in their decree: and these things were already provided for by law among the Gentiles. 3. Neither did the Apostles forbid these things onely to restraine intemperancie: for many kinds of food are more delicate and to be defi•ed, than these. * 4. But Augustine sheweth the true cause of this prohi|bition: Qu•dideo f•ctum est, quia el•gere voluerunt Apostoli pro tempore rem facilem &c. This was decreed because the Apostles for a while would chuse some easie thing, not burdensome to the observers, which the Gen/tiles might observe in common with the Iewes, &c. Thus Augustine disputing against Faustus. This the Apo|stles did onely for a time, lest the beleeving Jewes, who could hardly all at once be removed from the legall rites, might have beene offended at the libertie of the Gentiles: but now this cause being removed, and there being no such feare, this decree also is expired.

QVEST. VI. How this prohibition dependeth of the former verse.

Vers. 5. FOR surely I will require your bloud, &c. 1. Which words are neither an exposition of the former verse, as Eugubinus, who by the eating of flesh with the bloud, understandeth figuratively the shedding of mans bloud. 2. Neither is the Hebrew ach, to be read as an adversative, as Paulus Burgensis readeth, veruntamen, notwithstanding: as though the sense should be this; though yee are permitted to shed the bloud of beasts, yet it is unlawfull for you to shed the bloud of man. 3. Neither is this another exception, concerning mans food, as Cajetane, that as before the bloud of beasts is excepted, so here humane flesh: that if it be not lawfull to shed the bloud of man, neither is it to eat his flesh, which first must be ki•led before it be eaten. 4. Neither need there to be here understood any sentence, as this; I will not have you to shed mans bloud, and then this to follow as a reason: for this prohibition to shed mans bloud, followeth directly in the next verse. 5. But this word translated (for) may be read as a causall: why God would have them abstaine from all cruelty or savage behaviour in eating of the bloud of beasts, that they should have a greater detestation of the spilling or shedding of mans bloud, Perer. Mercer.

QVEST. VII. How God will require the bloud of man at the hand of beasts.

Vers. 5. AT the hand of every beast. 1. Rupertus by beast, understandeth the Devill, that shall answer for the death of mens soules: but Moses here directly speaketh of the bodily life, which is in the spirits and bloud. 2. Neither by beasts here are understood cruell and beastiall men: for it foll|oweth afterward, a• the hands of man will I require it, &c. 3. Neither doth Moses insinuate the death of martyrs, which were exposed to beasts: for which the persecutors shall answer for, that did cast the Saints before the beasts. 4. But here is shadowed forth that Law, which was afterward published, that even the beast that killeth a man should be stoned, Exod. 22.

QVEST. VIII. How his bloud shall be shed, that sheddeth bloud.

Vers. 6. BY man shall his bloud be shed. 1. Some reade in homine, and referre it to the first clause, Hee that sheddeth mans bloud in man, as they which are strangled, have their bloud shed as it were in them, sic Tostatus: but in this sense, one kinde of murther onely should be prohibited. 2. Some read in homine, against man: that is in despite of man, Cajetan. 3. But the best reading is per hominem, by man: and to referre it to the last clause, by man shall his blood be shed: that is, by the Magistrate: as the Chaldee interpreteth, by witnesse by the sentence of the Iudge: for it should seeme, that before the flood there was no law made, nor power given to man to punish murther: as Adam proceeded not against Cain, that killed his brother Abel, Mercer. 4. And this must be understood, not de facto, sed de jure & merito; not of the fact: for many times murtherers escape, but of the right and due desert of murtherers, that they are by Gods Law worthy of death: and many times where the law of man faileth, that such are not executed, Gods vengeance overtaketh them: such are either slaine in battell, or by the hands of other, or by some other meanes: as it is in the Psalme, men of blood shall not live halfe their daies. Psalm. 55.24. Calvin.

QVEST. IX. That mans life should be preserved because of Gods image.

IN the image of God, &c. 1. Hence it followeth not, as Oleaster collecteth, that the image of God is in mans body, because the image in the soule cannot be by the killing of the body destroyed: for the reason concludeth well, though this image of God be not in the body, yet because the body is the Tabernacle of the soule, and beareth that, which beareth the image of God, it ought for that cause to be revered: and yet the image of God though not originally or principally, yet by the consequent and effects, is expressed and shineth in some sort in mans body: in that it is made upright and aspiring to celestiall things, and so sutable to the soule, and in regard that into the hand of man. God hath delivered the rule and dominion of the creatures, cap. 1. vers. 28. 2. Though the image, wherein man was created, be much decayed and impaired, yet some part thereof remaineth, for the which the life of man should be spared and preserved, Calvin. 3. And if for this reason the life of any man whatsoever should be regarded, much more the life of Christians in whom this image is renewed in Christ, Muscul.

QVEST. X. Of the Raine Bow.

Vers. 13. I Have set my bow in the cloud, &c. 1. Neither Ambrose conceit can be admitted, who understandeth not here the visible Raine-Bow in the clouds, but the invisible power of God, where|by he sometime intendeth,* sometime remitteth his judgements, as a bow is bent, and unbent againe: But this collection is contrary to the text, which saith; The Bow shall be seene in the cloud, vers. 14. 2. Neither is their opinion found, that thinke there was neither raine no Raine-Bow before the flood: for how could the plants and fruits of the earth have beene so many yeares preserved without raine: so then the Raine-Bow was before the flood, but it beganne onely now to be a signe of this covenant betweene God and man: as the Lord chuseth sometime naturall things for signes, as Bread and Wine, and Water in the Sacraments, Mercer. 3. Neither is the opinion of some Hebrewes to be admitted, that thinke the Raine-Bow to have beene before the flood: but then it appeared in the cleare aire, now in a cloud: for the iris or Bow can have no existence or being,* but in a dewing or stilling cloud, Mercer. 4. Neither is Thomas Aquinas judgement and Cajetan sound, which thinke that the Raine-Bow is partly a naturall signe, that there shall be no flood: because the Raine-bow sheweth not, but when the clouds are thinne and dispersed, whereas thicke and blacke clouds ingender inundations: for the causes of the generall flood were not naturall, and God without the clouds, by the overflowing onely of the waters could drowne the world: and beside, if the Rain-bow were a naturall signe, then before the flood came it might have prognosticated so much: but then it should have beene a lying signe: for, notwithstanding the Raine bowes often appearing before the deluge, (as it is like) the flood came. 5. Though the Raine-bow bee not a naturall signe, but voluntary, depending upon the will and institution of God: yet notwithstanding hath it some agreement with that which it is made a signe of;* like as baptisme in the flesh hath some resemblance of the soule▪ so the Raine-bow is a fit and convenient signe to portend no inundation likely to follow, because it is ordinarily a signe either of faire weather, or of no long raine. And it hath beene observed, that a Raine-bow in the morning betokeneth showers, in the evening faire weather: Beside the Raine-bow is found to be wholesome to plants and herbs, that where it lighteth it giveth them a more pleasant, and a fragrant smell: as Aristotle and Plin^e write, and therefore fitter in this behalfe to be a signe of grace and favour. 6. Further, their imagination is fond, that think there shall be no Raine-bow 40. yeares before the end and destruction of the world by fire: because the aire say they, must be a long time before prepared by a continuall drinesse for that combustion: As though God cannot at once make the world combustible, as the raine and flouds were gathered together speedily for the inundation: further, if there should bee no raine for fortie yeares before the end of the world, how should the fruits of the earth be preserved: great famine and miserie must needs follow in the world: whereas it seemeth at the comming of Christ, there shall be pleasant times and full of mirth, wherein they shall eat and drinke, marry, and bee given in marriage, as it was in the dayes of Noah, Matth. 24.7. Lastly, Rupertus opinion wanteth sufficient ground, who applieth this covenant signified by the Rainebow wholly unto Christ, and maketh it altogether

mysticall: we deny not but that the Raine-bow being a signe of temporall benefit, may be a type and figure of Gods everlasting mercy in Christ, as Revel. 4.3. the throne of God is described having a Raine-bow round about it: yet it is evident, that God covenanteth here with Noah for this temporall benefit, and with all other creatures and living things, to whom the spirituall covenant in Christ appertai|neth not. And whereas other mysticall significations are made of the Raine-bow: as that the two colours of water and fire in the Raine-bow, the one blew, the other red, doe betoken the baptisme of Christ by water and fire: and the two judgements of the world, the one already past by water, the other to come by fire, these applications and the like, are witty rather and pretty, than wise and pithy. 8. Further, * whereas other covenants are made with condition of obedience, this covenant is absolute, that howsoever mens wickednesse may deserve other particular punishments, the Lord will not any more destroy the world with water. 9. This covenant the Prophet saith was made with an oath, Isay 54.9. and yet no oath is here expressed, because the word of God is as sure and stedfast as an oath, * as the Lord is said to have sworn to Abraham concerning the multiplying of his seed, Exod. 32.13. and yet no oath is mentio|ned, where that promise is made, Gen. 12. and 15.10. Rambannoteth, that the Bow being turned with the ends downward, and the backe to heaven, therein is a signe of mercy: for hee that shooteth arrowes, holdeth the backe of the Bow from him. 11. The Jewes when they see the Bow, goe forth and confesse their sinnes, and will not looke upon it with their eyes: such superstition we allow not: but it were meer, that the sight thereof would put us in minde of Gods great mercy in sparing the world. 12. This speech of the Lord concerning the heavenly Bow, was neither uttered to Noah alone, and by him to his chil|dren, as some thinke, or to Sem onely and Iapheth of his sonnes, but to Cham with the rest: whose sinne yet appeared not, and this being a temporall blessing, as wicked Cham was a partaker in it, so the cove|nant might bee made with him, seeing that therein even other creatures also are comprehended, ex Mercer.

QVEST. XI. How Gods is said to remember.

Vers. 15. Then will I remember my covenant. 1. Not that God need to have any thing to put him in remembrance: but either thereby is meant, that God will never forget his covenant, in that it shall appeare by the effects, that God thinketh of his covenant to performe it: or rather it is referred to the faith of men, that they shall well perceive, that God is faithfull in his promises, Calvin: so that God is said to remember, because he maketh us to know and remember, Chrysostome. * 2. Here it is called a covenant in a large sense, for properly a covenant is not without a contract, sine dato & accepto, a pro|mise and a condition: but such a covenant is not here made, which is extended to the bruit beasts: it then here signifies, the absolute disposition and gracious purpose of God toward man and all flesh, for their preservation, Tremel.

QVEST. XII. Whether Noah had more sonnes beside the three that are named.

Vers. 18. The sonnes of Noah going forth of the Arke, &c. Berosus Annianus thinketh, that Noah begat other sonnes after the flood, to the number of thirty, which were called Titanaes, of their mother Titaa, and that one Tuisco the father of the Germanes, was the fourth sonne of Noah, Muscul. But all these are fables. 1. Because it is like that Moses would have made some mention of those sons, at the least in generall, as of the other Patriarks before the flood, they begat sonnes and daughters, Genes. 5.2. The text saith, that of these three the whole earth was overspread, vers. 19. But if there had beene other sonnes, they also should have increased. 3. It need not be marvelled that Noah lived 350. yeares after the flood, and begat no children: for all this was the time of his old age, and Noah being 600. yeare old, was not so apt for generation.

QVEST. XIII. Why mention is made of Canaan.

And Cham was the father of Canaan. 1. Mention is not made of Canaan the sonne of Cham, and the rest of Noahs sonnes children omitted, * to note the intemperancie of Cham (as Chrysostome thinketh) because he begat him in the Arke: for that is not like, that Canaan was borne in the Arke: both because mention is made onely of Noah and his wife, and his sonnes, and their wives, that came out of the Arke, eight persons in all, Gen. 8. ver. 16. as also seeing Canaan was the youngest of Chams sonnes, Gen. 10.6. it would follow that the three elder sonnes, Cush, Misraim, Pu, being borne before Canaan, and so before the flood, should haue entred into the Arke contrary to the Scripture, which remembreth but eight persons to have beene saved in the Arke. 1 Pet 3.20. 2. Neither as Ambrose conjectureth, * is Canaan mention|ed to exaggerate Chams disobedience, that having a sonne to whom he was father, did forget his dutie to his father, and therefore was justly punished with a wicked sonne. 3. But this seemeth to be the reason Moses applieth the story to his times, when as now the Israelites were going to possesse the land of Canaan, that they might know, that now was the time, when the curse of Canaan and his posteritie should take place: sic Muscul.

QVEST. XIV. Whether Noah was the first inventor of Wine.

Vers. 20. Noah planted a vineyard. 1. Noah is said to be a man of the earth, not because he was a great man, or lived in the field without Cities, as Ramban, but because he delighted in husbandry. 2. If it be asked whence Noah had these Vine-plants; either as Ambrose thinketh, * they sprouted a fresh out of the old roots, or as Tostatus, the earth might bring forth wilde Vines of it owne accord, which by Noahs husbandry are made fertile: some of the Hebrewes thinke, he might keepe them in the Arke. 3. And mention is made rather of Noahs planting of Vines, than sowing of Corne, wherein he no doubt was occupied also: not because the invention of things necessary he would leave unto God, and of things for pleasure unto man, as Ambrose supposeth (for there is no doubt, but that Wheat was in use before the flood) but for that it ministreth occasion to the story following. * 4. Neither hath it any ground, that there was no use of the Vine before the flood, when as they were given to such sensuality and pleasure: but that Noah brought the grape to more perfection, (and therefore it is said he planted a Vineyard, not Vines) to make drinke thereof, which might be otherwise used before: and herein Berosus conceit is not much to be misliked,* that Noah was called Ianus, because of the invention of Wine, which in Hebrew is called Iaii••.

QVEST. XV. Of Noahs drunkennesse.

Vers. 21. HE was drunken, and uncovered, &c. 1. Though Noahs drunkennesse may have some excuse, as in that being an old man, and unaccustomed to this kinde of drinke, and being ignorant of the force and nature thereof,* he was the sooner overcome, yet it can have no just defence. 2. For Noah was so oppressed and intoxicate, that he forgot himselfe, as a man for the time not regarding comeliness: for he lay uncovered, not as Aben Ezra thinketh, by Canaan meanes, but by his owne negligence and oversight, and that in the midst of the tent, as it were in the floore and pavement: some Hebrewes say, that it was in his wives tent, to whom he went in: some thinke againe, that his wife was not living, because she would have covered his nakednesse: but these things are uncertaine, ex Mercer, 3. Wherefore the simplicity of the divine story appeareth, that concealeth not the infirmities of the most perfect men: that by such examples we should rather take heed: for if the strong may be thus overtaken, how much more circumspect ought the weaker sort to be.

QVEST. XVI. Of Noahs nakednesse.

AND was uncovered. 1. Adam and Eve were naked and uncovered in Paradise, and were not ashamed, because as yet they felt not the rebellion of the members, a just recompence of mans rebellion and disobedience to his Creator. 2. But now man is ashamed of those parts, rather than any other: because whereas other parts, even in the heat of mans affections, a voluntate moventur, are not moved without the will of man,* but as Augustine saith, Gentilia lib•do juri suo mancipavit, & potestati voluntaris •rip•it: lust hath subdued those members to it selfe, and taken them from the power of the will. 3. Hereof it is, that even the barbarous nations, that onely have nature to guide them, doe yet cover and hide their secret parts. It was therefore so much the greater shame for Noah, so reverend a Patriarke, so undecently to lie uncovered.

QVEST. XVII. Of Chams sonne.

Vers. 22. AND when Cham the father of Canaan saw, &c. 1. Theodore noteth out of the opinion of a certaine Hebrew, that Canaan first saw Noah thus lying uncovered (and therefore he is named with his father) and told his father, who chideth not his sonne for it, but desireth to see the same •ight also. This might be one step of Chams prophanesne. 2. To let passe either the opinion of some Hebrewes, as Rabbi Levi reporteth, that Cham did cut off his fathers privie parts, as the Poets feigne of Saturne,* or that of Berosus, that Cham being given to Magicke (who in stories is called Zoroaster) did impudently handle his fathers privities, and enchanted them, that he was ever after unapt for generation: we need not devise any such matters to exaggerate Chams disobedience: it was great enough, as it is here described. 3. These then were the degrees of Chams sinne: 1. that he doth not ignorantly, or by chance, but wittingly gaze upon his fathers secrets. 2. He doth it to his father, to one by whom he was not onely begotten, but for his sake preserved in the Arke: and being the youngest sonne, and so much the more beloved of his father, his disobedience was so much the greater, as Absaloms rebellion was against David, Muscul. 3. Himselfe not a childe, but now above an hundred yeare old, Calvin. 4. Neither is he content thus to disport himselfe, but he telleth his brethren, thinking to corrupt them also, to deride their father. 5. He rejoyceth in his fathers fall, and as Ambrose saith, *improb•laetatur affectu, he wickedly pleasureth himselfe: as the ungodly doe rejoyce at the fall of the godly. Like as Vultures, ad •als olentia feruntur, as Basil saith, doe passe over sweet meadowes, and pleasant places, and light upon carrions; so the wicked delight in the beholding of things that are evill and uncomely. 6. Berosus writeth of Cham, that he was after this given over to all lewdnesse, corrupting mankind with his evill manners: and taught them, by his owne example, approving the same, that it was lawfull, as the wicked use was before the floud, to lye with their mothers, sisters, daughters, with the male, and bruit beasts, and therefore was cast out from his father,* and dwelt in Egypt, where he was made a God under the name of Saturne, and they built him a Citie called Chemmin, that is, the Citie of Cham, the Inhabitants whereof were called Chem•nitae. •erer.

QVEST. XVIII. How Noah know Chams sonne.

Vers. 24. KNew what his younger sonne, &c. 1. He neither needed any revelation to know this thing, as Elizeus discried Gehezi his corrupt dealing: neither is it like that Sem and Iapheth did voluntarily declare their brothers fault to their father, for feare of grieving him. But it is most like, that Noah espying his sonnes garment upon him, did question with his sonnes, and so learned the truth. Muscul. Mercer. 2. This younger sonne was not Chanaan, as Theodoret thinketh:* nor is hee called the younger, not in yeares but in manners, as Ambrose: neither as Chrysostome, that he was indeed elder than Iapheth, but lost his eldership, because of his sinne, as Ruben did: neither is hee called the younger onely comparatively in regard of Sem, as Perer: neither is it like that Sem was the youngest, as some Hebrewes conjecture, but preferred before the rest, because of his holinesse, and great prerogatives, as of whom descended the Patriarkes, Kings, and Prophets: but Cham was indeed the youngest of the three, as shall bee further shewed in the explanation of the 10. chap. v. 21.

QVEST. XIX. Why Canaan is accursed by name, rather than Cham.

Vers. CVrsed be Canaan, &c. 1. It is not like that Canaan, was yet unborne as Origen & Ambrose think, when this curse was pronounced. 2. Neither that hee was the eldest sonne of Cham,* the rest of his sonnes being yet unborne: Ramban. 3. Neither is this an imprecation, but a prediction of that, which was to come. Theodoret: Calvin. 4. Canaan is accursed, not Cham, not for that Canaan first saw his fathers wickednesse, Theodoret: or because of Gods favour towards Cham in preserving him in the Arke, as some Jewes thinke: nor yet lest that, if Cham had beene named, his whole posterity should have beene under this curse, whereas Canaan only standeth under it. Perer: for the whole lineage of Cham stood accursed: But Chams sonne is noted, not the father, both to shew the greatnesse of his sinne,* whereby the punish|ment was derived also to his posterity. Calvin. And to declare that Canaan, following his fathers ungodlly steps (who was partaker with him deriding Noah. Mercer.) was also worthy of the same malediction Ambrose, ibid. As also Canaan is singled out from the rest of Chams sons, by the spirit of prophesie, where|by Noah foresaw the wickednes of that nation, and now the time was come, when the event was to answer the prophecy in expelling the Can•nites, and making them servants to Sems posterity. Calvin. As also here|by we are given to understand, as Gregory well noteth, in that Chamsinning, Canaan is cursed, quod repro|borum nequitia hic inultae proficiunt sed in posterum feriuntur: that wicked mens sinnes goe a while unpun•shed, but they are afterwards met withall.*

QVEST. XX. How Canaan became a servant to his brethren.

SErvant of servants. 1. That his condition should be most slavish and servile, more vile than the lowest degree of servants: which should be so much the more grievous because he is subjected to his brethren, whereas to be a servant to strangers is more willingly borne as Iosephus brethren thought great scorne, that their brother should be their Lord: Muscul. 2. We see, that as in Adam sinne brought forth death,* so in Caine it is the beginning of slavish servitude: ecce fratrem eodem natum patre peccatum fecit servum: behold sinne maketh the brother borne of the same parent a servant. Chrysost. A profitable service, and subjection should otherwise have beene in the world: as when men for order sake, and their better preservation obey their mercifull and prudent rulers, that governe them as fathers. But the slavish life and service had the beginning in cursed Canaan: such as their state is, that are taken captives in battell, * who being saved alive: servi fiebant a servando appellati: became servants, being so called, because they were saved: Augustine. 3. Though this curse did not presently take place, for the Cananites did hold the Israelites a while in subjection, yet at the length Gods judgements (which hee in his wisdom and secret counsell, for reasons best knowne to himselfe suspendeth) were executed to the full upon Canaans seed. Calvin.

QVEST. XXI. How children are punished for their parents sinnes.

BUt here a great question will be moved, that seeing Canaan was accursed for his fathers sinne, how it standeth with Gods justice, to punish the children for the fathers transgression: for the better resolving of this doubt, these severall considerations are duly to be weighed.

1. The judgements of God are of two sorts, they are either executed in this life, or in the next: in this many times they which sinne escape unpunished, and they which are innocent, are temporally chastised: but in the next world, every man shall receive according to their workes.
2. Gods judgements in this life, are either in spirituall, or temporall things: in spirituall, which properly concerne the soule, none are punished for another: as the Lord saith by his Prophet *Ezechiel, the sonne shall not beare the iniquity of the father, nor the father of the sonne, but the soule that sinneth shall dye But in temporall things, as the losse of the commodities and pleasures of this world, yea of life it selfe, one may be punished for another.
3. The judgements in temporall things are to be considered, either as chasticements and medicines, or as punishments: in the first sense they may fall upon innocents, * as Daniel and Ezechiel went into captivity, being not guilty of the peoples Idolatry: but this was a medicine tending to their spirituall good: But as they are punishments, they are onely incident to those which have deserved them. So then God in his infinite wisdom doth lay temporall chasticements upon some, even for others sinnes. 1. That there|by we should be admonished both to detest sinne in our selves, and to dissuade others from it, seeing it enwrappeth many in the same judgement. 2. God can recompence abundantly the losse of temporall things, yea of life it selfe, with spirituall and eternall blessings. 3. Yet none are so pure and innocent, but must confesse, that howsoever, they are free from some great offences, yet for other sinnes, they may justly deserve punishment.*
4. But this course to punish one for another, is onely to bee left unto God: Man must observe another rule, to punish him onely that sinned: as it is in the Law, the father shall not be put to death for the sonne;

nor the sonne for the father; Deut. 24.16. though in other punishments which tend not to the death or affliction of the body, as in depriving of honours, liberty, goods, it standeth with justice, even among men, to punish the children for the fathers, and many for one, as is seene in the case of treason: yet this privilege in general to punish one for another, is peculiar to God, because he is both the Soueraigne Lord over man and all he hath, he only knoweth how to make such chasticements medicinall, and how other|wise abundantly to recompense those that are afflicted, which things are not in mans power, who therefore in inflicting of punishment must respect every mans desert.

*5. Yet for the most part, they which are punished for other mens sinnes, are guilty of the same themselves: and therefore the Lord saith, he will visit the iniquitie of the fathers vpon the children, to the third and fourth generation of them that hate me, Exod. 20.5. Where is to be considered, 1. That God alwayes thus punisheth not, but rather by this threatning terrifieth, than verifieth the same by his iudgements: Theodoret. yet sometime the Lord thus judgeth the posterity of the wicked: as Gregory well saith, si nulla puniret, quis Deum res humanas curare crederet, sin cuncta puniret extremum iudicium unde restaret: if God should punish no sinnes, who could thinke that God had any care of humane matters, and if hee punished all, no man would looke for the latter judgement. 2. Herein the long sufferance of God appeareth, that hee deferreth his judgement sometime to the third and fourth generation, to see if in the meane time the wicked parents, or their children may amend: if they doe not, then the Lord is said to visit their iniquities; that is, to remember them at the length, which he had a great while left unpunished: as the Prophet saith, Let the iniquity of his fathers come into remembrance in thy fight. 3. If in the meane time the wicked father beget a sonne, that seeth his fathers sins, &c. and repenteth, he shall not die in his fathers iniquity, Ezek. 18.14.17. As the sonnes of Core died not with their rebellious father, Numb. 26.10. 4. And it is just, that God should visit to the third and fourth generation, because by the course of nature so long the father may live to see his sinne punished in his posterity, and the children so long may have the evill example of their parents in their eyes: for whose sins they are said to bee punished, though they have made them their owne by imitation, because their parents were authors, and by their example perswaders, and in their owne persons beginners of that sinne. 5. Neither for Idolatry onely is the iniquity of the parents visited in their children, as Rabbi Moses thinketh, but for other sinnes also, as here Chamsprophanes and rebellion toward his father is punished in Canaan. 6. Neither are the children guilty of their parents sinnes only by imitation, in doing the like: but if they continue in other great sinnes, though not the same: as when the people were plagued, because David had numbred the people, though therein David was the greatest offender, yet they had deserved diversly by their other sinnes to bee punished: or if the children, though they committed not the same sinnes, yet doe winke at them, and suffer them by silence, and reprove them not, as Elie was accessary to his sonnes sinnes, because he held his peace: as Augustine well saith, quamvis bonis vita malorum displiceat, &c. although the life of the wicked displease the righteous, and therefore they are not eternally damned, tamen, quia peccatis eorum pareunt, jure cum eis temporaliter flagellantur: yet because they forbear and spare their sinne, they are justly together with them whipped temporally. 7. Neither doth God prescribe vnto himselfe alwayes this rule, to punish but to the 3. or 4. generation: hee may extend his iudgements to the tenth, as here in the posteritie of Canaan; but yet the proportion alwayes holdeth, that he is more inclined continually to mercie, than justice Calvin.

6. This Canaan is accursed, not onely for his fathers sinne, but as being himselfe also which is most like accessarie to it, relating the matter to his father: and the posteritie also of Canaan, though they did beare the curse first denounced against their father, yet are worthily punished for their owne sinnes, Levit. 18.28. for these abominations the Lord spued out the people, that were before you.

QVEST. XXII. Of the blessing of Sem.

Verse. 26. Blessed be the God of Sem. 1. It appeareth in that Sem hath the chiefe blessing, that he was the actor and perswader of that reverent and dutifull behaviour toward their father. Tremel. 2. In that Noah turneth himselfe to God, it sheweth the excellencie of grace, wherewith Sem was endued: which also is implied in his name, which signifieth one famous or of renowne. Perer. 3. He prophesieth, that the true religion and Church should remaine in Sems posterity: that hee onely should worship the true God, which is to be blessed for ever. 4. And here also is included a prophesie of Christ to come of Sem, in whom all the nations of the world should be blessed. Oecolampad.

QVEST. XXIII. How Iapheth was to dwell in Sems tents.

Vers. 27. GGd perswade, or enlarge Iapheth, &c. 1. This cannot be the meaning, that God should dwell in the tents of Sem, because there was his temple, and Christ also incarnate walked and dwelled amongst them: sic Theodoret. Lyran. Tostat. Mercer. and the Chalde paraphrast referreth it un|to God: but the construction of the words following, let Canaan be his servant, will draw the sense to bee referred to Iapheth, not unto God. 2. Neither doth Noe speake here of the great increase and dilating of Iapheths posterity into all parts of the world. 3. nor yet of any civill society and league which should bee betweene the Gentiles of Iaphets stocke and the Jewes. 4. or that they should surprise the inhabitants of Sem, and thrust out the Jewes for all those things did equally befall the posterity of Cham: the Aegyptians were in league with them, and sometimes also surprised them. 5. But the word, is rather to bee translated, perswade, as Iunius, then inlarge, with Mercer: or as Vatablus well readeth, blande reducat, God shall gently reduce Iapheth to Sems tents: which was fulfilled, not when the Gentiles became Jewes, Proselytes, as some Hebrewes, but when by the mild voyce of the Gospell the Gentiles, were called to the knowledge of God, and made one Church with the Gentiles. Rupertus here also hath a good conceit: that the Greekes and Latines comming of Iapheth, by those two languages of Greeke and Latine, * did open the Tabernacles of Sem, the Hebrew Scriptures, and made them knowne to the Gentiles.

QVEST. XXIII. Of the life and acts of Noah.

Vers. 28. AND Noah lived, &c. Noah lived 250. yeares after the flood, died but two yeares before Abraham was borne: for from the flood to the birth of Abraham, are counted not above 352. yeares. And Sem living 502. yeares after the flood, reached to the 50. yeare of Isaack. * This then is wor|thy to bee observed, that three Patriarkes for the space of two thousand yeares and more from the begin|ning of the world to Isaack, might serve to propagate the true religion: Adam to Methuselah who lived with him 242. yeares: Methuselah to Sem, who lived almost an 100. yeares after Sem was borne: and Sem to Isaack. 2. Although the Scripture make no mention of the rest of Noahs acts, yet no doubt hee was oc|cupied in doing good, and in planting religion. Berosus writeth, that he taught the Armenians the skill of husbandry and planting of vines: he distinguished the yeare into 12. moneths: instructed them in the true service of God: and from thence he went to Italy, where he likewise taught Theology, and humane arts: who was honoured of them as a God, under the name of Sol and Coelus, and there hee died. This record of Noahs acts, as it containeth nothing of any improbability (saving that *Noahs*o godly a Patriarke would never suffer himselfe to bee honoured as a god) so there is no necessity to receive or beleieve it, not being expressed in Scripture. 3. But whereas Methodius is made the author, that Noah should have a certaine sonne called Iov•thas, that should bee borne in the 100. yeare of the third Chiliad or thousand, who inven|ted Astronomy and prophesied of the foure Monarchies: this is a meere fiction, for Noah lived not till the 100. yeare of the third Chiliad, but died in the sixth yeare thereof: for to the flood are reckoned 1696. yeares and Noah lived after 350. And againe the text saith, that all the earth was overspread of Noahs three sonnes: there was no place then for a fourth. 4. Though it is most like that Noah was exercised in most excellent workes, yet Moses omitteth to speake of them, as also of the rest godly succeeding fa|thers, because he hasteth to the story of faithfull Abraham, who was diversly honoured of God: 1. in being selected to be the father of his people and visible Church. 2. hee received the visible signe of the co|venant, circumcision: whereby the people of God should be distinguished from all other. 3. to him were given most rich promises, both temporall for the possession of the land of Canaan, and spirituall concern|ing the Messiah. 5. But whereas it pleased some of the fathers to turne this story of Noahs drunkennesse to an allegory; resembling the Jewes to the true vine that Noah planted, Christ to Noah, that was cast into the sleepe of death by his owne people: the Jewes deriding Christ infirm•ties and sufferings upon the crosse, to Cham scorning his fathers nakednesse: I hold it not safe wading without a bottome, and there|fore I omit these allegoricall applications, as mens fancies, and so leave them.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Liberty granted to eat flesh.

Vers. 3. EVery thing that moveth, shall bee meat for you] Here this liberty to eat flesh is granted to all: wherefore for religion sake (for we speak not of the prohibition politicall) to forbid the eating of some meats, infringeth this liberty granted by the Lord. Calvin.

2. Doct. The prohibition of not eating of bloud not perpetuall.

Vers. 4. FLesh with the life thereof. Tertullian writeth, that in his time it was counted an heinous thing to taste the bloud of beasts: but we must know, that this prohibition was not perpetuall, but for those times the better afore hand to inure them to beare the yoke of Legall ceremonies afterward to be given. The Apostles likewise willed for a time the forbearance from strangled and bloud, only because of offending the beleeving Jewes: but these ceremoniall observations, as touch not, taste not, handle not, are now abolished in Christ. Coloss. 2.21.

3. Doct. The liberty of marriage generall.

Vers. 7. BRing forth fruit and multiply. Here the liberty of marriage is granted to all: this blessing of in|creasing and multiplying is given to all Noahs posterity, of all sorts and degrees, wherefore the Papall restraint of marriage in some callings and degrees, is contrary to the divine indulgence and per|mission in this place. O•colampad.

4. Doct. The word and Sacraments must be joyned together.

Vers. 12. THis shall bee the signe of my covenant. Here wee see the word and the signe or Sacrament goe together: first the Lord maketh a covenant, and then addeth a signe as a seale thereof, for bet|ter assurance. The Chalde paraphrast interpreteth not amisse, this shall bee a signe betweene my word and the earth. Wherefore the edifying word must goe before, and the Sacraments concurre as seales.

5. Doct. In the visible Church hypocrites mingled with the faithfull.

Vers. 22. WHen Cham the father of Canaan. We see that in the visible Church the wicked are mixed together with the faithfu•l: as in Adams family, there was a Caine with an Abel, so in Noahs house, * there is a Cham for a Sem. So the Apostle saith, in a great house, there are vessels of gold, and vessels of silver, some of honour, some of dishonour. The Church of God shall not be purged from all drosse in this life, till it be made a glorious spouse, without spot and wrinkle in the kingdome of heaven.

5. Places of Controversie.

1. Confut. No wickednesse to eat flesh.

*Vers. 3. EVERY thing, that moveth. That which God permitteth, is lawfull: therefore Ovid was deceived that thus writ; heu quantum scelus est in viscera condi, &c. it is a wicked thing in deed, with other flesh our bellies to feed. How can that be counted a wicked thing which the Lord alloweth?

2. Confut. Of negative doctrine.

2. WHEREAS it is a common objection of the Papists, that the Protestants doctrine and principles be altogether negative: * if it were so (which to be otherwise, is other where shewed at large) yet it might be warranted by this place: whereas Pererius, a man of their owne side, though more reasonable than the rest, confesseth, that there are two precepts given to man, and both negative: the one morall and perpetuall, not to shed mans blood, v. 5. the other ceremoniall and temporary, not to eat flesh with the blood.

3. Confut. The covenant belongeth to infants, though presently they want Faith.

Vers. 12. BETweene me and every living thing, to perpetuall generation, &c. If God make a covenant, even with unreasonable creatures, that have no understanding, it is no sufficient reason to exclude infants from the covenant, as the Anabaptists doe, because presently they want faith. And seeing God made not this covenant only with that present age, but with the generations following: why should not the covenant of grace be extended also unto infants, which are the succeeding generation? Calvin.

4. Confut. Noahs drunkennesse not without sinne.

Vers. 21. HE was drunken and uncovered. &c. Pererius noteth here, ebrietatem Noe excusandum est ab omni peccato: that Noahs drunkennesse must be excused from all sinne: because it was involuntary and proceeded of ignorance, * for he never is read to have beene drunke againe. But this is a very corrupt glosse: for admit that Noah was ignorantly overtaken of the force of wine (which yet is not sufficiently proved) yet ignorance, excuseth not ā toto, sed a tanto, from all sinne, but from a greater sinne: the sinne is not adnihilate, that is, made no sinne, by ignorance, but onely extenuate, made a lesse sin: unlesse they will in like manner excuse the incest of Lot from all sin, because it was involuntary. 2. What though Noah committed not the like afterward, no more did Iudas lye any more with his daughter in law Thamar, Genes. 38.26. yet that did not exempt his unchast action from sinne, no more doth this Noahs intemperancy. 3. We are not afraid therefore to the glory of God, to confesse the infirmities of holy men, which the Scripture hath not concealed: * and wee say with Ambrose. Patriarchae nos instruunt non solum docentes, sed errantes: the Patriarkes instruct us not only teaching; but erring.

5. Confut. Popish Bishops not the fathers of the Church, and therefore may be discovered.

Vers. 23. BY the example of Sem and Iapheth covering their fathers nakednesse, Pererius againe noteth, that the like piety should be shewed toward our spirituall fathers, the Bishops of the Church, as Constantine said, that if he should find a Bishop committing adultery, hee would rather cover that un|cleane act with his cloake, than others should be offended, &c.

* Ans. 1. True it is, that if those popish Bishops, which he speaketh of, were the fathers indeed and shepherds of the Church, such as Constantine meaneth, and not rather the Ministers of Antichrist, and devourers of the flock, their infirmities should be covered. Calvin. 2. If their sins were but secret infirmities, they might be borne with for a time, but seeing they justifie open impieties, and their filthinesse is manifest to all the world, now a cloake cannot hide them. Muscul.

6. Confut. The Pope how a servant of servants.

Vers. 25. A Servant of servants, &c. This title Pererius saith the Popes doe usurpe, as a signe of great humility: * but we rather trust, that as another Caiphas so the Pope prophesieth the ruine of his owne Kingdome, that he shall become one day, a servant of servants indeed, as Canaan was, and be made a servant to those that have served him▪

7. Confut. The tents of Sem, not of the Pope or Romanists, have the preheminance.

Vers. 27. TO dwell in the tents of Sem▪ &c. Thus we see that Sem hath the prerogative, and that the Gen|tiles received their light from the Jewes. But the Pope would draw this privilege from the Jewes to the Romanes: that whereas the Apostle saith, that the Jewes beare the Gentiles as the root the branches, and not they the Jewes, Rom. 11.18. yet the Pope would have the faith and profession of the Romans to be the root and foundation of all beleivers.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Moral. Man must not rule over men, as beasts.

Vers. 2. THE feare of you shall be upon every beast. Gregory here hath a good note: that the feare of man must be not upon men but beasts: That man should not by cruelty or tyranny seeke to be fea|red of men. And yet good men sometimes desire to bee feared of others: but it is when the feare of God is not among them, that they which feare not the divine judgements, * may bee by feare of men kept in some awe: and then, non tam hominib. quam brutis animalib. dominantur: they doe not rule so much over men, as bruit beasts.

2. Moral. Sobriety in meats commanded.

Vers. 3. AS the greene herb: Although God yeeldeth to the use of man for his food all kinde of fowles, fishes, beasts: yet hee would have man to use them moderately and soberly, not to abuse them to gluttony or excesse: or not contented with such kinds, as are at hand, to search the deep for fish, to ascend the mountaines to catch fowle, to hunt up and downe the wilderness onely to satisfie his gree|dy appetite. But he ought to use the flesh of beasts, as the greene herb, that is soberly, and without curio|sity to take such thing•as are at hand.

3. Moral. Gods great care in preserving the life of man.

Vers. 5. I Will surely require your blood: Where we see the great care, which the Lord hath in preserving the life of man: * he will require it at the hands of the beasts, yea of a mans brother: neither shall he goe unpunished: by this it appeareth, domesticum & familiarem Deo hominis esse naturam, that mans nature is as domesticall and familiar unto God: and that therefore God will not suffer him to be unpunished: that offereth wrong as it were to his domesticall and familiar: By this men are taught, both to take heed of blood shed, and so to fall into the judgement of God: neither much to feare the sword of the wicked, seeing the Lord himselfe, will revenge the death of the innocent.

4. Moral. The bow a signe of Gods justice and mercy.

Vers. 13. I Have set my bow in the clouds, and it shall be a signe, &c. 1. The bow is a notable monument of Gods justice, to call to our minde the sinne of the old world, for the which it was del|stroyed, that wee feare to offend God in the •ike: it is also a signe of Gods mercy, in forbearing to bring the like destruction upon the world againe: * and if God shew such mercy even to wicked men and brut beasts, how great are his mercies, that he layeth up in store, for his elect. 2. We see also how farre the iustice of God exceedeth his mercy, the rigour of his justice was but for a time, in once destroying the world by water, but his mercy is perpetuall in the continuall preservation thereof: so the Prophet Isay saith,* for a moment in mine anger, I hid my face from thee, &c. but with everlasting mercy have I had compassion upon thee: This is unto me as the waters of Noe: Perer.

5. Moral. The miraculous propagation of mankind:

Vers. 19. OF them was the whole world over-spread, &c. here appeareth the wonderfull providence of God, that by three men the whole world was replenished: when as they were subject to the rage and invasion of beasts, and wanted many necessary things, the earth having not yet recovered her former vigour and force decayed by the floud: the like matter is to be seene (saith Chrysostome) in the Christian faith: that God, per duodecem piscatores, illiteratos, &c. that God by twelve fishermen, unlearned, &c. hath subdued the whole world to himselfe, and propagated the faith.

6. Moral. Noahs awaking out of drunkennesse, what it signifieth.

Vers. 14. Then Noah awaked, &c. This were to bee wished, saith Musculus, that they which are the Patriarks, and take upon them to be the pastors of the Church, were herein like unto Noah, to awake also from their drunkennesse, their ignorance, error and superstition. As also all intemperate and riotous persons are to learne by this president to awake from their sinne, and not to continue in their licentious course, nor make a continuall trade and occupation of drunkennesse.

CHAP. X.

1. The Method and parts of the Chapter.

T His Chapter hath three parts, according to the severall generations of the three sonnes of Noah, Iapheth, Cham, Sem: by whom the world was replenished: the generation of Iapheth is expressed, from v. 1. to v. 6. their names. v. 2, 3, 4. their habitation and place of dwelling. v. 5. the generation of Cham rehearsed, from v. 6. to 21. their severall names together with their habitation: then followeth the generation of Sem, their names, from v. 22. to v. 30. their habitation, vers. 30.

2. The grammaticall sense, or difference of translations.

* 2. Thobel, Meso•eh. S. Thubal, Mesech. H. Thubal, Mesech, &c.

4. Citij. Rhodij. H.S. Cethim Dodanim. H. C•tt•m, Donanim, &c.

* 7. Regma, Sabathaca. S. H. Ch. Raamah. Sabtecha. T. B. G. A. heb. Ragmah.

8. A gyant, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, in the earth. S. a mighty man, &c. ghibb•r. robustus, strong.

9. A giant hunter. S. a mighty hunter. H. B. G. a mighty man, Ch. mighty in hunting. T. P. heb.

10. Arach. S. H. Erech. cat. Eerech, &c. in the land of Babylon. Ch. Sennaer, or Sinhar▪ cat. sic & heb.

11. Out of that land came Assur. S. H. cum caeter. Out of this land he came into Assur. Tr. built the streets of the City. H. Rahoboth the City, caeter. rachab. breadth.

* 12. Dasem. S. Resen: caet.

14 Cappadoces. Ch. Captharim, caeter.

18. Cynaeum. S.H. Ch. Cynaum, caet. cum s. Sini. Eveum. Arachaum, S. H. T. Evaeos, Arachaeos. Ch. Hi•i, Archi, Sini. B. G. heb.

By these were spread. H. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . after this. S. & caet. achar, afterward.

19. Gerar. Gaza. S. Ierar. Gaza. H. Gerer. Azzah. cat. gnazah.

21. The elder brother of Iapheth. H. B. G. Ch. the brother of Iapheth the Elder 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . S.T. hagadhe. Iapheth the great: for Iapheth was the elder, as shall be seene afterward.

24 Arphaxad begat Cainan. S. the rest have not Cainan. Likewise another Cainan is rehearsed by the 70. among the sonnes of Sem, v. 23.

27. Iazal. H. Aizal. S. Vzal. Ch. B. G. Vxal. Vzal.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QVEST. I. Of the number of the heads of the Gentiles.

Vers. 1. These are the generations, &c. The fathers have curiously endeavoured to bring the chiefe heads of the fathers of the Gentiles rehearsed in this Chapter, to the number of 72. and therefore Augustine following some Greeke translations, maketh Elisha to be the 8. sonne of Iapheth, and so reckoneth 15. in all to come of Iapheth: whereas there are but onely 14. of Chams progeny, he counteth on|ly 31. leaving out the Philistims: Epiphanius 32. of Sem Augustine reckoneth 27. Epiphanius but 25. ac|counting Peleg with Heber; and Ioktan, together with his posterity. But the true reckoning is this: of Ia|pheth 14. of Cham beside the Philistims, 31. of Sem, 26. are rehearsed, which makes in all 71. and with their three fathers, Iapheth, Cham, Sem, 74. and with the Philistims, 75. Iun. the Hebrewes make but 70. in all beside the fathers, to answer to the 70. persons, that descended into Aegypt of Iacob.

QVEST. II. Of the names of the Gentiles.

1. NEither are all the heads and fathers of the Gentiles here named, but those which were the chiefe and most famous, and such as were best knowne and nearest situate to the Jewes: and there|fore least mention is made of Iapheths generation, which inhabited further off among the Gentiles, Calvin. • Concerning the names which the nations retained of their fathers, many are worne out by conti|nuance of time: * many changed by the Grecians, that gave them new names, as Iosephus thinketh, many altered by warre and conquest, Oecolamp. yet the names were not so altered, but that in the time of the Prophets and long after, they were knowne, and so in Scripture mentioned by these appellations.

QVEST. III. Whether these heads made so many distinct nations.

FURther, 1. Neither is it like, that these heads, and fathers here rehearsed made so many divers distinct languages and nations: for the Cananites, that contained eleven sundry people, v. 16, 17. spake all but one language: and the text saith, they were divided according to their families, v. 5. that is, divers fami|lies concurred together according to their language to make one nation.

Iunius. 2. Neither is it probable, that the whole world was at the first distributed among the three sonnes of Noah by lot,* as Epiphanim writeth, or as Berosus, that Noah taking a view of the whole world sayling by Sea, did appoint the three parts of the world, Europa to Iapheth, Affrica to Cham, Asia to Sem: for in the ages succeeding: many countrieys were discovered, unknowne before. But it is most probable, that the coasts and confines of the large and wide countreys, were inhabited by these fathers of the world, into the which afterward their posterity was spread and dispersed: and that Moses especially describeth the habitation and dwelling of those nations, which were nearest and best knowne to the Israelites: and in processe of time the three parts of the world were for the most part possessed, Europa by Iapheths posteritie, Africa by Chams, Asia by Sems: yet so, that in all these coasts, some of each were intermingled: as the Medes in Asia came of Madaï of Iapheth, the Cananites in Asia of Chusof Cham.

Now the reasons, why mention is made of these generations may be these: 1. to shew the effect of that blessing, which the Lord gave to Noah and his sonnes to multiply and increase. 2. to demonstrate the judgement of God upon the posterity of Cham, and his blessing upon Sem, according to Noahs prophesie. 3. to acquaint the Israelites with the nations of the Gentiles, from whom they were to expect their inheritance: 4. to open a way to the understanding of the Scripture, wherein the names of these nations doe often occur.

QVEST. IIII. The causes why Moses rehearseth the generations of Noahs sonnes.

Vers. 2. SOnnes of Iapheth. Moses beginneth with Iapheth, not as some thinke, from the younger proceeding to the elder, for it is evident, chap. 9.24. that Cham was younger than Sem: neither for that Iapheth was the eldest, doth he name him first, for then Sem should be the youngest, because he is mentioned last: but Moses beginneth where he ended in the former chapter at Iapheth, v. 27. that he might determine the story in Sem, of whom and his posterity the rest of this booke entreateth: and because Ia|pheths posterity inhabited the countries furthest off, he beginneth there first. Mercer.

QVEST. V. What countries Iapheths sonnes inhabited.

Vers. 2. Gomer, Magog, Madaï, Iavan, &c. Gomer inhabited the North parts in respect of Palestina toward the West, Ezek. 38.6. whom Iosephus thinketh to be the Galatians,* or Gallogrecians called Gomerites, the same which Herodotus nameth Cimmerii, or Cimbri, lib. 4. they inhabited the inward parts of Asia, in Phrygia, neare to Troas. Wherefore Gomer cannot be assigned to Africa, as Ierosolymitan.

2. Magog: some understand by Magog the Gothes, other the Sarmatians, Hierosolymit. the Germans: but they are most like to be the Scythians,* Mercer. which before were called Magogei▪ and this may be an evidence thereof, because the Scythians wasting Asia, called the chiefe City, Magog, afterward named Hierapolis, as witnesseth Pliny, lib. 5. c. 23. Iunius.

3. Madaï: this was the father of the Medes, who at the first were subject to the Assyrians and Chaldeans, 2 King. 17.6. but afterward the Medes surprised Babylon, Isa 13.17.* Behold I will stirre up the Medes against thee.

4. Iavan: from him came the Grecians, as Ioel. 3.6. I•vanim, being the plurall of Iavan, is translated by the Septuagint, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, of the Greekes: Hecataeus in Strabo.

lib. 9. saith,* that the Ionians came out of Asia into Grecia, from whence the Athenians had their beginning, which at the first were called Jones, and their countrey Jonia. Hierosolymitan▪ saith, they were the Macedonians, which had the principality over Greece.

5. Thubal: Epiphanius thinketh him to be the father and founder of the Thessalians: * some of the He|brewes understand the Italians: others take Thubal for the countrey Iberia in Asia, neere to Armenia, where Ptolomy placeth the towne Thabilaca: of those Iberians Ios•phus meaneth that they were called Thubalaei, Thubalians, and not of the Iberians, that is, the Spanyards in Europe, as Pererius citeth him: sic Iunius. But seeing in Scripture Thubal and Mesech are joyned together, which is taken for Arabia: as Ezek. 27.13. and 32.6. some thinke it more like to be a countrey neare to Arabia, Perer. they cannot bee the Spanyards, as Mercerus thinketh. Of all the rest, I judge Iosephus opinion to be most probable, as shall appeare in the next place.

6. Mesech. 1. This is neither like to bee the Muscovites, as some have thought, because of the simili|tude of the letters, Mercer. 2. Neither is Mesech neare Arabia, as Pererius would gather out of the Psalme,* 120.5. Woe is me, that I am constrained to dwell in Mesech, and in the tents of Kedar: for although it bee agreed, that Cedar is here taken for part of Arabia, yet the other word is rather appellative, than proper in this place: and commeth of the Hebrew mashach, which signifieth, to prolong: so the sense is, why doe I so|journe so long, as both Hierome and Tremellius translate: and the Chalde read, I have sojourned, cum Asia/vis, &c. cum tabernaculis Arabiani: with men of Asia, and in the tabernacles of the Arabians. 3. Where|fore it is most like, that Mesech was in Asia neare to Tubals countrey, confining upon Armenia, rather than Arabia, and to be the countrey called Cappadocia. Iosephus saith, that the Cappadocians were first called Mesochaei, Mesochians. Pliny nameth them Mossyni, Epiphanius Mossynaeci:* and Mela witnesseth that there is a certaine hill in Armenia toward Cappadocia, called Moschicus: and Iosephus testifieth, that there was a certaine City in Cappadocia, called Mosecha, afterward Caesarea: this therefore is that Mesech which is joyned so often in the Scripture with Thubal.

7. Thiras. 1. which is neither the Turkes, as the Hierosolymitan. 2. nor the Persians, as Selomo Iarchi. 3. But as it is received of the most, this was the father of the Thracians,* who inhabited neare unto Pontus Euxinus, not so called, Thraces, tanquam, truces, of their cruell and savage nature, as of the hardnesse of the countrey, but of their first founder Thyras. Mercer. Iun.

QVEST. VI. Where the sonnes of Gomer inhabited.

*Vers. 3. The sonnes of Gomer, Ashkenaz, Riphath, Togarmah: 1. Some take Ashk•naz for the Gothes or Scithians: Genevens. Ierom. 51.27. 2. Some for Germany, Iosephus for the Rhagini, a people of Italy: sic Mercer. 3. But it is most like they were a people inhabiting Asia: as Ierosolymitan gathereth, Ierem. 51.27. where Ashkenaz is numbred among the assistants of the Medes and Persians that came against Babylon: And for the better evidence hereof, there is a lake in Bithynia called Ascania: and cer|taine Ilands of the Sea Aegeum,* are named Ascania. Pliny also maketh mention of a famous mart towne in Phrygia called Ascania: ex Iunio.

*2. Riphath called also Diphath, 1 Chron. 1.6. Epiphanius taketh them for the Caspians, Ierosolymitan, for the Phrigians, Mercerus, for the R•phei. But it is most like they were the Paphlagonians, who Iosephus saith were called Riphathaei, whereof also the mountaines Riphaei were so named.

*3. Togarma: this neither is like to be Turks, as the Jewes, nor the Germaine, as the Chalde paraphrast, Ezech. 27.13. for they had no traffick with Ti^ous, being so farre distant, nor yet Barbary, as the Jerosolymitan. Paraphrast: for Ezech. 38.6. the Thogarmians are reckoned among those nations that assisted Gog, the Prince of Asia against the Israelites: Iosephus taketh Togarma for the Phrigians: but they are most like to be a people of Armenia the lesse, whose Kings were called Tygranes, as derived from Togarmah. Iun.

QVEST. VII. Of the sonnes of Iavan.

Vers. 4. The sonnes of Iavan, Elisha, &c. Elisha, the Chalde Paraphrast taketh for Italia: Ezech. 27.7. some for the fortunate Islands: * whereof the Poets tooke occasion so much to celebrate the campi Elysii, the Elisian fields: tharg: Hieros. for Hellas, Graecia: Iosephus for the Aeolians famous for purple Ezech. 27.7. which is most probable: Iunius. Mercer.

2. Tarshish: Iosephus taketh it for India, that yeeldeth gold, lib. 8. antiquit. and so doth Hierome: the Septuagint Ezech. 23. for Tarshish, * reade Carthage: the Chalde paraphrast, Ierem. 10. Africa: But Tarshish is rather Cilicia, where was the City Tarsus, S. Pauls countrey, Iunius, Mercer. Act. 21.39. And hereupon because the Cilicians were chiefe Navigators and commanders of the Mediterranean sea: all those coasts along were called Tarshish.

*3. Kittim: some understand the Italians and Romanes, as the Latine translation and Chalde Paraphrast, Numer. 24.24. Iosephus and Epiphanius the Cyprians, where was the Citie Citium, the towne of Zeno Citius, chiefe of the Stoikes: Mercer. But Kittim are rather the people called Citii, inhabiting in Asia, neare to Cilicia: of whom that City in Cyprus might be so called.

*4. Dodanim or Rhodanim, 1 Chron. 1. v. 1. for the Hebrew dale^oh and resh, may easily be mistaken one for another: the Hierosolymitan. understandeth Dodana in Epirus, Mercer. some the countrey by Rodanus the river of Rhone. But the Rodians of the Isle Rodes, are most like to take their beginning from hence, as the Septuagint interpret. Iun.

QVEST. VIII. Of the Isles of the Gentiles.

Vers. 5. The Isles of the Gentiles: that is all the sea coasts upon the Mediterranean sea, not only the Islands, as Rhodes, Ciprus, but the countries bordering upon the Sea were inhabited by these sonnes of Iavan: for as Hierome citeth out of Varro and others, the Grecians, replenished the sea coasts from the mountaines Amanus and Taurus, almost to the British sea: the other sonnes of Iapheth inhabited the Asiⁱan and East parts, as is before shewed: And as yet there was no division of tongues, whereof Moses entreateth: * c. 11. but he here speaketh thereof by way of anticipation.

QVEST. IX. Of the sonnes of Cham.

Vers. 6. The sonnes of Ham were Chus: Ham or Cham with his posterity dispersed themselves into the Meridionall or Sotherne parts of the world, both in Asia and Africa: whereupon the tents or Tabernacles of Cham, are taken for Aegypt, Psal 78 51. and Chemmis was the name of a great Citie in Thebais and of an Island: * Chush is taken in Scripture both for Arabia in Asia, and the great countrey Aethiopia in Africa: Genes. 2.13. the land of Chush must needs bee understood to bee Arabia: Numb. 12. Zippora Moses wife, is said to bee Chusitis, a Chusite, or as other read an Aethiopian: and yet shee was a Madianite, * which countrey bordered upon Arabia: so 2 Chron. 14.9. Zerah King of Chush or Aethiopia, came against Asia: which is not like to have beene King of the African Aethiopia, which was a great way distant from Palestina, * neither was there cause of hostility or enmity betweene the Jewes and them, being so farre disjoyned: and the text saith, that Asa pursued the Aethiopians to Gerar, and smote the Cities about it, which did belong (as should seeme) to Z^orah: But this Gerar was in the confines of Palestina, as may appeare by the peregrination of Abraham and Isaack: Genes. 20.26. But that in some places Chush is taken for the greater Aethiopia beyond Aegypt, is evident also in the Scripture: as 2 King. 19.9. Tirhak King of Aethiopia, came out against Senacherib, under whose dominion Arabia and the countries adjoyn[ing] in Asia were: likewise Ierem. 13.23. can the Aethiopian or Chushite change his skin? &c. Wherefore Beroaldus opinion, * that would have Arabia only taken for Chush upon the reason before alleaged, want|eth sufficient ground: there was then two countries called Chush or Aethiopia, one in Asia, the other in Africa, one in the West, the other toward the East: which two countries were severed by the Arabian sea. This distinction Pererius well noteth to have beene observed by forreine writers. Homer; Herodotus, Pliny.

* Mizraim is by a generall consent taken for Aegypt, which was so called of Aegyptus, brother to Danaus, who there reigned, having expelled his brother: which happened, as Augustine following Eusebius saith, in Iosua his time, more than 800. yeares after the flood: But according to the computation of Manethon an Aegyptian Chronographer cited by Iosephus, lib. 1. cont. Appion: it was 390. yeares after Moses lead[ing] of the Israelites out of Aegypt. [Put, otherwise called Pul. Isac. 66.19. from him came the Lybians, so the Septuagint translate: Ezech. 30.5. the inhabitants were first called Puthaei: and in Mauritania there was a river of that name called Phut: Iosephus, lib. 1. antiquit. Plin. lib. 5. c. 1. * Epiphanius taketh them to be the people called Axumitae beyond Aegypt, among the Troglodites: from this name some conjectu^oe Phaeton to be derived, which gave occasion to the Poeticall fictions: So it is most like, that Phut and his posterity inhabited the African coasts: the people since were called Libians of Libya the daughter of Epa|phus, and the country Africa, of Apher sonne of Hercules the Lybian.*

Chanaan: the posterity of this Canaan is exactly described, v. 15. these were all called by one generall name of Cananites, but distinguished into divers other people: * whose countrey was afterward given unto Abraham and his posterity.

QVEST. X. Of the Sabeans.

Vers. 7. The sonne of Chuch, Saba, &c. These Sabeans, were neither people of Aethiopia, as Iosephus, nor yet so called, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, of worshipping, because the incense, which came from them was used in sacrifices: But they inhabited Arabia Faelix: of these Sabeans the Prophet Isay speaketh, 45.19. prophane authors also make mention of them: Pliny maketh them a people of Arabia famous for incense, * dwelling betweene the two Seas, the Persian and Arabicke: Strabo saith also, Sabaei faelicem Arabam in|colunt, &c. they inhabited the fortunate or happy Arabia: and he further describeth them by their rich commodities of incense, mirrh, cynamon, balme: wherof they have such abundance, that they use cynamon and casia, in stead of wood for the fire: they have their beds, tables, stooles, vessels of silver, * and gold &c.

2. Chavilah, Iosephus, and Hierome following him to whom subscribeth, Mercer. thinke this to be the Getulians in the remote parts of Africa: but it is most like to bee a countrey not farre from the Ismalites and Amalekites in Asia, confining upon the countrey Susiana, in Persia: for the Ismalites dwelt from Havilah to Sur, Gen. 25.18. and Saul smote Amaleck from Havilah to Sur, 1 Sam. 15.7. yet this is ano|ther Chavilah from that mentioned, v. 29.

3. Sabthah: which cannot be the people Astabari in Aethiopia, so called of the river Astabarus,^{*} which runneth into Nilus, as Iosephus thinketh, and Mercerus. But these people called of the Greekes Sabbathelni, inhabited a part of Arabia Faelix neare to the Persian Sea: where Ptolomy placeth the City Sabathe: which seemeth to be the same that Pliny calleth Sabbatholes, which hath within the wals 60. temples.^{*}

4. Rahma, Hier. Regma: Epiphanius agreeing with Iosephus, thinke this Regmah to bee the countrey Garaon, Garamantus, in Lybia: but by their merchandize of precious stones and spice, Ezech. 27.22. they are rather thought to inhabite Arabia Faelix: where Ptolomy placeth the City Ragamah.

5. Sabthca, the founder of the people Sacalitae, in Arabia Faelix, neare to the Persian gulph: Iun.

QVEST. XI. Of Sheba and Dedan.

Vers. 7. The sonnes of Raamah, Sheba, Dedan: This Sheban is another, from Saba before mentioned: the first being written with Shin, the other with Samech: and this Sheba differeth from that Shelba, which was of *Abraham*s posterity. Genes. 25.3. that Shebah inhabited Arabia deserta: but this in Aethiopia. It was the Queene of this countrey that came to Salomon, 1 King. 10.1. called the Queene of the South, Matth. 12. But Arabia is more East than South, from Palestina: the Queenes of this countrey were called by the name of Candaces, Act. 8. The Sabeans that drove away Iobs cattell, were not as Pe/rerius thinketh, and Mercerus of this people, but of the other Shabeans of Arabia deserta.

Dedan Iosephus and Hierome, place the Dedanaeans in Aethiopia, so also Mercerus: but that is not like because they did trafficke with Tyrus, Ezek. 27.20. which they could not conveniently doe,^{*} if they dwelt in the remote and farre distant country of Aethiopia. It is more probable, that they inhabited some part of Arabia Faelix, not farre from Idumea: as may appeare, Ierem 49.8. where the name of Dedan are threatned to bee destroyed, together with Edom, as being their assistant and coadjutors in evill. But let this further bee noted, that there are two other of the same name. Dedan and Sheba, which came to Abraham by Ketura, Gen. 25. which inhabited Arabia deserta.

QVEST. XII. Of Nimrods cruelty.

Vers. 8. AND Chus begat Nimrod. 1. Augustine, as the Septuagint also translate, thinketh he was a gylant in the stature of his body. 2. Hierome, that he first exercised tyranny and cruell dominion:^{*} whereas before there was no such violent rule practised. 3. Wherein his ambition appeareth, to seeke to be Lord of all, Noah yet living. Calvin. 4. Iosephus saith that he provoked men to pride and contempt of God, teaching men to ascribe their happinesse to themselves, not unto God. 5. Hugo saith, he brought in Idolatry, teaching men to worship fire, that was so commodious to men, which error the Chaldeans followed. 5. Hee is called a Hunter by a Metaphor, because hee hunted men, as beasts are chased, Ierem. 4 18.

QVEST. XIII. How Nimrod is said to be a mighty hunter before the Lord.

Vers. 9. A Mighty hunter before the Lord.] 1. which words are neither to be so taken, as if it should have been said, that Nimrod was the mightiest man under heaven, sic Vatablus, and Mercerus following Ramban. 2. Neither that Nimrod did offer in sacrifice to God, the beasts which he hunted for, Aben Ezra. Nor yet that Nimrod did simulate, dissemblingly professe himselfe a worshipper of God, Caljetane. 4. Neither doth this clause onely serve to amplifie, as Psal. 104.16. the Cedars are called the Cedars of God, that is, high trees: So Nimrod should here bee said to bee a hunter before the Lord, that is, a mighty hunter: as Ramban: for that is said before. 5. As for that fable of the Hebrewes, that Nimrod was cloathed with the same skinnes which Adam and Eve did weare, by vertue whereof both man and beast were obedient to him, we utterly reject it. 6. Neither need we to turne the word, before the Lord, against the Lord, as Augustines sheweth the use of the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which signifieth both, lib. 16. de Civit. cap 4. 7. But the right meaning is, that even in the sight and presence of God, without all feare of God, Nimrod practised tyranny and cruelty: so that it grew unto a proverb, to resemble a cruell tyrant and oppressor to Nimrod.

QVEST. XIII. Who that Nimrod was.

Nimrod. 1. This Nimrod was neither the sonne of Ionithus, whom Noah should beget after the flood, who should for rule and dominion-sake associate himselfe to the stocke of Cham,* as forged Methodius fableth: for the Scripture testifieth, that he was the sonne of Chush. 2. Neither was Nimrod the father of Iupiter Belus, the father of Ninus, as Berosus Annianus, l.b. 5. antiquit. Chaldaic. who should beginne the Empire of the Babylonians, an. 130. yeare after the flood: for it is not like that Monarchie grew so soone to be so mighty, the world not yet being replenished. 3. Neither can he be Ninus, because he is said to build Ninive, vers. 11. as Meacator: for that City might be begunne by Nimrod, and enlarged by Ninus, 4. Neither can Mercators conjecture be sound,* that Nimrod was not the immediate sonne of Chush, because he is reckoned after the Nephew of Chush: but this might be (to omit their conjecture, that he was begot|ten of an harlot) either because he was borne after his nephewes Sheba and Dedan: or else the Scripture speaketh of him alone, as the most eminent person, and to take occasion thereby to touch his tyranny: sic Augustin. Mercer. 5. Neither is it like, that this Nimrod was Zoroaster,* as Epiphanius. 6. But it is most like, that this Nimrod was the same, whom forren stories call Belus, whom they make the founder of the Babylonian Monarch: and both of them were the first inventors of Idolatry: So Iosephus saith of Nimrod: and it is evident, that many Idols names among the Gentiles in those East parts were derived from Belus: as B.lial, Belzebub, Belphegor.

QVEST. XIV. Of the Countries Arach.

Vers. 10. The beginning of his Kingdome was Babel, &c. 1. Babel was so called, because there the Lord confounded their languages: of ballall, to confound. 2. Arach: it may bee Arecha, in the Province Susiana in Persia: but more like to be Edessa in Mesopotamia neere Euphrates, not that Edessa which was afterwards called Antioch: sic Hierosolym. Hieronym. Mercer. 3. Accad is Nisibis in that part of Mesopotamia,* which is corruptly of Geographers called Acabene, for Accadene, Mercer. 4. Calne, which is not Selucia, as Hierome or Ctesiphon, as Hierosolmyt. and Mercer, but rather the famous Mart Towne Callinisum, Iun. that it was a Towne of fame, may appeare, Amos 6.2. goe unto Calneh, &c. 5. Sinhar:* this is the Countrey of *Chaldae*a and Mesopotamia, where is the mountaine Singaras, and the Towne Singara thereof called. Iun.

QVEST. XV. Of the building of Babel.

COncerning the building of Babel. 1. Q. Curtius seemeth to ascribe it to Belus, lib. 5. 2. Others to Semiramis, Herodotus lib. 1. Diodor. lib.•. 3. Berosus cited by Iosephus, to Nebuchadnazar: lib 1. cont. App.on. 4. Berosus Annianus maketh all three builders of Babylon: Nimrod began the Tower, an. 131. after the flood: then Belus built the City, who reigned after Nimrod 62. yeares, and he himselfe reigned 56. yeares: then Semiramis, the wife of Ninus, which reigned 24. yeares, much enlarged and fortified the Citie. To this purpose Berosus Annianus. And after all this, when Assyrian kings had made Ninive, the Imperiall seate, so that Babylon was neglected, and much decayed, at the last Nebucadnazar; having conquered the Citie of Ninive, reedified and beautified Babylon, as it is in the 4. of Dan. But yet the beginning and foundation of Babylon was laid by Nimrod, as the Scripture here testifieth, the beginning of his Kingdome was Babel. Hereunto agree Iosephus. Orosius▪ lib. 16. August. lib. 16. de Civit. Dei. cap. 4.

QVEST. XVI. Of Assur.

Vers. 11. OVt of that land came Assur, or he went to Assur. 1. Neither Assuris here taken for the proper name of Sems sonne,* who as Augustinethinketh, first obtained the dominion of Nimrod, and then went and built other Cities, whereof the first was afterward called Ninive: the same also is the opinion of Iosephus and Mercerus, following Kimchi. For it is not like that Assur of godly Sem, was such another mighty hunter as Nimrod was:* and if Assur obtained Nimrods Empire, he was the mighty hunter and not Nimrod. 2. Neither is it like as Hierom writeth, de terra illa pullulavit Assyriorum imperium, that the Empire of the Assyrians did spring out of Nimrods Countrey:* for it is not probable that Sem and Chams stocke were so soone confederate together. 3. Neither was this Assur the sonne of Iapheth, as Ab. Ezra, or the son of Nimrod, as Epiphanius. 4. Nor yet is Assur here taken for the King of Assyria: that Ninus King of Assur came out from the land of Sin•ar to conquer other Countries, as Pererius seemeth to thinke: for it is not like that Moses would call Ninus by the proper name of Assur; the one comming of Cham, the other of Sem. 5. But the better reading is, that out of that land, he, that is Nimrod, or some of his posterity, came into Assyria, Iun. so that Assur is here taken, neither for the King or Kingdome of Assyria, or for the proper name of Assur, but for the region and countrey of Assyria. This Iunius following Ram/ban, to whom consenteth Mercator; saving that hee erroneously thinketh,* that Nimrod and Ninus the founder of Ninive, were all one. But it is more probable, that Nimrod first came into the countrey called Assyria, and began to build that City, which was afterward enlarged by Ninus, and called by his name.

QVEST. XVII. Of the beginning and continuance of the Assyrian Monarchy.

BUT here occasion is offered, briefly to touch the beginning and continuance of the Assyrian Monar|chy. 1. Ninus is held to have beene the first Monarch of the Assyrians, as Hierome saith, most histo|riographers consent therein: in the 43. yeere of his reigne Abraham was borne, 352. yeares after the floud: the last King of the Assyrians, was Sardanapalus. 2. The number of the Kings (comming between) is uncertaine: Velleius Paterculus reckoneth 33. Eusebius, 36. Orosius, 50. Diodorus, 30. onely:* but the matter is not great: for few or none of all this number, were famous for their vertue or worthy acts: nei|ther doth the knowledge thereof give any light to the divine stories. 3. Likewise authors disagree about the continuance of the Monarchy: 1. Some ascribe unto it too much, as the Aegyptians, 5000. yeares, as Alexander writeth in an epistle to Olympias, cited by Augustine. 2. Some give too small a time, as Herodotus, of 500. yeares, lib. 1.3. But others yeeld a longer time: as Velleius a 1070. yeares, Instinus a 1300. lib. 1. Eusebius, Cyril, Isidor, Beda, a 1240. yeares: Diodorus a 1390. which opinion is most probable:* for from Abrahams birth to Manasses raine under the which the Assyrian Monarchy ceased, are counted yeares an 1310. adde hereunto 40. yeeres of Ninus raine before Abrahams birth, and they make a 1350. And if the Assyrian Empire were surprized in the 40. yeare of Manasses, as Pererius thinketh, the whole time will make a 1390. yeares. Perer.

QVEST. XVIII. How long the City of Ninive stood.

Vers. 11. And builded Ninive, &c. Concerning the continuance also of this City of Ninive, and the final overthrow thereof, many opinions there are. 1. It is not like, that this City was destroyed either in the 7. yeare of Ozias, as Eusebius thinketh, or in the reigne of Manasses, as Iosephus: either in the 14. yeare of his reigne: as Diodorus, or the 40. as Pererius: nor yet under Iosias, as Hierome: for in the last yeare of Iosias reigne, Pharao Necho went up against the King of Assur, 2 King. 23.29. As yet then the Kingdome of Assur flourished and Ninive also the head City thereof. 2. Neither is it like that Ninive was surprized by Ciaxares King of Medes, after whom Astiages reigned 35. yeares; whom Cyrus succeeded, as Herodotus: for thus the destruction of Ninive should fall within the 70. yeares captivity of the Israelites. But whereas the Prophet Nahum prophesieth that Ninive should bee destroyed by the Chaldeans, Nahum. 3.7. The opinion of the Hebrewes is most like, that Nabuchadnezer destroyed Ninive (and not the King of the Medes,) in the first yeare of his reigne, about the beginning of Iehoiakims reigne: for it is not like that the King of the Chaldeans could so prevaile and begin his Monarchy, till hee had conquered the King of Assur, and subdued the chiefe City the strength of his Kingdome; so then the Kingdome of Assyria, and state of Ninive continued almost 50. yeares beyond the 40. yeare of Manasses: that is 15. yeares more of Manasses reigne: and of 29. Iosias, and some part of Iehoiakims reigne: which make in all a 1440. yeares, or thereabout.

QVEST. XIX. Of Rehoboth, Calah, Resen.

Vers. 11. The City Rehoboth, and Calah, Resen. &c. This is a great City.] 1. Rehoboth is here the proper name of a City, not to be taken appellatively for the broad streets of Ninive, as Hierosolymit. and Hierome: for the addition of the word (City) sheweth it to bee a peculiar place so called: and therefore it is called Rehoboth of the river: Genes: 36.37. likely to bee the City Oraba, which Ptolome placeth upon the river Tygris. 2. Calah, Epiphanius taketh for Thobel: Hierosolym. for the City Hariatha, which Ptolome calleth Arabicarta. But it was rather the chiefe City, of the countrey Calacina, or Calachena in Assyria: whereof Strabo maketh mention, as confining upon Ninive. Iun. 3. Resen,* not as the 70. read Dase: some take it for the Towne Resama in Mesopotamia, some for Arsianes in the province Suliana: Epiphanius calleth it 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Lobus: Hierosolym. Thelessarum: But it is most like to bee the City Bessarum in Assyria, according to Ptolome,* sic Iunius. 4. Ninive was this great City (not Resen before spoken of, as Mercerus following. R. Levi:) not so great in the beginning, but at that time when Moses did thus write: the wals were in compasse 60. miles: the height of 102. feet: the breadth able to receive three carts one meeting another, it had an 150. towres, of the height of 200. feet. In this Citie, when Ionas preached, were an 120. thousand little children, which could not bee above the 5. part, so that the City may be supposed to have had no lesse than 600. thousand inhabitants: It is called a City of 3. dayes journey, that is, to walke about the compasse or circuit thereof, or as Pererius thinketh to take a view of the streets and parts thereof.

QVEST. XX. Of the sonnes of Mizraim.

Vers. 13. Misraim begat Ludim, &c. 1. Ludim are not the Lydians of Asia minor, but a people rather confining upon the Aegyptians, and confederate with them, as Ierem. 46.9. the Prophet nameth the Aethiopians, Lybians, Lydians, as assistants to the Aegyptians: the Ludaei then are the inhabitants of the countrey Meraeotis in Aegypt; some take Ludim for Mauritania. Mercer. Hierosol. 2. The Hanamaei,* Hananims, are the Pentapolites or Cyrenians in Aegypt. Hieros. or rather a people in Aethiopia: Mercer.

3. Lehabims, they are the Lybians in Africa, where also the people called before Phutei, inhabiting the inward parts. ^{*}Hierom. in tradition in Genes. 4. The Naphtahims, are certaine Aethiopians in the further part of Aegypt: where there was a City called Napatha: Plin. lib. 6. c. 29. 5. Pathrusims: not the Pelusians in the edge of Aegypt, as Hierosol. or the inhabitants of Arabia Petrea, but the Pharusians rather, as Ptolome and Pliny call them: a people inhabiting the middle part of Aegypt: whereof Isay maketh men|tion, Isay 11.11. Mercer. 6. The Caslahims are the inhabitants of the countrey Cassiotis, and the Cap|thorims of the region Sethroitis, about the mouth of Nilus, bordering upon Palestina. Iun.

QVEST. XXI. Of the originall of the Philistims.

Vers. 14. OVt of whom came the Philistims. 1. These are they whom the septuagint call Allophyli, that is, aliens or strangers, and the Latines Palestini, and their countrey Palestina, which contain|ned five regions, according to five principall Cities, of Gaza, Ascalon, Gath, Accaron, Azotus: all borde|ring upon the Mediterranean sea. 2. These Philistims came of the Capthorims: for so are they called the remnant of the Isle of Capthor. Ierem.47.4. which Capthorims cannot be the Cappadocians as the Chal|de readeth here, ^{*} and both the Greeke and Latine interpreter. Deut. 2.28. for the Cappadocians inhabited a large countrey neare to Pontus and the hill Taurus, farre distant from Palestina: and therefore it is not like the Philistims should come from so farre: and of any other Cappadocia nearer hand, we find no men|tion: But these Capthorims inhabited in the nearer parts of Aegypt, as is before shewed. 3. Whereas here the Philistims are said to come from the Casluhims; ^{*} and in other places from the Capthorims: it may be explained thus, that the Capthorims came first up to the Casluhims, which is in the way to Palestina, and joyn|ing with them, (being yet the chiefe ringleaders themselves) invaded the country Palestina: 4. Some thinke, that both the Philistims, and Capthorims, came of the Casluhims, Mercer: but the better read|ing is to make this a parenthesis (of whom came the Philistims) so that the Capthorims, shall be the seventh sonne of Mizraim. 5. Some Hebrewes will have the Philistims, and Capthorims, to come both of the Pathrasims, and Casl|hans: of whom marrying together, they say were the Philistims Giants, and the Capthorims dwarfes: But the Philistims are here said to come of the Casluhims. 5. This Palestina then was first inhabited by the Cananites, which were expelled by the Capthorims, Deut. 2.23. and though after|ward it was inhabited by the Philistims, yet it was part of the land of Canaan, and so of right belonged to the land of promise.

QVEST. XXII. Of the progeny of the Cananites.

Vers. 15. AND Canaan, begat Zidon, &c. 1. He was the founder of Sidon, a City in Phaenici|, called great Sidon, Iosu. 19.28. because it was a famous City, more ancient than Tirus, which the Prophet nameth the daughter of Sidon, ^{*}Isay 23.12. Iustinus thinketh it was so called of the abundance of fish, for in the Phaenician language, a fisherman is called Said; but it is more like that Sidon beareth the name of the founder to this day.

^{*}2. Cheth or Heth: from him came the Hethites, that dwelt about Hebron, as it may appeare by the cave, which Abraham bought of them: Genes. 23.19. This was a warlike people, and of them were there gyants, men of great stature: of whom the Syrians were afraid, lest the King of Israel had hired them. 2 King. 7.6.

^{*}3. Iebusi, the founder of the City Jebus, afterward called Jerusalem, Iosua 18.28. from whence they could not be expelled till Davids time, 2 Sam. 5.

^{*}4. Emori, father of the Amortheans, or Amorites: which inhabited about Bashan and Gilead, whose king was Og: their country fell to the lot of Gad and Ruben, and the halfe tribe of Manasses, Num. 21. these Amorites were dispersed into divers parts of the land of Canaan: and therefore the whole country, beareth their name, Genes. 15.16. the wickednesse of the Amorites is not yet full: their stature of body was great: therefore compared to the Cedars: Amos 2.9. But their wickednesse was greater: as the Prophet to set forth the sinne of Israel saith, their father was an Amorite, &c. Ezech. 16.3.

*5. Girghashi: of whom came the Gergasenes: Matt. 8. by the lake Tiberias, where was the Towne of Ptolome, called Gerasa, of Iosephus Cesaera, of Pliny Gelasa, hence some thinke the lake Genesar had the name. Mercer

*6. Hivi: of him came the Hivites: these dwelt under mount Hermon: Iosua 11.3. which is a part of mount Lebanon, Iud. 3.3. toward the East, belonging to Trachonitis: Perer. some of the Hebrewes take the Hivites and Rephaim for all one: and for that cause Genes. 15.20. where the nations of the Cananites are rehearsed, the Rephaim are named, and the Hivites omitted.

*7. Arki: who built the City Areas, over against Tripolis, under Lebanon, Hierom.

*8. Sivi: of whom the desart of Sin tooke the name. Perer. and the City Sin, not farre from Lebanon Hierom. of him came the inhabters of Caparsa, Hierosal. a towne in Idumea, not farre from Jebus toward the south: Ptolom.

*9. Arvadi: of whom came the Aradians, that inhabited the Island Aradus, famous for their skill in sea-faring: Ezech. 27. v. 8.

*10. Zemari: Hierom placeth the Semareans in Colo Syria, with their city Edessa: Hierosol. taketh them for the Emisseni in Syria, whom Pliny calleth Hemiseni: But it is most like that he was the author of those that inhabited Zemaraim. Iosua 18.22. of whom also the mountaine Zemaraim was so called, 2 Chron. 13.4.

*11. Chamathi: two Cities of this name Chamath we read of in the Scripture, one in the land of Canaan, which belonged unto the possession of Nephthaly, Iosua 19.35. called Hamoth Dor, one of the Cities of refuge, Iosua 21.32. The other was a chiefe Citie of Damascus, Ierem. 49.23. Tou the King of this Hamath, was in league with David, 1 Chron. 18.9. This Chamath the sonne of Canaan was the father of the Inhabitants of this Country, which Zeiglerus would have to be Ithurea: Iosephus, and Hierome, and Hierosol. thinke this Hamath to be Antiochia, the chiefe City of Syria, Iunius taketh it for the Province Camatha, which extendeth from Lebanon to Arabia deserta, the chiefe City whereof in time past was called Amathus.

QVEST. XXIII. Of the Perizzites.

BUt whereas Genes. 15.20, 21. two other Nations are named which inhabited the promised land: the Canaanites and Perizzites, whereof no mention is made in this place. The reason hereof may bee, 1. either because those were of some of these kindreds: the one called Canaanites, as being the chiefe among them; the other might be the Samareans, as Pererius, or some other, so called, because they inhabited the plaine Countrey, in unwall'd Townes, for so the word is taken, Esther 9.19. where the Jewes are called Perazim, that is, dwelling in Villages. 2. Or which is most like, as all these eleven sonnes of Canaan dwell'd not in Canaan, as the Arvadians, and Camatheans: so some forrainers of other kindreds might inhabite amongst them which came not of Canaan, as the Kenites, Kenizites, Cadmonites, whose Countrey is promised to Abraham, Gen. 15.19. Such were the Philistims that came of the Capthorims, which expelled the Anims, Deut. 2.23. Iosua 13.3. There were also the Geshurites and Maachathites, Iosu. 13.13. Such also might these Perizzites be. 3. And beside these people of the Canaanites, the ancient Inhabitants being expelled and removed, might change their names, Mercer.

QVEST. XXIV. Of the borders and bounds of Canaan.

Vers. 9. Then the border of the Canaanites, &c. 1. Moses doth carefully limit the Countrey of Canaan, because it was that land, which the Lord had promised to the Israelites. 2. The four bounds of the Countrey of Canaan, are Zidon in the North, and Gaza on the South on the West side: and on the East side the five Cities Sodoma with the rest (Zoar is not named because it was but a small Towne and of no great account, Gen. 19.20.) in the North corner, and Lasha in the South: the same is Calirrhoe (as Hierome thinketh) where was a Bath of hot waters. 3. This is the description of the whole land of Canaan, which comprehended the seven Nations of the Canaanites, expelled by the Hebrewes. But that land of Canaan, which is described by Iosua, 13.3. was but one Countrey on the West, toward the Sea, a part of this great Country of Canaan, which was the land of the Philistims.

QVEST. XXV. Iapheth the eldest sonne, Cham the youngest.

2. The brother of Iapheth the elder. It is rather thus to be read, then the elder brother of Iapheth. 1. Some thinke that Sem was the youngest sonne of Noah, and Cham the next, and Iapheth eldest: as Lyranus, Tostatus, Genebrard. But the contrary is evident, Gen. 9.24. where Cham is called the younger sonne in respect of Sem and Iapheth. 2. Neither was Sem the eldest: as Augustine thinketh, lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, cap. 3. and Cajetanus, Vatablus, and some Hebrewes, as Kimhi, for Noah was five hundred yeare old, when he beganne to beget his children, Gen. 5.32. and when the flood came he was 600. yeare old, Gen. 7.6. Now two yeare after the flood, Sem at an hundred yeare old begat Arphacsad, Gen. 11.10. but then the eldest sonne of Noah must be an hundred and two yeare old: it remaineth then that Iapheth was the eldest, Sem the next, Cham the youngest, Mercer. Iunius. But Sem is named first, because of his prerogative, as Isaach before Ismael, and Iacob is set before Esau. Cajetanus to make his opinion good, is forced to say, that Sem might be an hundred and two yeare old when he begat Arphacsad; and Pererius is also driven to this shift, to say that Noah might not be five hundred yeare old precisely, but five hundred and two, both which evasions, are manifestly contrary and repugnant to the text, as hath beene shewed▪

QVEST. XXVI. Of the sonnes of Sem.

Vers. 22. The sonnes of Sem, Elam, Ashur, &c. Elam from whence came the Elamites, or Persians: Iosephus, Hieron. as Susan (the head City of Persia) was in the Province of Elam, Dan. 8.2. 2. Ashur gave the name to Assyria. 3. Arphacsad, of whom the Chasdim, that is, the Chaldeans. Pererius deriveth this derivation, and yet bringeth no other in stead thereof: hence was named the Countrey Arphaxitis in Assyria, Mercer. 4. Lud the founder of the Lydians in Asia minor, of the which Country rich Croesus was King: there was another Lud, one of the sonnes of Misraim, father of the Lydians in Africa, as is shewed before, quest. 20. 5. Aram, of whom came the Aramites or Syrians, whereof it is that the Scythians after their returne out of Asia and Syria, were called Aramai, Aramites, Plin. lib. 6. cap. 17. This Country of Aram or Syria, was divided into sundry regions, as the Scriptures make mention of Aram of Damascus, 1 Chron. 18.6. of Aram Maharaim, that is of the floods, Aram Maachah, 1 Chron. 19.6. Padan Ara, Gen. 28.6.

QVEST. XXVII. The sonnes of Aram.

Vers. 23. The sonnes of Aram, &c. 1. Vz or Huz, the founder of the region Trachonitis, Iosephus. Hier▪ whose posterity inhabited the land of Vz, Iobs Countrey, Iob 1.1. which belonged to Idulmaea, Ierem. Lament. 4.22. the Septuagint call it, < in non-Latin alphabet >, Hausitis, 2. Chul: which Iosephus and Hierome take for Armenia: but it is rather the region Palmyr•n•, where Ptolimie placeth the Towne Cholle.

3. Gether:* which Iosephus taketh for the Bactrians, Hierome for the Carians, or Acarnanians: but it is most like to bee the middle part of Syria, about Cassiotis, where Ptolome findeth the Towne Gindarus, whence are the people Gindareni, Plin. lib. 5. c. 23. which may very well be derived of Gether; by an epenthesis the interlacing of u. 4. Mesch, Hierome saith, they are the Mocones, Moenians: Iosephus the Mesanci,* now the Inhabitants of Pasinum in Susianna: Iunius taketh it for that Countrey that lieth betweene Cilicia, and Mesopotamia, and that part of the hill Amanus, which they call Masium: which may very well take beginning of Mesch. Luther thinketh that the region Massa in India, tooke denomination from hence.

QVEST. XXVIII. Of Heber, whether the Hebrewes were named of him.

Vers. 25. VNto Heber were borne two sonnes.] Hence it appeareth, that of this Heber were the Israelites called Hebrewes: and not as some thinke were they so called of Abrahams passage or comming over the River Euphrates, and dwelling on this side: because the Hebrew gnabbar, signifieth a passage or going over. Hence also of this Heber, the Hebrew language is named, which continued in Hebers stocke, in the division of languages, Mercer.

QVEST. XXIX. Of Phaleg. Whether the division of tongues happened in his time.

The name of the one was Phaleg, for in his dayes was the earth divided. Phaleg, signifieth to divide. 1. Some thinke that this name was given to Phaleg at his birth, by way of prophesie: and that the division of tongues happened in the end of Phalegs age, who lived 239. yeares, and was borne ann. 103. after the flood: so that this fell not out in their opinion, till 340. yeares after the flood, some ten yeares before Noahs death, who lived 350. yeares after the flood: of this opinion seemeth Hierome to be, Tosta/itus, Lyranus, and divers other Hebrewes. But this is not like that the divisions of tongues fell out so long after in the end of Pelegs dayes: for why should it be said, that in his dayes rather than of Reu, or Serug, or of the rest, that the earth was divided? for all these, Reu, Serug, Nahor, Terah, were borne before Peleg died. And againe, whereas most of the Inhabitants of the world dwelt together before the buil|ding of the Tower of Babel, and all concurred to set forward that worke; it could not possible bee, if this happened 340. yeare after the flood, when the world must needs have beene exceedingly increased, that such a multitude of people could either dwell together, or assemble into one place, to intend one worke.

2. Mercerus judgement is, that this division of tongues fell not out either in the birth or end of Peleg, but about the hundred yeare or middle part of his age, some 200. yeares after the flood, because of Iock/tans sonnes: And although Reu and Serug might be then borne, yet Moses rehearseth them not here, be|cause they were all of one family and language: But if this be admitted, the reason doth not appeare, why this division should be said to be in Pelegs dayes, rather than of the other fathers, who were then alive, but were not at that time borne as Peleg was.

3. I rather approve therefore Augustines opinion, (to the which learned Iunius and Pererius subscribe,) that this division was made at the birth of Peleg, about 100. yeares after the flood:

The onely doubt is, that because Iocktan the younger brother of Peleg, had 13. sonnes, which all are supposed to have beene men growne, and their languages divided at the building of the Tower of Babel, this should seeme not to be done at the birth of Peleg. Augustines answer here is not sufficient, that Iocktan was elder than Peleg: for if this were granted, yet Iocktan could not bee many yeares borne before Peleg, whom Heber begat at 30. yeares: but for Iocktan to have 13. sons, men of years, when Peleg was a childe, would require the oddes at the least of forty or fifty yeares. Wherefore the better answer is, that it is not necessary to thinke that all those sonnes of Iocktan should have their tongues divided, but that most of them kept the tongue of Heber: as the eleven sonnes of Canaan spake all the Canaanitish tongue: And hereof it is, that the posterity of Heber, who consented not to that wicked enterprise at Babel, were not punished with division of tongues, nor dispersed into remote Countries, as the rest, but dwelt all toward the East: Neither is it to be supposed that all Iocktans sonnes were borne before the building of the Tower: seeing Moses stayleth in Peleg: but he setteth downe all Iocktans sonnes at once, that hee might proceed afterward in the righteous line without interruption.

QVEST. XXX. Of the sonnes of Iocktan.

Vers. 26. Then Iocktan, &c. Concerning these thirteene sonnes of Iocktan, Hierome confesseth, that he could not finde out their names; but thinketh they inhabited in the remote parts of India, and so were not so well knowne as the rest. Iunius also, a most diligent searcher of Antiquities confesseth as much. * 28. Sheba. We read of three of this name in Scripture: one Sheba came of Chus, vers. 7. which inhabited in Aethiopia; another Sheba came of Abraham, which confined upon Persia: see before, qu▪ 11. and Dionysius reckoneth the Shabeans among the Persians: * the third Sheba is this of Iocktan; of whence came the Shabeans in India.

29. Havilah of Iocktan, is another beside Havilah of Chush: for the Countrey was adjoyning to Melsopotamia, * not farre from the Ismaelites and Amalekites. But this Havilah of Iocktan, Iosephus placeth in the Region of India, called Jeria, which is the East or Portugals Indies▪

QVEST. XXXI. Where Ophir is.

Ophar: Iosephus taketh it to be Sophira, a Countrey in India which yeeldeth gold, some take it for the Island Molucca: some for Taprobana: Tostatus thinketh it is that Country, where the golden mines are kept by the Griphins and Lions, so that the accesse unto them is very hard. But this Countrey Mela placeth in Scythia, lib. 2. c. 1. if it be any where: for Plinie holdeth both to be fables, that of the Pegasi, or winged horse in Aethiopia, and this of the Griphins or winged Lions in Scythia. * This Ophir is most like to be in the West Indies, the same region which is called Peru, which seemeth to be derived of the Hebrew Pervaim, mentioned, 2 Chron. cap. 3. vers. 6. Hence the gold of Ophir is translated, * aurum obrizum, by the Latine translator, Iob 28. 16. not so called, as Plinie thinketh, quia rubet, because it is of a red and fierie colour, or as Isidore, quia obradiat, because it glistereth: but rather it may be called obrizum, quasi Opherizum, as Pererius conjectureth.

QVEST. XXXII. Of Mesha and Sephara.

3. Their dwelling was from Mesha, as thou goest to Sephar, &c. 1. Iunius taketh this Messa for the region under the hill Masius; a part of the hill Amanus, which is an hill parting Syria from Cilicia and Sephara for a Towne of Mesopotamia situated upon Euphrates; and by the Mountaine of the East, he understandeth the hilly Countrey of Chaldea. 2. Hierome out of Iosephus maketh Messia a Countrey in India: and Sephara a Mountaine there; where the sonnes of Iocktan inhabited from the River Cophen, to the Countrey Jeria: and this seemeth the more probable, that the sonnes of Iocktan were dispersed in|to the regions further East: because the Countries of Chaldea, Syria, Mesopotamia, and the rest there|about, were possessed by the children of Canaan, as hath beene shewed already.* 3. Though that Sems issue were divided farre into the East, yet he himselfe remained in the land of Canaan, which hee knew (as it was revealed to Abraham) should be given to his posterity. And he is Melchisedech, that did meet Abraham, the King of Salem, Gen. 14. as shall be proved in that place against Pererius and others, that hold the contrary opinion.

QVEST. XXXIII. Cainan none of the sonnes of Sem.

Vers. 13. THese are the sonnes of Sem. 1. Hence appeareth the error of the Septuagint, that beside the five sonnes of Sem here expressed, adde a sixth, one Cainan. 2. It is not to be thought, that every one of these families had a divers language, or made a divers Nation, as Mercerus thinketh it pro|bable, is before shewed quest. 3. but that they sorted themselves according to their diversity of tongues, sometimes divers families of one language concurring to make one Nation,* sometime one family dividing it selfe into divers Nations, as appeareth in the posterity of Eber, in Abraham, of whom came the Ismaellites, and Israelites, in Isaach, of whom descended beside the chosen seed, the Edomites of Esau. 3. Here|of it is, as Augustine well conjectureth, that the issue of all the sonnes of Iapheth, Cham, Sem, are not here named: for of Iapheths seven sonnes, the Genealogie of two onely is rehearsed, and of two likewise of Sems five: not that it is likely, the other had no issue, but because they were not the fathers and foun|ders of Nations, as the rest were, but were adjoyned and numbred with the rest.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Hebrew text authentically.

WHereas the Septuagint doe adde one Cainan to the sonnes of Sem, vers. 22. and another Cainan to the sonnes of Arphacsad, vers. 24. whereas there is no such addition in the Hebrew: it appea|reth that the Hebrew is the authentically language, and other translations to be amended by it.

2. Doct. The antiquity of Moses writings.

IN that Moses rehearseth the fathers and first founders of the Gentiles, by whom they were named: we see the antiquity of Moses story, more ancient than any forraine writer: who are not able to shew the derivations and beginning of the names and generations of the Nations.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against the fained antiquity of the Egyptians.

THE error of the Egyptians is discovered, that boast of their antiquity: that write in their Annales, of 330. Kings before Amasis, and of their continuance for thirteene thousand yeares.* In the like error is Mercator; that fetcheth the originall of the Egyptians from before the flood, even from the first age and beginning of the world. But they are both here confuted by Moses, who sheweth that Mizram the father of the Aegyptians, came of Ham, *Noahs*sonne.

2. Confut. The Scriptures not simply obscure.

WHereas vers. 2.21. it is said, these are the sonnes of Sem according to their tongues,* this being a prepo|sterous speech, as Bellarmino calleth it, setting that first, which was last done: for as yet all the earth was of one language, Gen. 11.1. hence he would prove among other arguments, that the Scriptures are obscure.* Whereunto we answer, 1. that this proveth not the Scriptures obscure; because sometime an hy/sterosis is used: some things are set before in story, which were afterward done. This difficulty may easily be helped by the least direction and caveat to the Reader: and this kinde of preposterous speech is found in other forraine histories, which are notwithstanding read of all, and not laid aside for any obscurity here|in pretended. 2. Though an obscurity be admitted herein, yet this proveth not an obscurity thorowout in the Scriptures: that because of some darke places, they should not at all be read of the simple. 3. And although there be many difficult places in Scriptures, yet are there also more plaine and easie: yea the most necessary matters, that concerne faith and manners, are plainly expressed in Scriptures: and what is ob|scurely handled, is found not to be so necessary to salvation: as Augustine well saith, In iis, quae aperte in Scripturis posita sunt, inveniuntur ea omnia, qua fidem continent moresque vivendi:* in those places, which are plainly set downe in Scripture, are found all those things which concerne faith and manners.

3. Confut. The Pope Nimrod and Antichrist.

AS old Babylon was the beginning of the Kingdome of Nimrod, vers. 10. so Rome, the second or new Babylon, is the head of the Kingdome of Antichrist, the Nimrod of the world, that hunteth mens soules, as the other did tyrannize over their bodies. Muscul.

9. Places of Morall observations.

1. Morall. The wicked mixed among the righteous.

Vers. 1. WHERE the sonnes of Noah are reckoned together, Cham is set in the midst betweene Sem and Iapheth: wherein is shadowed forth the state and condition of the Church, that Chamites, hypocrites, and ungodly persons, in the visible face of the Church, are mingled among the midst of the faithfull, Muscul.

2. Morall. The prosperity of the wicked continueth not long.

WHEREAS Nimrod of Chus, of Cham, beganne first to be Lord over his brethren: and Canaan with his sons inhabited the best parts of the world, it will be demanded, how that curse upon Canaan tooke place, that he should be a servant to his brethren. The answer is, that the ungodly may flourish for a time: we must doe as David did, Enter into Gods Sanctuary, and consider their end, Psal. 37.17. for in the end, when the wickednesse of Canaan was ripe, they were cast out of that pleasant land, and made servants to Israel of Sem.

CHAP. XI.

1. The Method and contents of the Chapter.

T His Chapter hath two parts: 1. It entreateth of the attempt of the carnall and worldly sort, in building the tower of Babel: where is expressed, first their attempt, with the circumstances: 1. Who they were, vers. 1. 2. Where, vers. 2. 3. Of what matter, vers. 3. what they went about, to build a tower. 4. Wherefore, to get them a name, vers. 4. Secondly, the disappointing of this their purpose by the Lord: his consultation, vers. 6, 7. the execution, 8, 9.

2. The second part containeth a genealogie of the faithfull; first of Abrahams progenitors, from vers. 10. to 27. described every one, 1. by their names; 2. their age, both before they begat children, and afterward: 3. their issue, first of the righteous, then of other sonnes and daughters: secondly, of Abraham his birth, with his children, vers. 27. his marriage, vers. 29. his travell, departing with his father out of Chaldea.

2. The divers readings.

3. The Explanation of doubts.

QVEST. I. Who and from whence, and for what they came that built Babel.

Vers. 1. All of one speech, vers. 2. went from the East. 1. By this it is evident, that all the world at the first used but one language, which was the Hebrew tongue, preserved still in Hebers familie: but whether they used the same dialect, and stile of speech, as Aben Ezra, and the same manner of pronouncing, as Cajetane thinke, is uncertaine. 2. These that came into the Plaine, were not as Cajetane thinketh, some certaine men: or as Rasi, onely the posterity of Sem, whom Ramban confuteth, but generally all: for the language of the whole world was confounded and changed at the building of the Tower: But Abraham could not be of this number, as Aben Ezra, being yet unborne: And whither Noah removed, it is uncertaine: but it is most sure, * that he joyned not with the unruly company in their proud enterprises. 3. They came from the East: that is that part of Armenia, where the Arke landed being afraid at the first, as Iosephus conjectureth, because of the late flood to leave the hilly Countrey▪ But by degrees they descended, first dwelling in the hils, afterward at the bottome and foot of the hils, * then they sought into the plaines: either to seeke more roome for their multitudes, that were increased, or of an ambitious minde, not contented with their lot, or for both. 4. They came into the land Sinhar, or Singar, not in Pontus, as the Hierosolim: but in Mesopotamia where is the hill Singara: which Rupertus will have to signifie, excussio dentium; the sm•ting out of the teeth: because their language was smitten, which is caused by the teeth: for so shingar may be derived of Shen, a tooth, and gaurah, to evacuate. 5. Neither is it like that they beganne to build Babel, as soone as they came into the Plaine, or that they were penned up an hundred yeares, in the hillie Countrey of Armenia: (for so long it was from the flood to the confusion of the tongues,) but after they were descended into this plaine Countrey, then when they espied their time, they entred into this consultation.

QVEST. II. Why they built of bricke.

Vers. 3. Come let us make bricke, &c. The reason why they resolved to build of bricke, was neither for the continuance, as Iosephus thinketh: for though bricke buildings are very durable, as Plinie testifieth, there were to be seene at Babylon that had lasted 700. yeares: * yet edifices of hewen stone are stronger: as it is, Isay 9.10. The bricke are fallen, but we will build with hewen stones. 2. Neither did they so, as some imagine, to provide against the second destruction of the world by fire, as Noahs Arke was a refuge for the water: because brick work will endure the fire: for they were not so foolish to imagine, that the whole world could be preserved in one Tower: and though the building might stand against the rage of fire, yet the men enclosed should not be able to endure the heat. 3. But the cause of chusing this mat|ter for building was the necessity of the place, Mercer: where stone was not to be had: and yet the earth of that plaine being of a fat and slimie substance, was very fit to make bricke: which was the cause why Pharaoh built his Cities in the plaine Countrey of Egypt of bricke, Exod. 1. and beside, that region aff|orded a kinde of naturall lime, of slimie nature like pitch, which issued forth of the River Is, * in great abundance, as Herodotuss saith, and out of a fountaine neere to Naptha, which in the Babylonian language signifieth liquid Pitch, or Brimstone, Strabo. 4. This stuffe which they used for mortar, was neither argilla, a kinde of Potters clay, as Vatablus, nor yet Cr•ta chalke, as Oleaster, or lu•um, a soft earth, as Pagnine: nor calx viva, lime, as Diodor. Tharsense. but as the Hebrew word chemer signifieth, which the Septuag. translate asphalto•; it was a reddish sulphurious earth, clammie like pitch, which was in stead of camen|tum, as Hieron. or intritum. Tremell. mortar: so that this chem•r, slimie earth, was in stead of chomer, mortar: by which meanes of bricke and bitumen Semiramis afterward enlarged the wals of Babylon. Perer.

QVEST. III. Who was the chiefe in this worke.

vers. 4. LEt us build a City and Tower. 1. Cajetane gathereth from hence, * that all the people of the world were not here assembled, because one City could not suffice for them all: But that is no rea|son, for they built not this City for the habitation of all, but to be a monument of their fame, and as the chiefe City of all other which they should build afterwards. 2. Nimrod seemeth to have beene the cap|taine and ring-leader of this company: for Babel was the beginning of his Kingdome, Gen. 10.10. so thinketh Iosephus and Augustine. 3 Though the counsell came first from Nimrod, or some few: abiit tan|dem in •udium catholicum: it grew to be the catholike, that is common desire of all. Muscul.

QUEST. IV. Of the heighth of the tower of Babel.

Whose top shall reach to heaven.] 1. It is not like, that as Augustine supposeth they indeed thought to build a tower so high, whose top should touch the clouds: quest. 21. in Gen. and so these words to be taken according to their literall sound. 2. And that report of Abydenus, cited by Eusebius, is to be held but a fable, that when they had builded almost up to heaven: it was tumbled downe by a mighty wind:* and it is very like, that the Poets tooke occasion hereby to devise that fiction of the warre of the Giants, and their laying the great hills of Pelion, Ossa, Olympus, one upon another to climbe up to heaven. 2. Neither to answer the objection of the heathen, who tooke exception to this story, it being impossible, though all the earth were laid for a foundation, to build up to heaven, need we with Philo, to make an allegory of the building of this Tower, who understandeth thereby their proud and high attempts against God. 3. Neither yet is it like as Berosus Annianus, that they reared this tower so high to make it equall to the mountaines: or that as Iosephus writeth, they imagined to bring it so high, and accordingly performed it, that it exceeded the mountaines in height, to be a defence from like generall flood: or that this tower was foure miles high, as Hierome saith he was enformed by some: in 14. Esai. much lesse 27. miles high, as some Hebrewes imagine. 4. But in these words there is an hyperbolicall speech (wherein more is expressed, than meant usuall, both in the Scriptures, and in forraine writers: as Deuter. 1.28. Their Cities are walled up to heaven: their meaning then is, that they would build this tower exceeding high: And it is very like that it was of a very great and unwonted height, although no certainty thereof is extant in any writer: Herodotus* speaketh of a Temple consecrate to Belus in Babylon, foure square, containing two stadia or furlongs in breadth, and a tower in the midst, being one furlong in height, and another above that, till it came to eight one above another: so that by this account, it should seeme to have beene an Italian mile in heighth: Diodor. saith, it was so high, that the Chaldeans made it a Sea marke: Plinie writeth, that it continued till his time: and Hierome, that it remained till his: and Theodoret also in his memorie. The Hebrewes thinke, that one third part of this tower sunke, another was burnt, the third part stood: but howsoever that were, it is like that some part of it remained as a perpetuall monument of their pride and follie, Mercer.

QUEST. V. What moved the Babylonians to build this tower.

4. That we may get us a name, lest we be scattered, &c. 1. It is not like that they built this tower to keepe them from the like generall inundation: as Iosephus thinketh, for they could not be ignorant, that God had made a covenant with Noah never to destroy the world so againe. 2. Neither did they make this bricke tower, to be a defence against the rage of fire, wherewith they knew the world should be destroyed: for what was one tower to save the whole world. 3. But one cause might be of the building of this tower, the ambitious desire of dominion, as Hugo saith, Factum esse cupiditate regnandi: Nimrod set forwards this worke, that it might be the beginning and chiefe of his kingdome, Genes. 10.10. 4. Another reason is here expressed, lest they should be dispersed, not as the Latine Interpreter, before they should be dispersed: for they knew it not: they built them a City and Tower, to maintaine society, that they might dwell together, and not be scattered here and there: and Iosephus thinketh that they did it of purpose to oppose themselves against the ordinance and commandement of God, who would have them dispersed into divers parts, that the world might be replenished. 5. As also another end of their purpose is here insinuated: to get them a name: as the Psalme saith, They thinke their houses shall endure for ever, and they call their lands by their names, Psal. 49.11. as Absolon reared up a pillar, to keepe his name in remembrance, 2 Sam. 18.18. and Philo saith, that these Babylonians did write their names also in this tower, to revive their memories with posterity.

QUEST. VI. Whether they sinned in building this Tower.

* Hence appeareth Tostatus error, that thinketh, it was not a sinne in them to build this tower to preserve their memory, because he thinketh that Noah was one of the chiefe builders: and that God hindred this worke, not because it was evill, but for that it hindred a greater good, namely, the peopling and replenishing of the world. But the contrary is evident, that they greatly sinned in this their proud enterprise. 1. Their impiety toward God appeareth: Augustine saith, erigebant turrim contra dominum, they erected a tower in despite of God: * as the Prophet Isay according to this paterne bringeth in the King of Babel vaunting himselfe. I will ascend above the height of the clouds, I will be like the most high, Isay 14.14. 2. Their vanity appeareth that seek to be famous in earth, not by good works to be glorious in heaven Calvin: vide radicem mali; saith Chrysostome, see the root of evill, they seeke to be famous, •dificiis non ele/m•synis, by buildings, not by almes: 3. Iosephus noteth, their disobedience, that knowing, as it is most like from Noah, that it was Gods ordinance, that by them the earth should be replenished, yet wilfully oppose themselves to the counsell of God: 4. Philo observeth their impudency: ô insignem impudentiam, that whereas, they should rather have covered their sinnes, they proclaime their pride, tyranny, volup|tuousnesse to all posterity.

* It is uncertaine whether Noah were present: it is most like he was not, or that he consented not unto them: And it appeareth by the punishment, that God misliked their very act: for he saith, vers. 6. neither can they now be stopped from whatsoever they have imagined: that is, they proceeded with a violent rage, that nothing could stay them, neither the feare of God, nor the expectation of his judgements: but what|soever they had proudly devised, they will as wickedly prosecute.

QVEST. VII. How the Lord is said to descend.

Vers. 5. BVt the Lord came downe to see the City, &c. God is not said to descend to see, 1. as though any thing hindred his sight in heaven: for all things are naked and open to his eyes. II. b•. 4.13. 2. Neither as though God went from place to place, or were absent any where: for the Lord filleth heaven and earth: heaven is my throne, earth is my footstool, &c. what place is it that I should rest in? Act. 7.49.

But the Lord is said to descend to see, &c. 1. In respect of the new effect, in manifesting his judgement; re ipsa patefecit: he shewed indeed, that hee was not ignorant what hee did. Augustine, Calvin. 2. Or for that he caused his Angels to descend, and so is said to descend in his Ministers. Augustine. 3. Or as Caljetane, quia extendit se cura & providentia usque ad infima: * because God extendeth his care even unto the lowest things in the world: as it is in the Psalme; Who is like unto the Lord, &c. who abaseth himselfe to behold things in the heaven and earth? Psal, 113.5. 4. God hereby also sheweth his patience, non ab initio illorum repressi• insaniam, &c. he did not at the first repress their madnesse, but used lenity towards them. 5. Vult nos admoneri, ne fratres temere condemnemus, &c. God would have us taught hereby, not rashly to condemne our brethren. Chrysost. God therefore giveth a rule to man, first to examine a cause before they judge, as the Lord first seeth and knoweth before he punisheth. Muscul. 6. And by descending, here is un|derstood the punishment which followed: as if God should have said, Non amplius dissimul•mus eorum s•e/lira, sed quam primum ea puniamus: Let us no longer winke at their sinnes, but presently punish them, Rabbi Moses: Aegyptius. Basil maketh this distinction, that God de coelo aspicit, * is said from heaven to behold the righteous: but descendendo dicitvr invisere deus, &c. God is said to descend to visit the un|godly: but this distinction alwayes holdeth not; for both the Lord is said to looke downe from heaven up|on the wicked. Psal. 141. and the Lord is said to descend for the deliverance of his people. Exod. 3.8.

QVEST. VIII. To whom God spake, saying, come let us goe downe.

Vers. 7. COme let us goe downe, &c. 1. The Lord speaketh not here to the Angels, as August. Gregory, Philo, Cajetane, with others; or to the persons of the Trinity and Angels together, Mercer. 2. But this is the consultation of the whole Trinity, as v. 8. it is said, Iehovah scattered them. This speech is answerable to that, Gen. 1. in the creation of man: Come let us make man: and those to whom God speaketh here, hee maketh as equall in the same degree, Come let us goe downe: * sic Raban. Rupert. Calvin. 3. God indeed sometime useth the ministry of Angels, not that he needeth their helpe; but as Philo saith, videt quid se, quid creaturas deceat, God seeth what is meet for himselfe, what for the creatures: for God is more honoured in such Ministers, and mens infirmity thereby helped. But at this time, and in this case, God needed not the ministry of Angels: this confusion of tongues was his immediate worke, as was the gift of tongues, Acts 1.4. Wherefore to dispute there, how God speaketh to Angels and invisible spirits, is superfluous, which may notwithstanding bee done two wayes: either, as Augustine saith, veritas incommutabilis per seipsam ineffabiliter loquitur: the unchangeable verity speaketh by it selfe after an ineffable manner, Gregory sheweth another way, Quicquid agere debent in ipsa contemplatione veritatis legunt, &c. They do as it were read in the contemplation of the verity, what they should doe. The Angels are either inspired by God to know his wil, or they behold in God, as the Schoolemen say, as in a glasse, what is to be done. But the first is the way, whereby God speaketh to Angels, the other is but a speculatio of man.

QVEST. IX. Whose language was confounded.

Vers. 7. ANd confound their languages, &c. 1. Pride bringeth confusion of tongues, humility as in the Apostles obtained uniting of tongues, Act. 2. Greg. 2. It appeareth how hurtfull the conspiracy of the wicked is, for if now in the beginning, * they abused the uniting of their tongues to so great madnesse, how outrageous is it like they would have beene afterward, when their multitudes had beene more increased. Chrysost. 3. Not every mans language was confounded, for then all society would have beene taken away even in families, but the speech of certaine kindreds and companies was changed.

QVEST. X. What caused them to leave off building.

Vers. 8. THEy left off building, &c. 1. The confusion then of tongues made them leave off building, not any great wind or tempest that tumbled downe their worke, as Sybilla and Abidenus in Eusebius, neither were the tongues confounded by little and little, as Aben Ezra, but all at once. * Mercer. 2. The building of the City was intermitted for an hundred yeares, untill Semiramis: but the Tower of Babel was not heightened, but only enclosed in the Temple of Belus, which continued till Herodotus time, an 1400. yeares. Perer.

QVEST. XI. Of the name of Babel.

Vers. 9. THE name was called Babel. 1. It was not so called of Belus, as some have imagined, but of confusion, for so Ballal signifieth. 2. Neither was it ever called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which betokeneth confusion in the greeke tongue, as the Septuagint, but after the Hebrew. 3. So God disappointed them of their purpose, that where they looked to gaine credit, they found shame and confusion: vide quot res siant, * &c. behold how many things were done, saith Chrysostome, to keepe a memory of this fact: for Phaleg had his name of this division: Babel of the confusion of tongues: and of Heber, in whom the holy tongue remained unchanged, that language tooke the name: sic Chrysost. Perer.

QVEST. XII. Why God saw it good to disperse the people.

FRom thence the Lord did scatter them, &c. 1. They were not then scattered before, as some thinke, but now upon this occasion they began to be divided into all quarters. 2. Though this division of tongues were imposed upon them as a judgement: yet God turneth it to the benefit of the world, in dispersing them, which was many wayes profitable: both because, if they had continued in one place, many goodly Countries in the world should have lyen desart, waste, and untilled. As also sufficient food could not have beene provided in one place, for such a multitude. And further, if they had continued together, they might have beene in greater hazard by warre or pestilence: as also wicked people inhabiting together, would have beene more stronge to doe mischief.

QVEST. XIII. That the Hebrew tongue was the common language of all the world.

*Now if any be desirous to know what language this was, which before this confusion of tongues was used through the world: it is agreed by the most learned interpreters, that it was the Hebrew. 1. Augustines reason is, Quoniam in familia Heber communis omnium lingua remansit, because the Hebrew tongue is so called of Heber, in whose family that which was the common tongue before remained: that tongue which Heber used before the division of tongues, was the common speech, but that was the Helbrew. 2. Hieromes reason to prove the Hebrew to bee matricem, the mother of all other languages; is because every tongue hath borrowed some words of the Hebrew, as the Greeke 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which is the same in Hebrew pherion. Cantic. 3.9. a bed or beare: so the Latine hath borrowed the word nugas, which is in Hebrew nuge. Sophon. 3.18. where Hierome in his translation keepeth the same word: * so saccus, a sacke, as Oleaster noteth, commeth of the Hebrew. Hierom likewise sheweth, that gnalmah signifieth a Virgin both in the Hebrew and Punicke language, from whence the Latine alma seemeth to be derived: Many words also are used in our English tongue, derived from the Hebrew, as fag which is a figge. The Grecians further seeme to have derived the word 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, * he done, pleasure, from Heden the place where Paradise was: the Latines call Whales *thynn, of the Hebrew tavaim: the Italians call a thing that is light and vaine, Bay, of the Hebrew Bohu: the French of Gallia Narbonens. call a species or kinde, meane, of the Hebrew min. 3. Tostatus reason is, because these names, which were first given, as of Adam, Eve, Cain, Seth, are Helbrew words, as may appeare by their severall derivations in that tongue: as the first so called of the red earth, the second because she was mother of all living, the third a possession, the fourth because he was put in Abels place. 4. Cajetan proveth the same by the word Jehova, which is an Hebrew word, used before the flood, and the name Babel given unto the tower in this place. 5. Oleaster bringeth these reasons: that it is most like, that the common language remained there, where the first division of tongues was made, namely in Babylon, the Chalde therefore and Hebrew, betweene the which there is great affinity, are most like to be the most ancient: as also for that this was the language of the East: from whence they came which builded Babel.

It appeareth then, that Philo is in an error, that thinketh the Chalde tongue to be the most ancient: true it is, that Nahor, Thare, Abraham, dwelt in Chaldea, but yet they spake the Hebrew tongue, and so in that respect it may be called the Chaldean tongue, because some Chaldeans used that language: like as the Syriake tongue, which the Jewes used in our Saviour Christs time, might bee called the Hebrew language, because the Hebrewes used it, Mercer.

QVEST. XIV. Whether the Hebrew or Syriake be most ancient.

Hence also it is evident, that Theodoret was much deceived. 1. He thinketh that the Syriack tongue was the most ancient, * because those names, Adam, Cain, Abel, are Syriack names. Answ. The Syriake or Chaldaike, and Arabike language, were derived as Rivers out of the fountaine of the Hebrew: and therefore it is no strange thing, if some Hebrew words are retained in those languages. 2. He thinketh that the Hebrew speech was not so called of Heber, for then all the posterity of Heber, as the Syrians, Idu|means, Ismaelites, Ammonites, should also speake that language. Ans. Augustine giveth the reason hereof: that they were called Hebrewes only among whom & lingua prior & pietas conservaretur, where both the ancient tongue, and religion were preserved: although Heber was the father of many nations beside, yet they beare his name, that did heire his faith. 3. Theodore thinketh, that the Hebrew tongue was brought in by Moses, and was not the naturall speech of the Israelites, but such as they learned: for the Jewes at this day naturally speake the language of the Countrey, where they are borne: they doe learne the He|brew by teaching. Answ. 1. It is evident by those ancient Hebrew names of Adam, Cain, Abel, that the Hebrew tongue was used before Moses time. 2. While the Hebrewes lived in their owne nation and com|mon-wealth, * they naturally from their mothers breasts speake that language, but now being dispersed in|to divers nations, not conversing together, they are forced to use that Countrey speech where they dwell. 3. Augustine thinketh, that not onely the Hebrew tongue, but the Hebrew letters were used and well knowne before Moses: and he doth gather it from that place, Deut. 31.28. where the Septuagint translate the word, shoterim grammat•• Isagogis, the teachers, instructors, or beginners in letters. But it is very like, howsoever this place giveth no strength to it, in that the people were commanded to write the Law upon the posts of their gates, that the Hebrew letters were then very well knowne, not as newly taken up, but used of long time.

QVEST. XV. Of the number of languages.

Concerning the number of the tongues and languages, which were divided in the building of the tower of Babel: the common and received opinion is, of Epiphanius, Hierome, Augustine, * that they were 72. according to the number of the families rehearsed, chap. 10. Arnobius goeth further, and distinct|ly sheweth, how many nations and languages came of Sem, Cham, and Iapheth: upon these words, Psal. 105.8. he hath remembred his promise, that he made to a thousand generations: hee sheweth that there are in the world a thousand generations, and 72. languages: from Persia to the Indians and Bactrians of Sem, he maketh 27. languages and 406. nations: from Euphrates and Nilus, to the Gades, of Cham, 394. nat|ions, 22. languages from Tigris westward of Iapheth, were multiplied 200. nations, and 23. tongues: • Perer. But this is set downe onely by meere gesse and conjecture, that there should be divided 72: langu|ages: for there are but 70. fathers named: 14. of Iapheth, 31. of Cham: 25. of Sem, * for Heber and Peleg must be counted for one familie: & whereas tenne of the sonns of Noahs sonnes, are set forth with their issue and posteritie, two of Iapheth, fower of Cham, fower of Sem: they make not severall nations, with|out their sonnes, no more than Noahs three sonnes: and therefore tenne more must be detracted from the number of 70. and so there will remaine but 60. As Canaan must not be reckoned for a severall nation, beside those that came of him: and so of the rest. And if those whose generations are not expressed, where|of there are 11. five of Iapheth two of Cham, fower of Sem, did not make severall nations, as Augustine thinketh, but were incorporate to the rest, then so many more are wanting of this number, and there will remaine but 50. But admit that this last conjecture of Augustine be uncertaine, yet it is most probable that all the Cananites of Canaan, of whom came an eleven severall nations, as they are • rehearsed Gen. 10.15. spake but one language: Isa. 19.18. they shall speake the language of Canaan: which if it be so, then could there not be 72. languages divided, in the confusion of Babel.

Wherefore, concerning this matter, there are some things certaine, some things uncertaine: first it is cer|taine, that the tongues and languages were divided; then, that every particular person had not a severall language; for then there could have beene no society: but that the principall and chiefe families onely had their proper speech. Secondly, as uncertaine it is, 1. whither 72. languages, or more or lesse, tooke then beginning. 2. whether some of those nations are not now utterly perished: as Pliny out of Eratosthenes alleageth, that divers people in Asia, as of the Solymans, Lelegians, Bebrycians, Calycantians, are extingished. 3. Neither is it certaine whether every particular language now used, was then founded: * or only the mother & originall tongues, out of the which other since have bin derived, which is most like. Mercer.

QVEST. XVI. Where Cainan first added to the genealogie reconciled.

Vers. 12. The Septuagint betweene Arphacsad, and Sale, place Cainan, * and so doth S. Luke in his Gospel, ca. 3. according to most copies, but Cainanis not found in the Hebrew: to reconcile this doubt▪ 1. We neither allow Cajetanes solution, that the septuagint have set downe the true genealogie, and that the Hebrew copies are imperfect, and have beene corrupted by the Jewes: for the Jewes had no reason to corrupt the genealogie, which giveth the Christians no advantage, neither maketh against them: and beside the Chaldee Paraphrast, which is most ancient, leaveth out Cainan. 2. Neither is it like as Eugubinus saith, that the Septuagint erred herein, and that S. Luke followeth their error: for although an error may be admitted in the Septuagint, in this place▪ as in many other: yet the holy Evangelist was farre from approving their error, being directed by the spirit of God. 3. Neither doth the answer of Ioannes Lucidus, and before him, Nauclerus satisfie; that Cainan and Sal• were one and the same; and that the place in Luke should be read; which was of Sala, which was of Cainan, Luke 3.36. But this cannot be; for beside that, that there was no cause why Luke should set downe two names, only of Sala, and of none of the rest beside; in the Septuagint, Cainan is made the father and begetter• of Sala. Genes. 11.4. Lippoman, and Canus answer, that as Mathewe omitteth three of the kings in his genealogie, * betweene Ioram and Ozias, to make the line of 14. generations equall from Abraham to David, from David to the captivity, and from thence to Christ, so Moses, to make tenne generations from Sem to Abraham, correspondent, to the ten patriarches before the flood, might omit Cainan.

But the reason is not alike. 1. For those three Kings, Ahaziah, Ioas, Amaziah, are thought by some to be omitted for another cause, because they were killed for evill government. Concent. 2. And againe Moses summeth the yeeres of these Fathers, which Mathewe doth not, and therefore if Moses should of purpose leave out Cainan, a great error would fall out in the Chronologie and computation of yeares. 3. If Moses had left out Cainan to make the genealogie equall: yet if there had beene any such: hee should not have beene omitted in that cataloge of their names. 1 Chro. 1.18. where was no such cause of •mission. *

5. Some thinke that the Septuagint erred in adding of Cainan, and that Luke followed that text, not approving that error, but giving way to the time, because the Septuagint was then well knowne among the Gentiles: least if he had departed from that translation, it might have hindred the credit of his Gospel. Thus Iansenius and Genebrard among the pontificall writers: and learned Iunius, among the Protestants; who saith, that it was not 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, but 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, a slip or fault of memory, but a faultlesse confession in respect of the time: so also Mercerus, who thinketh that this being but a matter of genealogie, is not much to be stood vpon, which Paul calleth 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, endlesse, 1. Tim. 1.4:

6. But I approve rather Beza his answer, that Cainan was put into the text in Luke, by the ignorance of some that tooke upon them to correct it according to the Septuagint: for in that ancient manuscript which he followed, Cainan was not to be found: and therefore Beza in his translation upon good ground left it out, and so doth the great English Bible.

Other thinke further, that the translation of the septuagint was also herein corrupted by some: that at the first these Greeke interpreters put not in Cainan; * for neither Iosephus, nor Epiphanius which follow the septuagint, rehearsing the fathers before Abraham, make mention of this Cainan: and in the best Greeke copies, it is left out. 1 Chronic. 1.

QVEST. XVII. When Arphaxad was borne.

Vers. 10. BEgat Arphachsad two yeare after the floud: the question is, whereas Elam and Asshur; the sonnes of Sem are named before Arphacsad the third sonne, how Sem could have these three in two yeares; I answer, 1. Neither with Aben Ezra, that Sems wife might bee with childe in the Arke, when the waters began to decrease; for I thinke rather, that was a time of abstinency. 2. Neither, as some that for the more speedy increase of the world, children were borne in a shorter time, as at 7. moneths: 3. Nor yet that Elam and Assur might bee twins, both borne at a birth. 4. But I rather thinke that Arphacsad might be either the eldest of all, or the second of *Sem*s sonnes; for the scripture observeth not the order of time in setting downe names, as we saw before in rehearsing of Sem, Ham, and Iapheth.

QVEST. XVIII. Why it is here omitted in the genealog. of these fathers▪ and he died.

FVrther, whereas in the Patriarkes lives before the floud, it is added, and hee died, which is omitted here; 1. Some thinke it is, to shew that Henoch died not a common death as the rest did. 2. Some to signifie, that none of them perished in the floud. 3. Some yet are more curious, a▪Bahai, who thinke|eth, this clause, and he died, to bee here omitted▪ because Messiah was to come of this line: whom they hold to be immortall: and further he prescribeth Messiah his age, that hee should live 837. yeares be|fore the end of the sixt millenary or thousand yeare: which hee would gather by the letters of the word Lemarbaty used by the Prophet Isay 9.7. which is, of the increase of his government, there shall bee no end: where the first letter, lamed signifieth 30. men, 600. r•sh, 200. beth 2. he, 5. which maketh together 837. But it is evident to all the world how they are deceived: for the six thousand yeare is expired with|in lesse than 400. yeares, * and yet their supposed Messiah commeth not: and againe Messiah came as well of the line of the fathers before the floud, as of them after the floud. 4. Wherefore this is more like to bee the reason: because then after Adams transgression, Moses would shew how the curse tooke place: thou shalt dye the death, in those long lived patriarkes: that although they lived divers hundred yeares, yet in the end they dyed. Mercerus.

QVEST. XIX. At what age of Terah Abraham was borne.

Vers. 26. TERah lived 70. yeares and begat Abraham, &c. Terah lived 205. yeares, and died in Char|ran, at what time Abraham was 75. yeares old: Genes. 12.5. Abraham then was borne when his father was an 130. yeare old, not in his 70. yeare: for the reconciliation then of these places. 1. We need not with Hierome, that followeth therein the Hebrewes, to say, that Abrahams age of 75. yeares is not counced from his birth, * but from his departure from Vr. of the Chaldes, and his miraculous delive|rance out of the fire wherein they cast him, because he would not worship their Idols: for beside that, this tradition of Abrahams deliverance hath no sufficient ground to warrant it; a great inconvenience will follow it, if it bee admitted that Abraham was an 130. yeare old at this time, when he is said to bee but 75. which must of necessitie followe, if Abraham were borne in the 70. yeare of Therah: then it would follow: that Isaack borne when Abraham was an 100. yeare old, was borne 30. yeare before hee came into the land of Canaan, which is contrarie to the Scripture, or if they will count those hundred yeares also from Abrahams departure out of Chaldea: and that he was indeed an 160. yeares old, when Isaack was borne, and Isaack was 40. yeare old, his father yet living, when he tooke Rebecca to wife, Genes. 25.20. Abraham should have lived above 200. yeares, whereas the Scripture saith, he lived but an 175. Genes. 25.7.

2 Neither is it a sufficient answer that Abraham went out of Charran at 75. yeares of his age, long before his fathers death, and that Moses doth recapitulate the story afterward as Aben Ezra, for Steven saith, that God brought him out after his father was dead, Act. 7.4. And to say his father was spiritually dead, not naturally because he staid still, and refused to goe into Canaan, living in idolatrie (which is the devise of one Andreas Masins, cited by Pererius) is a forcing of Stephens words, which in an historicall narration must be taken properly.

*3. And with Augustine to make two departures of Abraham into the land of Canaan: the one when Terah was yet living, being an 105. yeare old, and Abraham 75. sojourning there 60. yeares, while his father lived in Charran, and another after Ther^hs death, whome Abraham might visite before, going and comming into Canaan: but now he came from thence, his father being dead, and returned no more; that in the first departure, his bodie remooved, but his affection was toward that place where his father was, but now his affection and all was removed: This imagination of two departures into Canaan, dissenteth from Stephens narration: Act. 7. where indeed he speaketh of two journeyes of Abraham, one out of Mesopo|tamia, the other out of Charan: But into Canaan the Lord brought him after his father was dead, v. 4. and not before.

4. That also is a meere fancy, that the rest of Abrahams age is concealed, who should be an 130. when hee is said to be but 75. to this intent, because God would keepe secret the end of the world: Calvin. for this would nothing have helped to the knowledge of that secret: the account of yeares past will not tell us what yeares are to come, and our Saviour saith, the Angels know not of that day, and yet they knew very well the age of Abraham.

5. Wherefore the best solution is, that Abraham though he be named first,* because of the privilege and preeminencie of his faith, yet was not the first borne; Terah at 70. yeares began to have sonnes, but Abraham was not borne till the 130. yeare of his fathers age: for he was but 75. at his fathers death, who was then 205. So Noah is said to be 500. yeare old when he begat Sem, Cham, and Iapheth: yet was not Sem borne till two yeares after. Gen. 11.10. beside, Sarah is held to have beene Abrahams brothers daugh|ther: Abraham then could not be the eldest brother, for Sara was but 10. yeares younger than Abraham. Gen. 17.17. Iun.

QVEST. XX. Sarai not sister but neece to Abraham.

Vers. 29. The father of Milcha, and of Iscah, &c. 1. Some thinke that this Iscah was not Sarai Abrahams wife, but that shee was rather the daughter of Thare,* and Abrahams owne sister by the fathers side, than the daughter of his brother Aran: and that it was lawfull then for the halfe brother by the fathers side to marrie his sister, sic Clement. Alexand. Lippoman. Cajetan. Scotus. 2. Others thinke that Sarai was not the naturall, but the adopted daughter of Thare. 3. But the truer opinion is, that Sarai was the daughter of Haran, sister to Lot and Milcah, and the same that is called Iscah: as may appeare by these reasons: thus thinke Iosephus and Augustine. Iunius. 1. It is like that as Nachor married the one sister, so Abraham married the other: because it was their great care, not to take them wives abroad, from among the Idolaters. 2. v. 31. Sarai is said to bee Thare his daughter in law, but if shee had beene his naturall daughter, shee should have beene so called. 3. It was alwaies unlawfull, saving in the beginning of the world upon necessitie, for brethren or sisters, of halfe or whole blood to marrie together: as Augustine saith, Abraham lived in those times, when it was unlawfull for brethren, ex utro{que} vel altero parente natos necti conjugio: of one or both parents to bee coupled in marriage: as it may appeare also by this, because Abraham to perswade Abimelech, shee was not his wife, said she was his sister: * she could not then be both his sister and his wife. Indeed, among some barbarous Gentiles, as the Egyptians, it was permitted to marry their sisters, as Ptolomeus Philadelphus did take to wife Arsinoe his sister: which is condemned by Pausanius but among the faithful it was never suffered, nor practised. Thamer saying to incestuous Ammon, speake to the King, for he will not deny thee, 2 Sam. 13.13. sought but a delay, to put off his wicked act: not as though shee thought the King might or would grant any such thing. 4. Abraham calleth Sarai his sister, as he did call Lot her brothers sonne his brother. chap. 13.8. for so the Hebrewes use to call their neare kinsmen by the name of brethren: and he saith, she was the daughter of his father, not of his mother: because her father Haran, who might be 50. yeare elder than Abraham, was the sonne of Thare by another woman, and not by Abrahams mother. 5. So then this Iscah, is also Sarai: * for to what end else should Iscah here be mentioned as a stranger, and not pertinent to the storie. 6. It is most likely then that Sarai was the daughter of Haran, elder brother to Abraham: who and not Abraham, was borne in the seventie yeare of Thare, not as Pererius supposeth that Abraham was borne in the seventie yeare, and Aran many yeares before: for it is evident by the text, that Thare had no children before he was 70. yeare old. Gen. 11.26. R. Sel. affirmeth also that this Iscah, was Sarai, and he noteth, that they are both of one signification: for Iscah or Iacah, is a name of principallitie, as Sarai is: yet Aben Ezra thinketh otherwise, that if Sarai had beene Harans daughter, Moses would have called her the daughter of Haran, as Lot is said to be the sonne of Haran, v. 31. but that is no reason, for in stead thereof, shee is called the wife of Abraham, of whom she now was rather to take denomination, than of her father. Mercurius also thinketh that this Iscah was not Sarai, because in the same verse there would not bee so sudden a change and mutation of the name: but I thinke the first opinion more probable, that Iscah is Sarai, for the reasons before alleaged. 1. because it had not beene pertinent to make mention of Iscah, if she had not belonged to this story. 2. It is like that as Nahor married the one sister, so Abraham did the other. 3. that they might take them wives out of their owne kindred, and not marry into the idolatrous stockes of the Chaldeans.

QVEST. XXII. Why mention is made of Sarai her barrennesse.

Vers. 30. But Sarai was barren, &c. Sarai her barrennesse is noted, 1. not as some Hebrewes imagine, that she should be reserved for the birth of Isaak, and not bee polluted with other births: for the birth is no pollution of the wombe: and if this were the reason, Isaack might have beene the first borne. 2. neither was Sarai barren, that by this meanes Ismael should be borne of Agar; to bee a plague afterwards to the Israelites, as some Hebrewes thinke. 3. But this was the cause, that Gods power might afterward appeare, in giving her a sonne in her old age.

QVEST. XXIII. Abraham whether cast into the fire, and then delivered by his faith.

Vers. 31. They departed together from Ur of the Chaldeans. It seemeth to bee an old tradition among the Hebrewes, that Abraham was complained of by Thare his father in the dayes of Nimrod; for refusing to worship the fire, which the Chaldeans adored as God, and therefore he was cast into the fire, but was delivered by his faith: and that this was the Ur, that is, the fire of the Chaldees, out of the which Abraham was brought: and they adde further, that Aran seeing his brother delivered, refused likewise to worship that Idoll, and was cast into the fire, wherein because hee had but a weake faith, he perished; and therefore it is said he died before his father, that is, in his presence. This tradition Hierome seemeth in part to allow of, and Lyranus also, and Paulus Burg. But it is a meere fable, as may thus appeare: 1. because Abraham, as most Chronographers agree, was not as yet borne in Nimrods time, but in the 43. of Ninus, that succeeded Nimrod or Belus. 2. If Abraham had beene so miraculously delivered, it is like that either Moses would have remembred it in this story, or the Apostle, Heb. 11. where he commendeth the faith of Abraham: or Ecclesiasticus, chap. 45. would not have omitted, where of purpose he setteth forth the praise of Abraham, Iosephus also lib. 1. antiquit. and Philo that wrote two bookes of Abraham, remember no such thing. 3. This Ur was the name of a City in Chaldea, which Eupolimus in Eusebius, * calleth Camerinis: Ammianus Ur, lib. 25. Plinie Ochoen, the Septuagint translate it, the region of the Chaldeans. And here not onely Abraham, but Thare, Lot, and Sarai, all depart from Ur: then it should seeme they were all cast into the fire. Iosephus saith, that in his time the Sepulcher of Haran was to be seene in Ur of the Chaldeans: Haran then was not burned, but buried. Aben Ezra taketh Ur for the name of a place, and Abrahams Countrey, though Ramban would have Cuthena in Mesopotamia rather his Countrey.

QVEST. XXIII. Whether Nachor went out with Terah from Chaldea.

Vers. 31. AND Terah tooke Abraham. 1. It is certaine, that God was the author of this journey, who spake to Abraham, before he dwelt in Canaan, Act. 7.2. and that Terah was made acquainted with Gods oracle by his sonne, and obeyed the same, Calvin. 2. Terah is said to take Abraham, &c. because he was the chiefe, and master of the family, Muscul. 3. No mention is made of Nachor, who chose rather to remaine in his Countrey, and obey not Gods calling: who afterwards notwithstanding followed, and left his Countrey, but went no further than Mesopotamia, Gen. 24.10. and dwelt also in Charran, Gen. 28.1. Mercer.

QVEST. XXIV. Whether Terah Abrahams father were an Idolater.

Concerning Terah, whether he were given to the Idolatry of the Chaldeans, because he departed from Ur, * is a great question, which may thus be decided. 1. It is neither probable, that (as Suidas saith) Sarug the grandfather of Terah brought in Idolatry, commanding holy men departed, to bee worshipped: both Noah and Sem being yet living to direct the righteous seed. 2. Neither is it to be thought, that Terah was so grosse an Idolater, * that he made images of clay to be worshipped, as Epiphanius. 3. Neither is it probable, that Terah was altogether free from the Idolatry of the Chaldeans, and that he was cast out thence and constrained to flee into Mesopotamia, as it is in the story of Iudith, chap. 5. vers. 7, 8. for the contrary is affirmed, Iosu. 24.2. that Terah served other Gods. 4. Neither is it to be supposed, that Terah and his family, as Augustine thinketh, were persecuted of the Chaldeans for the true worship of God: for herein Abrahams faith had not beene so commendable in obeying the calling of God, as the Apostle noteth, Heb. 11.8. if he were driven out before, and forced to flee his Countrey. 5. And to thinke that Terah was first a worshipper of God, and afterward fell to Idolatry in Charran, it is not like, seeing Abraham left not his father till he died, as Tostatus and Pererius imagine. But it is more like, that Terah was at the first an Idolater, when he dwelt beyond the River in Chaldea, as is expressed by Iosua. 24.2. who afterward obeying Gods calling, left his Countrey, with the Idolatry and superstition thereof, and came out with his sonne to Haran, thinking to goe to Canaan, but being stricken in yeares, he there stayed, and after some few yeares died, Mercer.

QVEST. XXV. Whether Abraham at any time inclined to superstition.

AS touching Abraham also, whether he were at any time infected with the superstition of the Chaldees, there are divers opinions, as they are cited by Pererius. 1. Suidas thinketh that Abraham at fourteene yeares reprov'd his father for his Idolatry. But it is not like, that Abraham being brought up under superstitious parents, not yet acquainted with Gods voice, and wanting other meanes, was so soone called. * 2. Neither doe I thinke with Philo, that Abraham knew not God: but postquam solus vertit, after he had changed his Countrey, when he was welne 70.

yeares old: that Abraham was so long nusled up in superstition. 3. Neither doe I consent to Iosephus, that Abraham, ex siderum observatione, &c. that Abraham by the observation of the starres, the earth, and Sea, beganne first to acknowledge the true God. But Abrahams first calling was from God, the Lord saith, I tooke your father Abraham from beyond the floud, Iosua 24.2. God called him both from that Countrey, and the Idolatry thereof. 4. The opinion of some Hebrewes, is more probable, that Abraham at forty eight yeares beganne to acknowledge the true God, ex Perer. But at what time of his life Abraham was called, it is uncertaine: yet as certaine it is, that he at the first, before God called him, was tainted with superstition. 1. That place in Iosua seemeth di|rectly to prove it: Your fathers dwelt beyond the floud in old time, Terah the father of Abraham, and father of Nachor, and served strange Gods, Iosua 24.2. All those that dwelt beyond the River, were at the first Idola|ters, even the whole family of Terah, sic Lutherus. 2. Gods mercie more notably appeareth, in that hee called Abraham first before he knew God: that not Abrahamssincerity, but Gods love was the begin|ning of his calling: as Moses saith, because God loved your fathers, he chose their seed, Deut. 37. 3. It is not like but that Abraham being brought up in a superstitious family, did also at the first savour of their superstition, and therefore is bid to come out of his fathers house, Gen. 12.1. And seeing Terah Abrahams father, as is shewed before, and as Chrysostome thinketh, hom. 13. in Genes. was addicted to Idolatry till he obeyed the calling of God, to goe out of that countrey, it is more like, that Abraham also, did sleep in the same sinne, till God roused him, and called him away, then that he was never inclined to Idolatry, * as Pereriusthinketh.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of Gods providence.

Vers. BVt the Lord came downe, &c. Here wee learne, that God sitting in heaven, beholdeth all things, that are done in the earth: not as the wicked say in their heart, God hath forgotten and hideth away his face, and will never see, Psalm. 10.11. But as the Psalmist saith in another place, Hee that dwelleth in the heavens shall laugh, the Lord shall have them in derision, Psal. 2.4.

2. Doct. Of the Trinity.

Vers. 7. LEt us goe downe and confound, &c. This is the speech of the whole Trinity, whereby may bee proved the distinction of persons: and whereas vers. 9. it is said in the singular num|ber, the Lord confounded, &c. thence is gathered the unity of substance: sic Calvin. Rupert. lib. 4. com|ment. in Gen. c. 42.

3. Doct. Conditionall prescience in God.

Vers. 6. THEy cannot now be stopped, from whatsoever they have imagined, &c. God did foresee that they would by no meanes give over their enterprise, if they were not letted of their purpose: so that by this it is evident, that God foreseeeth not only what shall be certainly done in the world, but what might be conditionally done, if there were no let: as the Lord telleth David that the men of Keilah would deliver him, if he staid there, 1 Sam. 23.12. So our Saviour saith, that if the great workes, which were done in Corazin and Bethsaida, had beene done in Tyrus and Sidon, they had repented, Matth. 11▪2. foretelling what was likely to have beene done, that condition presupposed. Where we see a manifest dif|ference betweene Gods power, his prescience, and decree or predestination: God in respect of his omni|potent power can absolutely doe more, than he doth or will doe: in respect of his all-seeing prescience, he doth foresee not only simply what shall be done, but conditionally what is likely to be done, if other conditions and circumstances concurred. But God decreeth no more but what shall come to passe, his counsell must stand, his decree is alwayes absolute, not conditionall: as the Lord saith by his Prophet: As I have purposed, it shall come to passe, as I have consulted, it shall stand. Isay, 14 24.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against Iulian that there is but one God.

Vers. 7. COME let us goe downe. Wicked Iulian urged this place to prove his impious polythian, a mulltiplicity of Gods: for here not one saith hee, but many of like authority come downe to confound their languages, ex Muscul. But if this wicked Apostata had looked a little further into the ninth verse; there he might have found, that the Lord, Iehovah (not many, but one) did confound their languages: they were then divers, not Gods, but persons, yet one Godhead and divine power.

2. Confut. Against Origen, that the Lord, not the Angels confounded tongues.

SEcondly Origen thought that the Angels confounded those languages. And according to the number of those nations, so were there severall Angels presidents over them, that gave them their several tongues hom. 11. in Numb. But the text it selfe overthroweth this opinion, v. 9. The Lord Iehovah did confound their languages.

3. Confut. Against Celsus, that saith Moses borrowed of other writers.

THirdly, Celsus objected, that Moses borrowed this story, of the towre of Babel, of those that write of the Gyants, called Aloides, how they cast downe a great towre. But Origen answereth, that the writers of that history were after Homer, who was after Moses, so that he could not take any thing from them, lib. 4. cont. Cels. It is more like, that they corrupted the true story of Moses, with the Poeticall fictions.

4. Confut. Against the Pagans, that fable of the beasts, that they had sometimes one language.

4. CErtaine Pagans, not beleeving, that the world was not any time of one language: compare this narration of Moses, to that fable of the beasts: that sometime they had all one language, and one understood another, till such time as they sent an embassage to the Gods, that they might be alwayes in their flourishing youth, and never be old; and for this their proud request, their speech was confounded, that now one understandeth not another. The like truth (say they) is in this narration of Moses. For how is it like, that they could in that instant, every man forget his former speech: ex Philone. But this is a dolltish comparison, betweene reasonable men, and unreasonable beasts: those being no more capable of speech, than they are of reason. And seeing all the world tooke beginning from one man, before the flood from Adam, after the flood from Noah, why should it seeme incredible, that the world used one language. And why should it seeme unpossible, that God to whom all things are possible, in that instant could make them forget their language; seeing that some diseases, as the Lethargy, doe bring such forgetfulnesse, as that the patient knoweth not how to call things by their names: and Pliny writeth of Corvinus Messala, that he forgot his owne name.

5. Confut. Against Philastrius, that all the world was of one language not divers, before.

*5. PHilastrius counteth it an hereticall opinion, that all the world was of one language before the tower of Babel: they are said so to be (saith he) that although they spake divers languages, yet they one understood another, and so in effect it was but as one. But the text is contrary, that the whole earth was of one language and one speech, not of one understanding, but of one lip, as it is in the hebrew, that is, they framed their words and language after the same manner. And how could every man under|stand so many languages, (which are held of most to have beene not so few as seventy) without a mira|culous gift, such as the Apostles had: and whereas Moses maketh mention of divers languages in the 10. chap. v. 5.20.31. there that is spoken by way of anticipation. And here Moses setteth forth the beginning and occasion of the diversity of languages, by a certaine figure, called hysterosis, which declareth that last, that was done first, setting the effect before the cause.

6. Confut. Against Philo, that this division of tongues, is to bee understood historically, not in allegory.

6. FOurthly: Philo draweth this story of the confusion of tongues to an allegory, to signifie the confusion of vices, Hoc est nunc propositum sub figura confusionis linguarum dijicere constipatu vitiorum cuneum: This is Moses purpose under this figure of confusion of tongues to cast downe the con|joynd muster of vices: for to speake properly, this parting of one language into many, is a separation, rather than a confusion. Contra. 1. After this manner the whole story of Genesis, may bee allegorized, so that we should have neither creation of the world, nor inundation of the same in true history, but in del|vised allegory. 2. This division of tongues is called a confusion, not in respect of the divers speech, which was indeed divided, not united, or confounded, but of the speakers, who were confounded in their affecti|on, in being astonished at so suddaine an alteration: in their memory, in forgetting their accustomed speech: in their understanding, because they one understood not another in their worke, which was con|fused: the server bringing one thing, when the builder called for another.

7. Confut. Against Plato and Aristotle.

*7. PLato his opinion is, that words have their force and meaning from nature, Aristotle, that they were first framed, as it pleased man: But here wee learne, that God gave unto man speech: and he infused into men at once diversity of languages.

8. Confut. Against the Lutherans, that make an omnipresence of Christs body.

8 Vers. 5. THE Lord came downe: the Lutheranes Vbiquitaries, that maintaine an omnipresence and ubiquity, that is an every-where presence of Christs flesh, being pressed by this argu|ment, that Christs body doth move from place to place, therefore it is not every where: doe answer out of this place, that God is said to move and descend, and yet he is every where: But the reason is not alike, for to ascend and descend, is spoken of Christs body truly, and properly, but of the God-head only meta|phorically, and figuratively.

9. Confut. Against the latine service in popery.

9. Vers. 9. THerefore the name was called Babel: because their language was so confounded, that they one understood not another: so what is the Church of Rome to bee counted, but another Babel and synagogue of confusion, where the people understand not the Priest, no one another in their latine service and prayers. Muscul.

10. Confut. Against Pererius: the marrying of the uncle and neece unlawfull.

10. Vers. 29. THE name of Abrahams wife was Sarai: who is held to be the daughter of Haran Abrahams brother: which marriages were not then forbidden by any law, but afterwards they were: * where the errour of the papists and namely of Bellarmino and Pererius may be noted: who af firme, that it was not forbidden by Moses law, for the uncle to marry his neece; for Othoniel the younger brother of Caleb, married Achsa Calebs daughter. Iud. 1.13. Contra. 1. To marry in this degree is forbid|den in Leviticus, by necessary collection. Levit. 18.12. Thou shalt not uncover the shame of thy fathers sister; for she is thy fathers kinswoman: doth not the same reason hold for the other sex: thou shalt not uncover the shame of thy fathers brother, for hee is thy fathers kinsman. Where the degree is prohibited in the male, it holdeth also in the female sex, unlesse they will say; because the law saith, thou shalt not cover thy neighbours wife, and expresseth not thy neighbours husband, that therefore the one should bee lawfull and not the other.* 2. Othoniel was not the brother of Caleb, but either his nephew, as the Septuagint read; Othoniel the sonne of Kenez adelphon, the brother of Caleb, namely Kenez, for so is the construction in the greek; or else, as Iunius collecteth, Othoniel and Caleb were brothers children, Caleb of Iephunne; *Othoni*el of Seraiah which Iephunne and Seraiah were the sons of Kenaz, for Caleb was not the son of Kenaz, but of Iephunne. 1 Chron. 4.15. yet it seemeth that he was of the stocke of Kenaz, as grand-child unto him; * because he is called a Kenazite: Num. 23.12. and yet the sonne of Iephunneh. Othaniel then is called the brother of Caleb, not properly, but in a large sense, as Lot is called Abrahams brother, being indeed his brothers sonne. Wherefore Pererius in following the blind latine text, was much deceived.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. Against discontentment.

Vers. 2. AS they went from the East, &c. Chrysostome hereupon noteth,* that as these men not contented with their state sought out a new cuntry: somankind, saith hee, non potest intra suos limites consistere, can never keepe it selfe within the bounds, but alwayes coveteth more.

2. Observ. Against continuing in sinne.

AND there they abode: Philo noteth here, that as these men having found a pleasant field, did not passe thorow, but continued there: so sinners doe delight to continue and dwell in sinne: ejus malum fuisset, si post quam in peccata inciderant, pro alicui non pro domestic is habuissent, &c. it had beene a lesse evill, after they had fallen into sinne, if they had used it not as a domesticall, but as a stranger.

3. Observ. Against vaine and momentary pleasure.

Vers. 3. COME let us make bricke: Like as these, that dwelt in Shiner build of bricke: sic qui voluptatib. carnis inserviunt, de fragili materia, &c. so they that are the servants of pleasure, doe build with brittle matter, that cannot continue, but they which follow vertue; lateres in lapides mutant, doe turne bricke into hewed stones: Gregor. This appeareth in the parable of the rich man.* Luke 16. whose pleasure was soone over, but Lazarus joy was everlasting.

4. Observ. Difficulty should not hinder vertuous workes.

SO they had bricke for stone, &c. Many times the difficulty that occurreth, doth cause men to cease off from their enterprise. But nothing could hinder these men: though they had neither stone nor mortar, yet they will build a tower, such as was never seene in the world before, or after. Calvin. We learne here|by, that nothing should discourage us, or make us give over in a good worke, seeing these were so labori|ous in compassing this their proud and ungodly enterprise.

5. Observ. Against building for ostentation.

Vers. 4. THat we may got us a name, &c. Chrysostome here well noteth the vanity of worldly men, that build houses, and make great workes, ut immortalem nominis memoriam relinquant: to leave an immortall memory of their name; whereas both they faile of their purpose: hodie domus dicitur hujus, eras alterius: to day it is called one mans house, to morrow another: and so their name is extinguished: and they might take a more sure way to preserve their name, by doing of good, while they live, as it is in the Psalme 112.9. he hath distributed and given to the poore, his righteousnesse remaineth for ever. But worldlly men doe as Absolon did, because he had no children left to keepe his name, he built him a pillar: 2 Sam. 18.18. So they wanting good workes, which are the true fruits of the spirituall men, seeke to make them|selves famous by sumptuous buildings.

6. Observ. Wicked men proud before their fall.

Vers. 4. LEst wee be scattered: Philo readeth before we be scattered: and thereupon observeth, that such is the obstinacy of the wicked, though they see that great judgements are hanging over their heads, yet they will goe on in their wickednesse, as the conscience of these proud men gave them, that they should not goe unpunished, yet for all that they proceed in their purpose. Thus we see verified that saying of the wise man, Prov. 16.18. pride goeth before destruction: as these men when they were in the height of their pride, were dispersed and scattered: like as Saul made a goodly place for himselfe, as tri|umphing for the late victory obtained against Amelech, even then when he was cast off from being King: 1 Sam. 15.13. Oecolampad; in hunc locum.

7. Observ. Not to condemne any rashly.

Vers. 5. THE Lord came downe to see, &c. Chrysostome noteth: vult erudiri nos, ne unquam fratres temere condemnemus: In that God commeth downe to see and examine, hee would have us learne never without due examination to condemne our brethren rashly: And it is especially a rule for magistrates, not to condemne any their cause unheard, as Putiphar did Ioseph, Gen. 39.20. Muscul.

8. Observ. The division of the wicked profitable.

Vers. 8. SO the Lord scattered them, &c. Hence Gregory well observeth, that the unity of the wicked is pernicious, their division profitable: So Paule escaped, while his enemies were divided. Act. 23. eripi•tur justi, dum dividuntur injusti, the righteous are delivered, while the unrighteous are divided: like as the Israelites by the dividing of the waters, had a ready passage thorow the red Sea: so here this proud and vaine-glorious enterprise, by the division of tongues was disappointed.

CHAP. XII.

1. The Argument and parts.

T His Chapter hath two parts: the first sheweth the occasion of Abraham• comming into the Land of Canaan, v. 1. to 6. the second containeth such things, as hapned to him there: from v. 6. to the end.

In the first part. 1. Gods calling is set forth, v. 1. with his large and ample promises, both temporall to Abraham himselfe, that his name should be great: to his posterity, that a great nation should rise of him: v. 2. and spirituall: to Abraham, I will blesse thee, to his posterity, all the families of the earth should be blessed in him. v. 3. namely in Christ. 2. Abrahams obedience is set forth, with the circumstances of his age: v. 4. of his company that came with him into the land of Canaan, v. 5.

In the second part is described. 1. Abrahams travell and journeying in Canaan: toward Shechem, where Abraham built an altar, and the Lord appeared to him, vers▪ 6.7. toward Bethel, vers. 8. the South, vers. 9. 2. his going downe into Aegypt: 1. The occasion, by reason of the famine, vers. 10. 2. His consultation with Sa•a, to say she was his sister to save his life, vers. 11, 12, 13. 3. Pharaohs presumption in taking Abrahams wife, to vers. 17. 4. Gods revenge or punishment, vers. 17. which brought forth these three effects, 1. Abrahams admonition by Pharo, vers. 18. 2. the restitution of his wife, vers. 19. 3. his safe deliverance and dimission, vers. 20.

2. The grammaticall construction, or sense.

* v. 1. And the Lord had said. S. Ch. A.B. but the Lord: H. for the Lord. T.G.

Come into the land. S.H. into the land, caeter.

v. 5. The soules, which they possessed, S. which he had subjected to the Law. C. which he had made. H. gotten, T.B. G. gnasah, made.

Into Canaan they came, the Sept. have not these words, the rest have.

* v. 6. unto an high oake. S. famous valley. H. unto the plaine of Morch. caet. celon, signifieth both an oake, and a valley or plaine.

v. 8. Bethel toward the west: caeter. toward the sea. S. heb. because the Mediterranean Sea, was in the west side of Canaan.

* v. 9. in the desert. S. toward the South: caeter. negebh. signifieth both.

v. 11. tooke his journey toward the East. T. tooke his journey first: C. from the East: c•t. heb. michehem, to|ward the East, Gen. 28.

* v. 13. Say, I am his sister. S. thou art my sister: caet.

I shall live for thy sake. H. T. by thy occasion. B. shall be preserved by thee: G. for thy words. C. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, because of thee. S.P. heb. biglal, propter, because.

* v. 16. mules and Camels, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, S. she ashes and camels, c•t. athon. a she asse, chamer, an hee asse: the mule is the shee.

v. 19. I have taken her to my wife. S.C.P. I might have taken her. caet.

3. The Exegesis or Theologicall Explication.

QVEST. I. Where and how the Lord spake to Abraham.

Vers. 1. FOr the Lord had said, &c. 1. God thus spake to Abraham, not after his fathers death, but while he was yet in Mesopotamia, Act. 7.2. for to what end should the Lord have thus said, Get thee out of the countrey, &c. if hee had beene come out thence already? Calvin. 2. Wee read that God spake unto Abraham eight times, Gen. 12.1. againe, v. 7. and c. 13.14. and c. 15.4. and 17.1. also c. 18.9. and c. 21.9. and 22. 1. It is like that divers other times, the Lord spake unto him: but these are expres|sed. 2. And how God spake unto Abraham, Basil thinketh it was citra ullah corporis vocem, without any corporall or outward voyce,* but by the illumination of his minde: Ramban thinketh it was by dreame: some, that God spake to him by Sem, or some other Prophet: but in this place it is like that God spake to Abraham either by himselfe, or his Angels; when he spake by dreame in sleepe, or by vision, when he was waking: it is so expressed in the text, as c. 15.1.

QVEST. II. Whether God named it a countrey to Abraham, whither he called him▪

TO the land, that I will shew thee, &c. 1. When the Lord thus called to Abraham, hee named no cer|taine countrey, whither hee should goe, for the better triall of his faith: for the Apostle saith, Hee knew not whither hee went, Hebr. 11.8. and Stephen, Act. 7.3. nameth no countrey whither hee was called 2. Whereas Canaan is named in the former chapter, vers. 31. either Moses setteth downe the name of the country, by way of anticipation, or God might afterward shew unto Abraham, as he went, whither hee would have him to goe. Calvin. R. Isaach Carus thinketh, that at the first Abraham understood that countrey to the which hee was called, to be Canaan, because of the curse, that hee should be a servant, &c. but that is not like.

QVEST. III. Wherefore Abraham was called out of Chaldea into Canaan.

AND the Lord called Abraham out of Chaldea into Canaan. 1. Because Chaldea was given to abomina|ble Idolatry, and other great corruptions of life, where Abraham could not remaine without great danger. 2. That Gods blessing in the multiplying of Abrahams seede might better appeare abroad in a strange countrey. Perer. 3. But the greatest cause was, not as some thinke to converse with Sem, who is held to be Melchizedek; but that Abraham might take possession of that countrey, and by faith and hope enioy that, which was promised to be given to his seede. Calvin.

QVEST. IIII. Where Abraham was, when the Lord first called him.

Where Abraham should be, when as God first called him, there are divers opinions. 1. It can nei|ther be, as Augustine thinketh, that Abraham was called, after he was departed out of Chaldea,* before he came to Charran, beeing yet in Mesopotamia: for to what end should the Lord have bidden Abraham to goe out of his countrey, if he had beene removed alreadie? To say with Augustine and Eulcherius, that now he is commanded to leave his countrey in affection, as he had alreadie done in bodie, hath no probabilitie: for both Abraham should have beene disobedient to Gods Vocation, beeing wed|ded still in desire to his countrey, and it is not like that he had a minde to returne to an idolatrous countrey, where he was to expect nothing but persecution. Steven indeed saith, he was in Mesopotamia, when God called him: but Mesopotamia is there taken largely as it comprehendeth Siria and Chaldea: and so Steven saith, that he came out of the land of the Chaldeans. Act. 7.4. Mercer.

2. Neither was Abraham twice called, once in Chaldea, and againe in Charran, as Rupertus and Tostatus thinke upon this place: for this had argued Abrahams sloth and negligence, if hee had made no more haste to obey the calling of God. Steven also, Act. 7. maketh mention but of one calling.

3. To say further, that Steven beeing occupied with other matters might forget himselfe, and not well remember the circumstance of time: or that he was contented to follow the vulgar account, is to doe wrong to so holie a man, being directed by the spirit of God to speake: neither doth Eucherus answer satisfie, that expoundeth Steven thus, that Abraham was placed in the land of Canaan after the death of Terah: he might depart from Charran his father yet living, but all that while hee was a sojourner in Canaan, & had no certaine place till after his fathers death: Contra. But this sense is contrarie to the text, that God after his fathers death 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, translated or brought Abraham into Canaan: this must be understood not of Abrahams setling in Canaan, but his first remove thither.

4. Neither is Lyranus opinion sound, who therein followeth Rasi and Mizrahi, that the calling, which Moses here speaketh of, was that in Charran: for Abraham is bidden to come out of his countrey: but Charran was not his countrey: and the Lord saith, hee brought him out of Vr of the Chaldeans, chap. 15.7. not out of Charran But Paulus Burgensis opinion is farre wide that Charran was Abrahams countrie, not Chaldea: for Vr of the Chaldees is called the land of his brother Arans nativitie: now whereas Abraham calleth it his countrie where Na•or dwelt in Charran in Aram Naharaim, or Mesopotamia, Gen. 24.8.4.10. there Mesopotamia or Naharaim, the countrie betweene the rivers, * is taken in a large sense, as it containeth both Siria and Chaldea as is before shewed: or for that all his kindred were now remooved thither. Mercer:

5. Wherefore the truth is, that Abraham was in Chaldea, when the Lord called him: so Aben Ezra, Mercer. for so the Lord saith, cap. 15.7. and although he is bid to leave his kindred, who came with him, as Terah, and Lot, yet for all this his calling was in Chaldea: for Abraham was ready to have left his kindred, if they had refused to goe with him. And Terah is made the Author of this journey, not as though they went forth without Gods calling, but for that hee was willing to goe with Abraham, * whether for grieffe of his sonnes death, as Iosephus, or for that though hee was somewhat superstitiously bent, hee was desirous to goe out of that Idolatrous countrey: therefore Terah Abrahams father being the head of the family, is named as the chiefe.

QVEST. V. Of divers kinds of calling and renouncing the world.

There are divers kinds of callings: some are called immediately of God, either by manifest revelation as Abraham, or secret inspiration: some are called by men, as the Israelites by the Prophets: some are called by affliction, as Psal. 88.34. When hee slew them, they sought and returned. And three wayes doe men forsake the world; 1. by actuall leaving and forsaking all they had, as Abraham here, and the Apo|stles under Christ. 2. by mortifying their affections, as David was like a weaned childe, Psal. 131.2. 3. by sequestering their thoughts to the contemplation of heavenly things: which S. Paul calleth the having of our conversation in heaven. Phil. 3.20.

QVEST. VI. Seven great blessings upon Abraham.

Vers. 2. I Will make of thee a great nation, &c. 1. God calling Abraham from his countrey, leaveth him not destitute, but promiseth a great recompence: for his countrey, hee is brought into a better land: for a small kinred, a great nation shall come out of him: he is called from his fathers house, but God will make him a father of many nations. 2. The Lord bestoweth upon Abraham seven great blessings. Pe-Perer:

ex Cajetan. 1. I will make thee a great nation: either because many and populous nations came of Abraham, by Hagar, and Ketura, Gen. 25. or in respect of the people of Israel, which was great, not so much in number, as renowne, because of the Kings, Prophets, wise and vertuous men, that came of them.

*2. I will blesse thee. This blessing was able to make his barren wife Sara fruitfull, Vatablus. I will make thee rich, prosperous, Musculus. Or I will blesse thee spiritually, Rupertus.

3. I will make thy name great. 1. Abrahams name was revered even among the heathen, as Iosephus sheweth, lib. 1. antiquit. 2. It was great, in respect of the faithfull, that are called the children of Abraham. 3. Great, because the Lord vouchsafeth to call himselfe the God of Abraham, Isaak, and Iacob. 4. Great in respect of Christ, that came of Abraham, Matth. 1.1. Perer.

4. Thou shalt bee a blessing. 1. It signifieth the certainty of this blessing: whom man blesseth, they are not alway blessed: but he that God blesseth, shall surely bee blessed. 2. The excellency of this blessing: he shall not only bee blessed, but a blessing it selfe. 3. And he should be a forme of blessing: as they should say, the God of Abraham, Isaac, &c. blesse thee. Calvin.

5. I will blesse them that blesse thee, &c. Abrahams friends should bee blessed for his sake: as Lot. Gen. 14. Ismael, 25. therefore Abimelech being a King, did desire to make a league with Abraham, because he saw God was with him.

6. I will curse them, &c. So perished Pharao, Og, Sehon, the Assyrians, Chaldeans, were punished for their enmity against the people of God: Luther. Therefore Balaam durst not curse the people of God, because the Lord had not cursed them, Numb. 23.

*7. All the families of the earth shall be blessed in thee. 1. Not only because they shall take up a forme of blessing, as the Hebrewes interpret, the Lord blesse thee like Abraham, for this forme among all the families of the earth, was not used: the Romanes in the coronation of their Emperours were wont to say, is felicius Augusto, melior Trajano, be more happy than Augustus, better than Trajane. 2. Neither so onely, because all Gentiles should be blessed for imitating the example of faithfull Abraham. 3. Non tantum significat ipsum fore exemplar, sed causam benedictionis: it signifieth he should not only be an example or patterne, but a cause of blessing: because in Christ the seed of Abraham, as the Apostle expoundeth, Galath. 3.16. all the nations in the world were blessed. Calvin.

QVEST. VII. Of the computation of the 430. yeares mentioned by S. Paul. Gal. 3.17.

FRom this promise made to Abraham, are we to account the 430. yeares, which S. Paul saith were betweene the promise and the law, Galath. 3.17. 1. Hereunto agreeth the computation of Moses, that the Israelites dwelt in Aegypt foure hundred and thirty yeares, Exod. 12.40. not in Aegypt onely, but in Aegypt and Canaan, as the Septuagint doe interpret that place; for so long it was since Abraham first began to sojourne in Canaan, at what time also by reason of the famine hee went into Aegypt: so Iosephus maketh his computation; to the building of Salomons temple, from the departure of the Israelites out of Aegypt, * 592. yeares, and from Abrahams comming into Canaan, a thousand and twentie: so that there shall be betweene Abrahams arrivall in Canaan, and the deliverance of the Israelites out of Aegypt, by this account foure hundred twenty eight. * 2. Genebrard then is greatly deceived, that counteth six hundred yeares from Abrahams comming into Canaan, to the Israelites going out of Aegypt: for both Saint Paul is directly against him, who (as Genebrard would enforce) hath no relation in that number to the time of the Israelites dwelling in Aegypt: neither doth the computation of the yeares agree: for from Abrahams comming to Canaan till Iacobs going into Aegypt, * are but yeers 215. which are gathered thus: from the promise to the birth of Isaak, 25. from thence to the birth of Iacob, 60. from thence till hee went into Aegypt, 130. and the time from thence till the Israelites going out, though it cannot bee so certainly gathered, is thought not to exceed two hundred and fiftene yeare more: as shall bee shewed, when wee come to that place of the fifteenth chapter. 3. Though Saint Paul make mention of that promise, which was made to Abraham and his seed, which seemeth to bee that, Gen. 22.18. yet by the account of the yeeres, it must bee referred to this promise: for the other renewed, when Isaak should have beene offered up. was fifty yeeres, if Isaak were then 25. as Iosephus, or if hee were 37. as some other Hebrewes thinke, it was 62. yeeres after: and so many yeeres should we want of foure hundred and thirty. And then the same word, seed, is not here used; yet there is the same sense: for the Lord in saying, in thee shall all the families of the earth bee blessed, meaneth his seed. 4. Further, whereas Abraham is said to bee seventy five yeere old at his departure out of Charran, and the promise was made before hee came out of Chaldea: his time of abode could not bee long there, not five yeares, as Iunius supposeth, but I rather thinke with Augustine and Eucherius,* that all was done in a yeare or two at the most. Mercer. his going out of Chaldea, staying at Charran, and departure from thence: for it is not like but that Abraham made all haste to obey Gods call.

QVEST. VIII. Why Lot accompanied Abraham.

Vers. 5. Abraham tooke Sarai, &c. and Lot. 1. Lot followed not Abraham, because he was his adopt[ed] son,* as Iosephus thinketh, for then he would not have suffered him to goe apart from him, Gen. 13. and he called him his brother, not his sonne. ibid. But Lot, as one set apart also to be a worshipper of God▪ is content to leave his other kindred, and accompany righteous Abraham. 2. Where mention is made of the soules, which they had gotten in Charran, it is neither like that Lots two daughters were there borne, but rather at Sodome: neither by soules (with some) doe wee understand cattell, for that were improper: neither need we referre it to the winning and converting of soules,* as the Chaldee text seelmeth to interpret, alleaged before: but it is taken for the servants which Abraham had purchased there, Muscul. And such as were borne of those servants. 3. But as for that opinion of Nicolaus Damascenus, and Iustinus, that Abraham before he came into Canaan was King of Damascus: I leave it as a fancie; for the text sheweth th[is] Abrah[am] came forthwith from Charran to Canaan: and it had shewed some disobedience in Abraham in foreslaking the time to follow the calling of God: yea wee finde not that Abraham had any certaine dwelling place, but removed from place to place, and was as a pilgrime and stranger, therefore not like to have beene a King.

QVEST. IX. What place Sechem was, and the valley of Moreh.

Vers. 6. Abraham passed thorow the land, to the place of Sechem, and to the Plaine of Moreh. 1. This Se[che]m was not on the East side of Canaan, as Perer: but rather toward the West where the Sunne goeth downe, Deut. 11.30. 2. It is called the place rather than Citie of Sechem, because afterward there was built the City Sechem, Gen. 33.18. so called of Sechem the sonne of H[am]. 3. Eusebius maketh two Sechems, this, which in his time was called Neapolis, destroyed by Abimelech, Iud. 9. re-edified by Ieroboam, 1 King. 12.25. and another in Mount Ephraim, which pertained to the lot of the Priests, Iosu. 21.21. but it is evident that these were all one: for Ieroboams Sechem was also in Mount Ephraim, 1 King. 12.25. Neither doe we finde mention made of two Sechems in the Scripture: not farre from this City was the Mountaine that had two tops, Hebal and Garrizim, Deut. 11.30. from whence the blessings and curses were delivered: this is the same City which is called Sychar, Ioh. 4. neare unto which was Iacobs Well, Mercer. 4. Not farre from Sechem was the Plaine of Morch, (so called of More the possessor thereof, as the Plaine of Mamre was named of the owner, Mercer.) which the Septuag. trans[late] the high Oak:

the truth is, that it was bo•b a Plaine and set with Oakes, Deut. 11.30. another word is used, Guerabah, which signifieth a Plaine: there Iacob under an Oake buried the images which were in his house, Gen. 35. 4. He hid them under an Oake that was by Sechem: Iosua made a covenant with the people in this Sechem, and pitched a stone under an Oake, in witsse thereof, Iosua 24.26. In this Plaine was Abimelech made king by the men of Sechem, Iud. 9.6. Some thinke that in this Plaine were situated the fiue Cities, Sodome, Gomorrha, Adama, Seboim, Zoar, Lyrans. Tostat.

QVEST. X. Why it is added the Canaanites were in the land.

The Canaanite was in the land. 1. These Canaanites were not they, which gave denomination to the whole Countrey and land of Canaan: but these were some one people of Canaans posterity, which were especially called by that name, who inhabited in the West part of Canaan, by the Sea and the coast of Jordan, Num. 13.30. 2. This is expressed that the Canaanites dwelt in the land, not to shew Abrahams right, because he came of Sem, to whose seed this Countrey appertained, which was usurped by the Canaanites; for it appeareth not, that Sems posterity ever inhabited this Countrey: and if it had beene Abrahams right, God should have given him but his owne: whereas it was Gods love toward Abraham, that brought him to this Countrey, Deut. 4.37. and these people were cast out for their wickednesse, Abrahams seed did not possesse it for their righteousnesse, Deut. 9.6. Neither had they any right unto it, but of Gods favour. 3. But this is added, to shew that Abraham was a stranger in Canaan, to whom God gave not so much as the breadth of a foot, as Saint Stephen saith, Act. 7.5. that his faith hereby might bee exercis|sed, in beleev|ng God, who promised it to his seed, Iun. as also seeing Abraham was called to a land where the wicked dwelt, wherein he had no certaine possession given him, the Lord would have him thereby to be put in minde of his celestia|ll countrey, as the Apostle sheweth, Heb. 11.16. Calvin.

QVEST. XI. How God appeared to Abraham.

Vers. 7. The Lord appeared to Abraham. 1. God is not said before to have appeared to Abraham: and how he appeared, it is not expressed, whether in a dreame, in vision, or face to face, that is, manifestly, not darkly, for these are the three wayes wherby God appeareth, Num. 12.6.8. it is not like, that God shew|ed himselfe by a dreame, as Cajetane thinketh, for the Scripture useth to expresse that kind of apparition by name: as Matth. 1. The Angell of the Lord appeared to Ioseph by dreame: but after some other manner. 2. God promiseth to Abraham two unlikely things: that he should have seed, whereas his wife was bar|ren, that his seed should have that land wherein the Canaanites yet dwelt, that was a mighty nation: * that Abraham should wholly depend upon God. 3. And the Lord deferreth his promise, both that Abraham and his seed should be tryed by affliction in Canaan and Egypt, that they might acknowledge Gods free gift, and he stayeth till the wickednesse of the Canaanites was come to the full, Genes. 15.16. 4. Hee buildeth an Altar to testifie his thankfulness. Perer. not without Gods warrant, * for the Lord in that place appeared, Muscul. and Abraham doth testifie his inward faith, by his outward profession. Calvin.

QUEST. XII. Why Abraham so oft removed.

Vers. 8. HE removed thence to a Mountaine, &c. 1. He removed, because his building of Altars was offen|siue to the Inhabitants, and it was a wonder that hee was not stoned of them for the same. Calvin. As also it pleased God hereby to trie Abrahams faith, being tossed thus from post to pil|lar, and that thereby hee might bee a meane by his godly life and religion to call that people to rel|pentance, Pererius. 2. Hee is said to pitch his tents, being ready as souldiers are, to remove their campe, * Chrysost. 3. This Bethel was at this time called Luz, Gen. 28.19. It is called Bethel by way of anticipation, by that name which it had afterward: and it was removed from Hai, here named, by the space of a mile. * This Hai was that City which Iosuah destroyed, cap. 8. there was another City of the same name among the Ammonites, Ierem. 49.5. this Hai was three miles situate from Jericho, and as farre from Elizeus fountaine neare to Jerico, * 2 King. 2. Perer. ex Andr. Mas. • Borchard. 4. This hill wherein Abraham built an Altar, was the same wherein Iosua also reared an Altar, in Mount Ebal, neare to Hai, Ios. 8.30. this hill had two tops or heads, Hebal and Garizim, where was built a temple in disgrace of that at Jerusalem: and this is the hill which the Samaritane woman meaneth, Ioh. 4. which hill is not neare to Jerico and Gilgal, as Mercator collecteth out of Eusebius booke de loc. Hebraic. translated by Hierome, but neare to Sechem, and not neare Gilgal, as the Septuag. read, which might deceive Euseb. but over against it, Pererius.

QVEST. XIII. Of Abrahams going downe into Egypt.

Vers. 10. Then there came a famine in the land, therefore Abraham went downe into Egypt, &c.
 1. Abraham falleth into three great tentations at once. 1. He is pinched with famine. 2. In danger of his life among the Aegyptians. 3. And his wives chastity put in great hazard. 2. Abraham goeth downe into Aegypt, constrained thereto by the famine, being not able to releve himselfe in Canaan, where hee possessed not one foot: * he would not tempt God, to refuse the meanes which was offered. 3. For God is tempted two wayes, when men are either addicted altogether to the meanes, as Thomas would not believe unlesse he saw: others tempted God, when they immediately depended upon his providence, rejecting the meanes, as Ahaz refused to have a signe given him, Isay 7. 4. God suffered Abraham to bee thus tempted. 1. For the triall of his faith, Calvin. 2. That Gods mercy might the better appeare in his deliverance from so many dangers. 3. To be an example and comfort to posterity how to behave themselves in the like dangers. Pererius. 4. Vt lucem doctrinae & virtutis suae impertiret Aegyptiis; to impart unto the Aegyptians the light of his doctrine and vertue, Chrys. 5. Abraham sinned not in going downe to Aegypt, as Ramban, * Moses Gerundens. collecteth, because he forsooke the land of Canaan, as though he could not have beene provided for there: and therefore he thinketh that Abrahams posterity was afterward afflicted in Egypt: For 1. Abraham should rather have offended, if he had refused the meanes offered for his releefe. 2. He had no commandement not to goe into Egypt, as afterward Isaak had, chap. 26.23. he went but to sojourne there, as the text saith, in minde and in heart, his desire and affection was still to the promised Canaan, Musculus.

QVEST. XIV. The feare of Abraham concerning Sarai her beauty.

Vers. 11, 12. I Know thou art a faire woman, &c. they will kill me, and save thee alive, &c. 1. Sarai though stricken in yeares, retained her excellent favour and beauty still, either because in those dayes the vigour of the body so soone decayed not, or her not bearing of her children might be a means to preserve her strength and beauty, or God might give her that speciall gift, to exercise Abraham in that feare, Calvin. 2. And Abraham feareth what might happen to him in Egypt, rather than in Canaan, because the Canaanites were generally better coloured and fairer than the Egyptians, among whom Sarai, though not regarded in Canaan, might be desired in Egypt, Iunius, Perer. 3. The Hebrewes fondly imagine, that Abraham knew not his wife to be faire till now, having hitherto abstained from her company: but that is untrue: for what reason had Abraham so long to refraine in lawfull marriage? neither if it were so, could it have beene knowne, that Sarai was barren: therefore Abrahams words, I know, &c. must not be referred onely to the next clause, that thou art faire, but to the whole sentence following, vers. 12. that the Aegyptians when they see thee, &c. will kill me. 4. We may see what a dangerous thing beauty is in a woman not vertuously given, seeing even in Sarai so godly a matrone, it put Abraham in such feare, Muscul. 5. Likewise in the Egyptians, is noted both their raging affection, that made no conscience of murther to enjoy their lust, and their blindnesse of judgement, that made lesse account of murther than adultery: for they would kill Abraham first, before they violate his wife. Perer.

QVEST. XV. Whether Abraham and Sarai dissembled in saying she was his sister.

Vers. 13. Say thou art my sister, &c. 1. Both their impudent mouthes are to be stopped that altogether exclaime against this fact of Abraham, making him by his dissimulation as a bawd of his owne wife. 2. Neither yet can this fact be altogether excused, as Augustine doth, Vxorem tauiuit non negavit; He denieth her not his wife, but concealeth her: Nihil mentitus erat, quia proquina erat sanguine▪ He lyed not at all, because she was his kinswoman in bloud, and so his sister; as Lot is called his brother: for in affirming her to be his sister, they inferred she was not his wife, and so the truth was not onely concealed, but dis|sembled. 3. Wherefore as Calvins saith, Videtur aliquid mendacii admixtum, It seemeth that some untruth was sprinkled or mixed herein: for Sara is noted to have beene for this her dissimulation reproved. Gen. 20.16.

QVEST. XVI. Whether Abraham did well in bringing Sarai into danger for her chastity.

* THat my life may be preserved by thee. 1. Neither was this fact of Abraham so hainous as Origen see|meth to thinke, that Sara was exposita contaminationibus per convenientiam maritalem: was exposed to pollution by the connivence or sufferance of her husband, and therefore he runneth here to allegories. Hierome also calleth it foedam necessitatem, an uncleane necessity.

2. Neither can this fact be altogether excused, seeing his wives chastity was thereby brought into danger.

1. Neither can Augustines excuse suffice, Vxorem Deo credidit, ne polueretur, He committed his wife to God, that he should keepe her from being polluted: for this had beene to presume. 2. Nor Rupertus fully giveth satisfaction, Quam potuit periculi partem sustulit, caetera Deo commendavit: that he prevented part of the danger himselfe, in providing for his life, the rest he committed to God. For no man must doe evill that good may come thereof. Abraham to save his life should not hazard her chastity. 3. Neither yet doth Cajetan sufficiently answer the matter, That without Sara her consent he knew she could not be coupled in marriage to any: for violence might have beene offered to her, though she consented not. 4. Neither is it like that Abraham did thus by any instinct from God, as Pererius thinketh: no such thing being expressed.

3. Wherefore this proceeded of Abrahams infirmitie rather, who should have committed the preservation of his life rather to the providence of God, than any such device of his owne. Vatablus: and although Abrahams intent were good, to preserve his life in regard of Gods promise made to his seede, yet he failed in the meanes: and though he had rather have died, than hazard his wives chastitie, yet being wholly intent how to provide for his life he forgetteth all other things, and casteth what perill might come one way, and not another. Calvin.

QUEST. XVII. Of the taking of Sarai into Pharaos house.

Vers. 15. The woman was taken into Pharaos house, 17. but the Lord plagued Pharaoh and his house. * 1. It was an usuall thing among the heathen Princes, (whose will stood for a law) to take with violence at their pleasure such women as they liked: so the Egyptians did steale away Isis, the daughter of Inachus, King of Argives, and caried her into Egypt. The Grecians carried away Europa, daughter of Ageenor, out of Phenicia into Creta. Iason brought Medea from Colchis into Grecia: Paris did the like to Heßena Menelaus wife: so doth Pharao here to Sarai. 2. Pharao was plagued some thinke with a flux of blood, some, in that the wombs of their women were shut up, as it is in the like story, Gen. 20. Iosephus thinketh it was the plague: Philo a torment both of bodie and minde: it is most like it was such a plague as Phaßrao felt in himselfe. 3. His house also was smitten with the same plague: not onely the Princes that com|mended Sarai her beauty, and so were accessary to this fact, as Chrysostome thinketh: but the whole house generally: who though they all were not agents in this matter, yet God, whose judgements, though secret,* yet are alwayes just, was able to finde sufficient cause of punishment among them, Calvin.

QVEST. XVIII. How Pharao did know that Sara was Abrahams wife.

Vers. 18. What is this thing thou hast done unto mee, &c. By this wee see, that even among the hea|then, adultery was counted an hainous sinne, Et regi ipsi cavendum, and even to be shun|ned of the King, Ambr. lib. de Abrah. c. 2. 2. Pharao* taketh it grievously, that hee was thus deceived of a stranger, and if God had not protected Abraham, it might have cost him his life, Luther. 3. This was knowne to Pharao, not by the Egyptian Priests, whom Pharao should consult withall, as Iosephus think|eth, though sometime it may please God, that such may gesse at the truth, as Balaam did: but either it was made manifest by divine revelation, as the like was to Abimelech, Gen. 20. Chrysostom. or else by the con|fession of Sara, Oecolampad. after that Pharao being feared by these plagues, beganne to examine what might be the cause. 4. Pharao layeth all the fault upon Abraham, not considering, that God saw his un|chaste thought, and his inhumanity towards strangers, Iun.

QVEST. XIX. How Sarah was preserved from Pharaos lust.

Vers. 19. BEhold thy wife, take her, &c. 1. Sarai was kept by Gods providence from the violent lust of Pharao: as she was likewise preserved from Abimilech, Genes. 20. if God shewed that mer|cy to Abraham againe offending in the like, it cannot be otherwise thought, but he found that mercy with God before: and the preservation of Sarai the second time, sheweth that she was not corrupted before, Calvin. 2. The cause hereof, was neither any moderate disposition in Pharao, nor yet because the use was among those Easterne Princes (as we reade of the Kings of Persia) Est. 12.12. to prepare and purifie with sweet oyles and odours some while before such women as entred into the King. Hieron. But it is most like, that Pharao. was hindred by this sudden disease, that he could not accomplish his lust, Iun. and therein Chrysostome noteth the like miraculous deliverance of Sara from Pharaos raging lust, as of Daniel from the Lions. 3. The reason why here it is not expressed, in like manner▪ as Gen. 20. that Pharao came not neare Sarai, *Theodore*t maketh to be this; because, Per id temporis Sarai paritura erat Isaach: about that time Sarai was to beare Isaach: and therefore it is expressed, Ne suspectum illud semen esset: lest he might bee thought not of Abrahams seed. 4. Rupertus well noteth in this story of Abraham, a type and figure of those things that hapned to his posterity. 1. As a famine brought Abraham into Egypt,* so did it Iacob and his familie. 2. As Abraham was afflicted by the taking away of his wife, so was his seed oppressed. 3. As Pharao was plagued for Abraham and Sarai, so Pharao and Egypt were punished with ten plagues be|cause of the Israelites. 4. As Abraham was enriched by Pharao, so the Israelites received great gifts of the Egyptians, when they went out.

QVEST. XX. How long Abraham stayed in Egypt.

COncerning the time of Abrahams being in Egypt. 1: Neither is it true, as Eusebius citeth out of one Atrabanus, that he aboad there twenty yeares: seeing Abraham had dwelt but ten yeares in Canaan,* when Hagar was given him, and Ismael borne, Gen. 16. 2. Neither was Abraham so long conversant in Egypt, and that by the leave of Pharao, as that he did teach them the liberall sciences, as Astrologie, and such like, as Iosephus thinketh, lib. 1. antiquit. But it is most like they learned it afterward by Iacob, that lived there seventene yeares: or of Ioseph, that was their governour 80. yeares. 3. Wherefore at this time it is probable that Abraham stayed not long in Egypt, no not a yeare: for presently after that Pharao was plagued of God, he delivered Sarai, and sent away Abraham, giving him guides to see him safely conveyed.

QUEST. XXII. How the Kings of Egypt came to be called Pharaos.

Vers. 20. PHarao gave commandement, &c. 1. It appeareth, that the name of Pharao was common to all the Kings of Egypt, * and no proper name: for the Kings of Egypt were so called above a thousand yeares from Abraham, till the destruction of the Temple: and they had other proper names beside, as we reade of Pharao Necho, 2 King. 23. of Pharao Ophra, Ierem. 44.30. 2. It is not like they were so called, as Vives thinketh, of Pharus an obscure Island, of the which there was no reason to name their Kings. 3. But rather as Iosephus conjectureth of one of their first Kings, that was so called: as the Kings of Syria were called Antiochi, the Kings of Egypt after Alexander, Ptolomie: the Emperours of Rome, * Caesars and Augustine. 4. But whereas Iosephus thinketh, that after Pharao Salomons father in law, none of the Kings of Egypt were named Pharaos, it is a manifest errour, for 400. yeares after Salomon, in Iosias time, mention is made of Pharao Necho, 2 King. 23.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the free grace of election.

Vers. 1. THE Lord had said, get thee out of thy Countrey, &c. This calling of Abraham from among the Chaldeans, without any merit or desert in Abraham, who lay drowned in the dregges of superstition, is an argument of our free and gracious election in Christ, without respect of any worthinesse in us; as the Apostle saith, We are saved by grace through faith, Ephes. 2.8. Calvin, Perer.

2. Doct. Vocation of the Gentiles.

* CYrill also well noteth, Ex vocatione Abraha prasignata est vocatio Iudaeorum & Gentium, &c. By the vocation of Abraham, is signified the calling of the Iewes and Gentiles, who was the father of the faithfull and beleevers.

3. Doct. Canaanites in the Church.

Vers. 6. THE Canaanite was in the land, &c. As there were Canaanites in the promised land; so there are Canaanites in the Church, such as challenge to themselves the name and profession of the Church, being but Usurpers and Canaanites, whom God shall one day cast out, as Iosua did the Canaanites, Marloret.

4. Doct. Abrahams faith in Christ.

Vers. 8. HE built an Altar to the Lord, &c. Abraham knew well enough, that God was not pleased with the bloud of beasts: his faith therefore directeth him to the bloud of Christ, whose day Abraham saw and rejoyced, Ioh. 8.56. Calvin.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against the Iewes: the Messiah shall not erect a temporall Kingdome.

Verse. 3. IN thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed, &c. The Messias then promised to Abraham shall not come to conquer the nations by the sword, or to erect a temporall Kingdome, as the Jewes imagine; but he shall be the cause of their spirituall blessing, to deliver them from the wrath and curse of God, Luther.

2. Confut. Against Monkes that pretend Abrahams example.

Vers. 4. SO Abraham departed, &c. The example of Abraham leaving his Country, is unfitly alleaged by the Papists, as a ground of Monasticall life. 1. Abraham had the expresse commandement of God so to doe, but they can shew no warrant out of Gods word. 2. Abraham went from Idolaters, but Monkes goe unto Idolaters, and the profession of Idolatry. 3. Abraham went he knew not whither, but the Monkes know very well whither they goe, to ease, pleasure, riches, Muscul.

3. Confut. Against the invocation of Saints.

Vers. 8. HE built an Altar, and called upon the name, &c. This manner of invocation used by the fathers of the old Testament, should be a patterne unto true worshippers of God under the new. They onely invocated and called upon the name of God: we read not of any other of the holy men their predecessors, whom they made their advocates. Wherefore it is a superstitious and new doctrine, <◇> call upon any in prayer but the Lord.

4. Confut. Against naked ceremonies, without the spirituall substance.

FURther, the building of the Altar was but the outward forme and ceremonie: the substance, was the invocation of the name of God. We learne, that ceremonies are but vaine observations, if they be not referred to the spirituall worship. Wherefore hypocrites relying upon outward rites, doe but worship God in vaine. Calvin.

5. Confut. Against pilgrimage.

ABraham came into the land of Canaan. 1. Neither of an unstable minde, which maketh many to change Countreyes. 2. Nor of a thirsting desire to see strange fashions, and learne curious Art[•], as Pythagoras, Empedocles, Plato, among the heathen travelled. 3. Nor yet of a covetous minde, to enrich himselfe, as Merchants use. 4. Not yet of a superstitious devotion, to visit the Sepulchers of holy men, and to goe in pilgrimage to holy places, (which cause Pererius alloweth) for he came from Mesopotamia, where Paradise was, and by likelihood Adam, and Melchisedech, and other holy Patriarkes buried. 5. But he travelleth both to be delivered from the perillous society of Idolaters, where he lived,^{*} as also with a purpose to draw others to the knowledge of God.

6. Confut. Against them that measure religion by plenty.

Vers. 10. THEN there came a famine in the land. Before Abraham came into Canaan, we read of no famine, as soone as he is entred a famine followed him. Wherefore it is a frivolous objection against the Gospell, if where it is professed, famine sometime be sent, and scarcity of things: for so in the time of Elias and Elizeus, there hapned famines, and in Saint Pauls time under Claudius: Luther. This was the foolish argument of the idolatrous women, who to justifie their superstition thus alleaged: When we burnt incense to the Queene of heaven, we had all things plenty, &c. Ierem. 44.17.

7. Confut. Hebrewes come not of the Egyptians.

Abraham went downe to Egypt. 1. Hence appeareth the errour of Possidonius, Appion, with others, that thinke the Hebrewes tooke first their originall from the Egyptians. 2. They also are here confuted,* who thinke that Egypt before Homers time, was a navigable Sea, or fennie ground, not habitable, which in continuance of time was gained from the water. Herodotus calleth it accessionem terra, & fluminis donum, an addition to the land, and a gift of the flood: for we see that Egypt was an habitable Countrey in Abrahams time, nine hundred yeares before Homer: who lived (as most hold) an hundred yeare after the Troljane warre, which fell out about the same time that Heli was Judge in Israel: so that Homer flourished un|der Salomon; nine hundred yeares and more from Abraham: from the 75. yeare of Abrahams age,* to the going of the Israelites out of Egypt, are foure hundred and thirty: from thence to the building of the Temple under Salomon, foure hundred eighty. 3. As those that doe make the land of Egypt too young, so Iosephus maketh it too ancient, that affirmeth that there were Kings in Egypt for the space of 1300. yeares and more, before Salomon, whereas from the flood untill Salomon, there are not accounted above 1335. yeares in all: and it is not like, that within 35. yeares after the flood, Egypt could be inha|bited, much lesse have a King.

6. Morall observations.

1. Morall Observ. To forsake all, and follow Christ.

Vers. 1. GEt thee out of thy Countrey, &c. By the example of Abraham, that left his Countrey and kindred to obey the calling of God, we learne to forsake father and mother, and whatso|ever else we have in the world to follow Christ: for our Saviour saith, He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me, Matth. 10.37. Marlor.

2. Morall Observ. A good name the gift of God.

Vers. 2. I Will make thy name great, &c. As men ought not ambitiously to hunt after the praise of men, as the Pharisies did, Matth. 6. so we ought not to neglect a good name in the world: we see here it is the blessing of God, and promised to Abraham, Perer. The Apostle also saith, Procure things  in the sight of all men, Rom. 12.17.

3. Morall Observ. Good men have their enemies.

Vers. 3. I Will curse them that curse thee, &c. Abraham though a just and upright man, yet he should finde evill willers in the world, such as would curse and not blesse him: so we learne, that good men, though they give no just occasion of offence, shall not want their enemies: Vatabl. As our Saviour Christ full of all goodnesse, found many enemies in the world, and few friends.

4. Morall Observ. Many blessed for good mens sakes.

I Will blesse them that blesse thee, &c. We see that many are blessed for good mens sakes, and Laban fared well for Iacob. Egypt blessed for Iosephssake. Philo concludeth well, Oremus igitur ut tanquam collumna in domo, &c. vir justus permaneat ac calamitatum remedium: Let us pray that as the pillar in the house, a good man may continue, to be a remedy against calamity.

5. Morall. Observ. The obedience and love of wives toward their husbands.

Vers. 5. Abraham tooke Sarai his wife, &c. Chrysostome noteth in Sarai her great obedience, qua taut a facilitate cum viro peregrinaretur; which so readily travelled and tooke paines to goe with her husband: hom. 32. in Genes. Ambrose setteth forth her love, qua contenta periclitari pudere potius, quam virum salute: which did chuse rather to hazard her chastity, than her husband his life and safety. And Saint Peter setteth forth Sarai, an example of loving obedience to all wives, 1 Pet. 3.

6. Morall Observ. God comforteth his children in their affliction.

Verse. 7. The Lord appeared to Abraham: God leaveth not Abraham comfortlesse in the midst of his afflictions: but he doth refresh him, both by appearing to him, and renewing his promises concerning Canaan: so the Lord doth visit his children in mercy, both by the secret inspiration of his spirit, and by the inward revelation of the joyes to come: as Saint Paul expresseth both, Rom. 8. the first, vers. 15. We have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba, father: the second, vers. 18. I account that the afflictions of this life are not worthy the joy which shall be revealed.

7. Morall Observ. Murther followeth unlawfull lust.

Vers. 12. They will kill me, &c. Such is the force of unlawfull lust and desire, that they will not spare to kill, to fulfill their minde and pleasures: as David did Vriah to enjoy his wife, Ahab, Naboth for his Vineyard, Musculus.

8. Morall Obser. Of flattering Courtiers.

Vers. 15. The Princes of Pharaos saw her and commended her: We see the property of flattering Courtiers, that seeke to please the Princes humour, and to feed his fancie, and devise how to serve his delight, Calvin. As the Wise man saith, Of a prince that hearkeneth to lies, all his servants are wicked, Pro. 29.12. so here as Pharao gave his minde to lust and concupiscence, his servants were likewise addicted.

9. Morall Observ. The great care the Lord hath over the righteous.

Vers. 17. The Lord plagued Pharaos: We see what great care God hath of his children: he for Abrahams sake punished the King: as it is said in the Psalmes, Hee rebuked Kings for their sakes: so here we see verified that saying, Psal. 34.30. Many are the tribulations of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth them out of all: Wherefore happy are they which trust in the Lord: hee will never faile such.

10. Morall Observ. God the revenger of wedlocke-breakers.

BEcause of Sarai Abrahams wife: Thus it is evident, that God is the revenger of all wedlocke-breakers: * for he will maintaine his owne ordinance: Ambrose saith excellently, Nemo alienum affectit rum, &c. let no man affect anothers bed, nor be enticed thereunto, inscitia, vel stultitia mariti, vel longi e absentia: by the ignorance, simplicity, or absence of the husband: adest praesul conjugii Deus, vicem absentis mariti tuetur, observat excubias; God the Patron of marriage is present, he supplieth the roome of the husband being absent, he keepeth watch, &c. so the Apostle also saith: whoremongers and adulterers God will judge, &c. Heb. 13.4.

CHAP. XIII.

1. The Method and Contents.

T Here are three parts of this Chapter. 1. The blessing of God upon Abraham after his departure from Egypt, vers. 1. to vers. 7. 2. The departure of Lot from Abraham with the cause thereof, vers. 7 to vers. 12. 3. The renewing of Gods promise to Abraham, after that Lot was departed, vers. 14. to the end.

In the first part these things are more particularly rehearsed. 1. Abrahams returne out of Egypt, vers. 1. 2. His wealth, vers. 2. 3. His thankfulness to God, vers. 3. 4. The reward of thankfulness, Lot is also made rich for Abrahams sake, vers. 5. They both in wealth so increased, that the land was not sufficient for them, 6.

In the second is set forth. 1. The dissention betweene Abraham and *Lot*s servants, vers. 7. Abrahams reconciliation in friendly admonition, vers. 8. and oblation of choice to Lot, vers. 9. Lets election of his place, vers. 10. his discession or departure, vers. 11. a description of the Countrey where Lot dwelt, by the quality of the ground, pleasant and fruitfull, vers. 10. of the people, they were wicked, vers. 13.

In the third part these things are contained. 1. The place of Abrahams dwelling when Lot was departed, v. 12. 2. The renewing of the promise, both for the possession of that Countrey, with the ratifying thereof, Abraham is bid to lift up his eyes, ver. 14. walke through the Countrey, and so as it were to take seisin thereof, vers. 17. as also concerning the multiplying of his seed, vers. 6. 3. Abrahams thankfulness, in building an Altar unto God, vers. 18.

The Theologicall explication of doubts.

QVEST. I. How and wherefore Abraham was rich.

Vers. 2. ABraham was very rich, &c. 1. Abraham became rich, partly by the goods left him by his father, partly by the gift of Pharao, cap. 12.16. 2. Thus Gods promise beganne to be performed, chap. 12.2. I will blesse thee. yea Lot also is blessed with riches for Abrahams sake, as the Lord promised, I will blesse them that blesse thee, Iun. 3. Thus temporall blessings more abounded under the Law, when as yet the rich blessings of heavenly things in Christ were not manifestly revealed. 4. This returnning of Abraham rich out of Egypt, was a type and figure of the rich estate of the Israelites at their returne out of Egypt, Mercer.

QVEST. II. The cause of contention betweene Abraham and Lots servants.

Vers. 7. There was debate, &c. 1. This debate falleth out, that it might be as a bridle to Abraham, not to set his minde too much upon his wealth and prosperity, Calvin. 2. The cause of their falling out, Philo thinketh to be the insolencie of Lots servants, that were borne out by their master: the Latine text readeth as though Abraham and Lots flockes were all one and kept together; betweene the shepherd of the flocks of Abraham and Lot, but in the Hebrew the word is repeated; betweene the shepherds of Abraham and the shepherd of Lot: Neither was the cause, as the Hebrewes imagine, for that Abrahams servants being more righteous, reproved Lots servants for feeding the corne fields, and invading other mens grounds. It is like therefore they contended for want of pasture, because the land was not sufficient for them both, vers. 6, Oecolamp. Iunius: as also for their watering places, which in that drie Countrey were very scant: so we reade that Isaacks servants and the Philistims contended about the Well which they digged, Genes. 26. Perer. 3. It is added, the Cananite was in the land, not for that Abraham feared, lest if their flockes kept together, their wealth should appeare the more, or for that Abraham should be forced to make them Umpires and Arbitrators of this contention: but to shew, that by reason that the Cananites possessed the better grounds, Abraham and Lot were driven to a strait for their cattell: as also it is a reason that moved Abraham to breake off strife, lest it might have beene an offence to the heathen.

QUEST. III. How Abraham giveth Lot his choice.

Vers. 9. If thou wilt take the left hand, &c. 1. Abraham being the elder and more worthy person, departeth from his right for peace sake, and offereth the choice to Lot, Muscul. from whence as Rupertus thinketh, this custome did grow, that in parting of inheritance, major dividat, minor eligat, the elder should divide, the younger chuse. 2. For the left hand the Chalde readeth the North: for it should seeme, that Abraham having pitched his tents toward the East, had the North on his left hand, the South on the right. 3. And the meaning also may be this, that they would not goe farre asunder, but be still helpfull one to another, as the right hand to the left, Perer.

QUEST. IV. Of the situation of Sodome and Gomorrha.

Vers. 10. Lot lift up his eyes and saw all the Plaine, &c. 1. He could not see all the Plaine of Jordan at once, but that part of it, where the pentapolis, i. those five Cities stood. 2. Sodome and Gomorrha are named as the principall, because they exceeded in all iniquity, whereas there are five Cities in all: their Country was pleasant before they were destroyed, by reason of the overflowing of the sweet waters of Jordan: at this time when Moses did write, it was inhabitable by reason of the pestilent and stinking smell: but at Lots first comming this her, which was twenty yeares before the destruction, it was a fruitfull Countrey. 3. Like unto the Paradise wherein Adam was created, which though never any mortall man saw, but Adam and Eve, yet it might appeare, what it was by Moses description. This pleasant Vallie then was watered with Jordan as Paradise with Euphrates, and Egypt with Nilus: though Egypt were watered with much more labour, Deut. 11.10. 4. The words are not so to be read, as though it were like that part of Egypt, as one goeth to Zoar, for there were many more Townes and Cities, situate betweene Egypt and Zoar, at this time called Bela, Gen. 4.2. which is one of the five Cities, as Vatablus readeth, and Lyranus: but rather this is the right construction: to joyne the last clause, as one goeth to Zoar, to the first part of the sentence, so that the sense is this▪ that that part of the Plaine as one goeth to Zoar, as more fruitfull than the rest, was like to Paradise and Egypt: sic Muscul. Iun. Mercer. Per.

QVEST. V. Of the River Iordan, the beginning and end thereof.

Iordan. 1. This floud taking beginning from the Mountaine Libanus, ariseth out of two fountaines, called Dan and Jor, which joyned together, make the name Jordan. 2. Plinie and Solinus derive Jordan from the fontaine Paneas, but Ioseph fetcheth it further off, from a round fontaine or spring head, called Phiale: from whence it runneth under the ground to the fontaine Paneas, and that Philip▪ Tetrach of Trachonitis, found it by this experiment, by casting into the spring Phiale, certaine light stuffe, which came out againe in the other spring head, Paneas. 3. This River Jordan after it hath runne some fifteene mile, falleth into the Lake or Fenne Samechonitis, which is the same that is called the waters of Mero•, where Iosua encountred with King Iaban and his fellowes, Iosu. 11.7. then passing along by Corazin and Capernaum, it falleth into the Lake Genezereth: and so having continued a current of an hundred miles in length, it falleth into the dead or salt Sea. 4. After Jordan is entred into this Lake, it loseth the sweetnesse of the waters, being mixed with the salt Sea, and loseth also the name Jordan: so that they seeme to be in a great errour, that affirme Jordan to runne into the ground, before it come at this dead Sea, called the Lake Asphaltitis, or of brimstone: for the Scripture testifieth the contrary, Iosu. 3.16. where the nei|ther waters of Jordan are said to runne into the salt Sea. 5. It may be that before Sodome and Gomor|rha were destroyed,* when there was no salt Lake, but a Plaine, Jordan had some other current: but now it is swallowed up of that Lake, and hath no issue forth againe, but passeth by a gulph into the earth. 6. This Jordan is the noblest of all Rivers, because of that miracle in the passing over of the Israelites: the parting of the waters againe by the Prophets Elias and Elizeus, the healing of Na•mans leprosie: the baptisme of our blessed Saviour: ex Perer.

QVEST. VI. Of Lots departure from Abraham.

Vers. 11. Then Lot chose unto him all the Plaine, &c. 1. As Abraham sheweth in offering Lot his choice; so in Lot appeareth some want of duty, in that he would choose first, Calvin. 2. He maketh an inconsiderate choice, preferring the goodnesse of the ground, before the badnesse of the people: and afterward Lot did smart for his choice, being carried away captive. 3. Thus God turneth this division and separation of Abraham and Lot to good. 1. That hereby Lot by his good example and admonitions might preach to the Sodomites. 2. That Abraham might have occasion to shew his valour in redeeming Lot from his enemies. 3. That hereby might be signified, the separation of Abrahams posterity in the Israelites, and of Lots in the Moabites and Ammonites. 4. That Lot might see by experience, the difference between dwelling with good men and evill. 5. Lot though he lived among the evill, consented not to their sinnes, as some of the Hebrewes thinke, but was grieved with their unjust conversation, as Saint Peter saith, 2 Epist. 2.7. Therefore the Hebrewes are injurious to Lot, to thinke that of purpose he chose to dwell among the Sodomites, because they were evill, and like to himselfe: for Lot was ignorant of the manners of that place, as it seemeth Abraham also was, by his prayer which he made for Sodome, supposing that there were many righteous there: onely here was Lots oversight, that he made choice of the Countrey by his eye, not enquiring after the Inhabitants; ex Mercer.

QUEST. VII. Whether Lot went from Abraham from the East, or toward the East.

Vers. 11. HE tooke his journey from the East: Thus most translators doe read, and hereof ariseth a great question, how Lot is said to goe from the East, when indeed he went toward the East: for Bethel, where Abraham now was, from whom Lot departed, is West-ward in respect of Sodome, whi|ther Lot went. 1. R. Sel. is deceived, who thinketh that Lot indeed went toward the West, for Sodome is situated Eastward in respect of Bethel, as the Maps doe shew. 2. Neither did Lot depart from Abraham before he went downe to Egypt, as some thinke, when Abraham pitched his tents in a Mountaine Eastward from Bethel, Gen. 12.8. for Lot came up with Abraham out of Egypt, Gen. 13.1. 3. Neither yet with Oukelos whom Fagius followeth: it is a proper reading to say Lot departed from Abraham first, as the Chalde Paraphrast interpreteth. 4. Nor yet need we with some Hebrewes to flie unto Allegories, that Lot departed from the East, that is from the place of light, unto a place of corruption and unhappinesse, to his owne destruction. 5. Therefore the true reading is, that Abraham went not from the East, but toward the East: for so the word here used, Micchedem, is taken, Gen. 2.8. God planted a Garden, Micchedem, toward the East, not from the East, Iun. Mercer.

QVEST. VIII. Of the sinne and wickednesse of Sodome.

Vers. 13. The men of Sodome were exceeding wicked against the Lord. 1. Some reade, before the Lord, as the Sept. and Chalde Paraphrast: whereby Tostatus thinketh, that their unnaturall sinne (which still retaineth the name of Sodome, is signified) which is one of the three crying sinnes: murther is one, as the bloud of Abel is said to cry out of the earth: oppression is another, Exod. 2. the cry of the Israelites came up before the Lord: and the uncleannesse of Sodome is the third, Gen. 18.21. Some thinke, that they sinned against their conscience, and so in the sight of God: Pererius, that the greatnesse of their sinne is thereby expressed: as the Hebrewes use to adde the name of God, as a note of excellency, as they say the Cedars of God, or the Mountaines of God, for great and high Cedars or Mountaines: but by this phrase is expressed their impudencie and obstinacie, that sinned without any feare of God or man: as appeareth Gen. 19. when they furiously beset Lots house, to obtaine their filthy pleasure: so cap. 6.11. the earth was said to be corrupt before God, Iun. 2. Iosephus writing of the sinnes of Sodome, saith, they were In homines contumeliosi, erga Deum impii, contumelious toward men, and impious toward God.* So the Prophet Ezekiel saith, The sinnes of Sodome were pride, fulnesse of bread, abundance of idlenesse, they stretched not the hand to the poore: and among other sinnes, that sinne against nature did reigne amongst them: which Saint Paul sheweth to have beene familiar among the heathen, Rom. 1.27. The men burned in their lust one toward another: yea the Philosophers and wise men among the heathen were Patrons of this sinne, as Cicero complaineth of Plato. Further, this pollution of their bodies, sheweth they were corrupt also in their religion, and given to Idolatry, as Saint Paul sheweth one to bee the consequent of the other, Rom. 1.26.

QVEST. IX. Whether Abraham saw all the land of Canaan.

Vers. 14. Lift up thine eyes, &c. 1. Abraham neither could see the whole land of Canaan at once, that was promised him: 2. Neither was it shewed unto him in vision, as Occolampad. 3. Neither was an image or idea of the Countrey represented unto him: as Pererius thinketh, the like was exhibited to Moses, Deut. 34. and Matth. 4. to our Saviour Christ, which were nothing else but to turne a true storie into an imagined fantasie: and to make this more probable, he brought in a forged tale, out of a forged Author, the Dialogues that goe under Gregorie his name, how Benedict saw the soule of Germanus inclosed in a firie speare: which represented the world: it seemeth strange, that so learned and judicious a man, would foist in such frierly tales, among other necessary matter. 4. But Augustines solution is here sufficient: that God doth not onely promise Abraham so much as hee seeth, but that also which hee is bid to walke thorow, vers. 17. so they must bee put both together: Abraham might from some high place, as out of Mount Ebal or Garizim, as Tostatus thinketh, see a great part of the Countrey, Muscul. and the rest he walked thorow, Iunius.

QVEST. X. How the land of Canaan was given to Abraham.

Vers. 15. I Will give unto thee. Yet Abraham had not so much as the breadth of a foot.

Chrysostome sheweth well how this may be: Multa in altis dicuntur, in aliis implentur:^{*} in the Scriptures many things are said of some, and fulfilled in others: as Noah saith of Canaan, that he should be a servant to his brethren, which was not fulfilled in him, but in his posterity, the Gibeonites; so Iacob saith concerning Levi, I will divide him in Iacob, &c. which came to passe in the Levites, which were of his seed: so that which is here promised to Abraham, was accomplished in his posterity.

QVEST. XI. How the Israelites were said to be in number as the dust of the earth.

Vers. 16. I Will make thy seed as the dust, &c. 1. Hereby is signified the great increase both of Abrahams carnall and spirituall kindred, that should be in number as the dust of the earth. 2. Some of the Hebrewes, as Rabbi Salomon taketh this to be spoken of the reprobate, which are compared to the dust, because they are not had in any remembrance or number before God: True it is, that the elect are numbred with God, and he knoweth also the numbers of the wicked, but regardeth them not. Like as he that buildeth an house, numbred not the stones that goe to the building, yet the principall parts and divisions in the house, he keepeth an account of: yet this is not the meaning here. 3. But it is an hyperbollicall speech, which is often used in Scripture, whereby it signified, not indeed that they should bee in number as the dust, for all the people in the earth put together, cannot compare with the dust in number: but they should be a very great people: not compared with others, for so many people were greater than they, Deut. 7.1. but considered in themselves, QVEST. XII. Of the divers reading of this word gnolam ever in Scripture.

Vers. 15. TO thy seed forever. 1. This word in the Hebrew, gnolam, which the Septuagint translateth by the word ha•on, ever: doth not alwayes in Scripture signifie an everlasting time without end: as Exod. 15.18. The Lord shall reigne for ever and ever. The first word is gnolam, the other gued, this latter signifieth true eternity, as the Lord is said to dwell in eternity, Isay 57.15. the other seemeth to imply the age of this world: the Lord shall reigne then for ever during this world and the next: thus the Greeke 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, is taken by forren writers. Aristotle defineth it to be, periodus durationis cujusque rei, the period or time of continuance of any thing, lib. 1. de coelo. So Horace useth the word aeternum, Serviet aeternum, qui parvo nesciatuti. He shall ever be a slave or servant,^{*} that cannot tell how to make much of a little, as hee is alleaged by Augustine.

2. Yet Hieromes observations doe not alwayes hold, that gnolam is with van, signifieth eternity,^{*} without van, the yeare of the Jubile: for Deut. 15.17. gnolam is with van: and yet it betokeneth the Jubile: he shall be thy servant for ever.

3; Wherefore this word is diversly taken in Scripture, beside that it signifieth an everlasting time without end. 1. It is used for the duration or continuance of the world, as the Rain-bow was a signe of Gods everlasting covenant, that is, so long as the world continueth. 2. It signifieth the whole time of a mans life, Psal. 89.1. I will sing the mercies of the Lord for ever, that is, as long as I live. So Anna promised that Samuel should abide before the Lord for ever, 1 Sam. 1.22. 3. It signifieth a long indefinite time, though not infinite without end, as Gen. 6.4. which of old time were men of renowne. 4. It was used to signifie the yeare of Jubile, which was the space of fifty yeares. 5. That is called eternall, whose time is not prefixed with man, though it be with God: as circumcision is called an everlasting covenant, because it was not to be altered by man. 6. Some thing is called eternall, not in respect of it selfe, but that which it signifieth: as some thinke the land of Canaan is called an everlasting possession, Gen. 17.8. because it was a figure of the celestiaall Canaan, Pererius.

QVEST. XIII. How the land Canaan was given for ever to Abraham and his seed.

NOW in that the Lord saith, The land which thou seest, I will give to thee and thy seed for ever: These words are taken by some literally, by others spiritually, by others partly literally, partly spiritually.

* 1. Augustine thinketh, that it may be understood simply, because the Jewes dwelt in some Cities of Canaan still, though they were expelled Jerusalem: but though it were so, yet the Jewes were not Lords, or possessors of all that land: and howsoever it was in Augustines time, that Countrey is not possessed of them now: and indeed long before Augustines time, the Jewes were expelled by Adrian the Emperour.

2. Some doe take these words literally; but with a condition, that the land of Canaan should be so long their possession, as they walked in obedience before God, as Deut. 4.25. If yee corrupt your selves, &c. ye shall perish from the land. Iun. Mercer. Cajetane to this purpose hath a good conceit, as if the Lord should say, quamdiu erit semen tuum, &c. as long as they shall be thy seed, I will give them this land: therefore when they beganne to degenerate from Abraham, and were not his right children, God was no longer tied to his promise.

3. Some further, that like best of the literall sense, doe by ever understand a long continuance of time: for so the Israelites, the seed of Abraham possessed Canaan 1640. yeares, Perer. But this doth not fully satisfie: that the space of lesse than two thousand yeares should be counted an everlasting time.

4. Others by ever; doe take all the time of the law till the Messiah come, that should renew the world by his comming: as Samuel saith, that God would have established Sauls Kingdome for ever; 1 Sam. 13.13. Musculus, Oecolampad. This sense may very well stand concerning the ceremonies, that were to give place unto Christs doctrine, but the possession of Canaan, if the Jewes had beleaved, should have beene no impediment to Christs Kingdome.

5. Some doe understand here the spirituall seed of Abraham, and the spirituall or celestiaall Canaan, which the faithfull shall possesse for ever: but this were to turne an history into an allegory.

* 6. They which interpret these words partly spiritually, partly literally, some take the land of Canaan for that Countrey which was shewed Abraham, but by the seed they would have understood the faithfull, the spirituall kindred of Abraham: and so Augustine saith, that the Christians inhabited that Countrey after the Jewes; but the Christians inhabit it not now, for Saracens and Turks have subdued it, therefore it was not their possession for ever.

7. Others understand, the land promised spiritually, but the seed literally for Christ, who was truly descended of Abraham, Matth. 1.1. and so Saint Paul by seed insinuateth Christ, Galat. 3.16. so unto Christ & his members the promise of the heavenly Canaan belongeth, Iunius. This sense is confirmed by the Prophet Ezechiel, 37-24. David my servant shall be King over them, &c. & they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Iacob my servant, where your fathers have dwelt, and they shall dwell therein, they and their sons, and their sons sons for ever. Saint Paul also by seed understandeth Christ, Gal. 3.16. Thus we see that not only the land of Canaan, but the whole earth is inhabited by the Christians, the spirituall seed of Christ their David and King: and to them appertaine the promises of the celestiall Canaan, whereof the terrestriall was a type and figure, Mercer. This sense together with the second before alleaged, of the hypotheticall, that is, conditionall promises, seeme to be most fit and proper, and before the rest to be preferred.

QVEST. XIV. Whether Abraham walked thorow the land as the Lord bid him.

Vers. 18. Then Abraham removed his tent, and came and dwelt in the Plaine of Mamre: Abraham did not presently, as some Hebrewes thinke, goe over all the land of Canaan, neither is it like as Tostatus collecteth, because Abraham dwelt in this Plaine, that he did not walke thorow the land, as the Lord bid him, vers. 17. and therefore he saith it is not imperium, but motivum ad gaudium, it was no com|mandement, but a motive to Abraham to his farther joy, &c. for Abraham had walked thorow a good part allready, and no doubt did also take a view of the rest to his farther comfort, as time and opportunity ser|ved. Calvin. Musculus. Mercer. it is not like he would neglect any thing, that might either increase his joy, or confirme his faith. 2. This Plaine of Mamre neare Hebron was not out of that Countrey, called Canaan, as Cajetane thinketh: for Hebron was in Canaan, Genes. 23.2. and this abode of Abraham in Hebron, is that dwelling of Abraham in the land of Canaan mentioned, vers. 12. 3. This Plaine or Val|ley, in Hebrew Eelou, which signifieth an Oake, as the Septuagint translate, was beset and planted with Oakes and other trees, Genes. 18.8. 4. It was called of Mamre the Amorite, either the planter of the trees, or possessor of the ground, who had two other brothers, Eschol, and Aner, confederate with Abraham, Genes. 14.13.24.

QVEST. XV. Of the situation, antiquity, and name of Hebron.

Concerning Hebron, three things briefly shall be declared. 1. The description and situation of it. 2. The antiquity. 3. Of the name.

1. Hebron was situate in the land of Canaan: there was the habitation of Abraham, and there first reigned David: two famous monuments this City had, the tree that Abraham entertained the Angels under, Gen. 18.8. for the tree, Iosephus saith it was a Turpentine tree; * Terebinthus thought to have con|tinued from the beginning of the world till his time: Hierome saith it was an Oake that lasted till Constantines reigne; Borchardus saith it was Vlmus, an Elme tree, which was to be seene till his time, who li|ved some 300. yeare since: yet not the same tree, but another, which did spring out of the root of the old, and that is most like: there also is the double cave, which Abraham bought for buriall: where Iosephus saith in his time were to bee seene Abraham and the other Patriarks monuments of marble: * Borchardus saith in his time there was built a Church. Hierome that Abrahams Mansoleum or tombe remai|ned there till his time: ex Perer.

Borchard maketh mention of two other monuments in Hebron: of a certaine cave not farre off in a rocke, where it is said that Adam and Eve continued 100. yeares mourning for their sonne Abel: as allso of a certaine field, that hath soft red earth, pliable like wax, whereout they say Adam was made: but these are but conjectures of no certainty.

And so is also that of Hierome, that Adam was buried in Hebron; because the Latine text readeth thus, Iosu. 14.85. Ibi Adam maximus inter Enacim situs est: There Adam the greatest of the Anakims is placed, * which words are otherwise in the Hebrew: He, that is Arba, was a great man among the Anakims: Adam is not here a name proper, but appellative: and Adam by the most of the ancient Writers is held to have been buried not in Hebron, but in Mount Calvarie, as Origen, Cyprian, Athanasius, Ambrose, with others.

2. For the antiquity of Hebron. 1. It cannot be so old as some thinke,* that it was the first City which was built in the world by Adam, and there Noah to have been borne: Ioan. Annius: for Henoch builded by Cain, is the first City named in Scripture. 2. Neither is it so ancient as some Hebrewes conjecture, to have been built by Cham, as Rabbi Salomon: or within 90. yeares after the flood: as Iosephus, who maketh it 2300. yeares elder than his time: for the tower and City of Babel, which were built somewhat above 100. yeare after the flood, are thought to be the first after the flood. 3. And whether Hebron be more ancient than Memphis is uncertaine, as Iosephus saith it was: but it is evident that it was built seven yeares before Zoan in Egypt, Num. 13.23. which is not Memphis, but Tanis in Egypt, as both the Chald. and Greeke Interpreters read in that place.

3. This Hebron was first called the City of Arba, Genes. 23.2. Iosua 14.15. Arbe signifieth foure: it was not so named either because the foure Patriarks, Adam, Abraham, Isaach, Iacob, and the foure Matrons, Eva, Sara, Rebecca, Lea, were there buried: as the Hebrewes thinke: for whether Adam and Eva were there buried, is uncertaine: nor yet because it was tetrapolis, a City consisting of foure parts, Ioan. Annius: but it was so called of Arba the father or founder of the great Anakims, Iosua 14.15.

It was afterward called Chebron, not of Chebron the sonne of Marescah, the sonne of Caleb, mentioned 1 Chro. 2.42. as Hierome and Musculus thinke; for it had that name long before that Chebron was borne:* but I rather approve Origens conjecture; who alludeth to the signification of the word, which betokeneth a conjunction or joyning together of the root chabar: because there saith he, conjugia patrum, & reliqua jacent, the bodies of those married couples, Abraham with Sara, Isaach with Rebecca,* Iacob with Lea, are there buried.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Faith is of things not seene, but hoped for.

Vers. 15. ALL the land which thou seest, &c. Here that saying of the Apostle is verified; faith is the evidence of things which are not seene, Heb. 11.1. for Abraham had not yet the breadth of a foot in all this Countrey which is promised him, but by faith he seeth farre off, and beleeveth it should be given to his seed.

2. Doct. God alloweth of no will-worship.

Vers. 18. IN that Abraham built an Altar; he did it not of himselfe, but as he was directed by God: whereby we are taught, that nothing should be brought into the worship of God without his warrant, Calvin: all such worship is called by the Apostle, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, will-worship.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Riches not to be cast away.

Vers. 2. Abraham was very rich in cattell, silver, and gold, &c. Hence appeareth the superstition of Monks and Friars, that thinke that perfection consisteth in poverty, riches are not then to be cast away, Abraham enjoyed them: rich men may please God in their rich estate, so they set not their heart upon their wealth: Augustine well sheweth it in that parable, Luk. 16. Lazarus pauper in sinum divitis Abrahami receptus est: poore Lazarus was received into rich Abrahams bosome; both rich and poore then, if they be faithfull may enter into heaven, Calvin.

2. Confut. The vulgar Latine text not of Hieromes translation.

Vers. 13. WHEREAS the Septuagint translate, exceeding sinners in the sight of God. Hierome findeth fault with that translation: and saith, it is superfluously added, for the Sodomites were sinners also before men: But whereas the Latine text to the same sense, readeth, coram Domino, before the Lord: hence it is evident, that it is not Hieromes translation, though it commonly beare his name: for it is not like he would reprove his owne worke.

6. Place of Morall observation.

1. Observ. That riches be no let unto our vacation.

Vers. 2. Abraham was very rich, and yet his riches were no impediment to him; let rich men learne by his example, that they be not entangled and hindred by their riches from going forward in their vocation, Calvin: and as the Apostle saith, that they be not high minded, nor trust in uncertaine riches, &c. 1 Timoth. 6.17. that they be rich in good works, as Abraham was.

2. Observ. The inconvenience of riches.

Vers. 6. Abraham and Loe, before their riches did so mightily increase, were inseparable companion: but being growne now to be rich, they can no longer dwell together: so they whom neither poverty, nor want, not weary journies, nor strange Countries could part, riches and prosperity divide: if ⟨◇⟩ these holy men riches brought forth this inconvenience, how much harder is it for rich men to keepe the within bounds? Mer. Musculus. for as the Apostle saith, They that be rich, fall into temptation and snares, 1 Timoth. 6.9.

3. Observ. Of humility towards our inferiours.

Vers. 7. THEN Abraham said to Lo, &c. Chrysostome well noteth here, Cogita quemadmodum ⟨◇⟩ j•niori cesser, patrum ⟨◇⟩, &c. Consider how the elder giveth place to the younger, the ⟨◇⟩ to the nephew, he that had received great grace of God, to him that yet had shewed no prooffe of his vertue. We learne hereby, not onely to honour our superiours but to be humble toward our inferiours, as the Apostle saith, In giving of honour goe one before another, make your selves equall to them of the lower sort, Rom. 12.10, 16.

4. Observ. Gods patience in suffering the wicked.

Vers. 13. The men of Sodome were wicked. &c. God sometime beareth with the wicked, yea, and suffelreth them to enjoy temporall blessings: as here the Sodomites inhabited the most fruitfull Vallies: but they, as the Apostle saith, ⟨◇⟩ the riches of his bountifulnesse, &c. not knowing that the bounty of God leadeth them to repentance, Rom. 2.4. Ca••••.

5. Observ. God will not shew himselfe where dissension is.

Vers. 14. THEN the Lord said to Abraham, &c. When Lot was now departed, and the occasion of dissension cut off, then the Lord appeared to Abraham: so that God will not shew himselfe, nor the spirit of peace there dwell, where is contention. Perer. As Saint Peter sheweth, that by dissension prayers are interrupted, 1 Pet. 3.7.

6. Observ. It is dangerous to love preeminence.

Vers. 15. ALL the land which thou seest. Chrysostome noteth, quantum malum si••mar• ⟨◇⟩ what an hurtfull thing it is to love to have preeminence: because Lot, that tooke upon him to chuse first, and as he thought, the best ground, yet gained nothing by it: for not long after he was carried away captive. Likewise we see, what a rich thing a contented minde is, Abraham that was content to take the worst lot, * hath the whole Countrey given unto him: so the Lord to Salomon, that onely loved wisdome, gave honour, and riches beside in great abundance, 1 King. 3. Marlrat.

CHAP. XIV.

1. The parts and contents.

T His Chapter hath two parts. In the first is set forth the overthrow of Sodome, and talking of Lot prisoner. In the second, the victory of Abraham

In the first are expressed. 1. Betweene whom the battell was vers. 1.2. 2. The occasion, vers. 4. 3. The order: first they fight against the lands of the gyants, vers. 5.6. then against the five Kings of the Plaine, vers. 8. 4. The successe of the battell, the Kings are discomfited, vers. 10. their substance carried away, vers. 11. Lot taken prisoner, vers. 13.

In the second: 1. There is the battell of Abraham, his preparation, vers. 13. the order of it, vers. 14. the successe, vers. 15. 2. Abrahams triumph described by the persons that met him, and by Abraham behaviour: the persons that came to meet him were two King▪▪ Melchisedeck that blessed God, and blessed Abraham, vers. 19, 20. and comforted him with bread and wine, vers. 18. the King of Sodome, that would onely have rewarded Abraham temporally with the goods that he had received, vers. 21. In Abrahams behaviour is set forth his godlinesse toward Melchisedeck, in paying tithe of all in token of his thankfulness▪ vers. 20. toward the King of Sodome his wisdome, in refusing to be made rich by him, vers. 22, 23. his justice, in not depriving his confederates of their right, vers. 24.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QVEST. I. Of what Countrey these foure Kings were that fought against Sodome.

Vers. 1. THese Kings here named, were neither Armenians, as E^p•le^{us} in Eusebius, which was a Coun|trei too remote from Sodome. 2. Nor yet Persians, which was the opinion of one

Di••orus T•rse•s. for as yet the Persians had no dominion▪ but were in subjection to others. 3. Neither is Merca/••• reason good, that these were not under the Assyrians, because they are called Kings: for the King of Assur had other Kings under him: as he saith, Are not my Princes altogether Kings, Isay 10.8. as the Ro|mans had divers Kings tributary to them. 4. But Iosephus opinion is more probable: that the Assyrians at this time were the chiefe commanders, and that these fo•re were the captaines of the King of Assurs armies. And this may appeare, because the five Kings of the valley, had beene subjects twelve yeares, vers. 4. but in those dayes all the East Countries were in subjection to the King of Assur. 5. The Hebrewes by these foure, understand the foure Monarchies: by Se•na•r, the Monarchie of the Chaldeans: by Ella/sar the Persians: by Elam the Grecians: by the Nations the Romans: that as these foure did fight against Canaan▪ <◇> were overcome of Abraham; so the foure Monarchs should afflict Israel, but at the last should be subdued by their Messiah, whom they imagine shall be a temporall King: where in they are in error and blinded to this day. 6. Some make an allegory of this story, understanding by the foure Kings, the foure affections, by the five Kings of Canaan▪ the five senses subject to the affections, which shall be freed by Christ: but it is not fit thus to convert historicall narrations, into allegoricall collections, ex Mercer.

QUEST. II. Of the particular Countries of these foure Kings.

Vers. 1. AMraphel. This could not be Nimrod, as Lyranus and Tostatusthinke, for if Nimrod were Belus,* the father of Ninus, he was dead above an hundred yeares before: for Abraham is held by Eusebius and others, to have beene borne in the 43. yeare of Ninus reigne, who reigned 89. yeares longer, and Abraham was now about 80. yeare old. It is more like that this Amraphel was Ninus the sonne of Semiramis, that reigned after her: Semiramis reigned 42. yeares after Ninus, and Ninias after her 38. yeares: so that Abrahams fourescore yeare fell out in the 28. of Ninus reigne, Perer.

* Arioch could not be King of Pontus, being a Countrey so farre distant, as Hierome readeth, and to|ward the West: nor yet of Hellespontus, as Tostatus: but this Ellasar was a part of the Province Susiane, belonging to Assiria: there is mention made also of one Arioch King of the Elameans, Iudith 1.6. but that was Dejoces King of the Medes: sic Iunius.

* Chedorlaomer King of Elam, that is, of the Elymeans, or Elamites, as Iosephus called them in the upper part of Persia.

* Tidal King of the Nations: not so called because of his large Dominion, but both because he was King of the neare Countries Northward, which was inhabited, by reason of merchandise, of people of divers Countries, where was Galilea called of the Gentiles, Iun. Perer. also because he had in his armie people of divers nations, Calvin. a learned man maketh it a proper name, calling Tidal King of Goiim. Concen•. Mercer.

QUEST. III. Of the Vale of Siddim, of the salt or dead Sea.

Vers. 3. These joyned together in the vale of Siddim. 1. That it was a salt Valley, as the Septuagint read, it is like, because it was full of pits of brimstone, vers. 10. also it is probable, that it was full of tilled and field grounds, as the Chalde translateth, and the word Siddim signifieth: it was not then a de|sart and untilled valley, as Eugubinus readeth: neither yet full of wood, as the vulgar

Latine hath: for then it had beene an unfit place for them to joyne battell in. 2. That which was the Vale of Siddim, is now the salt Sea, called the dead Sea, or Lake. Asphaltite, of the store of brimstone: which Lake was not there before the destruction of Sodome and Gomorrha, as Cajetane and Oleaster thinke, but caused by the overthrow of those Cities. For though it be a great Lake, 1680. furlongs in length, and 150. in breadth, as Iosephus writeth, yet considering the extraordinary worke of God, in the destruction of those Cities, it might be gathered together, and partly breake out of the earth by Gods speciall worke, to be a perpetuall monument of Gods judgements upon those wicked Cities, Perer.

QUEST. IV. Of the Rephaims.

Vers. 5. SMote the Rephaims, &c. 1. Moses maketh mention of the overthrow of those Gyants, that Gods power might be knowne, in giving victory to Abrahams small company against them, that were too strong for Gyants, Chrysostome. 2. Raphaim is sometime taken for strong men, such as Gylants are, as Deut. 2.20. the Zanzummims are said to be Rephaim, Gyants: but here they are taken for a certaine people of the Canaanites, as appeareth, Gen. 15.20. which might be so called of the Gyant Hare/phah, 1 Chron. 20 4.

* 3. Ashtaroth Carnaim. 1. It is also called Ashtaroth simply without any addition, Iosu. 13.31. 2. Car/naim signifieth, having two hornes: wherein Nehumannus is deceived, that thought Ashtaroth to be an hill with two tops: for Eusebius testifieth, that there was a City not farre from Sodome, called Carnea. 3. Ash|taroth, Augustine saith, in the Punick language signifieth Iunones, the goddesse Iuno: some thinke that it came of Astarte, which was the name of Venus. Cicer. lib. 3. de Natur. Deo. Perer. ex Musc. but it is most like to come of Ashterah, the Idoll of the Sidonians, which was made like a sheepe.

* 4. Zuzims are the same, which are called Zamzummis, Deut. 2.19. where mention also is made of the Emims, vers. 10.

* 5. Shaveh: Hierome saith there was a City of that name, not farre from the Countrey of the Sodo|mites, and Mercerus taketh it to be the name of a City here: but seeing another City is named with it, Kiriathaim, which was also called Kiriath Baal, and Kiriath Jarim, the City of woods: it is more probalble, as Iunius, Tostatus, Oleaster, read, that Saveh rather signifieth the Plaine of Kiriathaim: for to joyne two Cities together, being much distant, hath no great shew of reason.

6. The Horit[•]s, are the Horims, that dwelt in Mount Seir, before the children of Esau chased th[•] thence, Deut. 1.11. Borchardus saith, there were five Mountaines called by the name of Seir, 1. par. c. 1. numer. 8. It was called Seir, that is, hairie, of Esau. Hierome.

QUEST. V. Of the Plaine of Paran.

7. The Plaine of Paran, &c. This was the name both of a City, and of that great vast desert, Iun. wherein the children of Israel sojourned thirty eight yeares, being of eleven dayes journey to passe thorow: barren, without water, neither inhabited of man or beast, and full of rocks, and covered with deepe sand, Perer.

* Vers. 7. They returned and came to En Mispat, which is interpreted the fountaine of judgement, so callled, because there the Lord judged the Israelites for their murmuring, Hierome. As also gave sentence al|gainst Moses and Aaron, for their weaknesse and want of faith, Numb. 20.12. Iun.

QVEST. V. Kadesh Barnea, whether the same with Kadesh where Moses murmured.

Kadesh: This is that place, which is famous for Miriam, Moses sisters buriall there, Num. 20.1. whose monument Hierome saith, remained till his time: it was in the utmost borders of Edom, ibid. vers. 16. supposed to be the same with Kadesh Barne, Perer. Afterwards it was called Rechem, as Onkeles the Chalde Paraphrast readeth, Num. 13.27. Iunius. Great question there is among the Hebrewes, whe|ther Kadesh Barnea, mentioned, Deut. 1.2. were the same with that Kadesh where Miriam died, Num. 20.1. Ramban thinketh that there were two places of that name: Kadesh Barnea was in the wilderness of Paran, from whence the spies were sent, Num. 13.26. the other Kadesh was in the wilderness of Sin, Num. 33.36. But Rasi, and Elias Orientall, take them to be all one, and make the desert of Sin to bee part of the great vast wilderness of Paran: to the first subscribeth Mercerus, to the other seemeth Iunius to incline; the latter I thinke more probable: for the Kadesh where Miriam was buried, and Moses mur|mured, was in the confines of Edom, Num. 20.16. so also Kadesh Barnea was not farre from Mount Seir, Deut. 1.12. which was in the Countrey of Edom. And in this place Kadesh is the same with En Mispbat, so called, not because of the judgement of the Kings in that place, as Mercerus conjectureth: but of the judging of the Israelites, because there they murmured: this Kadesh is here described not to be farre from Mount Seir, and the Plaine of Pharan.

The Amalekites were so called afterward of Amaleke, the nephew of Esau, Gen. 36.12. these were they which fought against Israel, Exod. 17. and were destroyed by Saul, 1 Sam. 15.*

Hazezon Tamer: the City of Palmes, for so tamar signifieth, which was named afterward En gaddi▪ Hierom, *Iunius.

QVEST. VI. How the King of Sodome and Gomorrhe fell into the slimie pits.

Vers. 10. The Kings of Sodome and Gomorrhe fell there, &c. 1. These were not empty pits, as some Hel|brewes thinke, out of the which they used to digge slimie earth, but they were full of slime and brimstone, for otherwise it had beene no danger to fall into them. 2. These two Kings did not fall in by chance, as they fled away, for they could not be ignorant of the ground. 3. Neither did they willingly cast themselves in, as Ramban thinketh, to decline the force of the battell: but they were forced as they were chased, to fall into them. 4. Neither were these two Kings preserved by miracle there, and afterward taken out by Abraham, as the Hebrewes imagine: for the King of Sodome came forth to meet Abraham, vers. 17. he stayed not till he tooke him out. 5. Neither is it like that the King of Gomorrhe, as Ramban thinketh, died there, seeing the King of Sodome, that was in the same danger escaped. 6. Nor yet need we to say, that these Kings armies there fell, but they themselves fled away. For this is contrary to the text. 7. But it is most like, that these slimie pits were not full of water, but of that kinde of earth, so that they which fell into them, might escape with their life. The other three Kings, which are not mentioned, might bee of that number, that fled to the mountaines, and so were reserved to a greater judgement, Mercer.

QVEST. VII. Of the messenger that brought Abraham word.

Vers. 13. Then came one that had escaped, &c. 1. The Jewes doe but trifle, in saying that this was Og King of Bashan that escaped, when the Amorites were slaine. 2. Neither is it evident, whether this messenger were a godly and faithfull man, Calvin. 3. It is like he might be some of Lots dome|sticall servants, or one that was acquainted with Abraham and Lots kindred, because he onely reported the newes concerning Lot, Muscul. 4. Some Hebrewes thinke, that the enemies which had taken Lot, sent this messenger of purpose, that Abraham also comming to rescue Lot, might bee taken, but that is unlike.

QVEST. VIII. Whence Abraham was called the Hebrew.

TO Abraham the Hebrew. 1. The Hebrewes were not so called of Abraham,^s Artapanus thinketh in Eusebius: for how could Abraham give a name to himselfe: and Abraham beginneth with Aleph,^{*} Hebrew with Aain.

2. Neither was Abraham so called of Haber, or gnabar, because he did first come over the river: which name was therefore, as Chrysostome thinketh, by prohecie given to Abraham, foreseeing that hee should goe over Euphrates to Palestina. Of this opinion also are the Septuagint, Origen, Rupertus, that Abraham was so called, à transitu, of his going over.

3. But the Hebrewes were so called of Heber: of which opinion are Hierom, Iosephus, Eusebius, Augustine, with others: the reasons thereof are these. 1. If Hebrew came of Haber rather than Heber,^{*} the word should have beene Habrew, rather than Hebrew. 2. The Hebrewes doe end their names of Nations and kindreds in Jod, as Iuhudi, Amaleci^o: therefore this name Hibri, which signifieth an Hebrew, is most like to be delrived of the proper name Heber, sic Eugubinus. 3. But Augvstines reason is best, who thinketh that Sem is said to be the father of all the sonnes of Heber. Gen. 10.21. because the elect people of the Hebrewes c^ome of him. 4. This also may be added, that seeing the Hebrew language was named of Heber, because it was preserved in his family, when other tongues were divided, that from thence also the Nation should be so called.

4. But where it is objected, that many nations beside came of Heber, that are not called Hebrewes: they only kept the name of Heber, that continued in Hebers faith: and though Abraham be not called He|brew before he came over the river into Palestina, so neither is he called so immediately upon his passage, and the reason hereof may be, because till Abraham was called, the Sripture maketh no mention of his former acts, Perer.

QVEST. IX. Of Abrahams confederacie with men of a divers faith.

Vers. 13. WHich were confederate with Abraham. The question here is, whether it were lawfull for Abraham to make league with these Amorites, being of a divers faith. The answer is, 1. They sought it of Abraham, as did also Abimelech, because they saw that the Lord was with him, and therefore they desired his friendship, Abraham sued not to them. 2. The time was not yet come for the expelling of the Canaanites, for then it was unlawfull for them to make league with them, as the Is|raelites answer the Gibeonites, Iosua 9.7. wherefore the times must be distinguished, Muscul. 3. All this was done not without Gods speciall direction, who moved these confederates to assist Abraham, being a stranger in the land, and of no great power, Calvin. 4. The Hebrewes also thinke, that those three were of Abrahams faith, and worshippers of God, and that Abraham therefore made a league with them.

QUEST. X. By what authority Abraham waged battell.

Vers. 14. WHen Abraham heard that his brother was taken, &c. The question is, by what authority Abraham addresseth him to battell. 1. Neither was the authority of Ma^ore Escol and Aver, Lords of the Ammorites, sufficient, for they were all subjects to the King of Elam, vers. 4. Nei|ther did the King of Elam take unjust warre in hand, as some thinke, for he came to suppress rebels, vers. 4. 3. But wheras there are three things required to make just warre, a good cause, a good affection in follow|ing it, and lawfull authority: Abraham had all these: his cause was good, to redeeme his brother L^ot, whom the enemie had unlawfully taken captive, being a stranger, and not accessory to the Sodomites re|bellion: thus the Wise man saith, Wilt thou not preserve those that are laid to be slaine? Prov. 24.11. Againe, Abrahams affection was good, he sought not to make himselfe rich, neither did he seeke himselfe in this businesse, vers. 22. but the glory of God: his authority was also from God, as Melchisedeck saith, That God delivered his enemies into his hand, vers. 20. And Abraham was now in right, though not in possession, the King and Lord of this Countrey; whereof the Lord would aforehand give some testimonie, as Moses by slaying the Egyptian did manifest his calling, Exod. 2. Muscul. 4. And whereas he recovered not onely Lot, but the rest of the Sodomites: this also was done by the Lords direction, because he had reserved them to a greater punishment, Muscul. but these particular actions are not to be drawne into example, but must be discerned from the generall duties of Christians.*

QUEST. XI. Of the City Dan.

HE pursued them to Dan, &c. 1. For the situation: Dan bounded the land of Palestina on the North, as Bersabe on the South: it was planted at the foot of Libanus, where was the spring head of the flood Jordan, Iunius: it is distant from Sidon 35. miles, and therefore it is said to be farre from Sidon, Iud. 18.28. 2. It is famous for many acts and exploits there done: both good and bad: there Ieroboam set up his golden calfe, 1 King. 12. there Peter uttered that excellent confession of Christ, Matth. 16.13. and the woman was healed of her bloody issue, Perer. 3. It was first called Leshem, Ios. 19.47. or Laish, Iud. 18.28. then Paneas, after that, Caesaria Philippi, by the Tetrarch Philippus, and lastly, Neronia, by Agrippa, in the honour of Nero. 4. But whereas this place was called Dan long after Moses time, Iud. 18.18. I thinke it probable, that Ezra, or some other of the Prophets inspired of God, that did digest the Scriptures into order, did insert these names into the story, which were not knowne to Moses, for the better evidence thereof: But that Ezradid write the Scriptures anew which should be burned, when the City was taken, as thinke some of the fathers, Iraeneus, Tertullian, Clem. Alexandriniseemeth to be farre otherwise▪ and but a fable borrowed from counterfeit Ezra, lib. 2. cap. 14.44. For Daniel being in captivity, maketh mention of his reading of Ieremies prophecie, Dan. 9. which then was not perished: and our Saviour saith, Moses writ of him, Ioh. 5. But if Moses works were utterly perished, and Ezra had renewed them, Ezra not Moses had written of him: Ezra might restore the holy bookes defaced in continuance of time, to their former perfection: but wholly write and compose them againe he did not.*

QUEST. XII. What number Abraham taketh with him.

Vers. 15. HE and his servants divided themselves, &c. 1. Abraham armeth his owne servants, and such as were borne in his house, which would be more trusty and faithfull to him, Eugubin. 2. He taketh 318. persons, which were not the chiefe captaines onely, and under them a great number of Souldiers beside, as Iosephus, but these were the whole number which he tooke with him, yet were they not all his house: for there were women, and children, and aged persons beside. 3. Rupertus allusion here to the 318. fathers in the councill of Nice assembled against Arrius is farre fetcht: and his application of the Greek numerall letters T.I.H. the first to betoken the Crosse, the other two the name Iesu, is also impertinent, seeing Moses did write in Hebrew, not in Greeke. 4. The Hebrewes conceit also is vaine, that Abraham had none but Eleazar his servant with him, the letters of whose name make 318.*

QUEST. XIII. Abrahams policie in battell.

Vers. 15. DIvided themselves by night. 1. Abraham, who was before in Egypt so timorous, that fearing to be killed, he desired his wife to dissemble her selfe, yet now is so emboldned that he dare with a small company set upon foure Kings: so that Abraham might here say with David, that God did teach his fingers to fight, Psal. 144.1. Calvin. 2. Abraham againe sheweth here the practice of that sayling of the Wise man, by counsell make warre, Prov. 20.18. for he both divideth his company, and setteth upon them in the night: so did Gideon, Iud. 7.16. and Iosua 10 9. so David came upon Saul in the night: 1 Sam. 26.11. Muscul. 3. He taketh his owne servants, and the servants of his confederates, Iunius: and overtaketh the enemye the fifth night and surpriseth them, being weary of their journey, secure, unarmed, and like enough also drunken, Iosephus.

QUEST. XIV. Of Hoba.

Vers. 15. HOba: It was the proper name of a place, not an Epithite given to Dan,* as R. Salomon thinketh; (it signifieth culpa, a fault; because Dan afterward was faulty in idolatrous worship) for here this Choba is described to be on the left hand of Damascus. 2. Hierome saith that this Choba in his time was a village, where certaine Hebrewes dwelt of the heresie of Ebion, which retaineth all the precepts of the law. 3. But it is most like to be Opton in Phenicia: Iunius, and so some Latine texts for Choba read Phenice.

QUEST. XV. Of the Valley of Sheveth.

Vers. 17. THE valley of Shaveh, &c. 1. This is not that Shaveth mentioned, vers. 5. that was beyond Jor|dan, this on the hither side not farre from Sodom, Mercer. 2. Hierome thinketh it was a Vally so named of the City Shaveh, which was situate in a Plaine not farre from Sodome, where the Emims dwelt, vers. 5. which name it retained still in his time. 3. Botehardust thinketh it was the same Valley where Soldome and Gomorrhe were. 4. Iunius placeth it neare unto Jerusalem, being the same Valley where Ab|solon reared his Pillar, 2. Sam. 18.18. and hereunto the Septuagint agree, which interpret in the Valley of Melchisedeck: And it seemeth indeed, not to be farre off from Salem, which is Jerusalem, where Mel|chisedeck was King, because he met Abraham there with bread and wine. 5. It was not at this time, but afterward called the Kings Dale, Vatab. not because the Kings used there to exercise and disport themselves, Chald. neither was it so named of some King, Calvin; but rather it was called the Kings Dale, for the excellency of it, and therefore is thought to be the same which was called, Vallis illustris, the famous Valley, Perer.

QUEST. XVI. Who Melchisedeck was.

Vers. 18 MELchisedeck. &c. 1. Origen and Dydimus thinke that Melchisedeck was an Angell, but the text is contrary that maketh him King of Salem.

2. Some thinke that this Melchisedeck was the Holy Ghost; which opinion is defended by the Author of the questions of the old and new Testament, cha. 109. which goe under Augustines name, but it is none of Augustines worke: for he numbrell the Melchisedechians among the Heretikes,* heres. 34. and it is an erroneous opinion. 1. For this Melchisedeck is said to be a Priest to the most high God, but every Priest is taken from among men, Heb. 5.1. 2. If the Holy Ghost was a Priest unto God, he therein should be inferiour unto God, and so not God; for in the God-head there is equality. 3. Neither did the Holy Ghost ever descend from heaven to be incarnate, but onely the sonne of God, Ioh. 3.13. 4. And whereas the Apostle saith, that Melchisedeck was without father or mother, and without beginning of dayes, or end of life, Heb. 7.3. whence they would enforce that Melchisedeck was not a mortall man, but of an immortall nature; the Apostle hath there relation onely to the story in this place; Melchisedeck is not set forth in story by his kindred, his birth and death; he had both father and mother, was borne, and died, but there is no mention made of it, and so Hierome expoundeth that word used by the Apostle, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, genealogie is not expressed or mentioned.

3. A third opinion there is, that Melchisedeck was a King of Canaan, and not of Abrahams line; of which opinion were Irenaeus, Eusebius, Caesarion, Apollinarius, Eustathius, as Hierome testifieth,* and among the new Writers, Calvin, Iunius, Musculus, Mercerus, Pererius, with others. 1. Pererius urgeth that place, Heb. 7.6. He whose kindred is not counted among them; which proveth not that Melchisedeck simply was not of Abrahams kindred, but that it was not so expressed in story; 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, as Epiphanius saith; so that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, not rehearsed in genealogie, here used by the Apostle, is the same that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, without kindred, vers. 3. 2. And seeing Canaan was under Gods curse, and Sem had the chiefe blessing, how it is like that one of Canaan should blesse Abraham of Sem. 3. And the Apostle concludeth, that Melchisedeck was greater than Abraham, because he blessed him; but none of the Canaanites, which were the cursed seed, could be greater than Abraham the father of the faithfull, of blessed Sem. 4. The fourth opinion of the rest most probable, is, that this Melchisedeck was Sem; which opinion is strengthened with many arguments.*

1. Sem onely of all men living, was greater than Abraham; as Syracides saith; Sem and Seth were in great honour among the children of men: 49.16. though Arphaxad, Selah, and Heber; yet lived, yet Sem was the most honourable, in respect of his yeares, his knowledge, who saw the old world, his prerogative, in Noahs blessing: and whereas Abrahams predecessors were Idolaters, none of Sems progenitors are noted that way, therefore seeing Melchisedeck was greater than Abraham, and none then living was greater than Sem, he is most like to be the Melchisedeck.

2. That was the place of Sems dwelling, whence in time Iapheths sonnes should learne to dwell in the Tabernacle of God: so reasoneth Midras: but from Sion came forth the law, and word from Jerusalem,* Isay 2.3. at Salem therefore were the tents of Sem.

3. Hierome alleageth this reason used by some, that Melchisedeck brought forth bread and wine to Abraham for his repast: seeing he owed this duty to his grand-childe, Evagr. tom. 4.

4. Melancthon thus argueth, therefore God brought Abraham to Sem the father of his ancestors, to joyne together a notable company of the Church.

5. Some use this reason: A Kingdome is more ancient than a tyranny, but unlesse we make Sem to be Melchisedeck, we cannot plainly prove that a King reigned before Nimrod. treat. of Melchis.

6. Melchisedeck is interpreted a King of righteousness: this Melchisedeck had the knowledge of the true justice and righteousness by faith in Christ: but in all the Scripture shall we read of none called to the faith, but men acquainted with Abrahams house, with himselfe, or Isaacks line, or the children of the East, the sonnes of Keturah in the booke of Iob.

7. That this Melchisedeck a King of Canaan, should bee Sem, agreeth to the prophesie, Gen. 9.27. Let Canaan be his servant.

8. Also in that he is called a Priest of the most high God; This also agreeth to Sem, who had that pre|rogative of Priest-hood, (not as some Hebrewes thinke, by his birth-right, for Iapheth was elder) but by his fathers blessing: Blessed be the God of Sem: who was more like to be this great high Priest of Sems God, than Sem himselfe.

9. Melchisedeck was King of Salem, which signifieth peace: and indeed this Salem had a speciall pre|rogative of peace: for when the foure Kings smote other parts of the Countrey of Canaan, as is set forth in this chapter: it is not like, that Salem should have beene spared, if the King thereof had beene a Canaanite: if there had not beene great respect to the person of aged Melchisedeck or Sem.

10. Where Melchisedeck is set forth without father or mother, beginning of life, or end of dayes; this all so most fitly agreeth to Sem, who was borne before the flood, whose father Noah was now dead, who lived 600. yeares: so that no man living at that time could remember his birth, or death, or parents.

11. Seeing also that Hebers language was preserved in Salem, as may appeare by the interpretation of the name of Melchisedeck. It is most probable that this King of Salem was of that line, who together with the true faith, retained that holy language.

12. Lastly, seeing Melchisedeck was a type of Christ, Psal. 10. that came of Sem, and no type or figure of Christ is expressed in Scripture but of Sems line, none is more like to be this representer and foreshewer of Christs everlasting Priesthood, than Sem himselfe then living. It is most unlike, that any Priest not of Sem, should shadow forth the high Priest Christ of Sem; and not the high Priest Sem, the father of Christ after the flesh. By these and other probable reasons, some learned perswade, that Sem was Melchisedeck: neither are the contrary objections of any great weight.

1. First, it is objected, that this Countrey was possessed by the Canaanites, and it is not like, that Sem would returne out of the East into Judea, Perer. Answ.* 1. It is said that the posterity of Iocktan of Sem inhabited toward the East, Gen. 10.30. but of Sems dwelling there is no expresse mention. 2. Iarchi and Epiphanius in Anchorato are of opinion, that many of Sems posterity that had not their tongues altered, kept about Jerusalem, though they were thence expelled afterward by the Canaanites. 3. And this might bee some cause of the warres of the Easterne Kings against the Canaanites, for encroaching upon Sems possessions, treat. Melchis.

2. Ob. Seeing Abraham returned from the slaughter of Chedorlaomers people of Elam, which must needs be of Sem: how commeth it to passe that Sems heart was not rather stirred against Abraham for killing his children? Answ. Sem being a Prophet, and knowing that Abraham was appointed of God to be the father of the faithfull people, preferreth him, being not onely of his carnall kindred, but heire of his faith, before the rest of his kindred that were degenerate.

3. Ob.* Epiphanius proveth that Sem could not be Melchisedeck, because he was long dead before Melchisedeck met Abraham, who was then 80. yeare old: for saith he, by one Chronicle there are from Sems birth to Abrahams 80. yeare, accounted yeares 1130. by another 629. yeares; but Sem lived onely 600. yeare.

Answ. 1. In the first account Epiphanius followeth the corrupt computation of the Septuagint, who doe adde divers hundred yeares to the ages of the fathers after the flood: as is shewed before, quaest. 17. in chap. 11. 2. Neither was Sem after the second computation at that time, 629. yeares old, but onely 529. so that he lived after this time 70. yeares: and as a learned man well conjectureth, it might well bee that in the Greeke copie, which Epiphanius followeth, χ , chi, which standeth for 600. was put for ϕ , phi, which is 500. And this difference in computation might have given occasion to Epiphanius further to have searched the truth, and to have preferred the originall before the Greeke translations.

4. Ob. If Sem were Melchisedeck▪ then had he two names, which cannot be proved out of the Scripture, Perer. Answ. 1. Chytram thinketh, that Melchisedeck is here not a name proper, but appellative, signifying that he was a righteous & just King. 2. Cajetanus holdeth it to be an Epithite not proper to Sem, but common to the Kings of Salem, as Caesar and Augustus were to the Emperour of Rome: and so we read of another King of Jerusalem called Adoni-zedek, Lord of justice, which is all one in sense with Melchisedeck, I•su. 10.3. 3. But I approve rather the judgement of Selnec•erus, that Melchisedeck was a proper name unto Sem, in respect of his office, because he onely excelled among the rest, as a just King, and thereof had that name.

5. Ob. If Sem had beene Melchisedeck, it is like that Abraham comming into Canaan, would first have sought out his great grand-father, and joyned himselfe unto him: neither would S. Paul have omitted it, en|treating of purpose of Melchisedeck, Perer. Ans. 1. Melancthon thinketh that Abraham was brought out of Bethel to Sem: his words are these; Now when Abraham was brought out of Babel to Sem, what a goodly College had Sem, &c. 2. Neither Moses nor yet the Apostle directly set downe Abrahams acquaintance with Sem, or that he was Melchisedeck, that the comparison might be more fit betweene Melchisedeck and Christ: in that he is set downe without father, without mother, without genealogie, Heb. 7.3. as the Prophet saith of Christ, who shall declare his generation? Psal. 51.8. 3. For matter of fact, * it is no good ar|gument to conclude negatively out of Scripture: for as many things were done by Christ, not expressed in Scripture, Ioh. 20.30. so also by Abraham and the rest of the Patriarks: but for a point of faith and do|ctrine, the argument holdeth well, there is no such thing taught in Scripture, therefore wee are not to beleeeve it.

Ob. Melchisedeck is said to be without father and mother, because they are not mentioned in Scrip|ture: but it is knowne who Sems father was, and mention likewise made of his birth and beginning of dayes.

Answ. 1. It is not to be doubted, but that Melchisedeck had both father and mother, though neither I thinke can be named: Epiphanius saith, some Writers affirme, that his fathers name was Eraclas, his mothers Asteria: neither is Suidas conceit to be approved, * that Melchisedecks parentage is therefore not declared, because he was borne of an harlot. 2. Though Sems genealogie be expressed in other places, yet in the story, to the which the Apostle hath relation, it is not: neither is his kindred set downe under that name of Melchisedeck, as Lyranus and Tostatus well answer.

7. Ob. Suidas saith that Melchisedeck reigned in Salem 113. yeares, and lived a virgin: but Sem had a wife which was in the Arke with him. Answ. Of the same opinion also is Ignatius, Epist. ad Philadel. that Melchisedeck was a perpetuall virgin: but this being a bare conjecture, may more easily bee denied than proved.

Ob. Iosephus and Philo, men thorowly acquainted with the antiquities of the Hebrewes, where they make mention of Melchisedeck, bring him in as a stranger from the kindred of Abraham, Perer.

Answ. For these two, there are alleaged two and twenty Rabbines, and principall writers among the Jewes, as Aben Ezra, Baal Hatturim, Levi Ben Gerson, David Kimchi, with others, * that make up that number, which all with one consent, hold Sem to be Melchisedeck.

Thus have I set downe the reasons on both sides concerning this question, which I referre to the Rea|ders judgement. It is no matter of faith, which way any taketh, either to hold Sem to bee Melchise|deck, or otherwise. But I rather for mine owne part incline to thinke, being moved with the force of the former reasons, that it was Sem, though I will not precisely determine it, but say with Hierome upon these words of the Apostle; Of whom (that is Melchisedeck) we have many things to say, which are hard to be uttered, Heb. 5.11. Si vas electionis stupet ad mysterium, & in effabile fatetur, quanto magis nos: * of the vessell of election be astonished at this myserie, and confesseth it hard to be uttered, how much more we, &c.

King of Shalem, Hierome, (to whom also subscribeth Mercerus) thinketh that this Shalem was not Jerusalem, but another towne in the region of Sichem, which he would prove by foure arguments.

1. This Salem in Sichem is mentioned, Gen. 33.18. and Iohn 3.23. Iohn baptized in Enon beside Salim. Answ. First, Gen. 33.18. the true reading is, that Iacob came Shalem safe to the City. Sichem, as the Chalde interpreteth, not to Shalem a City of Sichem. Secondly, that Salim where Iohn baptized, is the same City which is called Shagnalim, or Schalem, belonging to the tribe of Benjamin, 1 Sam. 9.4. wherefore this Shalem in Sichem hath no ground out of Scripture.

2. Hierome saith, that there was a towne neare to Scythopolis, called Salem in his time, where the ruines of Melchisedecks pallace were to be seene. Answ. But whence shall it be knowne that Melchisedecks pallace sometime stood in that place: this is warranted onely by an uncertaine report: neither is it like that Melchisedeck being a King of one small City, did build himselfe such a sumptuous and great Pallace, whose foundation should continue so long, above two thousand yeares.

3. The City of Jerusalem was much out of Abrahams way, as he returned from Dan, but the other Salem was in his way, Hierom. Answ. As though a small distance of way could hinder Gods purpose in causing Melchisedeck and Abraham to meet: which might be either in drawing Melchisedeck somewhat from home to salute the Patriarke, or in moving Abraham to visit the City Salem, famous for the true worship and service of God.

4. But Hierusalem cannot come of Salem, for so two words of divers languages should be mixed together: the first name being Greeke, the other Hebrew. Answ. Hierome imagineth, that the first part of this name should come of the Greeke Hieros, holy, for so Jerusalem was called the holy City.

But the Hebrewes doe better derive the name of Jerusalem, they say Sem called it Salem, and Abraham Jireh, there the Lord will be seene, Gen. 22.14. which both put together make Jerusalem,* which signifieth the vision of peace: so Midras in Psal. 76. This derivation of Jerusalem is more probable than from the Greeke Iireh, as Hierome, or from Jebus and Salem, which make Jebusalem, and for better sound to the Jerusalem, as Pererius.

Wherefore I preferre rather the opinion of Iosephus, that this Salem was the same City which was called afterward Jerusalem: for these reasons.*

1. Because there is no evident mention in Scripture of any other City called Salem, but this converted into the name of Jerusalem: two Salems we read not of; one was Jerusalem.

2. This is evident, Psal. 76.2. In Shalem is his Tabernacle, his dwelling in Sion: Sion then and Shalem were both in one place.*

3. The Jewes also hold this tradition, that the place where David and Salomon built the Temple in the floure of Araunah, is the same place where Abraham built an Altar, and would have sacrificed Isaack: where Noah first built when he came out of the Arke: where Cain and Abel offered, &c. This place then being consecrate with so many Altars and sacrifices, is like to be the place, where the greater sacrificer and high Priest Melchisedeck dwelt.

4. The type also better answereth to the body: that Melchisedeck a figure of the high priest Ihesus should there dwell, where Christ afterward performed that great and divine act of his Priesthood, in offering himselfe up in sarifice upon the Crosse at Jerusalem.

QVEST. XVIII. How Abraham is blessed of Melchisedeck.

Vers. 19. HE blessed him, &c. 1. It is like that Melchisedeck used a more ample forme and manner of blessing▪ which is here onely abridged by Moses, Luther.

2. Though Melchisedeck blesse Abraham first, and then God: herein hee offended not, as the He|brewes affirme, and for that cause they say his Priesthood was translated to the posterity of Abraham: for beside that the servants of God in their prayers being carried with zeale, forget to observe order: even this blessing pronounced upon Abraham, is referred to the praise of God. As also the Apostle other|wise collecteth that Melchisedeck was greater than Abraham, in that he blessed him: and that his Priest|hood was not translated to Aaron, but to Christ: ex Mecrer.

3. Abraham is blessed, and God is blessed: but God is blessed Benedictione laudis, with the blessing of praise, Abraham Benedictione opitulationis, with the blessing of Gods helpe or assistance, Cajetane.

4. Neither is Abraham pronounced blessed onely herein, because hee had obtained this victorie: but aeterni faederis respectu, in respect of the eternall covenant, which God made with him and his seed, Vatablus.

5. And this is more than an ordinary blessing: it is a Priestly benediction, and it is set forth as an act of Melchisedecks Priesthood, whereby he ratifieth the promise made to Abraham, Calvin.

6. Melchisedeck is found to be the first, that giveth this title unto God in Scripture to be possessor of hea|ven and earth, Tostatus: whereby the true God is distinguished from all false gods.

QVEST. XIX. How Abraham payed tithes.

Vers. 20. AND he gave him tithes of all, &c. 1. Although it bee not expressed in the text, whether Melchisedeck or Abraham gave tithes, yet the Apostle cleareth this doubt, that he recei|ved tithes of Abraham, Heb. 7.6. and the text also giveth this sense: for seeing Melchisedeck is named to be a Priest, he was more fit to receive than give tithes. 2. Some thinke that Abraham gave not tithes of all the goods recovered, seeing •e after refused to take so much as a shooe threed of that which belonged to the King of Sodome, vers. 25. He then gave tithes onely of his owne substance, Calvin, Mercer. But though Abraham refused to touch any part of the Sodomites substance, in himselfe, for his owne use, yet he might even of that offer the tithe unto God: 1. Because it was his by common •ight, and the law of Nations: 2. Because he giveth reason, lest he should say, that he had made Abraham rich: which rea|son served onely against the private and proper use, not the publike and religious use of those goods. 3. If Abraham had not prevented them in giving the honour of the victory unto God, the Sodomites would have offered the same things in sacrifice to their Idols.

Neither is the opinion of Cajetane to be allowed, that Abraham gave not the just tenth part, as after|ward was appointed by the Law, but a certaine portion in the name of the tenth: for the Apostle shew|eth that Abraham paid tithes properly, and Levi in Abraham was tithed, as the Levites received tithes afterwards, Heb. 7.5▪ 6. 4. Whereas Levi is said to pay tithes in Abraham, being yet in his loynes, and thereby proveth the Priesthood of Melchisedeck to be greater, than of Levi, that is so said, because the Priesthood went then by carnall generation, * not by spirituall election, as now under the Gospell. 5. And though Christ were also in Abrahams loynes, secundum substantiam corporalem, in respect of his corporall substance, yet he was not there, secundum rationem conceptionis, in regard of the manner of his conception, because he was conceived by the holy Ghost. But Levi was in Abrahams loynes both wayes: and there|fore the argument for superiority in Melchisedeck, concludeth well against Levi, but not against Christ.

QVEST. XX. Of the lifting up of the hand, how diversly it is taken in Scripture.

Vers. 22. I Have lift up my hand, &c. The learned have observed divers significations of this phrase in Scripture, 1. It betokeneth prayer generally, 1 Tim. 2.8. Saint Paul would have men lift up pure hands, &c. 2. It signifieth speciall suit and request for helpe, Lament. 2.19. Lift up thy hands for the lives of the young children. 3. It is a gesture expressing thankfulness, Nehem. 8.6. Ezra praised the Lord, &c. and the people lift up their hands, &c. and worshipped. 4. It is used when any thing is done with a willing mind and glad heart, Psa. 119. I have lift up my hand to the commandments which I have loved. 5. As also it is a token and signe of calling, Isay 49.22. I have lift and stretched my hands to the Gentiles. 6. It betokeneth helpe and deliverance, Ezech. 20. 5. I lift up my hand upon the seed of Iacob, and was knowne unto them in the land of Egypt. 7. To lift up the hand is to rise against one to vex and oppresse him, Iob. 31.22. If I have lift up my hand against the fatherlesse, &c. Perer. 8. They used also to lift up their hands in giving of voyces, which the Greekes call 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, Calvin. 9. It was a gesture used in taking of an oath: and therefore the Lord saith, Num. 14.30. They shall not come into the land, ever the which I lift up my hand, to make them dwell in it. This signification it hath here, for Abraham before he went to battell, had vowed unto God in his prayer, as the Chaldee interpret, that if God would deliver the enemies into his hand, he would not seeke to make himselfe rich thereby, but give the praise to God.

QVEST. XXI. Wherefore Abraham tooke an oath.

Abraham therefore tooke an oath swearing by the true God, to professe his faith and religion, that he onely worshipped the true God, Perer. 2. That he might take occasion hereby to reprove the sulperstitious use of the King of Sodome in swearing by their Idols, and instruct him concerning the worlship of the true God, Calvin. 3. As also that they might know that Abraham did not this suddenly, or of vaine-glory, but of a religious minde, having bound himselfe by an oath, Muscul. 4. That by this oath as with a shield Abraham might be preserved from the baits of covetousnesse, wherewith the King of Sodome might have tempted him, if he had not beene firme, Calvin.

QVEST. XXII. Why Abraham refuseth to take ought of the King of Sodome.

Vers. 23. I Will not take of all that is thine so much as a threed or a shooe latchet. 1. Abraham refuseth not to take of those things which belonged to the foure Kings, whom he had conquered, which now were his, by reason of his just victory, but not of any thing which was the Kings of Sodome. 2. Which Abraham calleth his, not as Ambrose thinketh, because the spoyles of the enemye belong to the King: for he was not Abrahams King: but for that they had beene before appertaining to the King. 3. Though Abraham might have challenged them by the right of his victory, yet he would not take so much as a threed. 1. Least he might have beene thought for his owne lucre to have waged that battell. 2. He would doe justice, to restore the goods to the first owners. 3. That the heathen King should have no advantage, to thinke Abraham bound unto him: Neither would Abraham, that any should have the honour and praise of enriching him, but onely God, of whose blessing hee onely depended, Pererius. 4. Abraham refused not the gifts which Pharaoh bestowed upon him, Gen. 12.8.16. but he will take nothing of the King of Sodome: the reasons may be yeelded to be these.* 1. There the King gave of his li|berality, and Abraham could not refuse without suspition: here nothing was given, but recovered in bat|tell. 2. There the King gave of his owne, but these goods belonged to all the Sodomites, Mercer. 3. By that meanes it pleased God that Abraham should be then enriched: but Abraham was now rich enough, he needed no such helps. 4. Here Abraham might have beene thought, if he had taken any thing to him|selfe, of a covetous minde to have pursued the enemies, and so God should not have had the honour of the victorie, but here was no such feare. 5. The King of Sodome and his people were ordained for a grea|ter destruction, and therefore God would not that Abraham should take any thing which was accursed. But Pharao received mercy of God: thus the case was much different, betweene the gifts of the one and the other. 6. Abraham excepteth those things which the young men had eaten, making no mention of the tithe, which he had given before, because that was taken, not out of the King of Sodom's substance, but his owne: neither doth he prejudice the other three by his example, but that they notwithstanding might take their parts, Muscul.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the custome of paying of tithes.

Vers. 10. Give him tithe, &c. We see how ancient this custome of paying tithe to the Priests and Mi|nisters is. It was practised before the Law, as appeareth here by the example of Abraham,* and the vow of Iacob, Genes. 28. yea, such was the equity of it, that from the Hebrewes the Gentiles borrowed that use: the Romans paid tithes of their goods to Hercules: Pliniewriteth that the Arabians pay tithe of their incense to their God Sabis, and that it is not lawfull before that be done, to buy or sell. Xenophon also sheweth, that they which had gotten the victory, did use to pay tithes to their Gods of the spoile of their enemy, Perer.

2. Doct. Of the lawfulness of an Oath.

Vers. 21. I Have lift up my hand, &c. In that Abraham doubted not to take an oath, wee see the lawfulness thereof: that it is not denied unto a Christian to sweare,* when he is lawfully called there|unto: contrary to the phantasticall doctrine of the Anabaptists, that simply condemne the use of an oath▪ but Moses saith, Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, and sweare by his name, Deut. 6.13. Muscul.

3. Doct. God onely the possessor and true owner of the earth.

Vers. 22. POssessor of heaven and earth, &c. Philo noteth hereupon, that no mortall man is properly possessor or true Lord of the earth. But that both the heaven and earth are the Lords possession, and we are but tenants at the Lords pleasure, as the Lord himselfe saith, The land shall not be sold to be cut off, for the land is mine, and ye are but sojourners and strangers with me, Levit. 29.23. Whereupon he enforceth, Ius possessionis omnium rerum ad Deum pertinere, usum solum ad creaturam: that the right of possession of all things belongeth to God, the use onely to the creature.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against the vulgar Latine translation.

Vers. 18. AND hee was a Priest, &c. The Latine text readeth here corruptly, for hee was: as though the bringing forth of bread and wine had beene an act of his Priesthood: Indeed this copulative Vau, sometime is used as a causall, but then the sense apparantly giveth it: as Genes.

20.3. Thou art but dead because of the woman which thou hast taken; for she is a mans wife: in Hebrew, and she is: But here there is no such cause to annexe this clause as a reason of the former: but rather it is to be joyned to that which followeth, as the same copulative sheweth. And he blessed him saying, v. 19. wherefore not the producing of bread & wine, but the blessing of Abraham was the proper act of Melchisedecks Priesthood.

2. Confut. Melchisedeck brought not out the bread and wine to sacrifice them.

Brought forth bread and wine, &c. 1. Whether Melchisedeck had before slaine sacrifices, and made a feast, not only of bread and wine, but of flesh, as Philo saith, mactatis victimis splendidum opulum s•ciis omnibus dedit; to Abraham and his company the text saith nothing, and therefore I leave it as an uncertaine guesse: sure I am, that mactare victimas, to slay sacrifices can in no sense be understood of sacrific|ing or offering of bread: as Pererius goeth about to wrest it: disput. 5. in. 14 Genes. 2. Neither did he bring forth bread and wine to represent, as Rabbi Moses thinketh, sacrificia farmacea, the sacrifices in the law of meale and floure. * 3. Much lesse did he offer them in sacrifice to God, as Bellarmino and Pererius doe urge this place; for the word jatsah here used, is never taken to signifie to offer in sacrifice: whereas Bellarmino and Pererius object that place, Iud. 6. 19. where Gideon said, to bring forth his gift and represent it (where the same word is found) it is evident that Gideon brought it forth, the flesh and broth, for the Angell to eat of, whom he supposed to be a man, for they used not to make pottage or broth to offer, and the Angell bid him to offer it upon the stone, which sheweth that Gideon had no such purpose before. 4. Wherefore, as Iosephus well noteth, Melchisedeck milites Abraham hospitaliter accepit nihil eis ad victum deesse passus: * he entertained Abrahams souldiers with great hospitality, suffering them to want no victuals: Melchisedeck then brought forth the bread and wine for no other end but to refresh Abrahams company. 1. For Melchisedeck is set forth both as a King and a Priest, the producing of bread and wine was a princely gift, the blessing of Abraham a priestly act. 2. It was the use and manner to meet them that returned from battell with bread to refresh them; therefore Moab and Ammon are accursed, because they met not the Israelites with bread and water, when they came out of Egypt, Deut, 23. 4. 3. Caljetane a chiefe pillar of the popish Church, saith, Nihil hic scribitur de oblatione, sed de prolatione panis & vini: Nothing is written of the oblation, but of the prolation or producing of bread and wine. 4. Whereas Lyranus, Tostatus, and Bellarmino. answer, that Melchisedeck needed not to have brought forth bread and wine for their refreshing, seeing they had sufficient already: as Abraham saith, vers. 24. saying that the young men had eaten: Pererius one of their owne friends doth easily remove this answer; that this was unknowne to Melchisedeck, what provision was in Abrahams campe, and though hee had knowne it, yet to shew his love, and testifie his gladnesse, he would notwithstanding have performed this friendly and liberall part, Mercerus.

3. Confut. Melchisedecks Priesthood consisted not in the sacrificing of bread and wine.

NOW it followeth to be declared wherein the priesthood of Melchisedeck consisted, and in what principallity he represented the everlasting Priesthood of Christ. 1. It consisted not in that Melchisedeck was a perpetuall virgin, Perer. for if Sem were Melchisedeck, which is most probable, as before is declared, he had a wife. 2. Neither was he a figure of Christ, because he sacrificed in bread and wine, and so represented, as the Papists imagine, the unbloody sacrifice of the Masse, for these reasons. 1. Because the Scripture maketh no mention of sacrificing, but onely bringing forth bread and wine for Abrahams refreshing. 2. That wherein Melchisedecks priesthood consisted, must bee divers from the offering and sacrifices of Aaron; but Aarons priests offered bread and wine; Ergo, herein consisted not Melchisedecks priesthood. 3. There is a great unlikeliness betweene Melchisedecks offering and the sacrifice of the Masse: for he offered bread and wine in substance, but the papists imagine that in the Masse there remaineth nothing but the formes, not the substance of bread and wine. 4. If Melchisedecks priesthood did stand in the oblation of bread and wine, then every bald Masse-priest that sacrificeth in the Masse, should be a Priest after Melchisedecks order, whereas it is peculiar to Christ onely, Psal. 110.4. Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedeck. 5. Neither would the Apostle have omitted this speciall act of Melchisedecks priesthood, wherein he represented Christ, of purpose setting forth the comparison betweene Melchisedeck and Abraham: for neither were the faithfull Hebrewes uncapable of the doctrine of the Eucharist, as Bellarmino imagineth, seeing he treateth of as high mysteries, as of baptisme, and the resurrection, chap. 6.2. and why should they be more uncapable than the Corinthians among the Gentiles, whom Saint Paul instructeth concerning the Eucharist, * chap. 11. Neither as Pererius answereth, was it a thing impertinent, to make mention of Melchisedecks sacrifice of bread and wine, if there had beene any such thing: seeing the Apostle toucheth all other points of similitude and agreement betweene Christ and Melchisedeck, * and therefore would not have omitted this wherein they were most like. 6. Whereas the fathers are objected that doe apply Melchisedecks bringing forth bread and wine to the Eucharist. 1. The Apostle herein ought to prevaile more than all the fathers beside, who maketh no such application. 2. The Fathers doe not thereby shadow forth the Sacrament of the Eucharist, as Ambrose saith, Constat sacrificium perisse, &c. & manere Melchisedeki institutum quod toto orbe terrarum in sacramentorum erogatione celebratur, &c. The sacrifices of beasts are perished, and the institution of Melchisedeck remaineth, which is celebrated in the dispensation of the Sacraments: The Fathers conclude a Sacrament, not a sacrifice of bread and wine; and so their testimonies make little for the popish sacrifice of the Masse. * 7. Many things are unlike betweene Melchisedecks producing bread and wine, and the Masse Priests sacrificing: He 1. presenteth them unto Abraham, they offer them to God. 2. Abraham and his company eat of Melchisedecks provision, in the Masse the Priest doth all, there is no eating or drinking. 3. Melchisedeck blesseth Abraham, and blesseth God, he blesseth neither bread nor wine: the Priest blesseth and halloweth the cup. 4. He bringeth forth bread and wine to Abraham, the Priest onely delivereth bread to the people, and keepeth backe the cup. 5. Melchisedeck brought bread and wine in substance, as is touched before, the Masse-priest saith their substance is changed. 6. Melchisedeck worshippeth God, not the bread and wine: the Masse-priest adoreth both. So that in truth, this example of Melchisedeck, if they will stand to their tackling, maketh altogether against the popish Masse sacrifice, and nothing for it.

4. Confut. Wherein Melchisedecks Priesthood consisted.

Wherein then the comparison holdeth betweene Christ and Melchisedeck, the Apostle sheweth, Heb. 7. 1. As Melchisedeck is interpreted a King of righteousness, so our blessed Saviour was indeed a King of righteousness, Isay. 11.4. With righteousness shall he judge the poore. 2. Melchisedeck was King of Salem, that is of peace, Heb. 7.2. so the Messiah is a Prince of peace, Isa. 9.6. 3. Melchisedeck was without father or mother, that is, they are not mentioned in the story, but Christ was truly without father, as he was man, and without mother as God. 4. Melchisedeck was 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, without genealogie: so none can declare Christs generation as he is God, Isa. 53.8. 5. Melchisedeck had no beginning of his life, or end of his dayes, that is expressed in the Scripture: but Christ the word is truly without beginning, being from all eternity, neither shall he have any end: He is Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end: Revel. 1.8. 6. As Melchisedeck was both a King and a Priest, so our Saviour is Prince of all the Kings of the earth, Revel. 1.5. and he is our great high Priest, Heb. 4.14. 7. But especially in these three points following did Melchisedeck resemble our Saviour: as Melchisedeck was not a Priest anointed with any materiall oyle, as Aaron, but declared so to be by Gods owne mouth, and the testimony of the spirit: so Christ was anointed by the spirit of God, Luk.4.18. and made a Priest by an oath: The Lord hath sworne and will not repent, thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedeck, Heb. 7.21. 8. As Melchisedeck was greater than Abraham, for he blessed him, and than Levi, that payed riches in Abrahams loynes, Heb. 7.4.9.10. so the Priesthood of Christ is greater than the Priesthood of Aaron. 9. But here|in most of all is Melchisedeck likened to the sonne of God, because he received his Priesthood from none, nor passed it over to any other: in like manner as Christ succeeded none, so neither doe any succeed him, but he endureth ever, and hath everlasting Priesthood, Heb. 7.24.

Object. As Christs Priesthood is everlasting, so it was necessary, that he should have a sacrifice,* which should continue for ever. 1. Which cannot bee the sacrifice upon the Crosse, for that was but once done. 2. Therefore it can be no other than the sacrifice of the Eucharist. 3. neither doth it suffice to say, that the efficacie or vertue of his sacrifice upon the Crosse, continueth for ever: for in this sense Noahs sacrifice might be said to be eternall, because the efficacie of it remaineth still, in keeping the world from being destroyed by water, Perer. disp. 7. in 14. Genes.

Answ. 1. But the Apostle sheweth the contrary, that the once oblation of Christs body, is that ever|lasting sacrifice of our high Priest, Heb.10.14. * With one offering hath he consecrated for ever them that are sanctified. 2. But the dayly sacrifice of the Masse it cannot be: the Apostle saith, which needed not dayly, as those high Priests, to offer up sacrifice, Heb. 7.27. that cannot be an everlasting sacrifice, which is dayly renewed: and the sacrifice offered in the Church shall determine with the militant state thereof in earth, and therefore cannot be everlasting. 3. Noahs sacrifice procured no eternall or spirituall, but a temporall benefit, though to continue while this world lasteth: and Christs sacrifice gave that durable force, to Noahs sacrifice, which was a figure thereof▪ therefore Noahs sacrifice cannot be called everlasting, or him|selfe an everlasting Priest; seeing that efficacie was not in himselfe or his sacrifice, but in Christ, the ever|lasting Redeemer and Priest.

6. Places of Morall observation.

1. Observ. Light afflictions goe before heavy judgements.

Vers. 2. These made warre with Bala king of Sodom, &c. The Lord before he purposeth to bring an utter destruction upon any, doth first admonish them with light punishments: so he healeth with Sodome: first, they are scourged by these foure Kings of the East, but seeing they received no warning thereby, afterward the Lord rained upon them fire and brimstone. Perer. We learne then that we should not neglect the gentle corrections of God, lest they draw on heavy judgements: thus God dealt with his owne people, who were chastised sometime by a famine, by the sword, by the pestilence: but when none of these would serve, they were swept away and carried into captivity.

2. Observ. To dwell among the wicked is dangerous.

FURther, in that Lot was carried away with the Sodomites, we see that good men may together with the wicked taste of temporall judgements, and what a dangerous thing it is, to have any habitation or dwelling among the ungodly, Muscul. therefore the Scripture saith, Goe out of her my people, that ye be not partakers in her sinnes, that ye receive not of her plagues, Revel. 18.4.

3. Observ. Rebellion, no not against hard governours, is to be attempted.

Vers. 4. Twelve yeares were they subject, &c. but in the thirteenth they rebelled: first, we see the justice of God in punishing the wicked life of the Sodomites, with a tyrannicall government: so the Prophet pronounceth this a curse upon the ungodly: set thou a wicked man over him, Psal. 109.6. Beside, God punisheth the Sodomites for their rebellion: where then a government is established, though it be hard and unjust, nothing is tumultuously to be attempted against it: as the Lord commandeth, that the King of Babylon, who was but an hard Lord, should be served and obeyed, Ier. 27.8. Calvin,

4. Observ. Riches evill gotten commeth to an evill end.

Vers. 12. They tooke all the substance of Sodome, &c. They which used not their wealth to the good and comfort of the poore (as the Sodomites did not, Ezech. 16.49.) doe heape it up to bee a prey for the enemie. Calvin. so the King of Babel boasteth, That as a nest he had found the riches of the people, Isa. 10.14. which they had first wrongfully scraped together.

5. Observ. Gods enemies, and the enemies of our Church our enemies.

Vers. 20. Which hath delivered thine enemies, &c. Lots enemies are called Abrahams enemies: and so indeed wee should account the enemies of Gods people and Church, our enemies, though in particular they have not hurt us. Luther. So the Prophet saith, Doe not I hate them, that hate thee? &c. I hate them with an unfained hatred, as though they were mine enemies, Psal. 139.21, 22.

6. Observ. A good Prince preferreth his subjects lives before wealth.

Vers. 21. Give me the persons, take the goods, &c. Herein appeareth first the gratitude of the King of Sodome to Abraham, that is contented to leave unto him the goods for his great travell, Calvin. as also this heathen King sheweth one good part of a just Prince, that preferreth the life of his subjects before the substance: whereas contrariwise a tyrant esteemeth nothing of mens lives, in respect of his covetous desire, Perer. as Ahab contrived Naboths death, to have his Vineyard.

CHAP. XV.

The Method.

T His Chapter hath two parts, containing two ample and large promises made by the Lord unto Abraham: the first is, as touching his seed, vers. 1. to vers. 8. The second of the inheritance of his seed, vers. 8. to the end.

In the first part there is set forth, 1. on Gods behalfe, the promise. 2. On Abrahams behalfe, beleefe, vers. 6. In the first there is the cause, Gods goodnesse towards Abraham▪ vers. 1. Then the promise of his seed, both to bee of his body, which is amplified by the contrary, that not Eleazar; but one of his owne bowels should bee his heire, vers. 2, 3, 4. then the number thereof to be as the starres in multitude.

In the second part, 1. there is the promise, in generall for the inheriting of the land, vers. 7. in particular: after what time, namely, 400. yeares captivity, 13. to 17. what Countrey, vers. 18. to 21. 2. The ratifying of the promise by certaine symbols: where we have the prescription of the signes and ceremonies to be used, vers. 9. the preparing of them by Abraham, vers. 10, 11, 12. the application or confirmation it selfe, vers. 17. God causeth a smoking furnace to passe betweene the peeces, &c.

2. The divers readings.

* v. 1. In prophesie. C. in vision. caet.

I will protect thee. H.S. my word is the strength. C. I am thy buckler. caet.

3. The Explanation of doubts.

QVEST. I. How God appeared in vision.

Vers. 1. The word of the Lord came to Abraham in a vision, &c. 1. This vision was neither in the night, as the Sept. in some translations read: for Abrahams faith is here approved, v. 6. but men being asleepe cannot shew their faith. Cajetan. 2. neither was it by secret inspiration, as the interlineary glosse: for here divers speeches passe betweene God and Abraham. 3. Neither was this vision by an Angell: as Oleaster, Tostatus: for he is called Iehova, which name is not given to Angels. 4. But this vision was in the day, as the Lord used to speake to the Prophets. Ramban. Chald. and the Lord did produce his conference untill the evening. vers. 17. when the starres appeared. Iun. And God for the better streng|thening of Abrahams faith, did to his word adjoyne some visible signe of his glory. Oecolam. 5. And this is the fourth time, that God had appeared to Abraham: twice in the 12. chapter, v. 1. 7. againe, c. 13, 14. and now in this place.

QVEST. II. How God is said to be Abrahams reward.

I Am thy buckler. &c. 1. Two things doe cause feare: when either wee are afraid of some evill to happen to vs, or that some good which wee desire should bee with-holden from us. God biddeth Abraham to feare none of these, for hee was both his buckler to keepe him from evill, and his great re|ward to give him all good things. Per. 2. Some thinke that Abraham feared lest he had committed some sinne in shedding of bloud in the late battell: some lest the enemies might gather their strength againe, and come upon him afresh: some lest the Cananites might envy him because of his strength: some, lest this victorie might stand for his reward, which God promised: But it appeareth, that none of these things were the cause of Abrahams feare, but he was solicitous and carefull for his succession, and might some|what waver concerning the promise made to his seed, because hee had yet no childe, Mercer. 3. Where he saith, I am thy reward: it is not to be understood causally, and to be referred onely to those temporall rewards, which are promised afterward as Cajetane and Mercerus consenting to the hebrewes: but substantially, of the reward also of everlasting felicitie, which was laid up for Abraham with God. Iun. 4. So that here God promiseth the two greatest blessings that can bee, one in this life of perseverance, in that God saith, he will be his buckler to protect and preserve him to the end, and of eternall felicity, in saying I am thine exceeding great reward. Perer.

QVEST. III. Abraham neither was doubtfull or forgetfull of Gods promise.

Vers. 2. Abraham said. 1 Cajetane well noteth, that in other visions Abraham was onely an hearer, God the speaker: but here Abraham maketh answer to God, whereby it appeareth that Abraham did grow in confidence and familiaritie with God. 2. Neither doth Abraham complaine that he went childlesse, as though he had set light by the Lords liberal offer, that he would be his reward: but because the spirituall blessing depended of his seed, he craveth this, as the meanes whereby Gods promise toward him concerning the great reward, should be effected. Calvin. 2. Neither did Abraham doubt, or was forgetfull of Gods promise, that he would give him seed, and unto his seed that land. Gen. 13.15. But as yet it was not expressed unto him, whether his seed should come out of his owne bowels, as here the Lord first promiseth, or it might bee a seed or sonne adopted, as here hee supposeth, that this Eleazer should be his heire: sic Eucher. Rupert. 4. Or that Abrahams impatient of delay, that God had not yet given him a seed, according to his promise, is bold to poure out his grieve before God, that the Lord would hasten to accomplish his desire. Calvin.

QVEST. IV. Of the divers acceptions of the word Meshek.

The steward of my house: according to divers interpretations of the word Mesech, there are as many expositions. 1. The Septuagint take it for a proper name, as though Mesech should bee the name of Eleazers mother: for so they read the sonne of Mesech borne in my house. 2. Some derive it of the word shakah, that signifieth to beare or minister the cup: and so read the son of my cup-bearer or butler. Aquila. 3. Some of the word shakak, that is, to run up and downe: and so Eleazer should bee as the steward or bay liffe that run up and downe the house. Oleaster. Mercer. 4. Meshek signifieth an overseer: so some read that he was the steward or overseer. Chald. or the sonne of the steward. Theodoret. Hierome. 5. Meshek also signifieth a leaving or dereliction; and so Eleazer is called the sonne of the leavings: not for that hee only was left of Abrahams ancient familie, as Cajetane: or because he had left to him the care of his house as Vatablus. But that he purposed to leave unto him the inheritance of all. Innius. And this seemeth to bee the most proper sense.

QVEST. V. Wherefore Eleazer is called of Damascus.

Eleazar of Damascus. 1. This Dames•k, or Damascus, was not the name of his mother, as some think: ex Calvin. 2. Neither was it his proper name, as Hierome and the Septu. translate: of whom the Citty Damascus should be named. Tostat: for Damascus is held to have beene builded by Hus the sonne of Aram, and to be a name more ancient than Abraham. Genes. 14.15. 3. But Eleazer by his father was of that countrey, though borne in Abrahams house: and therefore hee is called Damascenus of Damascus: sic Chald. Iun. Calv.

QVEST. VI. Whether Abraham saw the starres only in vision.

5. HE brought him forth, and said looke up now to heaven, &c. 1. This was not done in vision only, as Cajetane thinketh: but as the words import, Abraham having spent a good part of the day in prayer within, now is bid to goe forth in the evening, and is shewed the starres for his confirmation. Iun. 2. Neither is this an allegory, as Philo applieth it, who saith, that the soule of a wise man should bee like unto heaven: But it is an history so verily done as it is rehearsed.

QVEST. VII. What seed of Abraham is understood, carnall or spirituall.

* SO shall thy seed be. 1. We neither thinke with Augustine that this is meant of Abrahams spirituall seed only: magis videtur promissa posteritas falicitate sublimis: that posterity seemeth to bee promised, which is blessed in heaven. 2. Neither with Lyranus, that there are here two literall senses, the one of his carnall seed, the other of his spirituall: for of one place there can be but one literall sense. 3. Neither with Pererius that the literall sense concerneth Abrahams carnall seed, the mysticall, his spirituall. 4. But these words have one whole and generall sense: which comprehendeth both Abrahams kindreds: for that is the proper and literall sense which is intended by the spirit: * now in these words the spirit intendeth both the carnall off-spring of Abraham, as Moses expoundeth, the Lord God hath made thee as the starres of heaven in multitude: Deut. 10.22. as also the spirituall seed of the faithfull, as Saint Paul interpreteth: so shall thy seed be. Rom. 4.17. and hence concludeth, that Abraham is the father of us all, that is, of the faithfull.

QVEST. VIII. Wherein the Israelites represented the people of God.

YEt we deny not, but that in other places spirituall things are implied by temporall, by way of my|stery and allegory; as the Apostle saith, the law had a shadow of good things to come: as Abrahams carnall generation did divers wayes represent the spirituall; 1. In their number. 2. In their afflictions. 3. In their passage thorow the red sea, * figuring baptisme, 4. In being fed with manna, a type of Gods word. 5. In drinking of the water out of the rocke, a figure of Christ. 6. In looking toward the brasen serpent. 7. In their pilgrimage in the desert, a lively patterne of our pilgrimage in this life. 8. In their entrance into the land of Canaan under Iosua; which signifieth our conducting by Christ to the heavenly Canaan.

QVEST. IX. Wherein Abrahams faith consisted.

Vers. 6. ABraham beleaved the Lord, &c. 1. Hilarie noteth, that this was singular in Abrahams faith, because he doubted not of his omnipotency. 2. Ambrose reputatum est illi ad justitiam, quod a rationem non quaesivit, this was counted to him for righteousness, because he beleaved, and required no reason. 3. But there was more in Abrahams faith, than onely to beleieve God and his promises to bee true, for hee did trust in God, Cajetan, as the word bajehovah, signifieth, he beleaved in Iehovah, Mercer. and embrac|ed God as his father. Calvin. 4. Abraham therefore did not count this to himselfe as a just thing to be|leeve God, as some interpret; neither is it to be referred to Abraham, that he counted it a just thing in God, thus to recompence him as R. Levi and Ramban corruptly expound; but God counted it to him, or as the Septuag. it was counted unto him, for true justice before God, because he stedfastly beleaved Gods pro|mises: and thus expoundeth Elias Orientall, confuting Ramban.

QVEST. X. Why faith was imputed for righteousness to Abraham.

IT was counted to him for righteousness; Not that Abraham beleaved not before, or that his former be|leeve was not also counted to him for righteousness. But these reasons may bee alleaged, why in this place first mention is made of the imputation of righteousness. 1. Because in this place first one is promi|sed to come out of Abrahams owne bowels: hee considered not his owne body which was now dead (as the Apostle saith) nor the deadnesse of Saraes wombe: Rom. 4.19. 2. Because although Abraham had faith before, yet it waxed stronger and stronger: hee was strengthened in the faith. Rom. 4.20. 3. At this time first Abraham made answer unto God; and so it followeth in the same place, he gave glory to God. Rom. 4.20. 4. The scripture doth not thus testifie of Abraham in the beginning of his conversion, but even at that time when Abraham was full of good workes, even then notwithstanding his righteousness should not be imputed to his workes, but to faith, Calvin neither this testimony of Abrahams righteousness is deferred till he had received circumcision, lest he might have beene thought thereby to have beene justified. Thom. Anglic. in cap.15. Genes. and therefore the Apostle of purpose observeth, that righteousness was imputed to Abraham, when he was yet uncircumcised, Rom. 4.10.

QVEST. XI. That the asking of a signe proceeded not of any doubtfulness in Abraham.

Vers. 8. Whereby shall I know▪ &c. This question proceeded not from the doubtfulness or weaknesse of Abrahams faith, as some Hebrewes which thinke that Abrahams posterity was punished with captivity because of doubting. 1. For the Apostle saith, he was not weak in faith. Rom 4.19. 2. And seeing hee beleevd without doubting an harder matter concerning one to come out of his owne bowels, it is not like hee doubted of the lesse, namely, of possessing that countrey. 3. Neither would the spirit of God have given such a commendation of Abrahams faith, that it was imputed for righteousness, if he had wavered or doubted. 1. Some therefore thinke that Abraham asked a signe, not for himselfe but in regard of his posterity, that they might have some assurance of the inheriting of that land: sic Rupertus, Cajetan. 2. Some thinke that Abraham doubted not of the promise, but of the manner, whether it were absolute or conditionall: for it was both: to possesse the land was an absolute promise, but to inherit it for ever was tied to the condition of obedience. 3. Rasi thinketh that Abraham asked by whose merit hee should possesse the land: as though the merit of his sacrifice brought him thither. 4. But others doe better touch this point: that Abraham only for the better confirmation of his faith, desireth to be instructed concerning the manner, and of the time when it should be fulfilled: as Mary moved the like question, how shall this be? Luke 1. Augustine: and so accordingly the Lord afterward setteth downe the time, * after 400. yeares. Theodoret: And this is rather a signe of Abrahams faith, then a note of incredulity, in asking this question: for the wicked and unbelievers at the first reject Gods promises: the faithfull desire more to be confirmed. Calvin. 5. Farther we must observe, that there were speciall motions in the Saints, which are not now to be drawne into example: as Gedeon, and Ezechias asked signes, Iud 6.37. 2 King. 20.18. Calvin: and so Aquinas saith well; Abraham peti•t signum ex instinctu divino: Abraham asked a signe of a divine instinct.

QVEST. XII. Why Abraham tooke of three kinds of beasts.

Vers. 9. Take me an heifer of three yeere old, &c. So it is to be read rather with Aben Ezra, * than three heifers, as the Chalde readeth. I will let passe the allegories and mysticall significations, which are diversly gathered upon these words. 1. Some by the beasts which were divided understand the evils and afflictions, which happened to Abrahams posterity, by the birds not divided, their deliverance and prosperity. 2 Philo thinketh that these three kinds are taken for sacrifice, the heifer, goat, ramme, because of their meeknesse and tamenesse, which suffer themselves in great heards to be driven by a child: * and for that they are profitable, for labour, for food, for clothing. 3. Lyranus thinketh that by these beasts and fowles are signified Christs vertues: by the heifer his labour and patience, by the sheepe his innocency, by the turtle his continency, by the dove his meeknesse. * 4. In that three sorts of beasts were taken: some understand the three generations, while the people were oppressed, by the turtle the fourth generation, when they came forth into the wilderness: Theodoret: some the renewing of the covenant with the three Patriarkes, Abraham, Isaak, Iacob: or the three kinds of government among the Israelites, of Judges, Kings, High-priests. Perer: Some the three seasons from Adam to Noah, from Noah to Abraham, from Abraham to David. Augustine: 5. By the dividing of the beasts, and the not dividing of the fowles: some understand by the first, the afflictions of the people, when the children should be separated from their parents, by the other their deliverance, some by the first insinuate such, as were carnall among the people, by the other such as were spirituall, Augustine. 6. By the lighting of the fowles upon the dead carcasses, which Abraham drove away, some doe decypher the attempts of the Aegyptians against the Israelites to devoure and destroy them, but that God disappointed them, some the assaults of evill spirits upon carnall men: Augustine: some the wandring thoughts that seaze upon our praier & spirituall sacrifices, Gregorie. 7. By the setting of the sunne v. 17. some vnderstand the death of Ioseph, when the affliction of the Hebrewes began; some the end of the world when the greatest persecution should be: and by the smoaking fire brand the end of the world and fierie iudgement, Augustine.

But wee need not thus hunt for allegories, which are not only mens devises, as it may appeare by the uncertainty and variety thereof. Sundry men, as their fancies lead them, doe invent sundry allegories, It shall only suffice us to know, that God appointeth these kinds, to be offred partly for sacrifice, as Iosephus: partly to be as signes of the covenant, which the Lord maketh with Abraham: and as Chrysostome well noteth, because it was the manner of men, when they made a solemne covenant; to cut a calfe in twaine,* and to walke betweene the parts thereof. Ierem. 34.18. wishing the like to themselves if they breake the covenant, the Lord vouchsafeth to observe the same manner.

QVEST. XIII. Of the divers kinds of trances.

Vers. 12. AN heavy sleepe, or trance. Philo noteth foure kinds of trances, or ecstasis in the Scripture. 1. Madnesse or phrensie, that commeth of some distemperature, Deut. 28.28. The Lord shall smite thee with madnesse, and blindnesse, and astonishing of heart. 2. Astonishment of the minde upon some sudden and strange accident, as Isaak was astonished at Esaus comming in after Iacob, Gen. 27.33. 3 The quiet rest and contemplation of the soule: as when the Lord cast Adam into a sleepe, Gen. 2.4. When as the soule is ravished with some divine inspiration and revelation, as Peter was Act. 10, QVEST. XIV. The time of the dwelling of Israel in Aegypt.

Vers. 13. THEy shall bee a stranger in a land not theirs foure hundred yeares. 1. First, it is untrue that the Israelites dwelled in Aegypt full foure hundred yeares, of which opinion is Genebrard. For from Caath who went downe into Aegypt with Iacob, Gen. 47. and lived in all 133. Exod. 6. who begat Amram, who lived ann. 137. the father of Moses, who was 80. yeare old, when Israel came out of Aegypt, there are not above 350. yeares: from which some must bee detracted wherein the fathers and their chil|dren lived together. 2. Neither did they dwell in Aegypt lesse than 200. as Chrysostome, or 210. as Lyrano• but 215. yeares, as it may be thus gathered: S. Paul from the promise first made to Abraham, to the gi|ving of the law, in the first yeare of the going forth of Israel out of Aegypt, reckoneth 430. yeares, Galat. 3.17. of this summe 215. yeares were run when Iacob went downe into Aegypt: from the time of the promise in the 75. yeare of Abrahams age, till Isaaks birth, in the 100. yeare, Gen. 22.22.5. are 25. yeares: from Isaaks birth to Iacobs, are 60. yeares, Gen. 25.26. and Iacob was an 130. when hee went into Aegypt, Gen. 47.9. which all make 215. yeares: the other 215. yeares, may be accounted thus: Cahath the sonne of Levi went downe with Iacob into Aegypt, who as Eusebius thinketh, begat Amram at 70. yeares: Amram also at 70. might beget Moses, who lived 80. yeares before the departure of the Israelites out of Aegypt: the whose summe maketh 220. yeares: from the which we must detract five yeares of the age of Cahath, when he came downe with Iacob into Aegypt: so there remaineth 215. yeares, which is the time of the sojourning of Israel in Aegypt: ex Mercer.

3. Though the Israelites dwelt in Aegypt 215. yeares, yet they were not kept in thraldome and affliction above an 130. nor yet so much: for all the time of Iosephs government, after Iacob came into Aegypt, must be accepted,* which was 71. yeares: for Ioseph was then 36. yeare old: 30. yeere old hee was when he stood before Pharaoh, and expounded his dreame, Genes.41.49. and the seven plentifull yeares were past, and two of famine. Gen.45.11. And Ioseph lived in all 110. yeares: if then 39. bee deducted from 110. there will remaine 71. yeares: all this while, Israel was not afflicted. Beside, whereas their affliction began not till Ioseph and all his brethren were dead, Exod. 1.6. and Levi supposed to bee 44. yeare old when he came into Aegypt, lived 137. yeare, Exod. 5.16. was 39. yeares in Aegypt: which being subtra|cted, from 215. yeares the time of their dwelling in Aegypt, there will remaine not above 122. yeares, which was the time of their thraldome and bondage in Aegypt.

* 4. Their foure hundred yeares of servitude in a land not theirs; 1. must not be counted from Abrahams first comming into the land of Canaan, as Chrysostome: for from thence the 430. yeares mentioned, Exod. 12.40. must take beginning: and the text is, thy seed shall be a stranger: we must then begin to count from the birth of Isaak Abrahams seed. 2. Neither is it like, that God afterward seeing their extreme affliction, shortned this time of 400. yeares: which also is Chrysostomes conjecture: for Gods word altereth not, and S. Steven, Act. 7.6. abridging this story, setteth the same time of 400. yeares, not of 430. as some latine copies have, wherein the translation is corrupted. 3. Neither is the land of Canaan here to be excluded, as Oleaster thinketh, for although it was promised to Abraham for an inheritance, they were as yet stran|gers therin: for Abraham had not so much as a breadth of a foot, Act. 7.5. and Iacob counted himselfe a pillgrime and stranger there.* Gen. 47.9. 4. Neither to make up these foure hundred yeares, need we with Iosephus to count 170. yeares betweene Iosephs death and Moses birth, which was not above 64. yeares: Iosephus confuting Cheremons error, that would have Ioseph and Moses both of one time, falleth into another rour himselfe.* 5. Wherefore this time of 400. yeares must begin at Isaaks birth, though precisely they were 405. yeares: which few odde yeares in so great a summe maketh no great difference. Again this land not theirs, is not only Aegypt, but Canaan: and where the text rehearseth these three, they shall be stran|gers, serve, and be entreated evill: wee must joyntly, not severally, apply all these to the time limited of 400. yeares: that this whole time they were either strangers, or served, or were afflicted, and so Augustine well understandeth, qu. 47. in Exod. Mercer.

QVEST. XV. How diversly a generation is taken.

Vers. 16. IN the fourth generation they shall come hither, &c. A generation is sometime taken for the whole life of man, and continuance of an age: as Matth. 24.34. this generation shall not passe, till all these things be fulfilled: that is, some now alive, may live to see it: sometime it is taken for the succession of persons, as Matth. 1.17. sometime for a certaine number of yeeres: as for the space of ten yeares, Ba|ruch. 6.2. the time of the captivity in Babylon, which was 70. yeares, is limited to seven generations: for 20. yeares,* Euseb. lib. de praepar. 10. c. ult. for 33. yeares, Herod. lib. 2. for 30. Diodor. lib. 3. c. 13. for an 100. Dyonis. Halicar. lib. 1. Rom. antiquit. According to these divers acceptions. 1. Some doe understand here a generation, for an 100. yeares: but that cannot be, for the Israelites came not out in the fourth hun|dred yeare, but in the beginning of the fifth. Iun. 2. Some take it for the space of seventy yeares, out of the Psal. 90.10. and so after the Israelites had dwelt three generations, that is, thrice 70. yeares, 220. yeares in Aegypt, then in the fourth 70. yeare, they entred the land of Canaan: sic Iunius. But the best computation of these generations, * is from the succession of persons: yet we must neither begin from the eldest persons that entred into Aegypt, as Cajetanus and Lyranus reckon these foure generations from Iacob to Iudas, from Iudas to Pharez, Pharez to Ezron, Ezron to Caleb: so also Mercerus: which make foure generat[i]ons, which computation is a great errour: for that Caleb, which entred to Canaan, was not the sonne of Ezron, but of Iephunne, Ios. 14.6. long after the other Caleb: for we reade of three Calebs: the first, the son of Ezron, 1 Chron. 2.9. the second, the sonne of Hur, ibid. v. 50. the third, the sonne of Iephunne, 1 Chron. 4.15. from Iudah to this Caleb, were six or seven generations: neither could Ezron bee the father of this Caleb: for Ezron came downe with Iacob into Aegypt, Gen. 46.12. and Caleb was about 40. yeare old when the Israelites came out of Aegypt, Iosu. 14.7. and the time of the Israelites abode in Aegypt was 215. yeares: take from that, the 40. yeares of Calebs age, and suppose Ezron to have beene but five yeares old, at his comming to Aegypt, by this account he should be 170. yeare old before he begat Caleb: where[as] Caleb the sonne of Ezron was borne long before his father was 60. yeares old, 1 Chron. 2.21. wherefore that Caleb which lived with Iosua, was not the sonne of Ezron.

Neither must we account only those generations, that were borne in Aegypt, as Perer: for so wee shall have but three generations: Caath begat Amram in Aegypt, Amram Aaron, Aaron Eleazer, who divided the land: but the right reckoning is to begin from the youngest of those generations, that went downe to Aegypt: and so from Kohath to Eleazer, are foure generations. Cohath begat Amram, Amram begat Aaron, Aaron, Eleazer.

4. But Philo his allegoricall conceit I let passe, who by the fourth generation, understandeth the fourth age of mans life, when after the simplicity of his childhood, the riot of his youth, the instruction of his middle age, he commeth to yeares of gravity and judgement: for who seeth not how unproper and disal[g]reeing to this historicall prophecie, such mysticall collections are?

QVEST. XVI. Why God spared the wickednesse of the Amorites.

Vers. 16. The wickednesse of the Amorites is not yet full, &c. 1. The Amorites are named, whereas there were other people of the Canaanites; because they were the most mighty among the rest, both in power and stature of body, whose height was like the height of Cedars. Amos 2.9. and they excelled in wickednesse: and therefore the Prophet setting forth the wickednesse of Israel, saith, their father was an Amorite, Ezech. 16.2. 2. Neither did the punishment of this people depend upon any fatall necessity, before the which they could not be punished, but upon Gods will and purpose, who would not cut them off at the first, but in his just judgement permitted them, till they came to the height of iniquity. 3. Some by sinnes, here understand the punishment of sinne, which God suspended for a time: but the other sense is better to take the word properly for the wickednesse of that people, which was not yet ripe: which God deferreth to punish, both to make them excusable that despise so long a time of repentance, and to justifie his owne judgements, which he sendeth not without just cause. 4. And there are foure arguments or marks of the ripenesse of sinne, and the nearnesse of Gods judgements. 1. the quality of the sinnes themselves, * when they are such as are directly against God, as superstition, Idolatry, the offering up of their owne children in the fire: against the law of nature, as in unnatural uncleannesse, such as reigned among the Sodo[m]ites against humane society, as in cruelty and oppression, as in the old world. Gen. 6.11. 2. The generality of sin, when not a few, but the whole multitude are corrupt: so in Sodome were not to bee found ten righ[t]eous men. 3. The impudency of sinners, that are not ashamed openly to transgresse, and to boast of their sinne: as the Prophet complaineth of the Israelites, they have declared their sinne as Sodome, they hide them not: Isa. 3.9. 4. When they are incorrigible and past amendment: as Pharaoh and the Aegyptians, when they were not humbled with those ten grievous plagues, the Lord overthrew them in the red sea. Perer.

QVEST. XVII. Why Euphrates is called the great river.

Vers. 18. FRom the river of Aegypt to the great river of Euphrates. 1. Euphrates is called the great river, not as the Talmudists thinke, because it confined the holy land; but either for that it was the greatest river in Asia, as Danubius is in Europe, Nilus in Africa, in India Ganges and Indus: or for that it was one of the rivers, that came through Paradise: as for the same cause Tigris, or Hiddekel, is called the great river, Dan. 10.4.* 2. The river of Aegypt is not Nilus (as R. Salomon. and Mercer.) for the bound of Palestina never extended so farre: but it is a river which runneth out of Nilus, betweene Pelusium and Pallestina, thorow a great desart, and falleth into the Mediterranean sea: this river is called Sithor. (as Aben Ezra,) of the troubled and blacke water, Iosuah 13.3. which it borroweth of Nilus, which for the same cause is called melas, black: it is termed also the river of the wilderness, Amos 6.14. the same which the Septuagint call Rinocolura, Isa. 27.12. because it did run along by that city, so called of the cutting or slitting of noses: which punishment King Artisanes inflicted upon malefactors, and sent them to inhabite that city. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 2. and of this opinion is Epiphanius, that this river of Aegypt, is the ri|ver Rinocolura, to whom Lunius assenteth, Iosu. 13.3. It seemeth to bee an arme of the river Nilus, com|monly called Carabus, which is distant some five dayes journey from Gaza toward Aegypt, Perer. ex Ma/sio in Iosua. 13.

QVEST. XVIII. How the land of Canaan is said to be given to Abraham.

Vers. 18. VNto thy seed, &c. But v. 7. the Lord said, to give thee this land to inherit it: and cap. 13.15. both are joyned together, I will give it unto thee, and thy seed for ever, &c. Now seeing Abraham had not so much as the breadth of a foot, Act. 7.4. how was this land given to Abraham? 1. Some thinke it was given to Abraham in right, to his seed in possession: or to him, because it was given to his seed; for as the sonne belongeth to the father, so what is given or promised to the son, concerneth the fa|ther: 3. but therefore is this land said to be given to Abraham, (though hee never had possession thereof, but his seed) because for his sake, and the love of God toward him, it was given to his seed: as Moses saith, because he loved thy fathers, therefore hath he chose their seed after them, Deut. 4.37.

QVEST. XIX. Whether the Israelites ever enjoyed the whole countrey Euphrates.

FRom the river of Aegypt, to the river Euphrates. &c. But whereas the land of Canaan is otherwise con|fined, Numb. 34.8. where it is not extended beyond Hamath, which is a great way on this side Euphrates: and the usuall limitation and border, was from Dan to Beersheba, 1 King. 4.25. which as in length not above 160. miles; and in breadth, from Joppe to Bethlem, not above 46. miles, as Hie/rome witnesseth, epist. 129. ad Dardan. a great question is here moved, how their borders could reach to Euphrates: 1. Some thinke, that there were two countries promised to Abrahams seede, the lesse of Ca|naan, which they possessed; and a larger extending to Euphrates, upon condition if they walked in obe|dience: which condition because they performed not, they never injoyed that countrey: sic Hier. like as in the Gospell (saith he,) the Kingdome of heaven is promised to the obedient: but if they performe not obedience, they shall misse of the reward: nequaquam erit culpa in promittente, sed in me, qui pro^oiss^o acceper^o non merui: and yet the fault shall not be in him that promiseth, but in mee that am not worthy to receive the promise. Hieron. ibid. to whom subscribeth Andreas Masius, in c. 1. Iosue.

2. Augustine is of another opinion, that the promised land was of two sorts, the lesse which comprehended the land of Canaan, which the Israelites possessed under Iosua: the other which reached to Euphrates, which was not under their dominion, till David and Salomons time, who reigned over all Kingdomes, from the river, that is, Euphrates, and from Timsach, which was a City upon that river, afterward called Amphipolis, even unto Azzah, or Gaza, 1. King. 4.21.24. August. qu. 21. in Iosue: to whom agree Cajetane and Oleaster; and Iunius upon this place, and this seemeth to be the better opinion: for wee are not to thinke, but that this promise made so solemnely to Abraham, accordingly tooke effect.

3. Whereas it is objected, that all the country to the river Euphrates was never given unto Israel, no not in Salomons time, because they did not expell thence the inhabitants, and plant the Israelites there as they had done in Canaan. First Augustine answereth, that concerning the Cities which were a farre off: they were commanded, if they would make peace, not to smite them, or roote out the inhabitants, but onely to make them tributary: but they were charged that in the nearer Cities, they should save none alive, Deut. 20.11.16. and this might be the cause, why in these remote countries they expelled not the inhabitants. Againe, because this large dominion, by reason of the peoples sinnes, continued not long, this might be a reason, why these countries were not inhabited of the Israelites: who if they had obeyed the Lord, he would have made it a firme possession unto them, as the other of Canaan.

QVEST. XX. Of the country of the Kenites and Kenezites.

Vers. 19. The Kenites, Kenezites, &c. Here are ten sundry nations rehearsed, whose countries are promised to Abraham: whereas in other places there are but six named, Exod. 3.8. in other seven. Deut. 7 1. The reason thereof is not, 1. either because, here the countreyes were named given to all Abrahams posterity, as to the Ismaelites, Idumeans, in other places those, which onely belonged to the Hebrewes: as Tostatus thinketh. For every where under the name of Abrahams seed, the faithful people are only comprehended, that should come of Isaack. 2. Neither is it to be thought, that the names of these nations knowne in Abrahams time, were after extinguished. Perer. 3. Or as Augustine, that these ten nations inhabited the large Land of promise, which reached to the river, the seven usuall, the lesser countrey of Canaan: for many moe nations inhabited on this side Euphrates, than are here named. 4. But I preferre rather Iunius opinion, that three were the borderers upon the Land of promise, which the other seven then possessed, the Kenites on the South, the Kenezites on the North, the Kadmonites toward the East; so that in this verse the Land of promise is bounded and limited. 5. Therefore the Hebrewes are deceived, that thinke these three the Kenites, Kenezites, Kadmonites, to be the Idumeans, Ammonites, Moabites, because Kenaz was the sonne of Eliphaz of Esau: who though they were not subdued by Iosua, should at the length be vanquished by the Messiah. For 1. the Lord gave not a foot of any of these countreyes possessed by the children of Esau and Lot to the Israelites, Deut. 2.5.9. 2. they dreame of their Messiah to be a temporall Prince and conquerour, which is their error. 3. these nations might be subdued by Iosua among the rest, though they are not named. 4. Whereas the Cananites are here otherwise named, then Gen. 10. their names might be changed in processe of time, or one might have two names. Ab^o Ezra. Mercer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Of beleeving God and in God.

Vers. 6. Abraham beleeved the Lord, &c. in the Hebrew (in the Lord) yet that common distinction, of beleeving God, and in God, though there be a difference betweene them, is not grounded up|on the phrase of Scripture, which indifferently useth both these for one, especially in the new Testament: as Ioh. 5.14. He that beleeveth him that sent me, hath eternall life, 1 Ioh. 5.10. He that beleeveth in the sonne of God, &c.

2. Doct. That the starres cannot be numbred.

Vers. 5. TEll the starres if thou be able to number them, &c. Hence then it may well be enforced, that the starres cannot be numbred: as the Prophet Ieremy saith, 33.22. as the army of heaven cannot be numbred, nor the sand of the sea measured▪ so will I multiply the seed of David: the starres then can be no more numbred, than the sand of the sea measured: and therefore this is set forth as a worke peculiar unto God: which counteth the number of starres, Psal. 147.4. Wherefore Aratus and Eudoxus were deceived, which thought they did comprehend the number of the starres: and the common Astronomers, that hold there there are not above a 1022. starres to bee seene in the sky: for if it were so, it had beene an unfit compari|son, to liken the multitude of Israel, which amounted to more than 600. thousand, Exod. 2.37. to the stars. Deut. 10.22. August. lib. 16. de civit. dei c. 23. R. Levi thinketh, that in Abrahams time the starres were not numbred, but afterwards they were by Astronomers: but neither then nor since could they ever bee numbred as hath beene shewed.

3. Doct. Word and Sacraments must be joyned together.

Vers. 18. IN that same day the Lord made a covenant. &c. Here the word and promises is annexed to the signe preceding: whereby we learne that the word and sacraments should bee joyned to|gether: Calvin.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Faith justifieth not meritoriously, but by way of apprehension and application of the righ|teousnesse of Christ.

Vers. 6. ABraham beleeveth God, and hee counted that unto him for righteousness, &c. First from hence that popish doctrine is confuted, that faith justifieth not as it apprehendeth, and applieth the righteousness of Christ, but as it is a meritorious worke by the worthinesse and dignity thereof. Remist. annot. in Rom. 3. Sect. 3. But the Apostle concludeth otherwise: that to him that worketh not, but beleeveth, &c. his faith is counted for righteousness. Rom. 4.5. where righteousness then is imputed and accounted, there is not wrought or obtained by workes: faith then justifieth not as it is a worke or meritorious, but as an instrument in apprehending the justice of Christ which is imputed by faith.

2. Confut. Faith a speciall application of the promises of God.

SEcondly: Bellarmino collecteth out of this place, that a justifying faith, is not a speciall application of the promises of God in Christ, but a generall beleefe only, that whatsoever God saith is true: as Abraham saith in this place, was his giving of credit to Gods speeches, that hee should bee the father of many nations, lib. 1. de justif. c. 8. Contra: But it is otherwise evident out of the scripture, that Abraham beleev|ed not onely Gods promises concerning his carnall seed, but his faith reached also to the spirituall seed▪ which was Christ, as the Apostle applieth it Galath. 3.16. yea Abraham rejoiced to see Christs day, Iohn 8.16. as having a particular interest in him, as his Saviour.

3. Confut. That faith only justifieth.

THirdly: this place strongly proveth against the Papists, that faith only justifieth: for whereas Abraham had shewed before this, many excellent workes: of piety in building altars in many places, and calling upon the name of God: of charity in seeking reconciliation betweene Lot and him, c. 13. of mercy in redeeming Lot being taken prisoner, c. 14. contempt of riches in refusing to take of the King of Sodom's goods, yet none of all these workes are reckoned or imputed unto Abraham for righteousness but onely his faith. Now whereas Perer. objecteth that place, Psal. 106.31. that Phinehas work, * in executing judgment upon the adulterer and adulteresse, was likewise imputed to him for righteousness: and so would prove that faith only is not imputed for righteousness but workes also. Perer. in 15. Genes. v. 6. Our answer is further this: that the Prophet in the Psalme speaketh not of that righteousness whereby Phinehas was originally counted just before God for that was by faith, because that without faith it is impossible to please God, Heb. 11.6. but of that righteousness, whereby Phinehas faith was declared and testified: and so this his zealous fact, because of his faith was counted a righteous worke; But Moses here speaketh of that originall justice whereby Abraham was justified before God: Like as S. Paul denying that Abraham was justified by workes, Rom. 4.2. and Saint Iames affirming that hee was justified through workes: Iam. 2.21. the first speaketh of justification properly before God, the other of the same testified and declared by workes: so Moses treateth of justice imputed by faith before God by an originall collation from God, the other Prophet of justice imputed by a zealous worke, * by way of effectuall declaration before men: And therefore Moses saith he (that is God) imputed Abraham's beleeve to him for righteousness: But the other Prophet saith: it was imputed to him for righteousness from generation to generation; that is hereby, Phinehas in all ages was knowne to be reputed and taken just before God: the Lord rewarding the zeale of Phinehas with the perpetuall inheritance of the Priesthood: Numb. 25.13.

4. Confut. Faith not the beginning only of justification.

FOurthly another point of popish doctrine is here overthrowen: that a man is said to bee justified by faith: because it is the beginning of salvation and, donea praeparatio hominis: a fit preparation of a man unto justification: Perer. in 15. Genes. disput. 3. numer. 42. But Abraham was not now only prepared, or beginning to be justified: for he had done already many excellent workes of righteousness, acceptable unto God: and yet being not now onely entred, but set in the midst of his godly course, hee is counted righteous by faith: faith then is not the beginning only but the perfection and consummation of righteousness.

5. Confut. S. Paul and S. Iames cannot be reconciled by popish doctrine.

Fifthly whereas Saint Paul proving Abraham to have beene justified by faith without workes, Rom. 4.2.5. and S. Iames saying that Abraham was justified through workes, seeme at the first shew to bee contrary each to other: the Popish writers goe about three wayes to reconcile these places, first the Rhemists note, that Saint Paul excludeth Abraham's morall workes before faith: annot. 1. in Rom. 4. and by such workes, they grant a man is not justified, but by such as follow and proceed of faith.

Contra. Abraham before this time, when God imputed unto him righteousness by faith, had done divers faithfull workes: as the Apostle sheweth, that by faith hee when he was called, obeyed God, &c. and by faith abode in the land of promise. Hebr. 11.8, 9. therefore the Apostle speaking of Abraham's justification by faith after he had done these faithfull workes, excludeth even such workes also from justification: And againe he saith: to him that worketh the wages is not counted by favour but by debt: but to workes done before or without faith, no wages is due, because without faith, nothing is pleasing to God, therefore he meaneth not such workes.

Secondly Bellarmino saith, that Saint Paul speaketh de fide charitate formata, of a faith formed with charity, and furnished with good workes: lib. 1. de justificat. c. 23. and such a faith truly justifieth.

Answer. True it is, that Abrahams faith, which Saint Paul so much commendeth, was a lively and working faith, yet it did not justifie him, as it was active in bringing forth good workes, but as it was pas/sive, in apprehending and laying on hold of the righteousness of God: As the Apostle sheweth, that Abrahams manner of justifying and Davids was all one, but David declareth that man blessed, to whom God imputeth righteousness without workes, Rom. 4 6. further Saint Paul thus reasoneth: being fully as/sured, that he which had promised was able to doe it, and therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness, &c. v. 21, 22. It was not imputed for the working of his faith, but for his beleiving.

Thirdly, Pererius useth a distinction of first and second justification: the first is, when a man of a sinner is made just, the second, when a just man becommeth more just: disput. 3. in 15. Genes. numer. 48. of the first they say Saint Paul speaketh, of the second, S. Iames. Bellar. de justif. lib. 4. c. 18.

Contra: 1. The Scripture knoweth no such distinction of first and second justification: that which they call the second justification, is no other but sanctification, which is an increasing and going forward in the fruits and further assurance of justification: the Prophet saying, blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, speaketh of that justification, when a man of a sinner is become just before God, which they call the first justification, but to that blessednesse is promised, and where happinesse or blessednesse is obtained, no other justification is necessary: wherefore the first and one justification sufficeth, there need not a second. 2. Further this distinction admitted, Saint Paul rather should intreat of the second justification, because he alleageth the example of Abraham who was called already, and had done many righteous workes before the Scripture maketh mention of the imputation of righteousness unto him by faith: and S. Iames of the first, who bringeth in the example of Rahab the harlot, now first called, which had done no worthy workes before.

*Wherefore thus Saint Paul and Saint Iames are reconciled, if wee say that S. Paul understandeth that justification whereby Abraham was made just before God: for he saith, if Abraham were justified by workes he hath wherein to rejoyce, but not with God, Rom. 4.2. he meaneth then that justification wherein a man may rejoyce with God, which is by faith. But S. Iames speaketh of that justification whereby a man is declared to be just before men, whereby our faith is justified to bee a true faith: as hee saith, shew mee thy faith out of thy workes, v. 18. he urgeth the shewing and approving of faith: so hee saith, Abraham was justified thorow faith, when he offred his sonne Isaak, v. 21. yet before God Abraham was justified before by faith: but by this his obedience, his faith was approved unto God, and made knowne to men: Neither is it usuall in Scripture thus to take the word justified; as wisdom is said to bee justified of her children, Matth. 11.13. that is declared or approved to bee just: Christ was justified in the spirit: 1 Timoth. 3.16. that is as the Apostle elsewhere interpreteth: declared mightily to be the sonne of God touching the spirit of sanctification. Rom. 2.4.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. God amply rewardeth them that contemne things present.

Vers. 1. I Am thy exceeding great reward▪ &c. Because Abraham contemned the rich gifts of the King of Sodome, the Lord doth promise more abundantly to recompence him therefore, as Ambrose well noteth, ne infirmos animos ob dilationem mercedis subeat penitentiae contempsisse presentia, &c. because the reward is deferred, let no man in his weaknesse repent, that hee hath despised things present, &c. lib. 5. de Abrah. c. 3. For God will be their exceeding great reward:

as our Saviour promised to his Disciples, there is none that hath forsaken house or brethren, &c. for my sake and the Gospels, but he shall receive an hundred fold, &c. Mark. 11.29, 30.

2. Observ. Honest marriage to be desired to have lawfull heyres.

Vers. 2. What wilt thou give me, seeing I goe childlesse, &c. Abraham desireth not riches, or long life for his reward, but only that he might have one to heire & inherit his labour: Ambrose note hereupon is very apt: that men should joyne themselves in honest mariage: ne hujusmodi suscipiant liberos, quos heredes habere non possunt, &c. lest they beget such children whom they cannot have to bee their heires: lib. 1. de Abraham. c. 3. for the law saith, a bastard cannot enter into the congregation to the tenth generation: Deuter. 23. 2. Men therefore if not for shame, yet because of their inheritance and succession should give themselves to honest life, not to live in adultery and filthy lust: who might better goe childlesse, than to beget children: which should be monuments of their shame.

3. Observ. God imparteth his promises not all at once, but by degrees to his children.

Vers. 4. One that commeth out of thine owne bowels, &c. First God promised that Abraham should have an innumerable seed, as the dust of the earth, Genes. 13.17. but yet Abraham knew not, whether it should be his naturall or adopted seed: now the Lord cleareth that doubt in this place, and telleth him, it shall be out of his owne bowels: yet Abraham was uncertaine, whether his seed should be given him by Sara his wife, or some other: herein also the Lord resolveth Abraham afterward, Genes. 17.16. And thus we see that God revealeth not his will at once to his children, but by degrees acquainteth them with his gracious promises: Perer. and thus is that saying of the wise man fulfilled: that the way of the righteous shineth as the light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day: Proverbs, 4.18.

4. Observ. The experience of Gods former mercies confirmeth his servants.

Vers. 7. I Am the Lord that brought thee out of the, &c. by past experience of Gods deliverance the Lord giveth Abraham assurance of his protection afterward: Thus the remembrance of former benefits received from God should confirme us in the hope of the continuance of his mercies. Muscul. As David because he slew the lion and the beare, doubteth not but that hee should overcome the uncircumcised Philistine. 1 Sam. 17.36.

5. Observ. Gods patience abused, bringeth a greater destruction in the end.

Vers. 16. The wickednesse of the Amorites is not yet full, &c. Herein appeareth the great long suffering of God, that spareth the wicked, to see if they will be brought to repentance. But by this example also is made manifest, what they are to expect, that abuse Gods patience and goe on in their wickednesse, that their destruction shall be the more fearefull when it commeth: as the Apostle saith, that such, as despise the patience and long sufferance of God, doe heape unto themselves wrath against the day of wrath. Rom. 2.4.5. Calvin.

6. Observ. Vnjust complaint of persecution in England.

BUt here I cannot let passe a malicious note of Pererius upon this place, wherein he glanceth at the present state of England: his words translated stand thus: If any man shall chance to marvell why God suffereth the cruell persecution of the Catholikes in England, and the power of the English regiment so long to continue: hee may leave off marvelling if hee consider what the Lord here saith, that the iniquities of the Amorites are not yet full: at the length, the English shall be complete, and then shall come the time of the divine revenge, which may seeme late unto us, but in respect of the secret reason of Gods providence, timely enough: which season if any man thinke now not to be far off (the persecution of that nation being now growne un|to such rage and cruelty) he shall not (in mine opinion) misse the truth: Thus farre this Ignatian sectary, in 15. Genes. Numer. 96.

Answ. 1. This complaint of persecution and cruelty exercised against the popish Catholikes is most un|true: if it be persecution, for men to enjoy their lands, to grow rich, to fare of the best, to purchase lands: then are the Recusants in England persecuted: if some rebellious and traitorous popish Priests and Judasites have worthily suffered for their practising against the Prince and state, this is no persecution, but a just execution upon such evill members, which no state in the world would endure. The Protestants in Queene Maries dayes, would have thought it happy, if they might upon like conditions have redeemed their con|science, as Popish Recusants hitherto have done.

2. This frierly exclamation and out-cry, might with greater reason bee returned upon their owne head: * for it is hard to say whether the Church of God have indured greater persecution under the unchristian Romane Emperours, or Antichristian Popes: they have so racked, burned, slaughtered, whipped, worried, tormented, both young and old, as else where I have shewed, that as Moses describeth, the cruelty of the enemies of the Jewes, so it hath beene true of them, they will not regard the person of the old, nor have com|passion on the young: Deut. 28.50. for thus have they not spared to put to the sword women great with child, and to make their mothers wombs the infants sepulchres: thus were the women of Merindol served: the mothers slaine, the infants tumbled forth of their mothers bellies, and were trampled upon: Fox. p. 952. And thus, as Hierome complaineth of the barbarous Hunnes, the cruell Papists practised: non aetati parce|bant, non vagientis miserebantur infantiae, cogebantur mor•, qui nondum vivere coeperunt, they spared not tender age nor pit•ed crying infants, they were forced to die, which had not begunne yet to live. Hierom. ad Ocean.

3. Wherefore we doe trust, as the Apostle prophesieth; They shall prevaile no longer, for their madnesse shall be made manifest to all men, 2 Tim. 3.9. that the iniquities of new Babylon have filled up their num|ber, and the time of their judgement cannot be farre off, when that saying in the Revelation shall be ac|complished; O heaven rejoyce of her, and ye holy Apostles and Prophets, for God hath given your judgement on her, Revel. 18.20.

But against the Church of England, this Frier, with the rest of that brood, that have long looked for an overthrow, and promised themselves a vaine hope of their popish Kingdome in this land (thanks bee alwayes given to God) are found false Prophets: God hath disappointed them; whereas they expected a change in the next change, * we in this change I trust shall see no change, unlesse for the better (if our sinnes let not,) and I hope (to use the saying of Moses) that their eyes shall looke till they fall out of their heads, Deuter, 28.32. before that shall befall us, which they have so long desired. True it is that this land aboundeth with many sins, which God grant may be purged from among us: but we trust, that God will chastise us as a loving father with his owne hands, and not give us over to bee punished of a nation more wicked than our selves, though we are great offenders, yet not as the Amorites an uncircumcised nation, but as the Israelites the Lords owne people: It is therefore great presumption in this popish writer to sit in Gods place, to make them Amorites, that are no Amorites, and to threaten judgement, where the Lord purposeth to blesse: Ambrose upon those words in the Psalme 119.106. I have sworne and will performe, thus writeth: Noli usurpare exemplum sacramenti, qui implendi sacramenti non habes potestatem, &c. let this example bee no warrant unto thee to take an oath, unlesse you had power to keepe an oath: so this prophecy against the Amorites can be no ground to the Frier of such false application, unlesse he were appointed to be Gods Minister for the execution.

CHAP. XVI.

1. The Method and parts.

T His Chapter hath two parts, the giving of Hagar by Sarai to Abraham, from v. 1. to 5. the sequele thereof, from thence to the end.

In the first part. 1. There is the cause that moved Sarai to give Hagar; on her part, because she had no children, v. 1. on Hagars part, shee hoped to have a childe by her, v. 2. 2. The manner is expressed how Hagar was given, and when, v. 3. 3. The effects and fruits; Hagar is conceived with childe. v. 4.

Secondly, the sequele of this marriage, is first the departure and flying away of Hagar. v. 5. to 7. then her returne with the occasion thereof. Hagar flyeth, because Sarai corrected her; this she did by Abrahams leave, Abraham gave leave because Sarai complained because Hagar despised her, v. 4, 5.

In Hagars returne: 1. the Angell biddeth her goe, and humble her selfe to her mistresse, v. 8, 9. 2. the Angell prophesieth of the number of her seed, v. 10. of the name of her sonne, v. 11. his quality and condition, v. 12. 3. Agars thankfulness and obedience is expressed, ver. 13, 14. 4. the accomplishment of the prophecie, concerning the birth and name of her sonne.

2. The difference of translations.

v. 3. she tooke Agar the Egyptian. H. then Sarai Abrahams wife tooke Hagar. caet.

* v. 5. thou doest me wrong. H.S.B.G. I have judgement against you. C. the injury done to me, be upon you, Tr. mine injury is upon thee. 3. The explanation of doubts.

Vers. 2. I Pray thee goe in unto my maid. &c. 1. It is most like that this Agar, as Philo noteth, though by nation an Egyptian, yet in religion was of Abrahams faith: for he would not be unequally yoked with one of a divers faith. 2. It is also probable, that seeing Abraham did goe in unto her only for procreation, that after she conceived, hee did no more company with her, as Philo also observeth, lib. de Abraham. 3. But it is unlike that Sarai gave this counsell to Abraham, to take her maid by Gods instinct, as Ioseph thinketh: for God would not goe against his owne ordinance, they two shall bee one flesh, Gen. 2.4. Neither did Sarai this so much for desire of procreation, and to try, as Chrysostome conjectureth, whether the cause of sterility were in her or her husband, but chiefly in regard of the blessing which was promised to Abrahams seed: in which respect her fault is somewhat excused, yet it cannot be defended, because she faileth in the meanes. 5. Neither is it like that this Hagar was Pharao his daughter (as some of the Hebrewes,) but some of the maids rather of Pharao his house, that were given to Sarai, Gen. 12.16.

3. Then Sarai tooke Hagar, &c. after Abraham had dwelled ten yeares. &c. * 1. Plutarke hath the like story of Stratonica, that being barren, gave unto Dejotarus her husband Electra, by whom he had children: thus the heathen were readie to imitate the infirmities of holy men and women, but not to follow their vertues. 2. Mention is here made of tenne yeares, not because this time is set, as the Hebrewes imagine, for the triall whether the wife is like to be barren or fruitfull: for Rebecca was twentie yeares barren: neither, as Cajetan, to shew, that Sarai was past hope of children who was now 75. yeare old, tenne yeare younger than Abraham: but rather, * as Chrysostome noteth both to shew Abrahams constant and chaste love toward his wife that notwithstanding this experience of her barrennesse, did content himselfe with her: and his faith toward God, that staying thus long after the promise, yet despaired not of the performance thereof. Perer.

Vers. 6. Sarai dealt roughly. 1. In Hagar divers faults are discovered, first her unthankfulnesse and contempt toward her mistresse, that had so much honoured her: secondly, her obstinacy in refusing to be corrected, but flying away▪ then her froward mind in taking the way by Sur into Aegypt, thinking never to returne, Oecolamp. and so to play the Apostata from her faith, which she learned in Abrahams house. 2. Sarai also diversly sheweth her infirmity, first her patience, in being so much moved at the insolency of her maid: then her rashnesse in charging Abraham without cause, and wishing God to bee judge against her selfe. Musculus: thirdly, her too great sharpnesse and severity against Hagar, as Am|brose noteth, which was constrained to escape her hands by flying away: immoderatus permissa ultione utitur, &c. Sarai in her anger doth intemperatly use the power committed to her: lib. 1. de Abra. c. 4. so also Calvin. for though the Angels afterward bid Hagar humble her selfe to her mistresse, that doth not iustifie Saraies rough dealing, (though I confesse Hagar was more in fault) for there is no place of resistance or contumacy against superiors, though they incline too much to severity: the Hebrewes also note that afterward the Ismaelites and Agarens afflicted the Israelites, because Sarai used Hagar so hardly. 3. As Abraham sheweth his love to Sarai, in preferring a barren wife before a fruitfull maid. Luther: yet hee bewrayeth his forgetfulnesse, in committing Hagar to the power of his angry wife, being with childe (as hee did imagine) with the promised seed: so it falleth out, when any thing is attempted beside Gods word, as this marriage with Hagar was, our minds are amazed upon every accident, and find no stability. Calvin.

QVEST. IV. How the Angell speaketh in the person of God.

Vers. 10. I Will greatly increase thy seed, &c. 1. This was not some Prophet, at Sem, as R. Levi thinketh, but an Angell. 2. The Angell speaketh in the person and authority of God, by whom he was sent, as it is usuall in scripture for the messenger to use the name of the sender: and it may well bee, that Christ was the chiefe in all such embassages, and therefore it is no marvell, if the Angels speake in the person of the divine Majesty. Calvin. 2. Ismael is called Agars seed, not Abrahams, * though hee came out of his loynes, because the promise of blessing was not made concerning the sonne of the bond-woman, but of the free.

QVEST. V. Of the populous nations of the Ismaelites and Saracens.

IT shall not be numbred for multitude, &c. 1. This we see accomplished, Gen. 25. where Moses rehearseth twelve Princes of Ismael, according to the promise of God, Gen. 17.20. 3. but yet it more abundantly now appeareth, in the populous nations of the Saracens, first called Agarenes, then Arabians, but called Saracens, not of Saraca a region in Arabia, as Stephanus thinketh, lib: urbib. but of Sara: for they hiding the obscurenesse of their birth and beginning from Agar a bond-woman, doe challenge to bee the right heires of Abraham. Luther.

QVEST. VI. Ismael the first in scripture called by his name before his birth.

Vers. 11. THou shalt beare a sonne and call his name Ismael, &c. 1. Shee knew that she was with childe, but she was not sure before, that she went with childe of a sonne. Musculus. 2. That fable of the Hebrewes, that Hagardid miscarry of her childe in the wilderness, and was conceived againe, is worthy no credit: for the Angell saith, thou art with childe, and mention is made of her concei|ving before. 3. Cajetan. noteth that Ismael was the first in Scripture, whose name was foretold before his birth: but it is further observed by a learned man, (in his Concent) that Ismael is the onely evill man described by his name, before hee was borne: the rest were Isaak, and Iosias in the old testalment: our blessed Saviour and Iohn Baptist in the new: But in or before the birth of these foure; whose names were foretold, there was some miracle shewed: Isaak borne of Sara, at 0. yeares of her age: when Iosias was named the altar clave asunder: when Iohn Baptist was promised his father was stricken dumbe: our blessed Saviour was borne of a virgin: but in the foretelling of Ismaels name, no miracle, that wee read of, was wrought.

QVEST. VII. Of Hagars tribulation, what it was, and how she was heard.

Vers. 11. THE Lord hath heard thy tribulation, &c. 1. Hagar• affliction and tribulation was not onely in being throughly handled of her Mistresse, but in wandring up and downe in the wilderness in hunger and thirst. Perer. 2. God heard her tribulation, that is, pittied her trouble: the Chalde para|phrast thinketh that shee prayed to God, and so the Lord heard her prayer: but there being no remem|brance in this place of her prayer, it is more like, that God of his great mercy had compassion on her mise|ry: her afflictions spake, though she held her peace. C•lvin•. For such is the Lords mercy, that hee hath pity on those, which are worthily punished, as Hagar was for her stubbornnesse. Muscul. and the Lord respected her for his servant Abrahamssake, by whom she was with child.

QVEST. VIII. How Ismael is called a Wild man.

Vers. 12. HE shall be a wilde man, his hand against every man. 1. The Chalde readeth verbatim according to the Hebrew, he shall be onager homo, a man like a wilde asse. 1. a wilde man: rather than a fruitfull man, as Oleaster deriveth the word.

2. And so have Ismaels posterity shewed themselves, namely the Saracens, as savage men living by robbing and stealing, as they which have written of them doe testifie. Ammian. Marcel. lib. 14. de morib. Saracen.

3. Though it be no blessing simply, to be enemies to all men, and all men to them, yet in respect of servitude and bondage, this is a benefit of the middle sort, not to be overcome of enemies, but to live in despite of them. Mercer.

QVEST. IX. How he shall dwell in the presence of his brethren.

SHall dwell in the presence of his brethren, &c. 1. Some interpret in despite of his brethren, as not afraid of them. 2. Some contrariwise that hee shall amongst his enemies have some friends and brethren. 3. Others note his cruelty, that he shall not spare to afflict his brethren. 4. Others, that he shall be a nation by himselfe not mixed with his brethren. 5. But the best interpretation is, that hee should enlarge his coasts round about bordering upon his brethren, the Idumeans, Madianites, Moabites, Ammonites, Rasi Iunius. 6. But where as Hierome translateth, he shall pitch his tents, though it fitly expresse the manner of the dwelling of the Arabians in tents, yet so much is not implied by the originall word, (shaca) which signifieth only to dwell.

QVEST. X. How Hagar is said to see after him that seeth.

Vers. 13. HAVE I not here also looked after him that seeth me, &c. 1. the meaning is not that she onely saw the backe parts of the Angell appearing to her in humane shape, as the latine translator readeth. 2. Neither as Lyranus, because she saw the Angell of God after and againe, having seene him formerly in her masters house. 3. Neither as Vatablus and Cajetan following Kimhi, are these words to be read with an interrogation, have I seene afterward him? and so the answer to be negative, that she saw him not, but the Angell suddenly vanished away, as in the 12. of Judges, when hee appeared to Sampsons parents. 4. Neither doth Hagar reprove her dulnesse, because she began not sooner to looke after and attend upon God that was present with her. 5. R. Isaak thus expoundeth: that at the last shee began to see and perceive, that it was best for her to returne unto her dame, which she considered not before. 6. Some place the emphasis or force in this word heere, that even in that place in the wilderness, she had seene an Angell. Mercer. 7. But the right and proper meaning is, that she seeth, that is, liveth, after shee had seene God, for they thought no man could see God and live, and therefore Iacob also said, I have seene God face to face, and my life is preserved, Gen. 32.30.

QVEST. XI. Who is understood by the living and seeing.

Vers. 14. THE well of him that loveth and seeth. 1. Some referre both unto God. 2. some to the Angell, who as Gods Minister, though not as God, liveth and seeth. 3. Some, living, understand of Ismael that lived. 4. But Hagar saying the well of the living and seeing: by living understandeth her selfe, that lived after this glorious sight, by seeing God, which seeth our afflictions.

QVEST. XII. Of Cades and Sur.

BETweene Cadesh and Bered. 1. These were two places in the wilderness of Sur which extended to the red sea. 2. Cadesh is that place where the water gushed out of the Rocke, and the people murmured against God, Numb. 20. 3. It is called a well, and before a fountaine, because it was a deepe fountaine: for as Augustine saith: omnis putens fons, non omnis fons puteus, Every well may be called a fountaine, not euery fountaine a well.

Vers. 15. Abraham called his name Ismael, &c. 1. Before it is said, thou shalt call: and here Abraham giveth the name, as he had learned of Hagar; and so in effect she gave it. Perer. 2. For the Lord would not by his oracle diminish the right of the father, to whom it belonged to give the name. Muscul. as Eva is said to have given Seth his name, Genes. 4.25. yet Adam first called him so. Gen. 5.3.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Evill must not be done, that good may come thereof.

Vers. 2. I Pray thee goe in unto my maid, it may be I shall be builded by her, &c. S•ra though shee had a good intent, that Gods promise concerning Abrahams seed might be accomplished, yet shee doth not well to use unlawfull meanes, that Abraham may have this seed by a concubine, for accor|ding to Saint Pauls rule, we must not doe evill, that good may come thereof, Rom. 3.8. And this device of Sara prospered not, she being so farre from being builded and increased hereby, that the posterity of the seed of Ismael, the Ismaelites and Hagarenes became enemies afterward to her owne seed▪ Musculus.

2. Doct. They that punish justly are not persecutors.

Vers. 6. SArat dealt roughly with her. Augustine from this example collecteth, that they alwayes which inflict punishment, are not persecutors, and that discipline may be administred justly against the obstinate, as Sara dealt with Hagar: Hagar passa est persecutionem à Sara, hac tamen sancta erat, qua faciebat illa iniqua, quae patiebatur. Hagar suffered persecution of Sara, and yet she was holy that did it, the other evill that suffered it, Epist. 50.

3. Doct. Religion no enemy to politicke order.

Vers. 9. HVmble thy selfe under her hands. Hagar was a bond-servant, whose condition then was very hard: yet the Lord commandeth her to returne to her mistresse: we see then that religion dissolveth not politicke order, neither is the doctrine of faith, a doctrine of licentious liberty. Hagar though now come to herselfe, and called of God, yet is not to renounce her condition and state of life: according to Saint Pauls rule, Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he is called, &c. 1 Cor. 7.10. Luther.

4. Doct. The office of Angels.

The Angell of the Lord said to her, &c. This is the first place that maketh mention of the apparition of Angels. This Angel is sent to call home againe Hag•r to her station and calling: so the Angels chiefe office is to protect the servants of God, and to bring home againe those that erre: so as the Apostle saith, They are all ministring spirits sent forth to minister for their sakes that shall be heires of salvation, Heb. 1.14.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Polygamie of the fathers, never lawfull or dispensed with.

Vers. 3. Then Sarai Abrahams wife tooke Agar. 1. Some thinke that Abrahams marriage (or copulation rather) with Hagar was lawfull: and that Sarai was moved of God to perswade this marriage to Abraham, Ioseph. lib. 1. antiquit. But this no where appeareth, for though God approved Sarai her advice for the casting out of the bond-woman with her sonne, Gen. 21.8. yet it followeth not that God liked of her counsell in Abrahams taking her to be his wife.

2. Some thinke that adultery was not yet forbidden by any law: Ambrose, because Abraham was both before the Law and the Gospell, he thinketh him to have beene blamelesse. * Durandus also and To/status are of opinion, that polygamie was lawfull before it was forbidden by the positive law of the Gospell. But the saying of our Saviour, a principio non fuit sic: from the beginning it was not so, suffici|ently confuteth these assertions, seeing God in Paradise made unto Adam but one Eva, one wife for one husband.

3. Some simply allowed not the polygamie of the fathers, but hold that it was permitted by some spel|ciall dispensation for those times: and so though they will not simply justifie it, yet they qualifie and ex|cuse it by these reasons.

1. Theodoret saith, neque natura, neque lex ulla tunc scripta, &c. Neither nature, nor any written law did forbid then the having of many wives, Cont. Though no law were yet written that made any such prohibition, yet they had the law of the creation, they two shall be one flesh, Matth. 19.5. which was con|tinued by faithfull tradition, and the lively examples of the Patriarks. *

2. This marriage proceeded not of any intemperate lust, but was done, studio quarendae posteritatis, of a desire to increase posterity, Ambr. Cont. The Apostle for this hath given us a rule, not to doe evill, * that good may come thereon, Rom. 3.8. Abrahams good intention doth not excuse an unlawfull action.

3. Abraham did it not of himselfe: Augustine saith, Voluntatem illius non voluptatem suam implevisse▪ accepisse non petisse: that he fulfilled not his owne lust, but his wives desire, * he asked her not but received her. And he to this purpose urgeth the Apostle words, that the man hath not power over his owne body, but the woman, 1 Cor. 7.

Contra. If this were a good defence, then Adams excuse also might have served, because the woman gave him th• apple, and he did eat. The Apostle giveth the woman power over her husbands body, and the man likewise over the womans, to performe mutually the matrimoniall duties: but the woman can no more give liberty to the husband to joyne unto strange flesh, than the husband can unto the woman. As the Apostle in the same place restraineth that liberty, Let every man have his wife, let every woman have her husband, 1. Cor. 7.3. they must be the one addicted and obliged only to the other.

* 4. Ambrose againe excuseth this marriage of Abraham with Hagar, by the mystery in it, as it is ex|pounded by S. Paul, Galat. 4. quod ergo putabas esse peccatum, advertis esse mysterium: that which you thought was iniquitie, appeareth to be a mysterie.

* Contra. A mysterie we admit, according to the Apostles collection, in Abrahams marriage with Hagar, but that giveth no liberty or immunity unto it: for so theft might be excused, because the suddennesse of Christs comming to judgement, is likened to the comming of a theefe in the night: neither is it there|fore a thing excusable to play an unrighteous steward, because Christ draweth a parable from thence, Luk. 16.

5. Augustine further saith, sufficiendae prolis causa erat uxorum plurium simul uni viro habendarum inculpabilis consuetudo: he calleth it an inculpable custome for one man in those dayes for procreation sake to have many wives. * He excuseth the multiplicity of wives by the custome of those dayes, though the use bee now otherwise: like as sometime among the Romans it was counted a hainous thing, tunicas habere talaris v'l manicata, to weare sleeved, or side gownes, but now for a man of honest condicion not to have such, is counted a shame &c.

* Contra. Indeede indifferent things, such as are the formes and fashions of apparell, may be changed, and sometimes held lawfull, sometimes uncomely, according to the divers customes of times: but that which is simply unlawfull, by no custome can be made lawfull: that which is evill, whatsoever the custome is, ought not to be followed: the Scripture herein giveth us a rule, not to follow a multitude to doe evill, Exod. 23.2. 2. Neither doth it yet appeare, that there was any such custome among the faithfull in Abrahams time, to couple themselves to more than to one wife.

3. Chrysostome of this very custom of having many wives, * thus excellently writeth; Vides quomodo non oportet consuetudinem praetextere, sed quod justum est inquirere: ecce quoniam mala erat consuetudo, explsa est, &c. You see then, that we must not pretend custome, but intend that which is just: because it was an evill custome, it is left.

6. Chrysostome in the same place alleageth another excuse: Permissum est cum duabus vel tribus misceri, ut humanum genus propagaretur; * &c. It was then permitted to be coupled with two or three, that mankind might be increased. Contra. If this were a sufficient reason for polygamie, it had beene more needfull, that in the creation many women should have beene made: and so likewise that more than one wife a piece, for Noah and his sonnes should have entred into the Arke▪ for then there was greater need of all meanes for procreation.

Wherefore all these reasons and excuses, doe not serve to exempt the Patriarks from all blemish and blame, in their multiplying of wives.

* 4. A fourth opinion there is, that God gave a dispensation for polygamie to the fathers, and as it is most like to Noah, when he said to him, Increase and multiply: sic Perer. in Gen. 16. disp. 1.

Contra. 1. Against a precept written, dispensation unwritten hath no place: seeing then the commandment is expressed; For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife, Gen. 2.24. (he saith not wives, but wife, as speaking of one) but such dispensation is nowhere mentioned, we hold it to be a meere humane conjecture. 2. If God had given Noah such an indulgence, it is like that he and his sonnes would have used it, there being then greatest cause in the renewing of the world. 3. And though they are blessed with increase, yet only the lawfull meanes of increasing and multiplying are permitted: for otherwise this might be an excuse for adulterous copulations.

* 5. Wherefore the safer and sounder opinion is, that polygamie, that is, the marriage of many wives, was neither simply lawfull, nor for a time dispensed with, but that it was an humane infirmity even in those holy Patriarks. 1. Because it degenerateth from the first institution in Paradise, to the which Christ sendeth us; From the beginning it was not so. 2. The first that brought in the doubling of wives was La/mekh, of the cursed seed: neither doe we read of any of the Patriarks, from Adam to Abraham, for the space well-nigh, of two thousand yeares, that had more wives than one. 3. If there had beene at any time a needfull use of polygamie, it is most like, that in the beginning, when the world was not yet replenished, as in Adam and Noahs time, it should have beene permitted. 4. To have a concubine together with a wife, was never lawfull: but such an one was Hagar: for Abraham did cast her out with her sonne: she was also a bond-woman, and therefore not fit to be a wife to so great a Patriarke: and a wife is defined by the Apostle, to be such an one, as is taken to avoid fornication, 1 Cor. 7.2. but to that end did not Abraham take Hagar, having Sarai beside. And whereas the text saith, that Sarai gave her to Abraham, for, or instead of his wife; the meaning is not that Hagar became properly Abrahams wife, but that she was in the place, and stead of his wife: for as Sarai saith, It may be I shall receive a childe by her; Gen. 16.2. but if she had indeed beene his wife, and so manumitted, and not Saraies bond-woman still, the childe should have beene counted hers, and not her mistresses: and Gen. 25.6. mention is made of Abrahams concubines Pelagshim, whereof Hagar must be one.

*6. But yet this being admitted, that the Patriarks erred in multiplying their wives, yet some cautions must be received withall. 1. That herein they finned not against their conscience, but of ignorance and infirmity, as in other things▪ this being not yet revealed unto them. 2. Though God dispensed not with their so doing, yet it pleased the divine indulgence, in silence and mercifull connivence to passe by this over-sight, as the Apostle saith in another case, The time of this ignorance God regardeth not, Act. 17.30.

3. We abhorre the blasphemie of the Manichees, sufficiently confuted by Augustine,* who doe charge the Patriarks with lasciviousnesse and wantonnesse of flesh, in using many wives: which they did, for generation of children, not satisfaction of their iust: and as Augustine well saith, Castius utebantur plurib. quam nunc una, &c. They used many wives more chastly, than we now use one; so he concludeth; O virum viriliter utentem foeminis, conjuge temperanter, ancilla obtemperanter, nulla intemperanter: O worthy man using wo/men manly, his owne wife soberly, his maid obediently, but none of them intemperately.

Morall observations.

1. Observ. Affliction and punishment commeth from God.

Vers. 2. THE Lord hath restrained me from childe-bearing. Sarai as a godly woman imputeth her sterillity and barrennesse to none other cause originally but to the will of God: Thus godly men, doe both acknowledge God the authour of all good things, which they enjoy, as also the inflicter of all such punishments, which befall them: as Iob confesseth, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken it, Iob 1.21. Perer.

2. Observ. Not to yeeld unto tentation.

Vers. 4. AND he went in unto Hagar, &c. Abraham who as a mighty and invincible champion, had stood out hitherto against the temptations and baits of Satan: is overcome of his wife, and yeeldeth to her motion, to goe in unto Hagar: which proceded from want of due consideration of Gods power; who though Sara▪ hitheto had beene barren, yet was able, (and so accordingly did) to make he▪ fruitfull. Thus David who withstood many tentations, yeelded to the pleasure of the flesh: therefore as the Apostle saith, He that thinketh he standeth, let him take heed lest he fall, 1 Cor. 10.10. Muscul.

3. Observ. Not to be proud of Gods gifts.

Vers. 4. HER dame was despised. Hagar waxeth insolent and proud of this blessing bestowed upon her: whereby Gregory well noteth such as are puffed up and swell with pride in respect of their gifts: as also it is a great example of ingratitude, in despising her, which was the first occasion of this benefit. Calvin.

4. Observ. Domesticall contention.

Vers. 5. THou doest me wrong, &c. We see that even the houses of the faithfull, such as this of Abraham was, have sometime their domesticall contentions, Calvin. But as Abraham by his wisdom and discretion qualifieth the intemperate heat of Sarai: so men are taught to beare with the infirmities of their wives; and as the Apostle saith, To dwell with them as men of knowledge, and to give honour to them as to the weaker vessell, 1 Pet. 3.7.

5. Observ. Affliction maketh admonition to be regarded.

Vers. 8. Saraies maid whence comest thou? &c. The Angels speech was so much the more seasonable to Hagar; being now in some distresse in the wilderness, and feeling some smart for her folly and disobedience; So after men have beene afflicted, they will more diligently apply their eare to instruction, as the Prophet David saith; It is good for me that I have beene afflicted, that I may learne thy statutes, Psal. 119.71. his afflictions brought him to learne more perfectly the statutes of God. Muscul. And in this present example it appeareth how fruitfull affliction was; for Hagar that before was so proud and lifted up, that she knew not her selfe, and despised her mistresse, is now humbled, and calleth upon the name of the Lord, vers. 13.

6. Observ. Temporall blessings are signes of election.

Vers. 10. I Will increase thy seed, &c. Ismael, though he were not the chosen seed, yet receiveth a goodly temporall blessing to multiply and increase, whereby we see, that the outward benefits of this life, are no signes of Gods speciall favour, and eternall election, Muscul. As the Preacher saith, No man knoweth either love or hatred of all that is before them, Eccles. 9.1. that is, whether he be loved of God, or otherwise, no man knoweth by his outward state in the world.

7. Observ. The Law must be preached before the Gospell.

Vers. 9. IN that Hagar it bid first to humble her selfe, before the promise is made unto her, wee learne, that the order of doctrine is to beginne with repentance, and then followeth the promise of grace, Mercer: which order the Prophet observeth, Isa. 1.16, 18.

CHAP. XVIII.

The Method.

IN this Chapter is set forth Gods covenant with Abraham, which containeth on Gods behalfe promise of grace and protection, on Abrahams obedience: The covenant on Gods behalfe is propounded generally containing both the promise of God, and the foundation thereof, Gods sufficiency, and the obedience of Abraham in walking uprightly, vers. 1, 2. Then followeth the particular promises, which are either offered of God unasked, or craved by Abraham: The promises offered are three, with their severall signes: first, hee promiseth he should be a father of many Nations, yea, of Kings, and the signe thereof is the change of Abrahams name, vers. 4. to 7. The second is, the promise of the land of Canaan, with perpetuall protection of him, and his seed, vers. 7, 8. the signe thereof is circumcision: where the law and right of circumcision is expressed, where they shall be circumcised, vers. 11. when, vers. 12. who, all males, both home-borne and strangers, vers. 13. wherefore, to be a signe of the covenant: vers. 11. then the perill in neglecting of this covenant is signified, vers. 14. The third promise offered, as concerning the birth of Isaack, and the signe thereof, the changing of Sarai her name, ver. 15. to 19.

Then followeth the promise craved of Abraham concerning Ismael.

Lastly, Abrahams obedience is declared, in circumcising himselfe, and Ismael, and all the males of his house, vers. 23. to the end.

The Explanation of doubts.

QUEST. I. Whether this apparition were visible.

Vers. 1. The Lord appeared.] The Angell of God was sent to Agar; but the Lord himselfe appeareth to Abraham, Mercer. This was not a secret revelation made to Abraham, but a manifest vision, Calvin. which was shewed unto Abraham not being in a trance, but in some sensible and visible manner, as though an Angell in humane shape talked with him: this may be gathered both by Abrahams gesture, in falling twice upon his face, vers. 3.17. as though he had seene some divine presence: as in that Abraham laughed: he was then waking, and in the use of his sense, not rapt in a trance: and further, vers. 22. God is said to goe up from Abraham: that visible Majesty was taken out of his sight, Cajetane.

QUEST. II. Of the meaning of the word Shaddai.

God almighty or all sufficient. 1. Some derive the word Shaddai, here used for dai, that signifieth sufficiency sic Genevens. 2. Some from Shad, that signifieth a breast or plenty, Oleaster. 3. Other from Shad/dad, which is interpreted to spoile, conquer, or overcome, and so they say that God did here invert or overcome the order of nature, in causing the barren to beare. But Oukelos Hierome, Pagnine, Iunius, doe better translate, Omnipotent: God then is called Shaddai, that is omnipotent, and all-sufficient, for his omnipotency includeth also all-sufficiency.

QUEST. III. Of the change of the name of Abram to Abraham.

Vers. 5. Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram, but Abraham. 1. Hierome thinketh, that the Hebrew letter he, is borrowed from the name of God, Iehovah, & added to Abrams name tradit. in Genes. 2. Ferus maketh this mysticall signification of it; that God by giving Abraham a letter of his name, doth thereby give even himselfe unto him: as also thereby is signified, that

God should also bee borne of the seed of Abraham: and this should bee in the fourth millenary or thousand yeare after the beginning of the world, as this letter was added in the fourth place. 3. Chrysostome thinketh, that Abram signifieth one that passeth over (because hee passed over the river) mistaking the name Abram and Hebrew for the same,  whereas the first beginneth with aleph, the other with am. 4. Philo interpreteth

Abram, an high father: Abraham the high father of the voice: and so divideth Ham, the syllable added, from Hamah, that signifieth to make a sound or noise: thereby insinuating, that Abram of an high father who was given to the contemplation of the starres and high things, was now become a perfect wise man: for hee is a wise man, that is, a master of words, and guideth his tongue. 5. But all these are mens conjectures: the Lord himselfe sheweth the reason of this change, because the Lord had made him, Abh, hamon, a father of a multitude: so that Ham, the last syllable of Abrahams name is the first of the word Hamon, that signifieth a multitude: sic Eugubinus, Munster, Iun. and hereupon the Hebrewes well observe, that God to those which he loved, added a letter of his owne name Iehova, as the letter He to Abrahams and Sarahs name: the letter jod, to the name of Iehosuah, who was called Hoshea before.

6. But yet it appeareth not, why the letter Resh remaineth still in the name of Abraham. 1. Ab. Ezra thinketh, that it is borrowed from abir, which signifieth strong; and so Abraham,* betokeneth a strong or mighty father of a multitude. 2. Rasi thinketh it is inserted, to shew him to bee father of Aramhis owne Countrey. 3. Some of the Hebrewes thinke, that Resh is not taken away, though He be added, because God doth not use to take from names, but to put to them: which observation is not true: for the Lord taketh away one letter from the name of Sarai, namely jod, and putteth to He. 4. Mercerus thinketh that Resh is of rabh, which signifieth much or great, and so maketh this to be the sense of Abrahams name, a father of a great multitude. 5. But I preferre the common opinion: that Resh remaineth of Abram, and nothing is changed, but onely He added: and so Abrahams signifieth an high father of a multitude. Now whereas it is the opinion of the Hebrewes, that it is a sinne and transgression of Gods commandement, to call Abraham any more by the name of Abram: it appeareth to be otherwise, for Ne/hem. 9.7. he is called Abram: therefore where the Lord saith, thy name shall be no more called Abram, it is not so much a commandement, as an honourable favour vouchsafed to Abraham in the change of his name, Mercer.

QUEST. IV. The reasons why circumcision was instituted.

Vers. 10. LEt every man childe among you be circumcised. Of this institution of circumcision, divers reasons are alleaged. 1. Philo alleageth foure: the fore-skinne was commanded to be cut off, for the better preventing of the disease called the carbuncle: that the whole body might be kept more pure or cleane, and that no soile or filth should be hid under the fore-skinne: that they might be more apt to generation: that the part circumcised might better expresse the similitude of the heart. 2. Moses Aegyptius saith, that circumcision helpeth to bridle and restraine inordinate lust and concupiscence of the flesh: but the contrary appeareth, for no Nation is more given over to carnall lust, than the Egyptians, Saracens, Turks, that are circumcised. 3. Some thinke circumcision in that part was prescribed, for the greater detestation of the superstition of the Egyptians and other Nations, that did adore that part, and make an Idoll of it under the name of Priapus, and did carry it about in open shew in their wicked Idolatrous solemnities.

But there are better reasons for the institution of circumcision, and more fruitfull signification. The use then of circumcision is partly politicall, partly morall, partly theologicall. The pollice consisted here|in, that circumcision at the first was a note of difference and distinction betweene the holy people,* and all other Nations: (though afterward other Nations, as the Idumeans, Arabians, Aegyptians, tooke up the same rite, to be circumcised. Thus David called in disdain Golia the uncircumcised Philistin, as hereby discerned from the people of God, 1 Sam. 17.36. Beside by circumcision they were admonished to separate themselves from all other Nations, neither to joyne with them in marriage, nor to learne their manners. Thus the sons of Iacob said to the Sichemites, we cannot give our sister to an uncircumcised man, Gen. 34.14. For this cause Theodore noteth, that circumcision was neglected all the time of the sojourning of the Israelites in the desert,* because there was then no feare of conversing with other Nations in those solitary places.

The morall use of circumcision, was to teach the inward mortifying and circumcising of the heart, as Irenaeus well observeth out of Deuteronomie, chap. 10. vers. 16. Circumcise the foreskinne of your heart. Ambrose noteth another morall point; Vt puderet unumquemque provictioris aeta is labors, vel dolor cedere, quorum utrumque tenera infantia vicisset:* that men of yeares should be ashamed to give place to labour or griefe, which they overcame in their infancie.

The Theologicall use of circumcision, was partly commemorative of the covenant which God made with Abraham and his seed, which served as a sure bond to keepe them in obedience, to walke uprightly before God, Gen. 17.10. Partly demonstrative, in expressing by the part circumcised, the instrument of generation, that originall contagion, which is derived by naturall propagation. And so Augustine and Bede doe understand those words, vers. 14. the uncircumcised man childe shall be cut off, because he hath broken my covenant: Illud significatur pactum, quod cum primo homine iniit Deus: that covenant is meant,* which was made with the first man: which transgression even Infants by their originall corruption are guilty of. Partly it is figurative, both typicall in shadowing forth faith in Christ for remission of sinnes, and therefore is called by the Apostle, The seale of the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4.11. as also analogicall, in representing the Sacrament of Baptisme, that should come in the place thereof. So the Apostle collecteth, In whom ye are circumcised, with circumcision not made with hands, &c. in that ye are buried with him through baptisme, Coloss. 2.11, 12. he maketh circumcision and baptisme one to answer another.

QVEST. V. How circumcision is said to be eternall.

Vers. 13. MY covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant, &c. It is called everlasting, not because simply this signe was to endure for ever, as some thinke, that for this cause circumcision yet remaineth among the Jewes, who are now usurpers of this ceremonie, which by right is extinguished in Christ. But it is said to be eternall, 1. conditionally, and according to the nature of the subject; that so long as the covenant indured, whereof it was a signe, so long the signe should remaine, but the first covenant or testament being determined in Christ, the date also of the signe is expired. 2. It is eternall in respect of that which it signified, which is indeed eternall, the grace of God in Christ, Calvin. 3. It may be said to be eternall in respect of the perpetuall supply thereof, namely baptisme, which shall continue while the Church hath a being on earth, Mercer.

QVEST. VI. Why circumcision was to determine in Christ.

NOW further, whereas the Jewes caluminate the Christians, because they have abrogated circumcision,* it shall appeare by these reasons, that at the coming of Christ, circumcision in right was to cease. 1. Chrysostome yeeldeth this reason, that circumcision being given to the Israelites, as a marke of separation and distinction from other Nations, this marke was no longer to bee in use, than while such separation continued. But now in Christ, as the Apostle saith, There is neither Jew nor Grecian, Galat. 2.28. the wall of partition is taken away, therefore the badge of this separation should likewise be removed. 2. The signe was to endure no longer, than the covenant whereof it was a signe: but the covenant is abrogated, as the Apostle alleageth out of the Prophet, Behold the dayes will come, saith the Lord, that I wil make with the house of Israel a new testament, &c. Heb. 8. vers. 8. and so he concludeth, vers. 13. In that hee saith a new testament, he hath abrogated the old. 3. The Apostle thus reasoneth, if the Priesthood be changed, of necessity then must be a change of the Law, Heb. 7.12. If all the ceremonies of the Law at the change of the Priesthood must be altered, then circumcision also among the rest: for if circumcision remained, the whole Law should still be in force, Galat. 5.3. He that is circumcised is bound to keepe the whole Law. 4. The externall circumcision of the flesh, was a type of the internall circumcision of the heart, wrought in us by Christ: the bodie now being come, (the spirituall circumcision) the shadow, that is the carnall should cease: as Ambrose saith, oportuit circumcisione ex parte fieri ante ejus adventum, qui totum hominem circumcidere, & post cessare: It was meet that circumcision in part should be kept before he came, which should circumcise the whole man, and then to cease, Epist. 77. 5. Lastly, the same Ambrose giveth this reason; Donec pratum pro omnib. hominib. dominici sanguinis effusione solveretur, opus fuit singulorum sanguine, &c. till the price in shedding of Christs bloud was payed for all men, it was fit that every mans bloud should be shed to fulfill the rite and custome of the Law: but after Christ had suffered, there was no more need of circumcision in every mans bloud; Cum in Christi sanguine circumcisio universorum celebrata sit; When in Christs bloud the circumcision of all men once for all was celebrated.

QVEST. VII. Why the fore-skinne was commanded to be circumcised.

Vers. 11. YE shall circumcise the fore-skinne of your flesh. 1. Two speciall reasons may be alleaged, why that part which was the instrument of generation, was commanded to be circumcised, first because the promise was made to Abraham, that in his seed all Nations should be blessed: the Messiah was promised to come out of Abrahams loynes, Calvin: Secondly, the signe was there placed, to shew the corruption and contagion of mans nature: that there the remedy should be ministred, where the disease reigned, Muscul. Ambrose addeth a third reason; Vt ii. qu. ignobiliora membra putarentur, majorem honestatem circumdarent:^{*} That upon those parts which seemed more base, or vile, more comelinesse should be put on. 2. Some might be borne circumcised by nature; as the Hebrewes doe affirme of Sem, that hee was so borne; but of this assertion there is no ground: the other is naturall, yet but rare. 3. Likewise when the foreskinne was circumcised once, it might by art be drawne over againe; as Epiphanius collecteth out of Saint Paul, 1 Cor. 7.18. If any man be called being circumcised, let him not gather uncircumcision: and mention is made of some,^{*} 1 Maccab. 1.16. that renounced circumcision, and made themselves uncircumcised: It was also an usuall thing, as Epiphanius witnesseth, for the Samaritans to circumcise againe, those that came from the Jewes, and Jewes such as came from the Samaritans: this practice of drawing againe the fore-skinne, that was circumcised, is thought by Epiphanius, to have beene invented by Esau, to deny his profession, and to raze out his circumcision: ex Pererie.

QVEST. VIII. Why circumcision was tyed to the eighth day.

Vers. 12. EVERY man childe of eight dayes old, &c. Why circumcision was tyed to the eighth day, these reasons are yeelded. 1. Chrysostome alleageth these two, because that circumcision in infants, their bodies being not yet come to the growth, might be better endured, and with lesse danger: as also to shew that the circumcision of the body did not profit the soule, seeing infants had no understanding of that which was done, but was a signe onely of grace, hom. 39. Genes. 2. Others doe make a mystery of it: referring this eighth day to the resurrection of Christ, who rose upon the eighth day, by whom we have circumcision: sic Augustine. lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, cap. 26. 3. But the best reason is this, because the infant before the eighth day, was not of sufficient strength to endure that pain: and therefore it was provided that young children should be seven days with the damme before they were offered, Levit. 22.27. because they were yet but tender. And againe, it was not fit to deferre circumcision longer, because the body of the infant waxing stronger, should be put to the more paine, Perer. Calvin. 4. Circumcision was not upon any occasion then to be ministred before the eighth day; but infants dying without circumcision, might have inwardly supplied, that which was outwardly wanting, by the grace of election, * and force of Gods covenant made to the faithfull and their seed. 5. Yet necessity so urging, circumcision might be deferred: like as the eating of the Pasche might be put off to the second moneth upon extraordinary occasion, as if a man were uncleane, or in his journey, Num. 9.10. This also appeareth, in that for the space of forty yeares, all the while that the Israelites sojourned in the wilderness, their children were not circumcised till Iosua his time, Iosua 5.5. and the reason is given, vers. 7. They did not circumcise them by the way; they were continually in their journey to remove from place to place, and therefore could not conveniently be circumcised. But if Moses example be objected, whom God would have killed, because his sonne was not circumcised; the answer is ready; that the case is not alike, for Moses might either have circumcised his childe before he came forth: or he had not such great haste of his way, but might have stayed to performe so necessary a worke. 6. But whereas the Lord prescribeth the eighth day, both some Hebrewes are deceived that thinke, the sonnes of bond-servants might be circumcised before, and the Israelites that circumcised at the age of thirteene yeares.

QVEST. IX. Circumcision found among those which belonged not to the covenant.

Vers. 13. HE that is borne in thy house, and bought with thy money, &c. All which belonged to the covenant, or would have any part among the people of God, were circumcised; but on the other part it followeth not, that all which were circumcised, did belong to the covenant, as the Ismaelites, Egyptians, Ammonites, Moabites, and other people inhabiting neare to Palestina, were circumcised, as Hierome sheweth, upon the 9. chap. of Ieremie, vers. 26. These people retained circumcision as a rite and tradition of their fathers, but not as a signe of the covenant, or profession of their faith and obedience.

QVEST. X. Circumcision not imposed upon strangers.

FURTHER it is here questioned, whether the Hebrewes were to compell their servants that were strangers, * to take upon them the profession of their faith, and to be circumcised. 1. Tostatus thinketh, that their servants might be compelled, but not other strangers that dwelt among them: but that it is not like, for seeing he that was circumcised was a debtor of the whole Law, Galat. 5. and circumcision was a badge of their profession, it was not fit to force any man to take upon him a profession of religion against his desire. 2. Cajetane thinketh, that servants might be forced to take the outward marke of circumcision, though not the spirituall profession thereunto annexed: in 12. chap. Exod. But these two cannot be severed, as whosoever is now baptized must needs also enter into the profession of Christianity. 3. Pererius thinketh aright, that the necessity of circumcision was not imposed upon any beside the posterity of Abraham: neither that the Hebrewes might force their servants to take circumcision: yet he saith, that it was lawfull for them to use the ministry of servants uncircumcised, as now Christians have Moores and Turks to serve them, Perer. disput. 5. But herein Pererius is deceived, and I preferre the opinion of Thomas Anglicus, which he misliketh, that it was dangerous for the Hebrewes to be served with men of a divers religion, * lest they also by them might have beene corrupted. 5. Wherefore the resolution is this, that as no stranger, servant, or other, was to be forced to circumcision, but it must come from his owne desire, as it may be gathered, Exod. 12.48. so neither were they to receive any uncircumsed person into their house, that would not be circum|cised: this is evident by Abrahams practice, that circumcised all his servants, both borne, and bought with money: who no doubt would not have served him, if they had not submitted themselves to Gods ordi|nance: againe, seeing every one in the house must eat the Passeover, Exod. 12.4.19. neither stranger, nor borne in the house, must eat any leavened bread for the space of seven dayes, and yet none could eat the Passeover that was not circumcised, vers. 48. it followeth, that no uncircumcised persons were to bee entertained, unlesse they were contented to be circumcised.

QVEST. XI. The penalty for the neglect of circumcision afflicted onely upon the adulti.

Vers. 14. The uncircumcised male shall be cut off, &c. Saint Augustine following the reading of the Sep|tuagint in this place, who adde, the man childe which is uncircumcised the eighth day, which addition is not in the originall, doth understand this place of infants, and their cutting off, he interpreteth of everlasting death, to be cut off from the society of the Saints: and by the breaking of the covenant, would have signified the transgression of Gods commandement in paradise: for the not being circumcised saith he. Nulla culpa in parvulis; Is no fault in little ones, and therefore not worthy of so great a punishment: and so he urgeth this place against the Pelagians, to prove that infants are guilty of originall sinne, and therefore have need of remission, Lib. 16. de Civit. Dei. cap. 27.

1. In that Augustine expoundeth this cutting off, of separation from the society of the Saints, he inter|preteth right: some take it for the corporall death; some for the extraordinary shortning of their dayes;* some for excommunication; but it is better taken for the cutting off from the society of Gods people now, and the fellowship of the Saints afterward, for he that should contemne circumcision being Gods ordi|nance, doth consequently refuse the covenant and grace of God, whereof it is a seale and pledge.

2. But that exposition of Augustine seemeth to be wrested: to referre the breaking of the covenant to Adams transgression. 1. The Apostle saith, that they sinne not after the like manner of the transgression of Adam, Rom. 5.14. 2. The Scripture calleth not that prohibition given to Adam, a covenant. 3. The Lord calleth circumcision his covenant, vers. 20. what other covenant then is broken, but that which the Scripture treateth of here?

3. Neither can this place be understood of infants that are uncircumcised. 1. That addition, the eighth day, is used onely by the Septuagint, it is not in the Hebrew. 2. the words are, qui non circumciderit, hee which shall not circumcise, &c. so readeth the originall, the Chaldee paraphrast, Iunius, &c. which shew|eth, that it must be understood of them that are adulti, of yeares of discretion, not of infants. 3. Abrahams practice sheweth as much, who circumcised those that were of yeares. 4. Againe to breake the covenant, is not incident to children: the punishment therefore is not to be inflicted, where the offence cannot be committed. 5. If Infants be not circumcised, it is the parents faults for omitting it, not the In|fants: as may appeare in the example of Moses, whom the Lord punished, and not the childe, for the neglecting of that Sacrament.

QUEST. XII. Whether Abraham laughed through incredulitie.

Vers. 17. Abraham fell upon his face and laughed. 1. This was not onely an inward rejoycing of the minde, as the Chalde translateth, for Abraham indeed laughed. 2. Neither did this laughter of Abraham shew any infidelitie and unbeliefe in him, as Chrysostome thinketh, and some others, who make Abrahams and Sarahs laughter all one: infidelitate peccavit sanctus Abraham, &c. Holy Abraham, saith he, sinned by infidelity, and therefore his seed was punished 400. yeares with servitude, 6. homil. de poenitent. The same also is the opinion of Hierome, that Abrahams laughing, his speech shall Sarah that is ninetie yeare old beare: his wish and prayer for Ismael did declare his incredulity, lib. 3. cont. Pelag. But the Apostle cleareth Abraham of all such imputation of unbeleefe, where he saith, Rom. 4.19. alluding to this place, He was not weake in faith, v. 21. being fully assured, that he which had promised, was also able to doe it. And if Abrahams laughter had proceeded from doubtfulness, God would not have named Isa|ack, of such laughter: in the which name Rasi noteth many mysteries in the letters: jod signifieth the ten tentations of Abraham: sadds, the age of Sarah, of ninetie yeare: cheth, the eighth day for circumci|sion: coph, an hundred yeares, which was Abrahams age. 3. Neither did Abraham at the first doubt, but afterward was confirmed in the faith, which is the opinion of Ioannes Arboreus, reported by Pererius: for the Apostle doth free Abraham also from all doubting, either first or last, Rom. 4.20. Neither did hee doubt of the promise of God through unbeleefe. 4. Neither is Cajetans conceit to be admitted, whereunto Pererius seemeth to subscribe, that Abraham doubted not of the truth of Gods promise, or of his power, but onely he doubted, whether the promise were to be taken literally, or mystically, in chap. 17. Gen. for what reason had Abraham to thinke of any mysticall sense, if he beleaved that God would and could literally and properly make good his word? And Saint Paul sheweth that Abraham understood the promise properly and literally, when he saith, that he considered not his owne body, which was now dead, being almost an hundred yeare old, nor the deadnesse of Sarahs wombe, Rom. 4.19. 5. Neither yet can I fully consent to Ambrose and Rupertus, that doe discharge Abraham of all manner of doubtfulness: as Ambrose saith, that whereas Abraham prayeth for Ismael, he did not doubt of Gods promise, to receive a sonne by Sarah: but desireth that Ismael also may live, & sic superabundet gratia, and so Gods grace might abound the more. Rupertus saith, that whereas Abraham said, *shall a sonne be borne to him that is an hundred yeare old? Non dubitando dixit, sed suam faelicitatem admirando: He doubted not in so saying, but admiring his owne happinesse: for there appeareth some difficulty and hesitation in Abrahams speech, seeing hee objecteth with himselfe the same thing which Sarah did: shall a childe bee borne to him that is an hundred yeare old: as Sarah said, shall I certainly beare a childe that am old, Gen. 19.13. though Abraham yeelded not to this objection, as Sarah did, neither shewed so great weaknesse in doubting, and therefore was not reproved, as Sarah was. 6. Wherefore the best solution is, that these objections and doubts in Abraham, procee|ded not from want of faith; but Abraham feeling in himselfe a sight betweene faith and carnall sense, stri|veth against humane reason, and overcommeth these motions at the first, and so was strengthened (as the Apostle saith) in the faith: and his faith was thereby made more glorious, Calvin. There was then in Abraham a strife betweene his naturall reason, which wondred, that he at an hundred yeare, should have a sonne of Sarah, and his faith, which beleaved that God was able to doe it: yet in this cogitation he re|mained not long, his faith prevailed.

QVEST. XIII. Whether Abraham were circumcised first or last.

Vers. 23. Then Abraham tooke Ismael, &c. 1. It is questioned, whether Abraham were circumcised first, to give good example, or last, which I thinke rather with the Hebrewes, because Abraham had beene unfit by reason of his cutting to circumcise others: but it is certaine he beganne first with his owne sonne Ismael, to make the other more willing. 2. Abraham alone could not circumcise all his fa|mily: therefore it is like, that thereto be used the helpe of others: as the Jewes to this day use Chirurgilans,* which are skilfull in cutting, to circumcise their children. 3. Abraham the same day doth circumcise his family, to testifie to the world, that he was not ashamed of the badge of his profession, and to shew his prompt obedience, in not deferring the commandement: whereupon to this day the Jewes circumcise in the day, not in the night. Mercer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Our faith must rest onely upon Gods words.

Vers. 4. BEhold I make my covenant, &c. Wee learne, that our faith must depend onely upon Gods word: as here the Lord would have Abraham to consider who it was, that made this cove[n]nant with him: behold I, &c. We must not then greatly regard what man saith: but the word of God must be our warrant. As our Saviour maketh this opposition; You have heard that it was said to you of old time, &c. but I say unto you. Mat. 5.27. sic Calvin.

2. Doct. the Sacraments called by the name of the things.

Vers. 10. THis is my covenant. That is, the signe of my covenant: so the Sacraments are called by the name of the things which they represent, because they are not naked and bare signes, but doe verily seale unto us the promise of God. In the same sense, and by the like figure called (metonymi) doth our Saviour call the bread his body, saying, This is my body, whereof it was a figure onely and representation, Mercer.

3. Doct. Difference betweene externall and internall calling in the Church.

Vers. 7. I Will establish my covenant betweene me and thee, and thy feed after thee in their generations, &c. All then that were of Abrahams seed by Isaack, did belong to the externall covenant, and Church of God: and therefore are called in generall by our Saviour, the children of the Kingdome: yet the covenant of grace appertained onely to those, that received it by faith, and so were the children of faithfull Abraham: as Saint Paul saith, They which are the children of the flesh, are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are counted for the seed, Rom. 9.8. Calvin.

4. Doct. Baptisme the Sacrament of regeneration belongeth to Infants.

Vers. 12. EVERy man-childe of eight dayes old shall be circumcised, &c. From hence the baptisme of Infants, which commeth in the place of circumcision, is most pertinently proved, against the grosse error of the Anabaptists: for as then Infants were circumcised, to shew the contagion of the nature from the which they were cleansed by the circumcision of the spirit: so even Infants now, being guiltie of originall corruption have need of the Sacraments of regeneration.

5. Doct. Gods purpose and promise towards vs, should not stay our prayers.

Vers. 20. CONcerning Ismael, I have heard thee, &c. God had promised before to Hagar, that he would greatly increase her seed, Gen. 16.10. and yet here it is ascribed to the prayer of Abraham: whereby we learne, that we are to pray even for those things, which we know God purposeth toward us: as our Saviour saith, Your heavenly father knoweth whereof ye have need, before ye aske of him, Matth. 6.8. yet in the same place he teacheth his Apostles to pray, Mercer.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against adoration of Angels.

Vers. 3. ABraham fell on his face, and God talked with him.] If it were an Angell, that in the person of God talked with Abraham, then was this no gesture of adoration, in that Abraham fell upon his face: for the Angels will not suffer men to worship them, Revel. 22.9. But if they will needes have it adoration, then it was God, that talked with him, and not an Angell, as the words of the text insinuate. Muscul.

2. Conf. The circumcision of the male, how it served also for the use of the female.

Vers. 12. EVERY man child of eight daies, &c. Though the males only were circumcised, because the beginning of generation, and so of originall corruption was from them, yet it served also for the signe of the covenant for the female sexe, because the woman is of the man, as the Apostle saith 1. Cor. 11.8. and so was circumcised in the man. But hence it followeth not, that sacraments now may be applyed to the use and benefit of such as receive them nor, which is an usuall thing in the popish Church: because there is now no such reason, or meanes of communicating the sacraments to the not receivers, as circumcision both by the intention of the Author, and order of nature, in the male, was forcible also in the other sex.

3. Confut. Sacraments doe not actually conferre grace.

Hence also it is evident, that Sacraments doe not actually conferre the grace of Justification, or remission of sinnes, because Abraham was not justified by his circumcision. But he was first justified by faith, and afterward received circumcision the seale thereof, as S. Paul sheweth, Rom. 4.10, 11. * This Irenaeus concludeth, Quod non per circumcisionem justificabatur homo sed in signum data est populo, clarum fuit iudicium ipse Abraham, qui ante circumcisionem justificatur, &c. That man was not justified by circumcision, but it was given as a signe to the people, Abraham is a cleare evidence, who was justified before circumcision. Chrysostome also rendring a reason why Infants were circumcised, thus writeth; Altera causa fuit, ut re ipsa disceremus, nihil animae circumcisionem illam profuisse, sed eam signum tantum gratia esse factam, &c. Another cause is, that we should learne, that the circumcision did not profit the soule, but was onely a signe of grace: for children when they understand not what is done to them, can reape no profit thereby to their soules. Hence also is confuted the note of some Hebrewes, that Abraham, chap. 17. vers. 1. is bid|den to be perfect, because he had not yet received circumcision; whereby he was made perfect: for cir|cumcision was no cause, but a signe of his election in the covenant. Mercer.

4. Confut. Baptisme, wheret• it excelleth circumcision.

Wherefore, whereas Pererius sheweth a threefold preeminence of Baptisme beyond circumcision. 1. In the facility or easinesse of it, because it is not so painfull to the flesh, as circumcision was. 2. In the universality and liberty: for baptisme is free for both sexes, for all Nations, that professe Christ at all times: circumcision belonged onely to the Israelites, and to males, and was tied to the eighth day. 3. In the efficacie, because baptisme, absolveth a man from all sinne, and the punishment thereof, &c. We willingly acknowledge the two first points of preeminence: but such an efficacie actually to give remission of sinnes, neither circumcision had then, nor baptisme now: for it would then follow, that every one that is baptised, is surely saved, his sinnes being remitted, or else that his sinnes being remitted, may returne againe. * But God useth not where hee hath once forgiven sinnes, to remember them any more, Ezech. 18.22. Baptisme then we confesse, signification•, in signification and representation is more rich than circumcision was: for washing is a more lively resemblance of our cleansing in the blood of Christ; and it is a commemoration, of a benefit performed, whereas circumcision was a type of the same to be exhibited. But otherwise for the efficacie there is no difference: they both are seales and confirmations of faith for the remission of sinnes, nor actuall conferrers and bestowers of grace.

5. Confut. Abraham the first that received circumcision.

*Further, Herodotus is here found to be in an error, that thinketh that the Egyptians were the first that were circumcised, and that the Jewes received it from them. Whereas it is evident, that Abraham was the first that received circumcision by the commandement of God himselfe, and that the Egyptians above 200. yeare after learned it of the Hebrewes, that sojourned with them above 200. yeares more.

6. Confut. Neither Circumcision under the Law, nor Baptisme under the Gospell, absolutely necessary.

Vers. 14. The uncircumcised male, &c. shall be cut off, &c. This place I shewed before quest. 1. to be un|derstood not of children that were uncircumcised, which was their parents fault and not theirs, but of such as were adulti, of yeares: therefore it is no good reading, to say the uncircumcised man childe, but the male, Zachar: for the infant of eight dayes old, mentioned, vers. 12. is of purpose omitted here. Hence then it is inferred, that there was no such absolute necessity of circumcision, that children wanting it should be damned. 1. For the children of Israel were not circumcised for the space of fortie yeares, all the time of their sojourning in the wilderness, Ios. 5.6. Neither is it noted to have beene any fault to neglect it, because they were continually in their journey. So they were charged to keepe the Passeover by an ordinance for ever, and whosoever kept it not as it was prescribed, should be cut off, Exod. 12.14, 15. yet upon extraordinary occasion, as of some uncleannesse, or by reason of a long journey, they might deferre the eating of the Passeover till the foureteenth day of the second moneth, Numb. 9.10, 11. yea it is evident that the Passeover after the first institution, was but once kept in the wilderness for the space of forty yeares, namely, in the first moneth of the second yeare, Num. 9. 1. And it was not celebra|ted againe till Iosua his time, Iosua* 5.10. after they were entred into the land of Canaan. 2. Cajetane a popish Writer, giveth good evidence here, Consentaneum est, ut non puniatur, nisi qui culpam admisit, infantes, autem nullam possunt admittre culpam, proinde poena hic designata, ad solos adultos spectat, ut ii solum merito puniantur, qui solum de omissa circumcissione jurae culpanda sunt. It is fit that none should be punished, but they which had committed the fault: but infants can commit no fault, therefore the punishment here designed doth belong onely unto the adulti, that they onely be worthily punished, which onely are right|fully blamed for the omission of circumcision. Now put baptisme in the place of circumcision, and this sentence is most true, as well of the one as of the other: that as there is no cause why an infant should perish for want of circumcision, which is not his fault, so neither for the not having of baptisme: If then the ceremonies of the Law were not urged with such strict necessity, there is no cause to impose such a yoke now under the liberty of the Gospell.

Morall Observations.

1. Observ. Affection may sometime be blinded, even in the righteous.

Vers. 18. O That Ismael might live, &c. 1. Though Abraham neither doubted to receive a sonne by Sarah, and so prayeth for Ismael. 2. Neither yet feared lest Ismael should have died, ano|ther sonne being promised, as some thinke. 3. But onely desireth, that Ismael together with the promised childe might be blessed: and doth in thus praying, acknowledge himselfe unworthy of such an extraor|dinary blessing, holding himselfe contented, if it so pleased God, with this sonne which he had already had, Mercer*. 4. Yet Abraham sheweth his humane infirmity and blinde affection toward Ismael. And thus we see, that oftentimes righteous men may be blinded in their affections, as Isaack was towards Esau, whom he would have blessed, Ioseph toward Manasses, before whom Iacob preferred Ephraim the younger, Gen. 48. So Samuel was deceived in taking Eliab the eldest brother of David for the Lords anointed, 1 Sam. 16.6.

/ Observ. Of the true joy of the spirit.

Vers. 17. Abraham laughed. Oukelos readeth rejoyced: and indeed this laughter of Abraham procee|ded not of incredulity, but shewed the great gladnesse of heart, which he conceived upon this promise of the Messiah, which should come of his seed: of this joy our Saviour speaketh in the Gospell, Your father Abraham rejoyced to see my day▪ he saw it and was glad, Ioh. 8.56. There is no joy then to the joy of the spirit, neither any gladnesse like to that which ariseth of our hope of salvation in Christ.

3. Observ. Abrahams obedience in keeping circumcision.

Vers. 23. Abraham tooke Ismael, &c. Abrahams obedience diversly appeareth, 1. in that he deferreth not the time, but the selfe same day circum[•]seth his family. 2. In that he circumciseth all the males of his house, omitting none. 3. He performeth this ministry and service chiefly himselfe, where|in he might use also the helpe of others▪ for he alone was not able to circumcise 318. persons, for so many he had in his house. 4. He refuseth not to be circumcised at the age of 99. yeares. This example of faith|full and obedient Abraham teacheth us, how diligent we ought to be in keeping Gods commandements: and how exact in celebrating the mysticall rites and Sacraments of religion.

4. Observ. The duty of the masters of families.

FURther, In that Abraham circumciseth his whole family, it sheweth what the duty of parents and ma|sters of families is, to see that all in their house be brought to the knowledge of God: for this cause is Abraham commended of God, Gen. 18.18. And the law, the charge of keeping holy the Sabbath, both for the children, servants, strangers and sojourners in the house, is laid upon the governour of the family, Exod. 20.10. Abraham also beginneth with his owne sonne Ismael: and so should parents give good example to others, in their governing of their owne children, Mercer.

5. Observ. The righteous had in remembrance with God.

Vers. 24. Abraham was 99. yeare old, &c. The Scripture doth most exactly set downe the yeares of Abrahams life in five severall places. He was 75. years old when he went out of Haran; Gen. 12.4. He was 86. when Ismael was borne, Gen. 16.16. Ninetie nine when he received circumcision, Gen. 17.24. an hundred yeare old when Isaack was borne, Gen. 21.5. And the whole time of his life is set downe, an hundred and seventy five yeares, Gen. 25.7. This is done to none other end, but to shew us, that the righteous are had in remembrance with God: that their yeares, dayes, moneths, yea the haire of their head before him are numbred, Perer.

6. Observ. Contrary religions not to be suffered in one Kingdome.

Vers. 12. HE that is borne in thy house, and bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised. Mercerus well collecteth hereupon, that neither Kings in their kingdomes, nor fathers in their familie|s, should tolerate any contrary religion, but bring all (under their charge) to the obedience of faith: first, this is agreeable to the precept and commandement of God in Scripture. 1. For the charge of kee|ping holy the Lords day, is laid upon the father of the house, both for himselfe and all that are within his gate, Exod. 20.10. but Idolaters and superstitious persons, cannot sanctifie or keepe holy the Sabbath to the Lord. 2. The Lord commandeth, that if any person shall entice to Idolatry, or any City shall set up a new worship, the one should be killed, the other destroyed, Deut. 13.9.13. 3. To this belongeth that precept of the Lord: To separte the precious from the vile, Ier. 15.19. true worshippers must be severed & discerned from false. 4. This is the meaning of the Law, Levit. 19.19. Not to sow the field with divers seeds, nor to weare a garment of divers things: so divers religions and professions in one Kingdome are not to be admitted or suffered: likewise Moses saith, Deut. 12.10. Thou shalt not plow with an Oxe and an Asse together: which Saint Paul thus expoundeth, 2 Cor. 6.14. Be not unequally yoked with Infidels, &c. what communion betweene light and darknesse, &c.

Secondly, this hath beene the practice of the Church in all ages, to cast out the leaven of contrary doctrine and profession: In the time of Enos before the flood, the servants of God and true worshippers, beganne to call upon the name of God, that is to serve the Lord apart in their holy assemblies, and to separte and divide themselves from the prophane generations of Cain: Ismael is cast out of Abrahams house, because he was a scorner of Isaack, as all Idolaters are of true worshippers: Iacob reformeth his house, and putteth away the strange gods, Gen. 35.2. Iosua maketh the Gibeonites hewers of wood, and drawers of waters for the house of God, Iosua 9.13. David expelleth the Idolatrous Jebusites out of Jerusalem, 2 Sam. 5.8. Asa put Maacah his mother from her regiment, because she was an Idolatresse, and brake downe her Idoll, 2 Chron. 15.16. Iosias put downe the Chemarims, a sect of Idolatrous Priests, 2 King. 23.5. Zerubbabel would not suffer the adversaries of Iudah to build the Temple with them, but refused their service which they offered, Ezra. 4.3.

According to the patterne of these worthy examples, we doubt not, but that our Christian Sovereigne is resolved to take away all mixture of religion: not to admit any toleration of contrary worship, but with Iosias to expell all Idolatrous Chemarims, and Masse-Priests, with Asa to put all such from places of government, and with Zerubbabel, to reject their service and imployment, either in Church or common wealth: And we assuredly trust, that the presence of Gods Arke among us, shall cause that Dagon of Rome to lose both his hands and head for ever in this our famous and thrice renowned Countrey of Britaine.

CHAP. XVIII.

I. The Method.

T His Chapter hath two parts ◊◊. The entertainment of the Angells in Abrahams tent, and such things as there were done to vers. 17. •. The purpose of God concerning the destruction of Sodome, with Abrahams deprecation for the same, to the end of the Chapter.

In the first part. 1. There is the apparition of the Angels, both in what place, and at what time, vers. 1. and in what manner, vers. 2. 2. Their entertainment offered by Abraham, vers. 3, 4. accepted by the Angels, vers. 5. performed by Abraham, ver. 6, 7, 8. 3. The promise is renewed concerning Abraham and Saraes sonne, vers. 10. and Sara for her infirmity relproved, both for her laughter, 12, 13, 14. and for her deniall, vers. 15.

In the second part. 1. The Lord sheweth a reason, why he will impart his counsell to Abraham concerning the overthrow of Sodome, vers. 18, 19. 2. The Lord propoundeth his resolution, with the cause thereof, vers. 20, 21. 3. Abraham intreateth: where first is set downe the ground of his prayers the justice of God, 23, 25. then his particular request six times repeated, from fifty persons to bee found in Sodome, to ten.

The divers readings.

* v. 1. At the Oake of Mamre, S. Plaine or valley of Mamre. caet. colon, signifieth both a Plaine and an Oake: it is most like it was a Plaine set with Oakes.

v. 15. Sarah. deniall. caet. she lying denied. T. cacash, signifieth both.

v. 21. I will appeare and judge. C. I will goe downe and see.

* I will make an end of them, if they repent not, if they repent I will not revenge them. Ch. the others have not these words.

* v. 22. Abraham stood in prayer before God. Ch. stood yet before God. caet.

v. 28. Wilt thou destroy for forty five the whole City. S. caet for five.

The Explanation of doubts.

QVEST. I. Of the vision and apparition made to Abraham in Mamre.

Vers. 1. AGaine the Lord appeared, &c. 1. This was the sixth apparition of God to Abraham, taking those two in the fifteenth Chapter for one: which herein is preferred before the rest, because this apparition is made in an humane shape: which is not expressed in the rest: and this is the third visi|on of this kinde, as Cajetane noteth, when the Lord shewed himselfe in some visible forme: 1. to Adam in Paradise; 2. to Agar in the wilderness, Gen. 16.13. 3. to Abraham in this place. 2. This apparition was not long after the other in the former Chapter: for in both after a yeare a sonne is promised to Abraham, Rupertus: and the promise is renewed for Sarahs cause, Calvin. 3. It was now in the heat of the day, that is, noone-tide. Septuag. the usuall time of rest and repast. Iun. when Abraham sate at his doore, to take shade, and to espie what travellers passed by, to give them entertainment. Muscul.

QVEST. II. Who the three Angels were that appeared to Abraham.

Vers. 2. THree men stood by him. 1. They were not three men, but so appeared, Iun. They stood not hard by him, for he needed not then have gone to meet them: but they stood before him, or over against him: for so the word gnal signifieth, Muscul. 2. Abraham at the first did not know them to be Angels, for he received them unawares, Heb. 13.1. yet there appeared some extraordinary excellen|cie in them, in that Abraham useth them so reverently: for otherwise, to every common passenger hee would not have given such reverence, Calvin. 3. Neither can it bee certainly affirmed, that these three men were the three Angels, Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, as some of the Hebrewes: the first the messenger to Abraham, the other appointed for the destruction of Sodome, and Raphael for Lots deliverance: for both the Angels that went toward Sodome, were in equall commission to destroy the City, chap. 19.13. The Lord hath sent us to destroy it: and to deliver Lot.vers. 16. they caught Lot and his wife by the hand, &c.

Abraham doth reverence to one above the rest calling him Lord, v. 3. who also is called Jehovah. v. 17. their opinion may safely bee received, that thinke this eminent person, with whom Abraham talked, to be Christ. But it is a collection without ground, by the apparition of these three Angels, to conclude the Trinitie as Pererius seemeth to insinuate. Calvin.

QVEST. 3. Why Abraham speaketh to one of the 3. Angels in chiefe.

Vers. 3. LOrd if I have found favour. &c. Abraham seeth three men, but speaketh as to one: 1. whereby, neither a three fold knowledge of God is shadowed forth: of his nature, by his benefits, by his judgements, as Philo: 2. nor yet hereby is signified the myserie of the Trinitie, that one God in three persons is to be worshipped, as Rupertus. 3. Neither did Abraham speake unto every one of them particul|cularly, as Ramban. 4. But Abraham saluteth the third person as more excellent, either for the dignity of his person, or for some respect, which the other two had unto him. Chrysost. but for such services as equal|ly belonged to them all, hee speaketh to them all in generall, as the washing of their feet. 5. as they were three persons, so he offreth unto them three services; to wash their feet, to rest them under the tree, to com|fort their hearts with bread. Perer.

QVEST. IV. Of the Hebrew measure called a Seime.

Vers. 6. THree measures of fine meale &c. The word is Seime, which is the same in English: a seime. 1. which neither containeth so much, as Epiphanius saith, that is, 50. sextarios, pints. 2. neither is it so large, as the measure called Amphora, which contained 80. pound weight, as Hierome. 3. neither doth it receiue 24. sextarios, or 36. pounds, as Pererius. 4. nor yet is it so large, to containe as much and an halfe, of the Italian measure called modius, as Ioseph. lib. 9. antiquitat. 5. But in true account the Hebrew seime was the third part of an Epha: which Epha is not equall to the Grecians metreta, or medimnus. Atticus, which did hold an 108. pound, as Pererius gesseth. But the Epha contained ten homers, Exod. 16.37. that is, so many pottles: for the homer held two chaenices, that is, two wine quarts and an halfe: so th• the seime being the third part of an Epha, did containe foure cabi, every cabe held foure logi, every logi six common henne egges: the whole capacitie would receive 96. egges. And this measure did equal|lize the Romane modius, sic Iunius in hunc locum, which is 14. pints English, and 14. ounces, somewhat lesse than our pecke: and so it is well translated in the great English Bible, three peckes of fine meale or flowre: for it is not like that Abraham for three men would provide three great measures, bushels, or seimes of fine flower.

QVEST. V. Of the cakes and other provision which Abraham prepared.

5. MAke cakes upon the hearth: the Septuagint translate ègcruphiae panes subcineritios, bread baked in the ashes, as Hierome readeth. 1. We need not with Ambrose from hence to gather, that Abraham used cakes raked up or hidden in the ashes, as the Greeke word seemeth to import; eo quod laetere debet omne myst•rium, &c. because these things were done in mystery. 2. Neither was this kind used so much for the finenesse and delicacy, as Atheneus noteth, that it was in great request among the Athenians lib. 3. and so Muscul. 3. But in respect of the speedie and present preparing rather. Iun.4. Neither is it necessarie, that we understand the whole calfe to be made readie at once, but such parts thereof, as more speedily could be dressed. Muscul. 5. But whereas the Hebrewes would have these cakes to be unleavened bread, because it was now the Pasch, it is not like that this ceremonie was now used. Mercer:

QVEST. VI. Whether the Angels did truly eate, or had bodies.

Vers. 8. And they did eate. 1. Wee neither thinke with Theodoret, that these Angels seemed onely to have bodies, and so also seemed to eat, but neither in truth: he saith they tooke the meat,  simulatis manibus, with counterfeit hands*, and put it into simulatos, their counterfeit mouth: for these Angels had palpable and tractable bodies for the time, as may appeare by the washing of their feet. 2. Thomas thinketh that they assumed a true body▪ sed nō vera fuit comestura, but it was no true eating: but why should it seeme more unlikely for them truly to eat, than to have true bodies? for there may bee a true eating,  though the meat be not converted into the substance of the body, as our Saviour did eat after he was risen againe. 3. Wherefore it is the so under opinion, that these Angels, as they were endued with true bodies for the time, so they did verily eat, as they did walke and speak and doe other actions of the bodie truly: yet did they not eat of any necessity: but like as these bodies by the power of God assumed for the present, were againe dissolved and turned to their first nature, so was the meat which they did eat. Calvin.

QVEST. VII. The meaning of these words according to the time of life.

Vers. 10. I will certainly come againe, according to the time of life. 1. which cannot be understood of God, as if he should say, if I live, as Hierome: the immortall God would not so speake as a mortall man. Calvin. 2. Neither is it spoken of Sara, ut Genevens. 3. or of Abraham and Sarai, Chald. that life is certainly promised to them both: Luther. for seeing God before promised to give Abraham a sonne of Sarah, Gen. 17.16. hee could not doubt, that Sarah should then bee living. 4. neither is it referred to the childe, that hee should be borne alive. Annotat. of the great bible, for this was also promised before, Gen. 17.19. that God would make a covenant with Isaak, and his seed: there was no question, but that this child should have a perfect birth. 5. Iuniuse exposition is this, I will come unto thee, when this time shall revive againe: that is, the same time twelve-moneth: as it may be interpreted out of the former Chapter, 17.21. which Sarah shall beare unto thee, the next yeare at this season: and so in other places, this word to revive, as here applyed to the time, is attributed unto things without life, 1 Chron. 11.9. Ioab is said to revive, that is, repaire the rest of the City.

6. And if this were in the spring as some conjecture, and may be gathered by the heat of the time, v. 1. and shadow of the tree, and eating abroad, v. 8. the time of life, or living time, may fitly bee applyed to the spring, when all things seeme to revive againe: 7. But it is better understood of Isaak, that he should be borne according to the time of life, that is, after the usuall and accustomed time of child-bearing, that is, Isaak should now be conceived, and so by that time twelve moneth spoken of, Gen. 17.21. hee should bee borne: this to bee the meaning, these reasons may perswade: 1. because it is like, that since the time when Isaak was promised after a twelve month, till now, Abraham had not knowne his wife, by reason of the sorenesse of his circumcision, and by Sarahs words. v. 12. that she had no lust or desire that way. 2. further, seeing the Angell at the conception useth the very phrase and speech. Luke 1.37. of the Angell here, v. 14. that the type may answer to the body, the Angell is here a messenger of Isaaks extraordinary conception of an old woman, as there of Christs miraculous conception of a Virgin.

So then whereas the Angell, v. 13. maketh mention of two times, at the time appointed I will come unto thee according to the time of life: the time appointed is the time set, v. 17.21. which was that time twelve-moneth: the time of life is from Isaaks conception to his birth.

8. But that is a meere fable of the Hebrewes, that the Angell made a line upon the wall, to the which when the Sunne came that time twelve moneth, Sarah should have a sonne. Mercer.

QVEST. VII. Why Abraham is called old.

Vers. 11. NOw Abraham and Sara were old, and it ceased to be with Sarah, after the manner of women, &c. 1. Philo noteth, that Abraham is the first that in Scripture is called an old man, though many before him, were much elder in yeares: and thinketh he was so called, propter canitiem virtutum, for his old age and growth in vertue. But that is not the meaning here: it is given as a reason, why Sarah doubted of a son, * because she was old and her Lord also. 2. Neither is Pererius collection sound, that because Sarah saith: shall I have lust? that Abraham and Sarah after the birth of Ismael had consented to abstinence from matrimoniall acts: for Abraham long after this had children by Keturah, which sheweth that there was in Abraham moderate lust and desire: and Sarah, though her desire that way had beene extinguished yet she was to be obedient: Sarah then only speaketh comparatively, that the heat and lust of youth was now abated in her.

QVEST. VIII. Whether Abraham was simply unapt for generation.

FURther, 1. Some thinke that Abraham by reason of his great age, was simply unapt for generation in himselfe; but yet received a generative faculty from God to beget Isaak: sic Thomas Aquin. Contr. Abraham 37. yeares after by Keturah had six sonnes, Genes. 25. 2. therefore it is like then hee was not simply unapt for generation: nor yet enabled by an extraordinary faculty; seeing also that many yeares after, some at 80. yeeres of age and more had children, as Cato, and Massinissa. Plin. lib. 7. cap. 14.

2. Wherefore Augustines opinion is more probable, that Abraham was not simply unapt for generat[i]on, * but not by Sara: for afterward by another wife he received children.

3. Whereas the Apostle saith, that Abrahams body was now dead, being almost an hundred yeare old. Rom. 4.19. this is spoken in respect of Abrahams owne opinion, who was out of hope, to have children, hee considered not his owne body, saith S. Paul. Perer. And comparatively, because his body was now dead, being almost 100. yeare old, and much more unable, than before: and if in his younger yeares, he received no children by Sarah, much lesse hope was there now. Calvin.

QVEST. IX. The reason of Sarahs barrennesse.

TWO reasons are also given of Sarahs barrennesse: because she was old, and the monethly custome of women had left her: Sarah was now thirty yeares old, which may seeme in those dayes, when they lived long (as Sarah attained to an 120. yeares, Gen. 23.1.) to be no sufficient reason of her not bearing: for than one of ninety yeares might be esteemed as one of 50. now, beyond which time women commonly beare not; though some have children after those yeares, as Cornelia bare Volusius Saturninus, at 60. yeares, Plin. lib. 7. c. 14. 2. Neither the staying of the monethly course, may be thought of it selfe a sufficient cause of Sarahs barrennesse; because as Aristotle writeth, some may conceive without them, though it be rare: lib. 7. de histor. animal. c. 2. 3. But yet considering that Sarah both in her young time, and while the custome of women continued with her was barren: she being now both old, and that use discontinued, must needs be much more. And therefore those both concurring in aged and barren Sarah, doe make the worke more miraculous, in that she now conceived.

QVEST. X. Sarahs laughter whether it argued her incredulity.

Vers. 12. Sarah laughed. 1. This laughter of Sarah can neither be altogether excused, as Ambrose maketh it a signe of a mystery, rather than an argument of incredulity. 2. Neither yet did Sarah directly detract from the credit of Gods promise: for she did not yet know that they were Angels. 3. But of a womanly modesty shee shewed her selfe at the first incredulous, and being guilty of her infirmity, through feare denied it: but yet when shee was rebuked, shee stood not in defence thereof, neither replied, and was confirmed in her faith, and beleevd. August. 4. And herein Gods mercy appeareth, that is contented to chastise Sarahs incredulity, with a simple reprehension, whereas Zacharie for the like offence, was stricken dumb. Calvin.

8. 87. Shall I hide from Abraham? 1. Whereas the Septuag. read from Abraham, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, puero, my childe, Ambrose sheweth, that Abraham, though old in yeares, is called a childe, or youth: ob pueritia obsequium, because of cheerefull obedience, and prompt and ready services, but wee need not stand upon this note, seeing the word is not in the originall: and yet it is usuall in Scripture, by that word to understand servant.

QVEST. XI. How a thing is said to bee impossible.

2. Likewise where the latine readeth, can I hide from Abraham? which in the originall, standeth thus: shall I hide? Pererius observation, how divers wayes a thing is said to be impossible, or that cannot bee, is impertinent: yet because there may be use elsewhere of this annotation, I will not omit it.

1. A thing is said to bee impossible, when meanes and strength is denied, 1 Cor. 3.2. I gave you milke to drinke, for yee could not, &c. 2. That which is seldome done, though it may bee done, Matth. 5. A City set upon an hill cannot be hid. 3. That which is not fitting nor convenient, Matth. 9. The children of the bridegrome cannot mourne so long as the bridegrome is with them. 4. When a thing may bee done, but against the will, Gen. 37. 4. The brethren of Ioseph could not speake peaceably to him. 5. That which can|not bee done of man, or by any naturall cause, though unto God not impossible, as to cause a Camell to goe thorow the eye of a needle, Matth. 19.6. That which is simply impossible both in nature, and to God, as including a contradiction: as it is impossible God should lye: Heb. 6.7. That which is forbidden by a superiour power: as the Angell saith to Lot, Gen. 19.22. I can doe nothing, till thou be come thither. 8. That which is evill and unseemely, as Ioseph saith to his mistresse, How can I doe this great wickednesse, and sinne against God, Gen. 39.9.

QVEST. XII. Wherefore the Lord imparted his counsell to Abraham concerning the destruction of Sodome.

Vers. 18. SEing that Abraham shall be indeed a great nation, &c. Two reasons are given, why the Lord will not conceale from Abraham his counsell concerning the destruction of Sodome: first in regard of the dignity and privilege which the Lord had indued Abraham with: both carnall, in that hee should be a father of a mighty people: and spirituall, because of him should come the Messiah: in whom all the nations of the earth should bee blessed. 2. In respect of Abrahams diligence and duty in teach|ing and instructing his posterity after him. For this should seeme to have beene the godly practice of the fathers, to catechise their families and instruct them: concerning the creation of the world, transgres|sion of man, destruction of the old world, Gods providence, the Messiah to be revealed, everlasting life to come, and such like: Perer. 3. The Hebrewes thinke, that because the Pentapolis, or valley of five Cities belonged unto Canaan, which was promised to Abraham, the Lord imparteth this matter.

QVEST. XIII. Of the greatnesse of the sins of Sodome.

Vers. 20. The cry of Sodome is great, &c. 1. Foure sinnes are noted in Scripture, to be crying sinnes: the sinne of blood: Gen. 4.10. The sinne of oppression, Exod. 2.23. The detaining of hirelings wages, Iam. 5.4. The sinne of uncleannesse, as in this place: Perer. 2. By the cry of sinne is here understood the impudency of sinners, Gregor. Peccatum cum voce est culpa in actione, peccatum cum clamore est culpa cum libertate, &c. Sin with a voyce, is a fault in action, sinne with a loud cry, is a licentious liberty, lib. 5. moral c. 7. 3. Their sin is said to be multiplied: 1. because of the continuall custome of sinning. 2. The number of offenders. 3. The number of sinnes: as pride, fulnesse of bread, idlenesse contempt of the poore, Ezech. 16.49. Perer. 4. Their sinne in the singular number is said to bee increased, because, though they had many sinnes, yet there was one most notorious amongst them, the sin of uncleannesse. Muscul. 5. The fruitfulnessse of the ground, pleasantnesse of the water, brought abundance: their abundance made them wanton. Philo. 6. And their sinne was so much the greater, because not 15. yeares before, God had both chastised them by captivity, and againe in mercy delivered them, yet they notwithstanding, neither relgarding the mercies, nor judgements of God, went on in their sinne. Luther.

QVEST. XIV. Why the Lord punisheth and for what reason.

Vers. 21. I Will goe downe and see. 1. It is a figurative speech: for God who filleth all things, neither goeth nor commeth: and he which knoweth all things, need no inquisition or search, to informe his knowledge. Perer. 2. God punisheth three wayes. 1. for the most part God deferreth the punishment of sinners till the next world: that by his patience some may bee brought to repentance: * that men should think of another life and place of judgement beside this, that he might take triall of the faithfulnessse of his servants, that serve him obediently in faith, though presently they neither see punishment nor reward. 2. The Lord punisheth in this life, but after a long time, much patience and often warning: as the Israelites at he length, because of their sins were carried into captivity. 3. Sometime the Lord punisheth forth with, when the sinne is dangerous and contagious, as Core, Dathan, and Abiron, were straight-wayes punished for their rebellion. 3. God punisheth for three causes in this life: 1. for the correction and amendment of him that is punished. 2. for the preserving and maintaining of Gods honour, that is contemned. 3. for the good example of others.

QVEST. XV. How Abraham went on the way with the Angels, and how he stood before God.

Vers. 22. Abraham stood before the Lord, and drew neare, &c. Whereas Abraham is said, v. 16. to goe out with the Angels toward Sodome: it was not to shew them the way, as Rupertus: no yet only to shew his humanity unto them, who as he had entertained them friendly, so would bring them on the way kindly. Perer. the Hebrewes also thinke he went a mile with them, to shew his courtesie; but he did it rather to shew his duty and reverence to the Angels. Calvin. for Abraham did not now thinke they were Prophets: but knew them to be Angels, not by their departure and going into heaven, as Augustine thinketh: but he discerned it before by their communication. 2. Abraham acknowledgeth the third Angell to be God: and therefore the other two onely are called Angels. Genes. 19.1. Iun. and prepareth himselfe to make intercession to God: as the Chalde readeth, he stood in prayer: some thinke, that the three Angels vanished away, and then God spake to Abraham, some that this was a new vision, after the Angels were departed: some take this to be an Angell, who is called Jehovah, because the Lord spake in him: Mercer. but by this meanes, Abraham should have committed Idolatry, in worshipping the Angell, because God spake in him: therefore it is to be thought, that this third Angell was Christ: and whereas in the next Chapter, v. 18. Lot also saith, Lord: hee speaketh not to the Angels, but turneth to God. 3. Hee draweth neare unto God, both by his reverent approaching, and in his devout affections. Calvin.

QVEST. XVI. Abrahams prayer not to be accused of temerity.

Vers. 24. Wilt thou destroy and not spare the people for fifty righteous? &c. 1. It is evident that Abrahams intercession is specially intended for Sodome: whereof the Lord maketh specially mention, v. 20. yet his affection and pity was in like manner extended to the other Cities, that they might be spared according to the same rule. 2. Neither did Abraham dissemble his affection, as some thinke, as though he only made intercession for Lot his kinsman there dwelling, but he remembreth all other righteous men, that should bee there found. Calvin. 3. Neither doth Abraham pray more in affection than judgement, as Pererius thinketh: because it is no unjust thing with God to chastise temporally the righteous with the wicked, as Ezekiel and Daniel were carried into captivity: for the same chastisement is to a divers end, to the wicked and impenitent, a beginning of everlasting judgement, to the righteous, a correction for their amendment: neither was it necessary that for the deliverance of the just the whole City should be spared: * for God could deliver the righteous, as Noah in the flood, and Lot in the families of Sodome, and destroy the rest: Abraham upon these reasons is not to be accused of temerity: because that from this place, the Apostle seemeth to derive that sentence, Rom. 3.6. else how shall God judge the world? 4. Wherefore concerning the first reason, I thinke rather with Vatablus, that Abraham urgeth not Gods justice as in it selfe considered, but in the opinion of the infidels: who not knowing how the same punishment may sort out to divers ends, would accuse God of injustice, if the righteous should have perished with the wicked: or with Calvin, that Abraham propoundeth to himselfe the destruction of Sodome, as a fore-runner of everlasting judgement, and therefore prayeth that according to the rule of Gods justice, the righteous might be exempted from it. 5. Neither doth Abraham entreat, that the City should altogether be untouched, and the wicked goe unpunished, but that the righteous might be spared. Calvin. so he requesteth two things, the one, that the very place might be preserved, not utterly destroyed: if not, yet at the least that the righteous perish not. Marl. 6. Whereas God saith, v. 26. I will spare all the place, &c. He in his mercy granteth more than Abraham asked: that if there could have been so many righteous found, the City for their sakes should have beene wholly delivered: which was an indulgence, which the Lord would have granted for this time, not to bee a perpetuall rule: for the Lord afterward by his Prophet threatneth, that if Noah, Daniel and Iob were among the people, they should onely deliver their owne soules: he would not spare the rest for their sakes: Ezech. 14.16. Pererius.

QVEST. XVII. Why Abraham beginneth at fifty and endeth at ten.

FURTHER, if it be asked, why Abraham beginneth with 50. and endeth at ten: and beginneth not rather here first. 1. We need not for answer hereunto, with Thomas Anglicus, picke out a mystery from the numbers: who by fifty, understandeth such as are perfectly righteous, and so by the other lesser numbers, the inferiour order of just men: for the Scripture useth other proportions to set forth the degrees of righteous men, as an 100.60.30. Matth. 13.8. and if this were a good reason, Lot should have beene none of the righteous persons, because hee was under ten. 2. But the other conjecture of the same author is not to bee refused: that Abraham will not bee so bold, as at the first to entreat, that the City might bee saved for tens sake, but descendeth by degrees. 3. Neither is Tostatus reason good, that Abraham is directed of God, * to descend no lower than ten, because hee knew that there were some just men under ten, for whose sake yet hee would not spare the City: which just men hee thinketh themselves were delivered: that God directed Abraham in his prayer is true; but not upon any such ground, for excepting Lot, his wife and two daughters, and other righteous men are mentioned to bee delivered: nay the Scripture saith, all the inhabitants beside of the Cities were destroyed: Genes. 19.25. and so it is like, that all which died in the flames of the Cities, were partakers also of their sinnes. 4. Neither the 50. first named, are to be divided among the 5. Cities: 10. to bee found in every City, as some of the He|brewes: neither yet in naming the 50. doth Abraham pray onely for Sodome, as Aben Ezra: but though Sodome bee specially mentioned because it was the mother City of the rest, in the which as the greatest City, this number was most like to be found, yet Abraham intendeth the benefit of all. Neither doth Abraham end in ten, because he thought there were so many righteous in Lots house, he and his wife, his 4. daughters and their husbands: for Loth had but two daughters, and the same unmarried: and Abraham hath not respect so much to the safety of Lots family, as the preservation of the whole City; neither yet because fewer than ten, as Noe with the rest, that made eight, could not deliver that generation: neither doth hee stay at ten, as though God for a lesse number of just men will not spare a City: for as sometime for more than 5000. God will not suspend his judgements, as Samaria and Israel was not spared, though God had reserved to himselfe 7. thousand. 1 King. 19.18 so for fewer than ten, God sometime will shew mercy, as hee promised to spare Jerusalem, if but one righteous man could bee found there. Ie|rem. 5.1. Mercer. 5. It is therefore more like that Abraham named no lesse proportion than ten, lest hee should have been too bold with God: as also for this reason▪ because he must either have fallen ten more as in all the other numbers, (saving one) and then there should have beene none at all: or else he should have descended by five, as in the second instance; which number of righteous persons wel•nie Abraham knew to be in Lots house; even foure, himselfe, his wife, and two daughters; whose lives being the whole sum of the righteous in Sodome, Abraham might thinke a sufficient redemption, though hee entreated no•, for their cause also to have the rest saved.

QVEST. XVIII. Why Abraham maketh no mention of Lot in his prayer.

FRom hence also we may take the solution of another question, how it came to passe that Abraham maketh no mention in his prayer of Lots deliverance, whom before by strong hand hee had recovered from captivity, Genes. 14. 1. Some thinke that Abraham remembred Lot in his prayer, but Moses expres|seth it not, making mention rather of that part of his prayer, which might more commend his charity in making request for strangers. Pererius. 2. Some thinke that Lots deliverance was included in that ge|nerall request, vers. 27. that God would not destroy the righteous with the wicked. Muscul. and there|fore God is said to have remembred Abraham, when hee sent out Lot, that is Abrahams intercession. Genes 19.29. Luther. 3. Some are of opinion,* that Abraham might have some speciall revelation of Gods purpose for Lot. Calvin. But it is more like that Abraham relyed upon Gods generall promise; I will blesse them that blesse thee: and therefore doubted not but that God had a blessing in store for Lot. Iunius.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. The wicked spared, because of the righteous.

Vers. 26. I Will spare all the place for their sakes. God spareth the wicked because of the righteous, which either are allied in bloud, as Cham was preserved for Noahs sake; or joyned in cohabitation as Paul had all the soules given him that were in the same ship,* Act. 27. or when the righteous are moved in piety and commiseration toward them: as at Samuels request the Lord spared the people of Israel, 1 Sam. 12.19. Muscul. therefore, sapiens est stulti redemptio, a wise man is a redemption for a foole: and as a Physitian, that healeth common diseases: as a valiant man, that is a defence and muniment to the common wealth: Philo. so in forrein stories the like Princely mind is recorded to have been in Augustus Caesar; who having overcome Antony, and taken the City of Alexandria, when the Citizens expected nothing else but present destruction, the Emperour proclaimed publikely that he did pardon their rebellion for Arius sake, a Philosopher of that City, whom he used familiarly. Perer. ex Plutarch, in M. Anton.

2. Doct. Of the divers kinds of intercession and mediation.

Vers. 23. Abraham drew neare, and said; Philo noteth three kinds of intercession & mediation with God. 1. Gods owne goodnesse and mercifull clemency: as our Saviour saith, my father himselfe loveth you, Iohn 16.27. 2. The intercession and request of the righteous: as S. Iames saith, the prayer of faith shall save the sicke: c. 5.15. 3. The repentance and true humility of the offender, that craveth pardon: as the prodigall child upon his submission was received to favour. Luke 15. 4 But he omitteth the principall intercession of all, whereupon the rest are grounded, of the which hee was ignorant; the most effectuall and all sufficient mediation of our blessed Saviour Christ Jesus: according as the Apostle saith, If any man sinne, we have an advocate with the father, Iesus Christ the righteous, 1 Ioh. 2.1.

3. Doct. How Abraham calleth himselfe dust and ashes.

Vers. 27. I Am but dust and ashes. Man may bee foure wayes compared: 1. with the bruit beasts and plants, in respect of whom man is of a most excellent workmanship, being created according to Gods owne image. 2. with the starres and celestiall bodies, unto whom man is inferiour in regard of his terrene constitution, but superiour in his soule. 3. with the Angels, to whom man in the substance of his soule, is but a little inferiour, as it is in the Psalme, 8. Thou hast made him a little lower than the Angels. 4. But if man be compared with the omnipotent and eternall God, hee is but as dust and ashes before him, and indeed as nothing: as the Prophet saith, Behold the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and as the dust of the ballance: all nations are before him as nothing, and they are counted to him lesse than nothing and vanity, Isa. 40.15.17. therefore, Gregory saith well, Sancti quanto magis interna divinitatis conspiciunt, tanto magis se nihil esse cognoscunt, &c. the Saints, the more they consider the divine nature of God, so much the more they acknowledge themselves to be nothing.*

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Angels are not to be adored or worshipped.

Vers. 2. HEe bowed himselfe to the ground. From hence it cannot bee concluded, that Angels are to bee adored and worshipped, as the vulgar latine readeth: for Abraham supposed these to be men and not Angels, and therefore it is but a civill kind of reverence, which hee giveth unto them: otherwise though Abraham should have forgotten himselfe, in yeelding unto them adoration, yet would not they have accepted it: as the Angell forbiddeth Iohn to worship him, Revel. 22.8. Thomas Aquinas answer, that Iohn would have given unto the Angell, the divine and highest kinde of worship due unto God, and therefore was forbidden, is insufficient: for this were to make so great an Apostle ignorant, what duty was only to be yeelded to God: and it is misliked by Pererius, one of that side. And whereas he findeth out an other shift, that this adoration exhibited by Iohn was not unlawfull, but inconvenient to bee done in respect of the great excellency, to the which man, was now advanced by Christ: this is as slender an answer as the other: for in that the Angell forbiddeth Iohn to worship him, because hee was his fellow servant; it sheweth that it was not only inconvenient, but unlawfull also for one servant to worship another. Iohn then adoreth the Angell, not of ignorance, but of forgetfulnesse, being in an ecstasis of minde, and ravished with the glory of the Angell: for if the Apostle had not forgotten himselfe, he would not twice have failed herein, Apoc. 19.10.23.9.

2. Confut. The foresight of our obedience not the cause of the increase of grace.

Vers. 19. I Know him, that hee will command his sonnes, &c. Pererius here noteth, that God foreseeing Abrahams godlinesse and obedience, doth bestow upon him these great benefits, among the which was this revealing of his counsell concerning Sodome: whereas the onely reason, as Vatablus well noteth, why the Lord doth accumulate and multiply his graces upon his servants, is his owne fatherly love toward them: who having once made choyce of them, doth for ever love them: for what else doth the Lord here make mention of, but his owne graces vouchsafed to Abraham? it was not then any merit in Abraham, that procured this increase of graces, but Gods favour: who leaveth not his, but addeth graces upon graces, till he have accomplished their salvation. Calvin.

3. Confut. Chrysost. Errour of freewill.

* Here further may bee noted Chrysostomes errour: who saith that Abraham, ex seipso, & scientia sibi naeturaliter insita ad tantum virtutis fastigium pervenit: of himselfe and his naturall knowledge did attaine to such an high degree of vertue. Pererius would thus excuse Chrysostome, that by saying, of himselfe, &c. he excludeth all externall helps by the instruction of other, and not the secret revelation, of Gods spir|it and supernaturall gift of faith. If Chrysostome could be so handsomely expounded, for mine owne part, I would be glad: but who seeth not, that his words carry another sense? for the scripture useth, to set these two one against another, by grace, and of our selves: Eph. 2.8. By grace are yee saved through faith, not of your selves; if Abraham then was made righteous of himselfe, it was not by grace. The Scripture also sheweth, that God first called Abraham from his idolatrous countrey, before he did yet any commendable worke, * Gen. 12.1. Wherefore all Abrahams righteousness depended upon the calling of God, as Chrysostome in another place hath this sound saying, quamvis fidem adducas, à vocatione eam accepisti: what though thou hast faith, thou hast received it from thy calling.

4. Confut. There is no preparation in a mans nature, to his calling.

Vers. 19. THat the Lord may bring upon Abraham, &c. Hence Chrysostome noteth, that Abraham, primum in omnibus virtutis suae dedit specimen, & sic divinum meruit praesidium; did first shew every where an example of vertue, and so merited the divine assistance. Pererius two wayes would justifie Chrysostome: 1. he saith, he speaketh not of merit of condignity, but of a sufficient and fit preparation only unto grace. 2. or hee meaneth not that Abraham merited the first grace of justification, but onely the amplification or increase of it, Perer. in 18. Genes. disput.

Contra. 1. It is Gods mercy and love, which first calleth us, before we can be any way prepared thereunto: there is no fitnessse, aptnesse, or congruity in our nature, but all is of grace: so Moses saith, because the Lord loved thy fathers, therefore he chose their seed after them. Deut. 4.37. Gods love was the first motive for the choyce and calling of Abraham. * And againe, seeing Terah Abrahams father was an Idolater, under whom Abraham was brought up, and by all likelihood infected that way before the Lord called him: what preparation could there be in Abraham, * or provocation to his calling? 2. Neither was the begin|ning only of Gods favour toward Abraham of grace, the increase thereof by merit: for Iacob being of Abrahams faith confesseth, that he was not worthy, or lesse, than the least of Gods mercy, Gen. 32.10. he confesseth that none of Gods graces, neither first or last, were conferred upon him, for his worthinesse: therefore Calvin well noteth, that this word, that, consequentiam magis notat, quam causam, doth note rather a consequence, than a cause. Where the Lord findeth his servants faithfull and obedient, he will increase them with further graces, not merited by their obedience, but added in mercy according to the gracious promise of God, that vouchsafeth of his fatherly goodnesse so to crowne the faithfull service of his children. For otherwise if our service and obedience bee weighed in it selfe, it deserveth nothing: as our Saviour saith, When we have done all things which are commanded, we must say we are unprofitable servants: wee have dine that which was our duty to doe. Luke 17.10.

Morall observations.

1. Morall. The commendation of hospitality.

Vers. 2. HE ran to meet them from the tent doore. Ambrose here well noteth, non otiosus sedit Abraham in ostio tabernaculi, &c. Abraham did not sit idly in the doore of his tabernacle, sed longe aspexit, nec aspexisse contentus, cōcurrit obviam: festinavit occurrere, quia non satis est recte facere, nisi etiam maiore, quod facias. But he spieth a great way off, neither was hee content to espy, but went to meet them; * hee made haste to meet them; because it is not enough to doe well, unlesse thou speedily dispatch that thou doest. Abraham therefore is commended for his hospitality: and thus is he rewarded: whereas hee thought he entertained men, he received Angels as the Apostle noteth, Heb. 13.1. and Ambrose saith, qui scis an Deum suscipias, cum hospitem putas: how knowest thou, whether thou receive God, whom thou takest to bee a stranger? But now adayes, men are so farre off from hasting to meet strangers, to invite them home, that many of the poore members of Christ with begging and intreating, can hardly find entertainment.

2. Morall. Against curious building and carelesse hospitality.

Vers. 6. Abraham made hast into the tent to Sarah, &c. Abraham is not curious in his dwelling, but courteous in entertaining of strangers: much unlike is the practice of these daies: great men delight to build great houses, but keepe no hospitalitie: Abraham contrariwise, contenteth himselfe to dwell in a tent, yet his doores are open to strangers. This example of Abraham shall condemne the curiosity of this age in trimming their houses, and their carelesnesse in entertaining strangers.

3. Morall. Women must learne to keepe their owne houses.

BESide, in that Sara kept in her tent, the property of a modest matron is expressed, which keepeth her selfe at home, and loveth her owne house; by which example such gossips and busie bodies are reproved that use to goe from house to house, giving themselves to idlenesse and prating: as the Apostle describeth them, 1 Tim. 5.13.

4. Morall. Against curiosity in diet.

Vers. 7. TOoke a tender and good calfe: here is a patterne of frugality: Abraham prepareth for his guests, no wine, curious fare or dainty dishes, but wholesome countrey fare, as cakes, butter, milke, veale, and such like: curiosity then and nicenesse, superfluity and excesse in feasts and bankets is not commendable. Perer. as the Apostle saith, Be not drunke with wine, wherein is excesse, Eph. 5.15.

5. Morall. Against curiosity of the eare.

Vers. 10. SAarah heard in the tent doore: Sara being otherwise a most modest matron, yet sheweth her infirmity and curiosity, in listening behind the doore, what the Angels said to Abraham: which is a fault very much incident to that sexe, to be harkening and giving eare to heare things to which they are not called unto. The Preacher giveth a caveat against such curiosity of the eare. Eccl. 7.23. Give not thine heart to all the words that men spake, &c. Muscul.

6. Moral. Against mariage for lust in old persons.

Vers. 12. After I am old, shall I have lust? Sarah thought it a shame for her in her old age to give her selfe to the sport and pleasure of youth: hereby the dotage of aged persons is reprov'd, which doe provoke their decayed and dead bodies to lust againe, and doe revive their abated heat by un|equall and unseemely marriages. Perer. Hereunto agreeth the counsell of the Apostle, that wisheth youn|ger widowes to marry, but such to bee chosen as were not under sixty yeare old, 1 Tim. 5.10. supposing such to have not such need of marriage.

7. Moral. The duty of wives to their husbands.

Vers. 12. And my Lord also. Saint Peter from hence exhorteth wives to be obedient and dutiful to their husbands, as Sarah was to Abraham, calling him Lord or master, 1 Pet. 3.6.

8. Moral. Sinne must not be excused but acknowledged.

Vers. 15. Sarah denied, &c. Though Sarah shewed her infirmity in her deniall, yet being convinced, she by silence yeeldeth, she in obstinacy replyeth not to justifie her sinne: so likewise Peter after he had denied Christ, did not double his sinne by defending it, but diminish it by lamenting for it▪ Musculus.

9. Moral. Gods love appeareth in revealing his will to his servants.

Vers. 17. Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I doe? &c. Like as a true friend will impart and reveale his secrets to his friend: so the Lord herein sheweth his love to Abraham, in vouchsa|fing to reveale unto him his counsell. So our Saviour saith to his Disciples: Henceforth call I you not ser|vants, for the servant knoweth not what his master doth, but I have called you friends, for all things that I have heard of my father, have I made knowne to you. Iohn 15.15. Even so also are the faithfull bound to propa|gate the knowledge of the truth, as Abraham is commended, because hee would teach his sonnes, and his houshold after him to walke in the feare of the Lord, Calvin.

10. Moral. Examination must goe before judgement.

Vers. 21. I Will goe downe and see, &c. The Lord which knoweth all things, needed not to have searched or examined the truth, before hee proceedeth to punishment: But this is for our example, as Gregory noteth: ne mala hominum ante presumamus credere, quam probare: that wee presume not to give credit to the report of mens sins, before we have proved.

Thus the Lord did in punishing the old world, and in confounding the languages, Gen. 11. first take triall and knowledge of the transgression, before he inflicted punishment: which is a patterne for Judges, to proceed maturely and gravely to sentence, after due examination and searching out of the cause: as Iob saith, when I knew not the cause I did search it out. Iob 29.16.

11. Moral. The efficacy of the prayers of the Saints.

Vers. 29. And he yet spake to him againe. 1. Here appeareth the great liberty of speech, and boldnesse of the Saints in their prayers: Abraham reneweth his requests 9. times. 2. We see also the good|nesse of God, that cannot withstand the requests of his servants, nor be offended with their importunity. Muscul. So Moses, when God had purposed to destroy Israel, did strive in his prayers, and obtained fa|vour by his importunity. 3. If God so patiently heard Abraham praying for wicked Sodome, much more graciously will he receive the supplications of the faithfull for his Church. Calvin.

CHAP. XIX.

1. The Method.

T His Chapter intreateth of such things as happened to Sodome, and of such matters as concerne Lot.

Three things are declared touching Lot, his hospitality in receiving the Angels, vers. 1, 2, 3. his deliverance out of Sodome, which containeth: 1. the warning which Lot gave to his kindred, and their refusall, vers. 12, 13, 14. 2. The mercy of God in hastening and pulling Lot out of the City, 15, 16, 17. 3. The request of Lot concerning Zoar; vers. 19. to vers. 23. 4. The judgement upon Lots wife, vers. 26. Thirdly, concerning Lot is expressed, the incestuous practice of his daughters, and the fruit and issue thereof, 31. to the end.

Concerning Sodome, first their sinne and iniquity is set forth: where, 1. we have their ungodly attempt against the young men in Lots house, vers. 4, 5. 2. Lots pacification with their outrage, vers. 5. to 10. 3. The punishment of blindness upon the Sodomites, vers. 11.

Secondly, the overthrow and destruction of Sodome is described. 1. the cause God rained from heaven • 2 • The manner, fire and brimstone. 3. The lamentable effect, the Cities were overthrowne.

2. The divers readings.

The explanation of doubts.

QVEST. I. Why Lot sate in the gate of the City.

Vers. 1. LOt sate at the gate of the City, &c. 1. Neither as a Judge, because hee sate in the gate, which was the place of judgement. 2. Neither to meet his shepherds with their flockes. 3. But Lot there sate as Abraham in his tent doore, to take occasion to entertaine strangers, as also knowing the wic|ked use of the City, to preserve them from their rage and violence. Calvin.

QVEST. II. Of the 2. Angels that came in the evening.

Vers. 1. IN the evening came two Angels. These two were not the sonne and the holy Ghost, as some thinke, and that God the father staid still with Abraham: but they were, as they are called An|gels. 2. They are two, nor for that one had commission to destroy Sodome, the other to deliver Lot, or as though one Angell had not sufficed for this businesse; but they were both joyned in commission, as it pleased God. 3. These were Angels and not Prophets: which are also called men, because they were An|gels in nature, and men in their habit. 4. They stayed not 5. houres in the way, as the Hebrewes thinke, but Sodome was of such distance from Abrahams tent, that the journey might well aske 5. or 6. houres. 5. They came about eventide to Lot, at noone and in the cleare day to Abraham: they were to him mes|sengers of joy, but now Ministers of judgement. 6. Lot bowed himselfe upon his face aphim, his nose tou|ched the ground: which is not added here and not before concerning Abrahams obeysance, as though Abraham being the more worthy person, would not bow so low, as Rabbi Carus: but it is added, ex abundanti: Mercerus.

QVEST. III. Of Lots inviting of the Angels into his house.

Vers. 2. SEemy Lords. 1. It is but a curious observation: that adonai is here written with patach, as being but a civill salutation, and before, c. 18.3. with camets as being then properly spoken of God: for neither did Abraham know them at the first to bee Angels, nor yet is the word in most copies there written with cametz. 2. Neither doth Lot say turne aside into my house, as by the posterne or privy gate, for feare of the Sodomites, as Rasi, for their going in was well knowne unto them. 3. It is also a curious note, that Lot would have them first goe in, and then wash, that they might not bee seene washing in the streets. 4. Neither doe the Angels at the first refuse, that Lot might not come in danger for lodging of strangers, which was publikely forbidden, as some thinke, in Sodome: But they civilly refused, to make triall of Lots humanity, as for the same cause our Saviour did the like, to make his two Disciples more ear|nest. Luke 24. Mercer.

QVEST. IV. Whether the children and all the people of Sodome came together.

Vers. 4. FRom the young to the old; all the people from all places: 1. Not such children only as were of discretion came together, Cajetane: but even the youth of the City corrupt by the evill example of the rest, flocked together with the rest: Calvin: as wee see that children, where an unruly company is assembled, doe run on heapes. 2. Neither as Lyranus and Tostatus, is it an hyperbolicall speech that all the people came together: but it is most like, that this was a generall concourse of the whole City, all besetting Lots house, some nearer, some further off. Pererius. 3. Some thinke that the Sodomites would admit no strangers to come in among them, and therefore they were so earnest against these young men: for whereas there are 4. properties among men, 1. mine is mine, thine is thine, 2. mine is thine, and thine is mine, 3. mine is mine, and thine is mine, 4. mine is thine, and thine is thine: the 1. of naturall men, the 2. of popolare, the 3. of cruell men, the 4. of godly: the Sodomites were of the first and third ranke being unmercifull to others, all having to themselves. Mercer.

QVEST. V. Of the beastly and immoderate lust of the Sodomites.

Vers. 5. BRing them to us, that we may know them, &c. 1. Their meaning is not that they would know what guests hee had received into his house. 2. Neither did they by a mannerly tearme conceale their vile lust. Calvin. 3. But they were come to that impudency that they were not ashamed publikely to proclaime their wickednesse: but the Scripture setteth downe an unhonest thing by an honest name. 4. And this seemeth to have beene extraordinary, and not usuall thus to beset Lots house, both because these two young men, were of excellent and Angelicall beauty and favour, which kindled their filthy lust: and God so disposing, that before their destruction they should come to the height of sinne.

QVEST. VI. Why Lot stayed in Sodome so wicked a place.

NOW whereas it may be questioned, why Lot would stay in such a wicked City, the answer is. 1. That by this occasion a triall might bee had of the horrible wickednesse of the Sodomites. 2. And that Gods mercy might appeare in Lots deliverance. 3. Chrysostome addeth further: that Lot staid, ut icut op/timus medicus morbos eorum emendaret, that as a good Physitian hee might cure their diseases: and though he saw that he little prevailed, yet he was not to give over, as a good Physitian though he cure not, nihil de arte sua, vel officio praetermittit, he doth omit nothing of his art or duty.

QVEST. VII. Whether Lot offended in offering his daughters.

Vers. 8. BEhold now I have two daughters: This fact of Lots, in offering his daughters to the rage of the Sodomites is diversly excused. 1. Ambrosereason is, minus erat secundum naturam coire, quam adversus naturam delinquere: it was a lesse fault to company with his daughter, according to nature, than with the young men against nature: and so according to that saying, of two evils the lesse is to bee chosen; * which rule indeed holdeth in such evils, as are punishments, but not in such evils as are sinnes: in corporall things, not in spirituall: no evill or sinne is to bee admitted at all: neither is it commendable before God to escape a greater sinne by doing a lesse: there is no such necessity, that a man should com|mit sinne; hee ought rather to dye than to sinne. If hee bee blessed that condemneth not himselfe, in the thing hee alloweth, * Rom. 14.22. then hee is not blessed, that alloweth a sinfull thing in act, which hee condemneth in judgement. 2. Chrysostomes excuse is, that Lot did it, ut servaret hospitib. honorem: that he might preserve his guests from shame and violence. But for this Saint Paul hath given us a rule, not to do evil, that good may come thereof, Rom. 3.8.3. Augustine maketh this supposition, though he allow it not; noverat as non peccare, si in ipsis fieret, quod in vita fieri in se sustinebant: hee knew that his daughters should not sin, if they were forced to endure that, which was against their wils: and therefore his daughters not sinning, hee sinned not. But Augustine himselfe doth very well answer this objection, that if the maidens had consented to the Sodomites, facient cum Sodomitis te authore nequitiam: thou shouldest be the author of their sinne, if not patientur a Sodomitis te authore violentiam: thou art the author of this violence. 1. It was uncertaine, whether they might have beene drawne to consent. 2. yet was it a sinne in Lot to prostitute his daughters, especially being betrothed to others, as it may appeare, v. 14.

4. Cajetane thinketh, that Lot did not offer his daughters with any purpose to put off one sin with another, but useth an hyperbolicall kind of submission, thinking thereby to appease their rage; some adde further, that Lot knew, they would not desire his daughters, being espoused already to some great men of the City; ex Calvin. But this had beene too great presumption in Lot, and tempting of God, to make such an offer to so unruly a multitude, hoping that it would not be taken.

5. Some thinke, that though a man in himselfe is not to doe a lesse evill to avoid a greater, yet it is lawfull, when we see another obstinately set to commit a great wickednesse, to mollifie his mind with a perswasion or insinuation to a lesse evill, as Chrysostome would have those that are accustomed to sweare, rather to sweare by their owne head, than by God: Gregory resembleth it thus: qui murorum vndique ambitu clauditur ne fugiat, ibi se in fugam praecipitet, ubi brevior murus invenitur: hee that is shut up within the wall, that he cannot flye, let him escape that way where the wall is lowest. Contra. 1. This is a good rule, where wee are perswaders only from evill, and not actors our selves of evill; for Augustines rule is good, peccare omnino non debemus, ne alij gravius peccent: we must not sinne at all, lest other sinne more; If Lot had perswaded them rather to have gone to the maids of the towne, and let the young men alone, it had beene more tolerable, than to prostitute his owne daughters. 2. Though in it selfe it be a greater sinne, to abuse men unto lust, than women, yet was it a greater fault for Lot to be the author and counsellor of this attempt against his daughters, than to suffer his guests to be abused.

6. Wherefore this fact of Lot cannot bee justified, no more than that of the Ephrathite, Iud. 19.24. though it may be somewhat qualified: 1. in respect of Lots good charitable affection to use all meanes to preserve his guests from violence. 2. in regard of those times, when knowledge was not so ripe, nor it might be this point so well cleared to Lots judgement, whether a lesse evill might not be admitted, that a greater be avoided. 3. Lot, as Augustine well conjectureth, did it animo perturbato, with a troubled minde, and of a sudden, and therefore not so well advised. 4. If any shall urge S. Peters words, 2. epist. 3.7. And delivered just Lot vexed with the uncleane conversation of the wicked; and hence conclude that Lot was here in blamelesse: hee shall not so reason well: for though generally Lot bee called a just man, yet it followeth not, that every particular act of his was just: for then his incest with his two daughters would finde defence.

QVEST. VIII. With what kind of blindness the Sodomites were smitten.

Vers. 11. They smote the men with blindness, &c. that they were weary in seeking the doore, &c. 1. Chrysostome noteth, non tantum excoecati sed viribus dissoluti, &c. they were not only blinded, but their strength failed: this also may well be conjectured, yet the word beareth not that sense, but only that they were weary in seeking the doore, so Laah signifieth. 2. one Ribera, as Pererius noteth, would have it understood, not of Lots doore, but that every man returning was weary in seeking his owne doore: because it is said, Wisd. 19.16. Every one being compassed with darknesse, sought the entrance of his doore: which words are uttered of the darknesse of the

Aegyptians, not of the blindness of the Sodomites: and it is evident by the text, that the Sodomites sought to finde that doore, which the Angels pulled in Lot by. 3. This blindness, was neither an utter deprivation of their sight, for then as Augustine saith, they would rather have sought them guides to have led them, than laboured to find the doore: neither was it an ob|scuring of their sight concerning the object of the doore only, as Perer. neither was it a blindness procured by any naturall meanes, as by the obscuring the object, darkning the aire, or weakning the sight, as Pererius imagineth: but it was a miraculous and immediate worke: they smote the men with blindness;

they smote not the medium or the object: but their sight was generally blind, that they had no discerning of one thing from another: as the Aramites were blinded, that they could neither discern Elisha the pro|phet, the way, nor the City. Calvin. so that both their discerning and seeing faculty, both inward and out|ward sense were dazled, and therefore the word sanuere, is put in the plurall number, San•erim: they were then as it were san blind, which word may very well bee derived from the Hebrew: so is the pro|perty of such, not to discry or discern things of any distance from them.

QVEST. IX. Lot had only two daughters, no other children.

Vers. 14. LOt went and spake to his sonnes in law, &c. 1. These were the men unto whom Lots daughters were espoused, not already married, as some of the Hebrewes thinke, and Mercerus, that Lot beside the two Virgins, had two other daughters married: but it may appeare that Lot had no more sonnes or daughters, but only two: because when the Angell had bid him bring out his sonnes in law, his sons and daughters, hee onely spake to his sonnes in law: therefore sonnes he had none, nor other daugh|ters to speake unto, but those two which were with him. 2. It is evident also, that only Lot, his wife,* and two daughters were delivered out of the flames of Sodome: 1. that it might appeare, that there were no more righteous persons in Sodome, so that the number of ten last mentioned by Abraham, could not bee made up. 2. If any other had escaped, if men, Lots daughters would rather have practised with them than their father, if women, they would have entised them to doe the like as they did. As for the wine, which they drunke, they might either carry it themselves, or upon beasts, there was no such necessary use of servants in that behalfe: or which is most like, they brought it with them from Zoar. Mercer.

QVEST. X. Why Lot is willed to speake to those that would not heare him.

Vers. 14. HE seemed, as though he had mocked. It will be here questioned, why the Lord willeth such to be warned, whom hee knew would despise their calling. The answer is ready, God not|withstanding would have them to be called, that they might be more inexcusable, and his judgements ap|peare to be most just: like as he hath appointed the Gospell to be preached to all the world, yet many are called and few chosen, as our Saviour saith, Mat.20.16. ex Calvin.

QVEST. XI. Why Lot and the rest are forbidden to looke backe.

Vers. 17. LOoke not behind thee. The Lord forbade Lot, and likewise the rest with him, to looke behind them, not either because of the Angell that destroyed Sodome, or for that it was dangerous to looke into the infected aire, as the Hebr. but for these reasons: 1. to try their obedience, as hee did Adams in prohibiting the eating of an apple. 2. to shew hereby the indignity of that place, that was not worthy by any honest man to bee looked upon. 3. to stay Lots curiosity, that he should not too narrowly looke into Gods judgements, or gaze upon his workes. Perer. 4. as also for more speed sake, as the Apostles were likewise forbidden to salute any by the way. Iun. 5. that Lots desire and affection might bee sequestred from the pleasures and wealth of the City. Calvin.

QVEST. XII. How Lots wife looked behind him.

Vers. 26. His wife looked backe behind him. 1. not behind her selfe, as the Latine readeth: 2. nether yet being behind Lot, dragging after him, did shee looke backe, as Cajetane in c. 19. Genes. & Mercer. 3. neither did she looke behind upon Lot, that she might come after him. Calvin. for then she had not broken the Angels charge. 4. but she looked toward Sodome behind and beyond her husband. Iun.

QVEST. XIII. Why God so severely punished Lots wife.

She was turned into a pillar of Salt. God shewed this example of severity upon Lots wife, 1. for her disobedience. 2. her incredulity, in not giving credit to Gods word. 3. her curiosity in desiring to see the City burning. 4. her foolishnesse in pitying the ruine of her countrey, kindred, and people. 5. her affection seemed yet to bee addicted to the pleasures of Sodome, and therefore our Saviour giveth a caveat hereof, Remember Lots wife, Luke 17.32. that wee for saving and loving of this life, lose not the next. Perer. Calvin.

QVEST. XIV. What pillar of Salt Lots wife was turned into.

Pillar of Salt. 1. Not because Lots wife perished in the fire of brimstone mingled with salt, as it is Deut. 29.23. as Aben Ezra: for it might as well be said a pillar of brimstone. 2. neither is it so called only because it was a durable pillar: as an everlasting covenant is called a covenant of salt. Numb. 18.19. for salt hath a property to preserve things from corruption and decaying. 3. Neither was she turned into a pillar of salt, because she refused to bring the guests salt the day before, as some of the Hebrewes dreame. 4. Neither yet is it an allegory, to signifie such to be as senselesse pillars, which divert their affections from spirituall to earthly and sensuall things: as Philo applieth it. 5. But hereby is signified, that she both was turned into a pillar of materiall salt, and that also durable and of long continuance, which Ioseph saith, remained to be seene in his time, Borchardus long after maketh mention of it in his description of the holy land: and the Thargum Hierosolymit. saith, that it is duratura usque ad tempus resurrectionis, ^{*} to continue till the resurrection: but God would have that monument, ut praestet fidelibus condimentum, &c. that it might be a seasoning to faithfull men to take heed of backsliding, as Augustine noteth.

QVEST. XV. What became of Lots wife.

Further, 1. Neither must it bee supposed that her soule, but her body onely was turned into a pillar of salt. Calvin. 2. And the Lord might have mercy upon her soule, though this chastisement was shewed upon her body. 3. And it is most like that this miracle was done before Lot came to Zoar: neither is it to be thought, that Lot and his two daughters went before, and his wife staid behind in the field to looke backe, as Cajetane thinketh: but it was done in Lots sight and presence, for the better example sake, before they entred into Zoar: ^{*} for when Lot departed out of Zoar, mention is made only of him and his two daughters. And they which have travelled that countrey doe testifie, that this pillar was to be seene betweene Segor and the dead Sea, where Sodome and Gomorrha stood. Perer. ex Borchard.

QVEST. XVI. Why Lot refuseth to goe to the mountaines.

Vers. 20. SEe now this City hereby, &c. 1. Neither was this done in mystery, that Lot refused the moun|taine to dwell in Zoar, to signifie, as Gregory collecteth, that a low, humble, and meane life, is to bee preferred before high places. 2. neither did Lot refuse the high places, because of the craggy rockes and steepe hils, which are to bee seene in the mountaines of Engaddi: 3. But Lot himselfe giveth two reasons, why he preferreth Zoar before the mountaines: one in respect of himselfe, because the City was hard by, and he might sooner escape thither, than to the mountaine: the other in behalfe of the City, he intreateth for it, because it was but a little one, and not likely to bee so wicked, as the more popu|lous Cities

QVEST. XVII. How the Lord saith, I can doe nothing.

Vers. 22. I Can doe nothing, &c. 1. Some apply this to the Angels, which could not exceed Gods commis|sion. Muscul. 2. Some to Christ in respect of his humanity to be assumed. 3. But it is better understood of Christ as hee is God; neither doth this restraine the power of God, which is no other|wise executed, but according to his will: hee cannot, because hee will not, neither can change his decree concerning the saving and delivering of Lot: as in the like phrase of speech, it is said in the Gospell, that Christ could doe no great workes in his owne countrey, because of their unbeleefe. Mark. 6.5. for like as the Lord promiseth and purposeth a blessing to the faithfull, as here deliverance to Lot, so he hath decreed to with-hold it from unbeleevvers. 4. The Hebrewes doe here but trifle, that the Angell is here deprived of his power, because hee did arrogate it to himselfe, v. 13. and that they were deprived of their ministry: 138. yeares, till Iacobs ladder.

QVEST. XVIII. Of the name of the City Zoar.

Vers. 22. THE name of the City was called Zoar. 1. It is then corruptly called Segor, as the Latine and Septuagint read.* 2. Theodoret also is deceived, that saith Segor signifieth the opening of the earth, because the earth swallowed up the inhabitants of this City: for that is the signification of Bela, which was before the name of the place, Gen. 14.2. derived of the word balaug, to swallow or devoure. 3. The right etymology then of the word is here given by Lot, because it was tsegnar, a little one. 4. This was an happy change, not only of the name, but of the condition and state of the City: before it had the name of destruction, but now it is called little, that it might put them in mind of Gods mercy in sparing of the City for that time at Lots request. Muscul.

QVEST. XIX. How the Lord rained from the Lord.

Vers. 24. THE Lord rained brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven, &c. 1. This is not all one, to say the Lord rained fire from himselfe, as *Vatablu, Oleaster, with others: that note this to be a phrase of the Hebrewes, to put nownes for pronownes: as Gen. 4. Lamech saith, heare ô ye wives of Lamech for my wives: 2. Neither doth it only signifie, that this was an extraordinary and miraculous raine, caused by the Lord himselfe, beside the course of naturall causes: as Cajetane. 3. But this place was well urged by the fathers,* to prove the eternity of Christ: that the Lord Christ, to whom the father hath committed all judgement, did raine from Jehovah his father. Thus the fathers applied this text. Iustinus, Tertullian, Cyprian, Epiphanius, Cyril, with others. Thus Marcus Arethusus, in the Syriac Councell did godlily interpret this place against the heresie of Photinus, that held Christ not to have beene before his mother. 4. For thus the Lord hath tempered the Scriptures, that beside the literall sense, in divers places of the old testament, the mystery of the Trinity is insinuated: Gen. as Let us make man: Psal. 1. This day have I begotten thee: which the Jewes understand literally; the first they say is but a phrase of speech: the second uttered of David. But to our understanding, the mystery of the Trinity is here revealed.

QVEST. XX. Of the raine of fire and brimstone, the beginning and manner thereof.

Rained brimstone and fire. 1. This was a miraculous and extraordinary raine, wherein fell together fire and brimstone, as a fit matter to disperse the fire, and salt also: as it may bee gathered, Deut. 29.23. The land shall burne with brimstone and salt: and it may bee, that water powred downe also, whence was gathered the dead sea remaining to this day. 2. This raine came from heaven, that is the upper region of the aire, the place for fiery meteors: and it is not unlike, but that the nature of the soile, being full of pitch and slime and other combustibile matter. Gen. 14.10. did much increase the combustion: though Strabo be deceived, who thinketh, that this fierce fire did break out first from the earth, lib. 17. 3. This was a fit punishment for this wicked people, that as they burned with unnaturall lust, so they should be consumed with unnaturall fire, Gregor. 4. The subversion of these cities was very sudden: * it was done, as Jeremy saith, in a moment, Lament. 4.6. And Abraham rising up early in the morning, saw onely the smoake, and not the falling of the fire: and yet the sunne was but in rising, when it began to raine fire and brimstone, Gen. 19.24, 28. by the breake of day the Angell hastened Lot forward, v. 15. betweene which and the Sun rising one may goe foure miles, as the Hebrewes. 5. Of all examples of Gods judgements, this is the most fearefull in Scripture: 1. because of the strange punishment: 2. the suddennesse of their destruction. 3. The perpetuall monument thereof to this day. 4. And it was a forerunner of everlasting fire and perdition, Iude v. 7.

QUEST. XXI. How many Cities were destroyed with Sodome.

Vers. 24. Vpon Sodome and Gomorrhe. 1. Neither were these two cities onely destroyed, as Solinus. 2. Nor yet tenne cities, as Stephanus, or thirteene, as Strabo. 3. nor five, as Lyranus, * Theodoretus, who thinke, that Zoar also was destroyed after Lots departure. 4. But it is most like, that onely foure cities were overthrowne, Sodome, Gomorrhe, Admah, Zeboim; for these onely are rehearsed, Deut. 29.23. for Zoar was preserved by the intercession of Lot, v. 21. I will not overthrow this citie, for the which thou hast spoken: and it was known by the name of Zoar in Isayas time, cap. 15. 5. Hierome also maketh mention of it in his dayes, and saith, Sola de quin{que} Sodomorum urbib. precib. Lot preservatae est: it was onely of the five cities of the Sodomites preserved by the prayer of Lot. 5. But whereas it is said, Sapient. 10.6. that the fire came downe vpon the five cities: the word is pentapolis, which is taken joyntly for the whole region, wherein the five cities stood, not for the five cities severally: ex Perer.

QUEST. XXII. Of the largenesse of the plaine that was destroyed.

Verse 25. And overthrow those cities and all the plaine, &c. where now standeth the dead and salt lake or sea. 1. Plinie saith, it is above an hundred miles long, and twenty five broad. 2. But Iosephus, which better knew, being brought up in the countrey, giveth it out 580 furlongs in length, * that is, 72. miles and somewhat more, and 150. stadia or furlongs broad, that is, nineteene miles or thereabout. By this it may appeare what a great destruction this was, which overflowed such a great circuit of ground. 3. Aristotle also testifieth by heare-say, that the thickness and saltnesse of the water is such, that it beareth up man or beast, throwne into it, ex Perer.

QUEST. XXIII. Whether any were saved beside Lot and his company.

ALL the inhabitants of the cities. 1. Then Strabo ◇ deceived, which thinketh that some of the cities were forsaken of those which could flie away, lib. 17. so that he supposeth, that divers escaped: but the Scripture testifieth, that all the inhabitants saving Lot, his wife, and two daughters were destroyed. 2. Not onely the men and women, but the infants also perished in the fire, so that there remained no seed or off-spring of the Sodomites: as the Prophet witnesseth, Isai. 1.19. Except the Lord had reserved unto us a seed, wee should have beene as Sodome, &c.

This the Lord did, * 1. to increase their sorrow and torment in seeing the destruction of their children. 2. to shew his perfect detestation of that wicked nation, whose very seed was accursed. 3. Although those infants were not guilty of their fathers actual sinnes, yet it may stand with Gods justice temporally to chastise the children for their fathers sins, as Dauids childe begotten in adulterie died, Perer. 4. God hath absolute power and free choice to shew mercy to whom he will, and to withhold it at his pleasure. 5. Gods judgements are secret, yet most just. * Calvin. 4. This destruction of the Sodomites by fire was a foreshewing of everlasting fire, the vengeance whereof they now suffer, Iude 7. therefore Hierome is deceived, that saith, Deum ad praesens redidisse supplicii, ne in aeternum puniret; that God did chastise them presently, that hee should not punish them eternally. Unlesse Hierome bee expounded to speake conditionally, if they repented, which it is not like they did. Wee may therefore safely subscribe to the sentence of Saint Iude, that the Sodomites are eternally punished: for neither were there any just men left after Lot was gone out, upon whom God might shew mercie: neither is it like they did repent in that instant, seeing they scorned Lots warning before: neither can any temporall punishment whatsoever, redeeme or buy our everlasting damnation.

QUEST. XXIV. Of the barrennesse of the ground where Sodome stood, and the strange fruit there growing.

Verse 25. And all that grew upon the earth. 1. Not onely for that time were the plants and herbs smitten, but the earth was stricken with barrennesse for ever. As the Psalme hath reference to this example, 107.34. A fruitfull land turneth he into barrennesse or saltnesse for the wickednesse of the inhabitants. Aristotle also witnesseth, that the bitterness and saltnesse of the water is such, that no fish can live therein, lib. 2. meteor. 2. Borchardus also that spent 10. yeares in the viewing of that countrey, saith, that no grasse groweth there, and that it alwaies smoaketh: 1. pars. c. 7. num. 38. which is agreeable to that place of the Prophet Isay, 34.9. The rivers thereof shall be turned into pitch, the dust thereof into brimstone, the smoake thereof shall goe up for evermore. 3. Others also doe write, that the fruit which there groweth, is outwardly like other fruit, but within the rine there is nothing but dust and ashes. Io/sep. li. 5. de bell. Iudaio. Solinus saith, Fuliginem favillaceam ambitus extimae cutis cohibet, that the goodly outward rine or skinne onely doth keepe in the filthy soily embers, cap. 37. Pererius.

QUEST. XXV. Why Lot feareth to stay in Zoar.

Vers. 30. HE feared to tarry in Zoar, &c. 1. Not so much for that the City was subject to earthquakes, and had divers times before beene thereby overthrowne, whereupon it was called Bala, of Balaug, which signifieth to swallow or devoure; and therefore Lot might thinke, that now much more the same calamity might befall it in this fearefull tempest of fire and brimstone, sic Hieron. in tradition. Hebraic. 2. But rather Lot seeing the same sinnes to reigne in this place, might feare lest the same punish|ment should overtake them: wherein notwithstanding he sheweth his weaknesse in not staying upon the Lords promise, Calvin. 3. As also that fearefull judgement which fell upon his wife at his entring in|to Zoar might move him the sooner to depart from thence.

QUEST. XXVI. How Lot is said to be delivered for Abrahams sake.

Vers. 29. GOd thought upon Abraham, and sent Lot out, &c. It may bee here questioned how Lot is said for Abrahams sake to be sent out, when Saint Peter saith, That just Lot was delivered, 2 Pet. 3.7. he was then delivered for his owne righteousnesse by the Apostles sentence. The answer here is not that Lot was delivered for his service to Abraham in Egypt, in concealing Sarah to be his wife, or following him out of his Countrey; but, 1. Lot was indeed principally delivered, neither for Abrahams, nor his owne righteousness, but for the Lords owne mercy and goodnesse sake: and it is most certaine that Lot should have beene delivered, though he had not beene Abrahams nephew: yet the Lord to testifie his love to Abraham, and to encourage us one to pray for another, doth shew how much the prayers of the faithfull prevaile with him. 2. God is said to remember Abraham, not what hee prayed, but what God said to him, that he would not destroy the righteous with the wicked, Muscul. 3. As also it may be referred to the Lords first promise made to Abraham, I will blesse them that blesse thee, Gen. 12. so that Lots deliverance dependeth not upon any merit in Abraham, but Gods gracious promise toward him, Iun.

QUEST. XVII. Whether Lots daughter were indeed ignorant that there was no man left alive but her father.

Vers. 31. There is not a man in the earth to come in unto us, &c. 1. Origen thinketh that Lots daughters thought verily that all the world had beene destroyed by fire; * as it is like that they had heard of their father that there should be a conflagration of the world, but they perfectly understood it not: But this is not like, for they might easily have discerned from the hills, the rest of the Countrey to be untouched, and they came but lately from Zoar, which was preserved. 2. Some thinke further, that this ignorance of theirs was invincible and remediesse, and by this argument would excuse their practice with their father, sic Ioseph. lib. antiq. Irenaeus lib. 4. c. 51. Ambrose lib. 1. de Abraham. c. 6. 3. Others thinke that indeed Lots daughters did thus ignorantly perswade themselves, but so as that present arguments were offered to cause them to thinke otherwise, and therefore their ignorance was not invincible▪ as the view of the Countrey, the preservation of Zoar, which upon their fathers feare they might imagine also to bee destroyed; the remembrance that Sodome was punished for their particular sinnes: they knew also that their father had a godly uncle, and a great kindred; at the least they might before this attempt have consulted with their father Cajetan. Perer. 4. But I rather subscribe to Calvin, that they doe not so speake, as though all men of the world were perished (which they did know upon the former reasons) but onely the men of that place; as Iunius well translateth, In tera hac; In this Countrey; and they being shut up in the Cave could have no accesse unto others, Mercer. Though that other conjecture of Calvins, that there might be beside some of their servants, be not so probable, for they would not then have practised with their father.

QUEST. XVIII. Lots drunkennesse whether to be excused.

Vers. 32. We will make our father drunke with wine. &c. 1. Some doe altogether excuse Lot in that he was drunken, because he did it not of intemperancie, but onely to mitigate and allay his griefe and heavinesse, Chrysostom. hom. 44. in Gen. And Thomas saith, that Lot totaliter excusatur à culpa, that Lot is wholly to be excused; and his reason is, because, Actus praecedens talis fuit, ut ex eo sequeretur ebrietas sine peccato; The preceding act was such, that drunkennesse followed without sinne: which is not true, for wine cannot be taken with excesse without sinne; as Saint Paul saith, Ephes. 5.18. Be not drunke with wine wherein is excesse. * the very excesse is sinfull howsoever taken. 2. Theodoret will not wholly excuse Lot, Ebrietas Lot nonnullam habet reprehensionem, venia tamen temperatam; Lots drunkennesse hath some reprehension but worthy of pardon because, Vino animi aegritudinem solabatur; He did allay his sorrow with wine. 3. But Augustine doth wholly condemne it, thinking that it became not a just man, Talem adhibere consala nem, o use such a kinde of consolation: And indeed in this case though Lot might have more freely used wine in this forlorn estate, yet to use it in excesse to drunkennesse and lust, can have no excuse, Muscul.

QUEST. XXIX. The incest of Lots daughters no wayes excusable.

*Vers. 32. That we may preserve seed of our father. 1. Some doe excuse this fact of Lots daughters; first, Irenaeus saith, ipsae excusabiles, arbitantes se solas relictas ad conservationem generis humani; They are excusable thinking they were onely left for the preservation of mankind. Answ. 1. A good intention maketh not a good action; it is not enough to propound a good end, but the meanes also must be good; their desire to preserve mankinde was commendable, but the means to compasse it, by incest with their father, was not justifiable. 2. It seemeth also that they sinned against their conscience, knowing that their father would never have assented to them, if he had not beene made drunken first to forget himselfe.

Secondly, Chrysostome before alleaged, faith, it is extreme madnesse to condemne those, *Quos Scriptura ab omni liberat crimine; Whom the Scripture freeth from all blame. Answ. The Scripture setteth downe only a plaine narration of the fact, without either praise or dispraise, according to the holy manner thereof, leaving the consideration thereof to the godly wise Reader: It sheweth that they committed this fact of ignorance, and love of posterity, rather than of intemperancie, which is not enough for the approbation of their fact, though it be somewhat for the qualification thereof.

Thirdly, Irenaeus useth another reason of excuse, because of the mysticall signification: he would have Lot signifie Christ, his daughters the two synagogues, &c. Answ. 1. This mysticall application hath no warrant in Scripture, but is onely devised by man. 2. Though it were, yet the argument followeth not: for the Scripture borroweth similitudes and allegories from things which are not allowed: as from the enchanter or charmer, Psal. 58.5. Christs suddaine comming is compared to the theefe, 1 Thess. 5.2.

2. Wherefore this attempt of Lots daughters is no way excusable. 1. Because incest with the father is a sinne against the law of nature, and no wayes tolerable. 2. They could not be ignorant, that, although those few Cities were desolate, the whole world was not emptied of people. 3. Their owne conscience gave them that they did not well, because they did intoxicate their father with drinke, thinking, that if he were in his perfect memory, he would not consent unto them. 4. Though procreation of children, and the propagation of man-kinde be a thing to be desired, yet was it not lawfull by unlawfull meanes to compasse it: in this case the Apostles rule must stand, not to doe evill, that good may come thereof. Rom. 3.8. 5. The resolution then is this: first that the sinne of Lots daughters was greater than their fathers: for his chiefe fault was his drunkennesse: but they committed a double fault, in making him drunke, and committing incest with him: therefore Augustine saith well: Culpandus est Lot, non quantum ille incestus, sed quantum illa ebrietas merebatur: Lot was to be blamed, not as much as this incest, but his drunkennesse deserved:* for the one was voluntary, the other involuntary: Secondly, his daughters sinned the lesse, because they desired their fathers company, not for lust, but for procreation: as both their words shew, and for that they did it but once, Calvin: yet was their offence very great, being against the law of nature: and therefore Augustine saith well: Potius nunquam esse matres, quam sic uti patre debuerunt: ibid. It had beene better for them never to have beene mothers, than to have used their father so.

QVEST. XXX. The copulation of the father and daughter in no necessity lawfull or tolerable.

FURther, if this question be moved, whether in this case, if there had beene no more men in the world left but Lot, it had beene lawfull for his daughters to have conceived by him. 1. Ambrose affirmeth it by the example of Adam and Eva, which was taken out of Adam, and yet carnally knowne by him. But this example is not proper, for Eve cannot be said to be Adams daughter, seeing the beginning of such kindreds is by carnall copulation and commixtion; neither will God ever suffer in his providence such necessitie to fall out, that none but the father and daughter should be lest for procreation; which necessity, if ever it were likely to be, had bin seene in Noahs flood; when notwithstanding God would rather preserve wicked Cham for the generation of the world, than bring in any such necessity of unnaturall copulation.

2. Therefore Augustine thinketh more truly, that in this supposed case it had not beene lawfull for Lots daughters to doe as they did; because Vetitia est lege naturali talis commixtio, *such carnall commixtion is forbidden by the law of nature, and admitteth no dispensation. And againe, their owne minde gave them that they did not well; the care of conservation of man-kinde belonged to their father, and therefore they should have consulted with him; they then not consulting with their father, feared his consent, and so condemned in their conscience their owne act.

QUEST. XXXI. Whether Lot were altogether ignorant what was done to his daughters.

Vers. 33. HE knew not when she lay downe, nor when she rose up. 1. It can neither be as the Septuag. read; he know not when he lay downe, or rose up: for Lot was not so senselesse, not to know what he did, when he awoke and rose up. 2. Neither is it a thing incredible, nescientem coire quempam; *for a man not knowing in his sleepe to doe the act of generation, seeing the Scripture so testifieth here of Lot. 3. Neither is Lyranus opinion right, that Lot onely was ignorant when his daughters came to him and rose up but he knew what he did in the act, supposing through forgetfulnesse that it might be his wife: for Lot if he remembered himselfe, when hee awaked, what he had done, would not have committed the same thing againe. 4. Neither is Tostatus conceit out of Thomas probable, that Lots daughter conceived by him by nocturnall pollution and shedding of seed, not by the act of generation, as Thomas reporteth of one, that was by that meanes with child by her father, who for preserving of her virginity, kept her in his owne bed: for the text it selfe overthroweth this conceit; they consulted to lie with their father, or as the Septuagint read▪ sleepe with him, and so they did. 5. Therefore Cajetanus opinion is to be preferred▪ Lot omnino nescivisse universam rem gestam: that Lot was ignorant of the whole matter what was done from the first to the last: of which opinion Chrysostome was before: the reasons are these. 1. Chrysostome: ea peccata nos condemnant, quae scienter facimus: those sinnes condemne us, which we doe wittingly: but the Scripture excuseth this fact of Lot by his ignorance. 2. Cajetane saith, hoc omne opios perfici posse impedit rationis usu: that his businesse may be done, though the use of reason be hindred, as in those that are drunken. 3. Pererius addeth, that the progressive faculty may be exercised in sleepe: as many walke, carry things from place to place, and doe such like things in their sleepe: and of the same sort might this act <◇> 4. The Devill also to helpe forward this worke, might worke such a fantasie in Lots minde, being asleepe.

5. Calvins conjecture is best; Non tam vino fuisse obrutum, quam propter intemperiem divinitus percussus spiritu stuporis; That Lot was not so much oppressed with wine, as stricken with a spirit of slumber and senses lesse from God, because of his intemperance: to which agreeth that saying of Chrysostome; Divina dispensatione factum, ut sic illo vino gravaretur, ut omnino ignoraret: That God so disposed, that he should be so overcome of wine, that he was utterly ignorant. It was not then the operation onely of the wine, but Gods worke withall, that caused this senselesse ignorance.

QUEST. XXXII. The causes why the Lord suffered Lot thus to fall.

The causes why Lot was permitted thus to fall, are rendred to be these. 1. His double incredulity, in not giving credit to the Angell promising him safety, first in the mountaine, and then in Zoar, caused him to be punished with these two sinnes of drunkennesse and incontinenzie, Hierome. 2. His drunkennesse made way unto his lust, Calvin. 3. God hereby sheweth his great goodnesse and singular providence, who can turne evill unto good: for of Moab, one of those incestuous births, came Ruth, which was married to Booz, of whose line came our Saviour after the flesh, Perer. 4. God hath set forth this example, to make us circumspect: Ne abeamus in securitatem: that we be not secure, Luther. If Lot so excellent a man fell into such grievous sinnes, of drunkennesse and incest, who ought not to be humbled, and take heed to his wayes, and depend upon God for his direction?

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. None perfectly just in this life.

Vers. 8. BEhold I have two daughters, &c. Calvin from hence concludeth, that no mans works are so perfect, but in some things they faile. The Scripture calleth Lot a righteous man, but secundum quendam modum, after a certaine manner, as Augustine saith. The Scripture noteth six great faults in this righteous man: 1. His contention with Abraham, Gen. 13. 2. His offering of his daughters to the rage of the Sodomites. 3. His incredulity in doubting to be saved in the mountaine. 4. His weaknesse of faith in fearing to stay in Zoar, which the Lord promised to save for his sake. 5. His drunkennesse. 6. His incestuous act, though involuntary. Therefore as Saint James saith, In many things we offend all, Iam. 3.1. so there is none so righteous, but in some things he offendeth.

2. Doct. The elect Angels ministers of Gods judgements upon the wicked.

Vers. 13. THE Lord hath sent us to destroy it. The good Angels then, as they are Ministers of Gods mercies toward the elect, Psal. 91.11. He shall give his Angels charge over thee: so are they the executors of Gods judgements upon the wicked, as upon the host of Senacherib, 2 King. 19. and here upon the City of Sodome. Sometime also the elect Angels doe execute Gods judgements upon his owne people, as 2 Sam. 24. when David had numbred his people: but this is more rare, and then when such judgements tend rather to our good than hurt, our correction rather than confusion.

3. Doct. No man can deliver himselfe from the bondage of sinne.

Vers. 16. THE men caught him and his wife by the hands, &c. As Lot would not have hastened to come out of Sodome, if the Angels had not pulled him by the hands; so cannot we free our selves from the bondage of sinne, nor come forth out of the wickednesse of the world, except the Lord doe call us out: as our Saviour saith, None can come unto me except my father draw him, Ioh. 6.44.

4. Doct. We must abandon whatsoever belongeth to Babylon.

Vers. 17. NEither tarry thou in all the plaine. Lot is not onely taken forth of Sodome, but forbidden to stay in the plaine that belonged thereunto: so is it not enough to come forth from the grosse superstition of the Romish Babylon, but we must shake off whatsoever hath any affinity or agreement with it, sic Muscul. as the Apostle saith, Abstaine from all appearance of evill, 1 Thess. 5.22.

5. Doct. The destruction of the world by fire shall be sudden.

Vers. 28. HE saw the smoake of the land mounting, &c. Abraham saw not the raine of fire and brimstone, but the smoake onely thereof, and yet he rose very early: so that it seemeth the burning of Sodome was done in a moment: for the raine fell not till Lot was entred into Zoar, which was about the Sunne rising, vers. 23. By this we may see, how suddenly the world at Christs comming shall be consumed with fire, and we changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, 1 Cor. 15.52. Muscul.

6. Doct. Wherefore unlawfull copulations are often more fruitfull than lawfull.

Vers. 36. THus were both the daughters of Lot with childe, &c. We finde in Scripture, that many law|fully companying with their husbands, as Sara, Rebecca, Rachel, Anna, yet hardly con|ceived: and yet divers with one unlawfull copulation were with childe, as Thamar with Iuda, Bersebe with David, Lots daughters with their father: which the Lord doth not, as more favouring such un|lawfull conjunctions, but to this end, that such secret uncleane works should come to light, for their con|version, as in Iuda, David; or confusion, Marlor.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Vniversality no sure marke of the Church.

Vers. 4. ALL the people from all quarters. All rhe whole City of Sodome consented in evill, onely Lot and his family were free. Universality then is but a slender or uncertaine argument of the truth, or Church that professeth it. It is oftner seene, that the greater part is the worse, than otherwise. The Romanists therefore reason but simply, that their religion is the best, because the greater part of the world received it: for by the same reason, the uncleane conversation of Sodome might bee justified against Lot.

2. Confut. Against Atheists, that beleeve not the transmutation of Lots wi^o.

Vers. 26. SHE became a pillar of salt. Let not prophane persons scoffe at this, as though it were one of Ovids Metamorphosis fables. There is a great difference betweene Gods actions, and Poets fictions: he that beleeveth that God made all things of nothing, which dayly seeth birds to come forth of egges, and living creatures to be ingendred by dead seed, and hopeth for the resurrection of the body, cannot doubt, but that God could turne a womans body into a salty pillar.

3. Confut. Monkish and solitary life maketh not more holy.

Vers. 38. HE dwelt in a cave. Even Lot in a solitary cave committed sinne: it is not then the place that amendeth mens manners. Gregory well saith, sic desit spiritus non adjuvat locus:^{*} If an heart be wanting, the place helpeth not. Lot sinned in the mountaine, Adam fell in Paradise, the Angels in heaven. It is then but a Popish fantasie, that a Monks coule, a cloister life, an Hermites weed, can make a man more holy. But it is to be feared, that as dtunkennesse and incest were committed even in the cave, so the Gloi|sters and Cells of Popish votaries are not free from the like uncleannesse.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Observ. Vnruly people to be gently handled.

Vers. 7. I Pray you my brethren doe not so wickedly, &c. Lot sheweth that a furious multitude is to be gently dealt withall, and not to be exasperated with sharpe words: as here Lot calleth the Sodomites his brethren, not in the same profession, but in respect of his cohabitation, and common condition of life. This is S. Pauls rule, Instructing them with meeknesse that are contrary minded, 2 Tim. 2.25.

2. Observ. God delivereth in extremity.

Vers. 10. THE men put forth their hands and pulled Lot, &c. The Lord though he deferre his helpe, yet will not faile us in the greatest danger, when we are brought to a straight. As here Lot was delivered from the Sodomites, as from raging Lions, when he was as under their pawes, Calvin. In the like pinch, the Lord delivered David, when Saul had compassed him in, 1 Sam. 23.26.

3. Observ. Prophane persons make a mocke of Gods judgements.

Vers. 14. HE seemed to his sons in law, as though he had mocked, &c. Such are the prophane Atheists and worldlings, that make but a mocke and scorne of Gods judgements, and are no better per|swaded of the end of the world by fire, than these wretches were of the destruction of Sodome: of such S. Peters speaketh; That there shall be in the last dayes mockers, &c. which shall say, where is the promise of his comming, &c. 2 Pet. 3.3. Calvin.

4. Observ. We must not deferre our turning to God.

Vers. 16. AS he prolonged the time. By Lots example, who delaying the time, if God had not beene more mercifull to draw him forth, might have perished in the overthrow of Sodome: wee are taught, how dangerous a thing it is to deferre our calling, and to trifle or dally with Gods judgements. Therefore the Prophet Amos saith, Prepare to meet thy God O Israel, Amos 4.12. better to meet and pre|vent the Lord by repentance, than to stay till his judgements overtake us.

5. Observ. We must not forsake our calling.

Vers. 26. His wife looked backe. This teacheth us, that a man should not fall away from his profession and calling, whereinto he is once entred; as our Saviour saith, He that setteth his hand to the plowe and looketh back, is not fit for the kingdome of God, Luk: 9.26. Muscul.

6. Obser. He that wavereth in faith is never settled.

Vers. 28. NOt so my Lord: Lot not following the Lords direction, to goe first to the mountaine, en|treateth for Zoar: yet being in Zoar, he is not contented to stay there. So they which doe not submit themselves to Gods ordinance, but are doubtfull, in faith, are unconstant and wavering, and never settled: as Saint Iames saith, A wavering minded man is unstable in all his wayes.

7. Observ. Custome and continuance in sinne dangerous.

Vers. 35. THEy made their father drunke that night also, &c. We see then what a dangerous thing it is once to give way to the tentation of Satan: Lo having beene once drunken already, is more apt to fall into it againe: so fearefull is a custome and continuance in sinne. Our instruction is therefore, that we should resist the temptation at the first, and not by yeelding to give way for a second assault: ⟨◇⟩ the Apostle saith, Be not overcome of evill, but overcome evill with goodnesse, Rom. 12.21.

8. Observ. The sinne of drunkennesse how dangerous.

FURther, we see how much drunkennesse is to be taken heed of, which did prostitute Lot so excellent a man, to such beastly uncleannesse. Origen well noteth, Decepit Lot ebrietas, quem Sodoma non dece/pit, uritur ebrius flammis mulierum, quem sobriam sulphurea flamma non attigerat: drunkennesse deceived Lot, whom Sodome could not deceive: he burneth with the lust of women, being drunken, whom while he was sober, the flames of brimstone touched not. Wherefore let us alwayes remember that saying of the Apostle. Be not drunke with wine wherein is excesse, but be ye fulfilled with the spirit, Eph. 5.15.

1. The Method.

T His Chapter hath two parts: first, the taking away of Sara Abrahams wife, vers. 1. 2. Secondly, the restoring of her againe: where first is set downe the admonition of Abimelech in a dreame, vers. 3. to 8. then Abimelech expostulating with Abraham. Thirdly, Abrahams defence, vers. 9. to 14. Fourthly, the restitution of Sarah with large gifts, vers. 14. to 17. Lastly, Abrahams thankfulness in praying unto God, and the effect of his prayer, vers. 17, 18.

2. The divers readings.

* v. 1. Dwelt betweene Recam and Agara. C. betweene Cades and S^r. caet.

v. 2. He feared to say she is my wife, lest the men of the City should stay him for her sake: this is added by the Septuag. which the other have not.

* v. 4. Wilt thou stay the ignorant and just Nation? S.H. the righteous Nation. caeter.

v. 5. God came unto Abimelech by night. S. the word came from the face of the Lord to Abimelech in a vision of the night. Ch. the Lord came to Abimelech by a dreame in the night. caeter.

v. 6. The Lord said unto him by dreame. Ch. S. the Lord said unto him, caet. I spared thee. S. I kept thee. H.B.G. I did prohibite thee. T. C. P. chasach. to prohibite.

* v. 9. That worke that no man ever did, hast thou done to me. S. things which were not worthy to be done. Ch. which are not wont to be done. P. which thou oughtest not to have done. caeter. heb. which shall not be done.

v. 13. When God brought me out of my fathers house. S.H. when God caused me to wander out of my fathers house: * caet. when the people erred after the works of their hands, the Lord applyed me to his feare out of my fathers house. Ch.

* v. 14. Abimelech tooke a thousand drachma, shillings. S. the rest have not these words.

v. 11. A thousand didrachma. S. a thousand silverlings. H.B.G. a thousand sickles. C. a thousand sickles of silver, Tr. heb. a thousand of silver.

* v. 16. These things shall be for the price of thy face. S. this shall be a vaile to thine eyes. H.B. this shall bee a vaile of honour. C. he shall be a vaile to thine eyes. T. G.

* v. 16. Speake all things truly. S. whither soever thou goest, remember thou wast deprehended. H. because I have sent to take thee, and have seene thee in all things, which thou hast said, be thou rebuked. Ch. was thus re|proved. B.G. and all this is, that thou maist be learned. T. heb. she reproved her selfe.

v. 17. They were refreshed. C. they bare children. caet. heb. jalad: to bring forth.

3. The Explanation of doubts.

QVEST. I. Wherefore Abraham removed from the Plaine of Mamre, where he had so long dwelt.

Vers. 1. *A*fterward Abraham departed thence toward the South Countrey, &c. Abraham had now dwell|led in the Plaine of Mamre above fourteene yeare before Ismael was borne, who was thir|teene yeares old when he was circumcised, Gen. 17.25. Now he removeth from thence, not because of any famine, as Pererius thinketh, for the Scripture maketh mention but of one famine to have fallen in Abrahams dayes, Gen. 26.1, 2. nor yet for hospitality sake, as some Hebrewes: for he was now a sojourner in a strange Countrey. 3. Nor yet forced through the injuries and wrongs offered by his neighbours. 4. But it is most like, that the fearefull spectacle of the ruine of Sodome, with the pestilent and unwholesome ayre thereof rising, moved Abraham to change his dwelling: God so disposing, that Abraham should not continue alwayes in one place, as a possessor, but shift from place to place, as a stranger and sojourner.

QVEST. II. Of the desert of Shur.

Vers. 1. HE dwelt betweene Cadesh and Shur. 1. Those were the names of two desarts: the wilderness of Shur, was that, into the which the Israelites entred, when they had passed over the red Sea, Exod. 15.22. 2. It is the same which is called the desert of Ethan, as T^ostatus proveth against Lyranus: as may appeare by comparing Exod. 15.22. with Numb. 33.8. 2. This place of Abrahams dwelling is called afterward Beersheba, Gen. 22.32. Iunius.

QVEST. III. Of Gerar where Abraham sojourned.

SOjourned in Gerar. 1. This was the South bounds of Palestina, as is evident, Gen. 10.19. Sidon, Gerar, Sodome, Lasha, are set downe as the foure utmost parts of the Countrey of Canaan: Sidon, Gerar, from the North to the South on the West side; Sodome, Lasha, from the South to the North-eastward. 2. This Gerar was at the first a kingdome by it selfe, distinguished from the five principalities of the Philistians, Iun. It was the chiefe City of the region called Gerarti, Hierome. 3. Here Abraham did sojourn with Isaack twenty five yeares; from hence he went to sacrifice his sonne in the land of Moriah, Gen. 22.1. Perer.

QVEST. IV. How Sara retained her favour and beauty at ninetie yeares of age.

Vers. 2. Abimelech sent and tooke Sara. Sara was now ninety yeares old, how could she at these yeares retaine such beauty, as that she should be desired of Kings? 1. Neither is the history transported, as Lyranus thinketh upon this reason: for Abraham removed not from the Plaine of Mamre, till after the overthrow of Sodome. 2. Some thinke that this beauty in Sara was miraculous, as the Hebrewes. 3. But we need not seeke a miracle, other reasons may be alleaged; 1. Women then at ninety might be as fresh, as now, at forty: for as seventy or eighty is now the full age of women, so then they lived an hundred and thirty: Sara died at an hundred twenty seven yeares, Perer. 2. Moderate diet, and chaste life, might be a great helpe: but especially Gods blessing, as Moses, Iosua, Caleb, retained their strength and vigor in their old age, Deut. 34.7. Ios. 14.11. Luther. And as Sarah had a childe at ninety, so it is like her favour and colour was, as it useth to be in childe-bearing women, Mercer. 3. The not bearing, or nursing of children was a great meane to preserve her favour, Perer. 4. Her inward parts and other womenly gifts might commend her, as well as her favour: and this comelinesse of her person was a singular gift from God among the rest, Calvin. These reasons may be yeelded that Sarah at those yeares did keepe her beautie, which consisteth of three things, the softnesse of the flesh, the smoothnesse of the skinne, the sweetnesse or freshnesse of the colour, Perer.

QVEST. V. Why the Lord dealt more mercifully with Abimelech than with Pharaoh.

Vers. 3. GOd came to Abimelech. The Lord dealeth more mercifully with Abimelech than with Pharaoh, for the like offence: Pharaoh was not admonished by dreame, but forced by plagues to confesse his sinne, Gen. 12. 1. We need not with Rupertus, to runne to allegories: who by these two afflictions of Abraham in the taking away of his wife, would have the two captivities of the Israelites signified: one in Egypt, where the Egyptians suffered many plagues, the other under the Chaldeans, from whence they were delivered by Cyrus with good conditions. 2. Neither is the reason hereof, because Pharaoh was a more wicked King, though Abimelech seeme to bee the honester man: for the beginning of Gods mercy is from him, not from us. 3. But the difference of this proceeding commeth from the mercifull disposition of God; who will have mercy on whom he will, Rom.9.15.

QVEST. VI. Of divine dreames and the diversity thereof.

Vers. 3. IN a dreame by night. 1. The visions which are shewed in the day are more excellent than those which fall upon men in the night, if all other circumstances be alike: not onely for that, it must be a greater propheticall power, which can sequester the soule from the thoughts and cares of the day wherein it is occupied, than in the silence of the night, which is Aquinas reason, but because all the powers of the soule, when the body is watching, are in their operation and working, and so better prepared for heavenly contemplation: an argument hereof may be this; that dreames in the night have beene shewed to naturall and carnall men, as to Pharao, Nebuchadnezer; but visions of the day are shewed to the faithfull, as to Daniel and Peter, Act. 10. 2. Yet the person of Abimelech considered, who was in the day occupied in the affaires of his kingdome, the night was a fitter season for him to be drawne to heavenly meditation, Muscul. 3. There are two sorts of divine dreames, * one which is by representations and similitudes of other things, such were the dreames of Pharao and Nebuchadnezer; the other is a more excellent kinde, when one heareth God speake to him, as Abimelech here, or an Angell, as Ioseph, Matth. 1. or some man, as Paul, Act. 16.9. And these more noble dreames, are for the most part shewed to the servants of God, Perer. 4. But we must take heed, that we ascribe not too much to dreames, and to make those divine that are not, which may be thus discerned. 1. The dreames which God sendeth are good and godly, not favouring of any carnall thing. 2. They are sent upon grave and weighty occasions. 3. And for the most part to men fearing God. 4. And they leave a certaine perswasion and inward sense of Gods presence in the soule, Muscul.

QVEST. VII. Why the Lord saith of Abraham, he is a Prophet.

Vers. 7. DELiver the man his wife againe, for he is a Prophet, and he shall pray, &c. 1. Some make this clause, for he is a Prophet, a reason of the former sentence, of delivering his wife: because he being a Prophet did know that he had not come neare her, and therefore Abimelech need not doubt to deliver her, Iunius, Perer. 2. Or he is a Prophet and deare unto me, and the wrong offered to him▪ I will revenge as done unto my selfe, Iun. 3. Because he is a Prophet, marvell not that this punishment is laid upon thee, for doing wrong to such an excellent man, Calvin. 4. But it is better referred to the words following: he is a Prophet and an holy man, and therefore shall pray for thee, and his prayers shall prevaile, Musculus.

QUEST. VIII. Of divers kindes of prophesying.

This word Prophet, or to prophesie, is diversly taken in Scripture. 1. He is called a Prophet to whom things secret and hid, were revealed, and the knowledge of things to come by the spirit of God: such in times past were called seers, 1 Sam. 9.9. 2. They were called Prophets among the heathen, whosoever could foretell things to come, as some did by the subtilty of Satan: so Saint Paul calleth Epimenides, the Cretensian Prophet, Tit. 1.3. Thirdly, they were called Prophets, that had a speciall gift to indite hymnes and songs to the praise of God, 1 Chron. 25.3. Ieduthun is said to have prophesied upon the harpe. 4. They were said to prophesie, which did imitate onely the Prophets outward gesture, when they were beside themselves; as Saul prophesied, when the evill spirit came upon him, 1 Sam. 18.10. that is his outward gesture and behaviour, was as of a man beside himselfe. 5. They were so called Prophets, that were Ex|pounders and Interpreters of Scriptures; so is it taken, 1 Cor. 14. so Aaron was Moses Prophet, Exod. 7.1. that is, his spokesman, Exod. 3.16.

QVEST. IX. Two sorts of Prophets.

BUt a Prophet is taken properly the first way; whereof there were two sorts. 1. They were called Prophets, which had secrets revealed unto them to publish by writing and preaching to the people: and in this sense the word Nabi a Prophet, commeth of Nub, which is to speake. 2. They also were called Prophets, who though they preached not, yet God revealed many things unto them, and used them fa|miliarly: and in this sense Nabi shall be derived of ban, which is to understand: of this sort was Abraham a Prophet. To stat. Oleaster. ex Perer.

QVEST. X. How Sarah is said to be Abrahams sister.

Vers. 12. YEt in very deed she is my sister, &c. 1. Neither is their opinion sound, that thinke Sarah to have beene Abrahams owne sister by his father, not by his mother: sic Lyppoman, Satus, Cajetanus: for such mariages were not in use among the faithfull in Abrahams time. 2. Neither was she the daughter of Terah his brother, adopted by Terah: for Abraham saith, she was the daughter of his father. 3. Therefore Chrysostomes sentence is to have bin preferred, that holdeth Sara to have bin the daughter of Haran Arba|hams brother, whom Thare had by one woman, Abraham by another: this Harandied a long time before his father,* so that Sarah after the death of her father, might very well be called the daughter of Terah, because he was her grandfather, and he was also in stead of her father being dead. 5. And whereas Abraham saith, In very deed shee is my sister• he saith not that she was properly his sister, being his Neece, but he saith, In very deed, to free himselfe from the suspition of lying. See more of this matter, Gen. 11.4.18.

QVEST. XI. How much the sickle was in values.

Vers. 16. A Thousand peeces or sickles of silver. The common sickle neither was of so little value, as one Ribera affirmeth out of Budeus, as equivalent to the Atticke drachma, or groat, which is the eighth part of an ounce. 2. Nor yet doth it countervaille foure drachmaes or groats, as Iosephus. 3. Nor an whole ounce, as Hierome. 4. But the common sickle doth weigh ten gerahs: the sickle of the Sanctuary was double, of twenty gerahs in weight: Exod. 30.13. and every gerah did weigh sixteene barley cornes: so that the common sickle did weigh 160. barley cornes, that is two drachmaes and some|what more, Iunius. and therefore the 70. translate the sickle didrachma, a double groat: that is a quarter of an ounce, about fourteene pence starling.

QVEST. XII. Who is said to be the vaile of Sarahs eyes.

Vers. 16. HE is a vaile of thine eyes to all that are with thee, &c. 1. This is neither to be referred to the gift which Abimelech gave. 1. As though he had given it for a recompence for taking Sarah away, as the Septuagint read, and Chrysostome expoundeth. 2. Or to buy Sarah and her maid vailles to hide their beauty, that others be not intangled, ex Perer. 3. Or that it was a gift of honour, to shew that Sarah was both chaste and innocent. Latine translat. and the great Bible: so also Rasi.

2. It is not understood of this excuse or dissimulation which Sarah used, as though the sense should be this: that she might use this vaile or colour of the truth among her ownr: for they could not bee decei|ved, but among strangers she should plainly confesse her selfe to be Abrahams wife, Lyranus, T•status: for what needed Sarah to use any such excuse, where she was knowne?

3. Some doe referre it as well to Abraham, as to the gift, and to all that now hapned, that they were signes of Sarahs chastity, Mercer.

But the better interpretation is, to apply it to Abraham, that he should be the veile of her eyes. 1. That no man knowing her to be Abrahams wife, should looke upon her to desire her. Aben Ezra, Caje••n. 2. It also putteth Sara in minde of her subjection to Abraham, whereof the veile is a signe, 1 Cor.11.•0. 3. Oleaster also further stretcheth it; that Abraham was her veile, that is, her just excuse, that she did this, for his cause, being by him perswaded: but the former exposition is the better.

QUEST. XIII. How Sarah was reprov'd.

She was thus reprov'd. 1. The 70. reade, speake the truth, that is, that I am innocent, and touched the• no•: but this reading dissenteth from the originall. 2. So doth the Latine; remember thou art depre|hended: Lyppoman saith, it should be read reprehensam, reprehended, not deprehensam, deprehended.3. Iu/nius readeth, all this is done that thou maist be learned. 4. But the better reading is, all this was, that she• might be reprov'd, or in all this she reprov'd her selfe: so that they seeme to be the words rather of the writer concerning Sarah, than of Abimelech to Sarah.

QUEST. XIV. Whether Abimelech were smitten with any disease.

Vers. 17. GOd healed Abimelech, &c. for the Lord had shut up every wombe.1. Aben Ezra is not right, that thinketh, that Abimelech himselfe was stricken with no disease: but that he is said so to be, because his wife and maidens were punished: for the text it selfe saith, that God healed Abimelech: and it is most like, that God sent upon him some infirmity in his secrets, whereby he was kept from com|ming neare to Sarah.

QUEST. XV. What the shutting up of the wombe signifieth.

2. The shutting up of the wombe, is not to bee understood (as Pererius doth) of the difficulty of bringing forth: for then the children being ready for birth, and staying longer than their time, should have beene suffocated: and the text saith, the Lord had shut up every wombe: but all were not great with childe at one instant. Neither need we with Calvin, because in so short a time (Sarah being conceived with childe of Isaack, and not yet delivered) there could be no experience or triall of their sterility and bar|rennesse, to say the history is transposed, and was done before: for Abraham till now had no occasion to so|journe in Gerar: therefore the meaning is, that the women were hindred from conception, so signifieth the shutting up of the wombe: as the opening of the wombe betokeneth aptnes to conceive: as we reade, Gen.29.31. The Hebrewes affirme, that not onely in the women, but the men also all their pores and passages were stopped, as well of the mouth to take meat, as of other places that expell them: * and that the hens could not lay their egges: but the text beareth it not.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Adultery a sinne punishable with death.

Vers. 3. THou art but dead, &c. God threatneth death to Abimelech conditionally, if he did not re|store Abrahams wife, Iun. whereby we see, that in the justice of God, adulterie is a sinne to be punished by death: as Iudas adjudged Thamar to the fire for whoredome, Gen. 38.24. Where the law then is more gentle, than to inflict the punishment of death upon adulterers, they may thanke the lenity of the Magistrate, which useth not that rigour which may well stand with justice.

2. Doct. Ignorance excuseth not sinne.

Vers. 6. I Kept thee, that thou shouldest not sinne against mee, &c. Abimelech then if hee had touched Sarai, though he did not know her to be anothers wife, had sinned: ignorance then excuseth not sinne, though it doe some what extenuate and qualifie it, Muscul. as it is in the Gospell, He that knew not his ma|sters will, and yet did commit many things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes, Luk. 12.48. he that sinneth willingly shall receive more stripes, and he that falleth of ignorance shall have some also.

3. Doct. The whole family blessed because of the Master.

Vers. 7. THou shalt die the death, and all thou hast: as the sin of the Master of the house bringeth a judg|ment upon the whole familie; so the Lord also sheweth mercy to the whole house for the ma|sters sake. Luk. 19.9. This day is salvation come into this house, because he is become the sonne of Abraham.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. No perfect righteousness in this life.

Vers. 5. With an upright minde, and innocent hands, &c. This place is no ground for their opinion, that thinke a man in this life may attaine to perfect justice: for Abimelech doth not ab|solutely cleare himselfe from all sinne: but onely in this particular, in this degree of sinne, that he had not committed willingly any act of uncleannesse with Sarah, Calvin: as the Prophet David useth to plead for himselfe, Psal. 7.3. If I have done this thing, if there be any wickednesse in my hands, &c. he onely pur|geth himselfe from the suspition of a particular fact.

2. Confut. The Scripture sendeth us not to pray to the dead, but to be holpen by the prayers of the living.

V•s. 7. HE is a Prophet, and shall pray for thee, &c. Neither doth this place make for the invocation of Saints that are departed: for God sendeth not Abimelech to Noah, or any other departed to pray for him, but to Abraham then living, Calvin. The living then may pray for the living, which duty may be mutually performed in charity, while one knoweth anothers necessities. But for the living to pray to, or for the dead, which know not their wants, and they are already certainly disposed of in an unchangeable state, as the living are not, it hath no warrant upon any precept or example of Scripture, or any sound reason drawne from thence.

3. Confut. Against the heresie of the Tritheists.

Vers. 13. WHen God caused me to wander out of my fathers house, &c. The word is •lohim, Gods, in the plurall number, which maketh some to understand the Angels: Vatablus, Calvin: but God, and not the Angels first called Abraham from his Country & fathers house, Act. 7.3. Some thinke that Abraham thus spake according to the phrase and speech of the heathen: but Abraham doth every where professe himselfe by erecting of altars, a worshipper of the onely true God. Wherefore this place is trully translated, God caused me: sic P.T.B.G.S.H. onely the Chalde readeth in the plurall number very cor|ruptly, when the people erred after the works of their hands. Notwithstanding this text doth no wayes fa|vour the heresie of the Tritheists, that make divers Gods: for in that here a verbe of the plurall number, hi•g••, is joyned with elohim, it sheweth the Trinity of persons: in that sometime a verbe of the singular number is put unto it: as Gen. 1.1. bara: it betokeneth the unity of the God-head.

6. Places of Morall observation.

1. Observ. The righteous may fall often into the same infirmity.

Vers. 2. ABraham said of Sarah, she is my sister. Abraham had once thus offended before, and had for|gotten by this pretence, what danger Sarah was like to have beene brought into, and yet he falleth into the same infirmity againe. Therefore it is sometime seene, that even the children of God may in the same thing shew their weaknesse often, Calvin. As Iehosaphat being reprov'd by Iehu for joyning in league with Ahab, did forget himselfe, and was afterward confederate with his wicked sonne Ahaziah, and was the second time reprov'd by Eliazer another Prophet, 2 Chron. 19.2. and 20.37.

2. Observ. Good Princes doe submit themselves to their lawes.

Vers. 9. ABimelech said to Abraham, what hast thou done, &c. Abimelech signifieth, my father the King: which sheweth, that Kings at the beginning were fathers, and nourishers of their Countrey: but afterward, they which knew not God, became in stead of Abimelachim, Oebimelachim, that is, our enemy the King, Muscul. Happy then is that people, that hath a King for a common father. Beside here Abimelech though a King, taketh not himselfe to be lawlesse, to doe what him li•t: as cruell Caligula said to his grandmother Antonia, Memento omnia mihi licere & in omnes: Remember that all things are lawfull for me toward all men:* land wicked Iulia to Antonius Caracalla, soliciting him to incestuous marriage, when he answered, Vellam si liceret, I would, if it were lawfull, replied impudently againe, Si libet, licet, an nescis te imperatorem esse, leges dare non accipere: If you will you may; know you not, that you are Emperour, and gave lawes, but receive none? That state is like then to flourish, where even Kings, as Abimelech doe submit themselves here to good lawes. As Plato hath an excellent saying, In qua civitate lex subdita est, video ibi perniciem paratam in qua vero lex domina est principium, ibi video salutem: In what City the law is subject, I see destruction at hand, but where the law swayeth even the Prince, I see health to that place: ex Perer.*

3. Observ. God divers wayes keepeth us from sinne.

Vers. 6. I Keepe thee, that thou shouldest not sinne against me. It is God that keepeth his children from sinne: either by the instinct of his spirit, or the instruction of his word, the guard and guiding of Angels, or by diseases: as Abimelech was here restrained, vers. 17. or by the counsell and advice of others, as David was stayed from shedding of bloud by Abigail. 1 Sam. 25. Calvin.

4. Observ. Things voluntarily taken must be restored.

Vers. 7. DELiver the man his wife againe, &c. Unlesse then that things violently taken from others, be restored, there is no mercy to be expected, Muscul. therefore Zacheus being truly called, doth restore largely, what he had wrongfully scraped together, Luk. 19.

5. Observ. Adulterie bringeth generall calamities vpon the whole citie or kingdome.

Vers. 9. THou hast brought on me, and on my kingdome this great sinne. Adulterie is called a great sinne, not onely because of the uncleannes and filthines of it, but because of the punishment that follow|eth, and the calamities that sometime overtake the whole Citie and kingdome for that sinne in their gover|nors. As the whole citie of Sechem was put to the sword for ravishing of Dinah Jacobs daughter, Gen. 34. the whole kingdome of David smarted for his sinne committed against Vriah concerning Bersheba,

2 Sam. 12. The like examples are found in forren histories; how Troy was destroyed for the taking away of Helen; the name and office of Kings expelled out of Rome for the ravishing of Lucretia by Se^{••}. Tarquin. Perer.

6. Observ. Barrennesse a due reward of incontinent life.

Vers. 18. The Lord had shut up every wombe, &c. Sterility and barrennesse i[•] a just punishment for in|continent life, that they which seeke for issue of strange flesh, should bee without fruit at home, Muscul. This may well be seene in Salomon, who of his 300. Concubines, and 700. Wives, left but one sonne, Rehoboam, and him not very wise, to succeed him.

CHAP. XXI.

1. The Method.

T His Chapter hath three parts: 1. Of Abrahams Oeconomicall; 2. Of his politically; 3. Of his religious state.

First, to his Oeconomicall affaires belong such things as hapned to Isaack and his mother, to Ismael and his mother.

Isaack is borne and named▪ vers. 2, 3. circumcised, vers. 4. nursed up by Sarah, and brought up with great joy, vers. 6▪ 7. weaned, vers. 8.

Ismael, 1. Mocketh Isaack, and Sara saw it: 2. Is cast out with his mother by Sa|rahs motion, vers. 10. and Gods bidding, vers. 12, 13. 3. He is provided for, first by Abrahams care, who sendeth her not forth empty, vers. 14. by Gods providence, vers. 16. to 20.

Secondly, his politically state concerneth his affaires with Abimelech; 1. Both as touching a league which Abraham maketh with him and his seed, vers. 23, 25. 2. The restitution of the Well which Abi|melech confirmeth to Abraham by the accepting of seven lambs, to vers. 33.

Thirdly, Abrahams religious act was in planting a Grove, and calling upon the name of God.

2. The divers readings.

v. 2. And bare a sonne. H. bare Abraham a sonne. caet.

v. 3. Which Sara bare him. A. which was borne unto him, which Sara bare him. caet.*

v. 6. God hath made me to rejoyce. C.B.G. to laugh. cat. sic & Heb.

v. 7. Who hearing would beleeve Abraham. H. he is faithfull, that hath said to Abraham and performed. C. who would have told Abraham. cat.

hurt my seed or name. S. posterity, stocke. H. my sonne or nephew. caet.

v. 31. He called the name the Well of oath. S. Beersheba. cat. ***

3. The explanation of doubts.

QUEST. I. Why Sara is said to have given children sucke.

Vers. 7. THat Sara should have given children sucke. 1. The conceit of some Hebrewes is here ridicu|lous, that Sara is said to have given children sucke, in the plurall number, because many children were brought in to sucke of her, that it might appeare whether the childe borne were hers; but this might have beene knowne by the sucking of Isaack onely. 2. Therefore Chrysostomes conjecture is better, that mention is made of Sarahs sucking, that it might be evident, that the childe was verily borne of her. 3. But it is spoken in the plurall number, according to the phrase of Scripture, that useth sometime the plurall for the singular: as also Cajetanus conceit may be received,  that hereby was signified the great store of milke that Sarah had, which was sufficient to have suckled more children than one.

QUEST. II. At what time Isaack was weaned.

Vers. 8. THE childe grew and was weaned. 1. Hierome reporteth two opinions of the Hebrewes, that some hold Isaack to have beene weaned at five yeares, some at twelve. 2. Lyppoman thinketh that three yeares was the common stint, as the mother saith to her sonne, 2 Macchab. 7.27. I gave thee sucke three yeares. 3. Some of the Hebrewes thinke hee was weaned at the end of twenty foure mo|neths, ex Calvin. sic Mercer. 4. But it skilleth not at what time Isaack was weaned: it sufficeth to know that Isaack was not weaned before the usuall time for any want in his mother: for he grew first and thri|ved, and then was weaned, Calvin.

QUEST. III. Why Abraham made a feast when Isaack was weaned.

AND Abraham made a great feast. 1. Neither is it like, that Abraham, lest he should seeme to imitate the fashions of the heathen, did institute a feast not usuall: for it is not unlike, but that there was great reljoycing also at the birth of Isaack: as vers. 6. Sarah said, God hath made me to rejoyce. 2. Neither was this done either mystically, as Augustine, to signifie that then we should rejoyce, cum factus est homo spiritualis, when a man is become spirituall, and weaned from carnall desires. 3. Neither yet was it performed ty|pically, to foreshew that Christ should weane us ab infantilib. ritib. &c. from the childish rites of the Law: Rupertus. 4. But rather it seemeth to have beene laudabilis consuetudo, a laudable custome in those dayes, ut initium comedendi, &c. that the beginning of the eating of the first-borne should bee celebrated with a feast, Cajetane. For at the birth of the childe, the mother being in grieffe, and at the circumcision, the infant being in grieffe, it might seeme not so fit a time of feasting, as at the weaning, Mercer: 5. And beside, speciall mention seemeth to be made of this feast, because Ismael at this time, scorning this solemnitie, derided and mocked Isaack, Calvin.

QUEST. IV. How Ismael is said to have mocked Isaack.

Vers. 9. Sarah saw the sonne of Hagar mocking, &c. 1. The Septuagint read, Playing, Páiz•nta, but nei|ther had it beene such a great fault for children to play together: neither was Ismael (being fourteene yeare older than Isaack, and almost twenty yeares old, if Isaack was weaned at five years, as some thinke) a fit play-fellow for Isaack. 2. Lyranus also too much presseth this word: for beside that it signifieth to play, he noteth that in Scripture it signifieth, 1. the act of venery, as Gen. 26.8. Isaack is said to have sported or played with Rebecca: 2. The act of Idolatry, Exod. 32.6. they rose up to play. 3. To play is taken for to fight and kill, 2 Sam. 2.14. Abner said to Ioab, let us see the young men play be|fore us: the two first wayes he thinketh Ismael played with Isaack, both in making of Idols, and in using some obscene behaviour: some thinke also that he did strive and fight with Isaack, Mercer. But we need not stretch this word so farre. It was misdemeanor great enough for Ismael to scorne and flout Isaack, de|riding him, as though he should be their young master, and heire of all: and this was the persecution which Saint Paul speaketh of, Gal. 4.29. And further, Ismael sheweth himselfe here a very prophane per|son: that whereas Isaack had his name given of laughter: both because his father laughed, and re|joyced in the spirit, when he was promised: and for that there was such great joy as at his birth, vers. 6. but most of all because he was a type of Christ, in whom Abraham rejoyced, Ioh. 8.56. and all the faith|full children of Abraham: Ismael made him indeed a right Isaack, that is, a laughing stocke, deriding this mysticall name, which was given him of God, Calvin.

QUEST. V. Why Sarah would have the bond-woman and her sonne cast forth.

Vers. 10. CAst out the bond-woman with her sonne, &c. These reasons may be given why Sarah desired Ismael to be cast out. 1. because shee saw how hee continually abused and mocked Isaack. 2. For that he ambitiously sought the inheritance, vers. 17. The sonne of this bond-woman shall not be heire, &c. Chrys. 3. Ismael was of evill disposition, and lewd manners, she might feare lest Isaack should bee cor|rupted by him, if the other staid in the house, Perer. 4. Lest if they had still both dwelled together, their posterity might be confounded: Propagatio nominis Abrahae directius pertinuisset ad Ismaelem: The propagation of Abarhams name should have more directly belonged unto Ismael, being the elder, Cajetane, Calvin. This reason is confirmed by the Lord himselfe, who stirred up Sarah, to rouse up Abraham, car|ried away wi|h fatherly affection toward Ismael: for he saith, Thy seed shall be called in Isaack: which could not so happily have beene done, if Ismael had not beene separated from him. 5. His mother also was cast out with him, because it seemeth she ambitiously provoked her sonne to stand for the inheritance.

QUEST. VI. What Isaack was heire of.

Vers. 10. SHall not be heire. 1. Though Abraham yet possessed not so much as the breadth of a foot, yet Sarah was not ignorant, that the whole land was promised to Abraham and his seed, and be|leeved they should possesse it in time. 2. Abraham had great store of cattell, treasure, and houshold, and of other goods, which he gave unto Isaack, Gen. 25.5. bestowing onely gifts upon his other sonnes. 3. She desired that Isaack might be heire of Abrahams name and bloud: as the Lord faith afterward; that his seed should be called in Isaack.

QUEST. VII. Whether Hagar carried Ismael upon her shoulder.

Vers. 14. PVtting it upon her shoulder, and the childe also. 1. It is not like that Ismael being now a youth of twenty yeares old, was laid upon his mothers shoulders to beare, as the Septuagint read, or that Abraham was constrained to binde Ismael with cords, and lay him upon his mother, for v. 18. she is bid to take him by the hand, not to lay him upon her shoulder: and whereas shee is said to cast him from her: this was done, not out of her armes, but animo, in her mind and affection: Augustine, Iunius. Or taking him into her lap being sicke, she after despairing of his health, put him from her, Mercer. where|as also hee is called jeled, a childe, this word is used not onely of infants, but of young men, Genes. 4.23. and Hierome well noteth, that all children are so called in respect of their parents. 2. Neither is it here a metaphoricall speech, as Cajetane saith, that to lay Ismael upon his mothers shoulders, was to commit him to her care. 3. But the sentence is thus distinguished, as the Latine readeth well, * that whereas there are two words, he gave, and imposed, or layed on, this is to be referred to the bottle of water and bread, the other to the child. 4. As for that conceit of the Hebrewes, that Ismael was sicke, * and through griefe fell into a drop|sie, or some inflammation, which was the cause the bottle of water was so soone spent, it hath small ground.

QUEST. VIII. What the reason is that Abraham gave Agar and Ismael no better provision.

HE tooke bread and a bottle of water, &c. How commeth it to passe that Abraham being so rich a man, and loving Ismael so well, should send him out with no better provision: seeing that they were not to send away their servants empty, but to give them a liberall reward of sheepe, come, and wine, Deut. 15.13. 1. Cajetane thinketh, that by bread and water all other victuals are expressed, and that Abraham gave them both servants and cattell: being both his father and very rich, and so both willing and able: neither would he deale worse with Ismael his first borne, than with the rest of his sonnes, to whom he gave gif•s, Genes. 25.5. sic Cajetan. But the Scripture it selfe gain-sayeth Cajetan herein, which omitteth not to make mention of the very bottle, which Abraham gave to carry the water in: then by all likelihood the other gifts or greater value should have beene spoken of. 2. Neither need we with Rupertus to seeke out an alle|gory: that by Hagars carrying of water and not wine, is shadowed forth the old Synagogue labouring under the literall sense of Scripture. 3. Wherefore Tostatus thinketh better, that Abraham gave Hagar no more than these necessary helps in her journey: 1. Either because Sarah the dame of the house would have it so, whom God commanded Abraham to heare in this case. 2. Or for that the Lord had promised to provide and take care for Ismael. 3. Or Abraham might afterward remember Ismael with a portion among the rest of his brethren: sic Tostatus. 4. Or Abraham did thinke to send them a supply afterwards, they sojourning not faire off: 5. Or Abraham being in griefe and heavinesse for their departure, might forget to doe that, which otherwise he would have done: for it seemeth he did it in haste. Calvin. Among which reasons, I take the first and the last to be most probable.

QUEST. IX. How Hagars eyes were opened.

Vers. 19. GOd opened her eyes, &c. 1. Not that her eyes were shut before. 2. Neither as though this fountaine, which the Angel shewed, did suddenly breake out of the ground, as some think: ex Vatabl•. 3. But caused her to see the well, which either by reason of her griefe she before regarded not, Calvin: or she saw it not by reason of the farre distance, or for that it was in some hidden place, Perer. Thus the two Disciples are said not to have knowne and discerned Christ, till their eyes were opened, Luke 24. 4. Rup•rtus gathereth from hence a further mystery: that as

Hagar wandering in the wilderness was brought to see a fountaine of water, so the Jewes in the end of the world shall be called and brought to the knowledge of the truth.

QUEST. X. Abimelech rather of feare than love, maketh a league with Abraham.

Vers. 22. Abimelech spake unto Abraham, &c. 1. Some thinke, that Abimelech not of any suspition or jealousie toward Abraham, but for love of his vertue, and seeing him to be a man prosperous and beloved of God: both by reason of the victory given him against foure Kings, when he recovered Lot, and the honourable congratulation of Melchisedech, that met him, and now the late birth of his sonne Isaack: for these causes he desired his friendship, Pererius. 2. But it is more like that Abimelech feared Abrahams greatness, and therefore of feare rather than love, desired to make a league with him, Muscul. Calvin: for it is no other like but that Abimelech was affected to Abraham, as afterward to his sonne that sojourned in the same place: and how Abimelechs affection stood toward Isaack, the Scripture sheweth: Wherefore came yee to me, seeing you hate me? &c. Gen. 26.27. yet Abimelech desireth also to make a covenant of friendship with Isaack.

QUEST. XI. Of the gifts given to Abimelech and the seven lambs.

Vers. 27. Abraham tooke sheepe and beeves, &c. Pererius thinketh, that no other ceremony was used, in making this covenant, but only an oath betweene them: but this giving of sheepe to Abimelech, sheweth that some other rite and solemnity was performed, Muscul. 2. And hereby Abraham doth acknowledge his homage to the King of the place: for, though all this land was promised to Abraham yet the time of his actually possessing it, was not yet come. 3. The seven lambs, were not money stamped with that marke, but so many in the kind which Abraham giveth as a price or redemption of his well, that he might enjoy it quietly afterward: Calvin. 4. And these seven lambs did not belong unto the covenant, as a rite and ceremony thereof: for then Abimelech would not have asked, what they did meane: v. 29. But they were as an earnest given for the redeeming of the well, Perer. 5. Augustine thinketh, that Abraham bought with them that parcell of ground, where he planted a groave: and it is not unlike: for before this time Abraham is not sound to have planted any.

QUEST. XII. Of the name and City of Beersheba.

*Vers. 31. Wherefore the place is called Beersheba. 1. The word shabangh, signifieth both seven, and with some little alteration of the points, to sweare: but here Moses deriveth the word, from the oath, which was taken betweene them, although not without relation to the seven lambes given in exchange: Vatab. 2. Moses called the place Beersheba, that is, the well of the oath, before v. 14. but that is by anticipation. * 3. Of this well the City next adjoining was so called Beersheba, which was the utmost bound of the land of promise toward the South, as Dan was on the north side. 4. This Beersheba was one of those Cities that belonged to Simeons lot, Iosua 19.2. but because Simeon had their inheritance in the midst of the inheritance of Judah, Iosu. 19.1. Beersheba also is numbred among the Cities of Judah, Iosu. 15.28.

QUEST. XIII. Why Abraham made a groave.

Vers. 33. And Abraham planted a groave, &c. 1. To let passe Rupertus allegory, who by this groave plant|ed by Abraham in a strange countrey, understandeth the Church planted among the Gen|tiles, professing Abrahams faith. 2. Abraham planted this groave, that it might bee a quiet and solitary place, * to the which he might betake himselfe, for prayer and contemplation. Cajetan. 3. Some think that this groave was set with all manner of fruitfull trees, whither

Abraham did use to carry his guests, and by the sight thereof to stirre them up to praise God the giver of all good things. Tostat. ex Targ. Hierosol. 4. It should seeme, that the heathen from this godly use of Abraham, derived by a corrupt imitation their consecrating of woods and groaves to their Idols: and therefore the Israelites were forbidden afterward to doe the like: and that this was the fashion of the heathen, Pliny testifieth: how that severall trees were proper to severall Idols, the escule or oake tree to Iupiter; the lawrel to Apollo, olive to Minerva, myrtle tree to Venus, poplar to Hercules: which abuse was taken up by the idolatrous Israelites: they offered incense under the oakes, the poplar trees, the olive, Hosh. 4.13. 5. This superstitious use was afterward forbidden the Israelites, not for those reasons alleaged by Philo: 1. because the temple of God, amoenitates non postulat, must not be a place of pleasure. 2. or because dung and other filth is applied to the trees to make them grow, 3. God will be worshipped in pate^{••} and open places, not in secret and obscure corners. For then Abraham would not have worshipped God in a groave, if upon these grounds it were unlawfull. 4. But the cause of the prohibition was the superstitious practice of the heathen, that had abused these things to Idolatry: to whom the Lord would not have his people conforme themselves. Deut. 12.3. You shall breake downe their pillars, and burne downe their groaves with fire, &c. you shall not so doe unto the Lord your God.

QVEST. XIV. How long Abraham sojourned in the land of the Philistims.

Vers. 34. Abraham was a stranger in the Philistims land a long season, &c. 1. Lyranus thinketh with other Hebrewes, that Abraham sojourned in this countrey 25. yeares: for so old Isaack is supposed to be, when Abraham was bid to offer him up in sacrifice: for then Abraham dwelt still in Beersheba, and somewhat after. 2. It is also not unlike, that Abrahams time of abode was longer in Beersheba, than it was in Hebron, in the plaine of Mamre: for it was but 25. yeares from Abrahams first comming into Canaan, in the 75. yeare of his age, to the birth of Isaack, in his 100. yeare: Lyran. 3. From this time of Isaacks birth beginneth the account of the 400. yeares mentioned, Gen. 15.13. Calvin.

Now whereas S. Paul doth draw this history of Sarah and Hagar; Isaack and Ismael, to an allegory: this place giveth occasion to intreat of and handle the Apostles words: ^{*} and to gather the summe of Peregrinus and others commentaries upon that Scripture, as it is set forth, Galat. 4. v. 21. to v. 27.

QVEST. XV. How diversly the word Law is taken in the Scripture.

Vers. 21. TEll me, &c. doe ye not heare the Law, &c. 1. Sometime the law is taken for the Scriptures of the old Testament: as Ioh. 15.25. a testimony alleaged out of the Psalmes, is said to be writ|ten in their law. 2. Sometime, the old Testament is divided into the law and the Prophets, Matth. 7.12. 3. Sometime the law is taken for all the bookes beside the Prophets and the Psalmes, Luk. 24.44. 4. The law is taken for the five bookes of Moses: as here for Genesis the first booke. Perer.

QVEST. XVI. What it is to be borne after the flesh.

Vers. 23. HE which was of the servant, was borne after the flesh. 1. Sometime flesh is taken for the corrup|tible and mortall state of man in this life: so the Apostle saith, flesh and bloud cannot inherit the kingdome of God: and expounding himselfe, hee addeth, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption, 1 Cor. 15.50. 2. It is taken for the sinfull state and condition of the flesh: as Rom. 8.8. They that are in the flesh cannot please God. 3. It signifieth the nature and state of the flesh, Matth. 16.17. Flesh and bloud hath not revealed this unto thee: that is, nothing in the nature of man: so in this place, Ismael is said to be borne after the flesh, that is, after the common order and course of humane birth: Isaack also was borne by promise, that is, beside the usuall strength and course of nature, he was borne by the power of Gods word and pro|mise, of one, whose wombe was in a manner dead in respect of her yeares. Beza.

Vers. 24. Which things are spokē by way of allegory. There are three sorts of allegories & parables: some are altogether feined & applied to the matter in hand: such are those parables in the Go|spel, as Luk 10. of the wise steward, Matth. 25. of the ten Virgins: some allegories consist altogether in borrowed phrases, and metaphoricall speeches: such as often doe occurre in the reading of the Prophets. A third sort there is, which are not in words, but in the things: as the serpent in the wilderness set up, signified Christ, Ioh. 3.14. and here Abrahams family is a figure of the Church.

QVEST. XVIII. How the testaments are said to be two.

These are the two Testaments, &c. 1. That is, Sarai and Hagar signifie two Testaments, as the rocke is said to be Christ, 1 Cor. 10.4. 2. They are called two Testaments, in respect of the divers times, and the divers dispensation, which in effect and substance were not two: for the law was a schoolemaster to bring unto Christ: saving that the false teachers, that did strive for the ceremonies of the law against the liber|ty of the Gospell, did make them not only divers, but contrary. Beza. 3. A Testament is properly taken for the will of the dead, but here in a more generall sense, it signifieth a covenant: and so is the Greeke word < in non-Latin alphabet > used. Perer.

QVEST. XIX. How the law held men in Servitude and bondage.

One which is Agar from mount Sinai which gendreth unto bondage. 1. The one Testament, which was given in Sinai, is signified by Hagar: which Sinai is out of the limits of the promised land, and so are they strangers from the true Jerusalem, that are not the children of Abrahams faith. Calvin. 2. The law is said to beget unto bondage, not so much for that under the law all things were wrapped up in my|stery, and not revealed in such manifest sort as under the Gospel: for so they are called servants that know not their masters will. Ioh. 15.15. neither for that they were nourished with temporall promises, as Abraham sent away the sonnes of Keturah, but reserved the inheritance for Isaack. But because the law held them in bondage under the hard yoke of ceremonies, Act. 15.10. and they were kept in feare, by reason of the curse and severe sentence of the law, which they transgressed through the weaknesse of the flesh, Perer. 3. Yet the law wrought not this effect upon all, that lived under the law, but only upon those, that knew not the right use of the law, which was to bring them unto Christ: for many were in those times, as Au|gustine saith, Ministri veteris Testamenti, haeredes novi, though Ministers of the old Testament▪ yet heires of the new.

QVEST. XX. How Agar is said to be mount Sinai.

Vers. 15. AGar is Sinati, a mountaine in Arabia: which is the better reading, than to say, Agar or mount Sinai: for here Hagar is the type, and mount Sinai, (which is taken for the law, which was there given) is that which answereth to the type: 1. both because of the name, which signifieth, as they say, the same thing in the Arabian tongue, which Sinai doth. 2. and the word Arabia, signifieth also affli|ction, humility. 3. Sinai in respect of the site is without the land of promise. 4. And Arabia with the inha|bitants therefore, lived in a servile state and condition: and in this respect chiefly doth Sinai represent the law, which bringeth a spirituall bondage. Pererius.

QVEST. XXI. How the mount Sinai is said to answer to Ierusalem.

Which answereth to Ierusalem, that now is: 1. not bordereth upon, or is joyned to Jerusalem, as the vulgar Latin and the B, translation readeth: for the contrarie is evident to him that beholdeth the situation of the countrey. 2. neither because the way or journey is continued from Sinai to Jerusalem. Aquinas. 3. but in respect of the correspondency and similitude: because the terrene and earthly Jerusalem, retaining still the ceremoniall yoke of the legall ceremonies, was held in spirituall bondage and servitude. Beza. Perer.

QVEST. XXII. Of Ierusalem that is from above.

Vers. 26. Ierusalem which is above, is free, the mother of us all, &c. S. Paul setteth against the old testament, and terrene Jerusalem, the new testament and heavenly Jerusalem, which is described by foure epithites. 1. it is said to be from above, because Christ the head thereof came from above. Iohn 16.28. I came out from the father: and because wee must have our conversation in heaven, Philip. 3.20. 2. It is called Jerusalem, which signifieth the vision of peace. It is free, not with civill and outward freedome: for many may be called being servants, 1 Cor. 7.21. but it is free, both morally, in not being a servant or slave to the affections and desires of the flesh, and spiritually in casting off all servile feare: * and celestiall liberty it hath in hope, which shall bee an everlasting freedome both of body and soule. 4. It is now the mother of us all, and fruitfull of many children, as Sarah at the first was barren, but at the last brought forth Isaack, whose seed was promised should be as the sand of the sea: so she that was fruitfull, the old Synagogue is now barren, she that was barren, the Church of God, is now fruitful among the Gentiles, according to that saying of Anna, 1 Sam.2.5. The barren hath borne many, and she that had many children is feeble.

QVEST. XXIII. Wherein Ismael resembleth carnall professors.

Vers. 28. Therefore brethren wee are after the manner of Isaack. This then is the application which the Apostle maketh of this allegory. 1. they which make account to be justified by the ceremonies or workes of the law, are like unto Ismael borne of the bond-woman after the flesh: they which belonged unto the faith of Christ, are the children of promise by grace. 2. As Ismael born of the bond woman persecuted Isaack: so they which either live or teach after the flesh, doe now persecute the servants of God, as the Pharisees did the Apostles, the Pseudocatholikes the professors of the Gospell. 3. As the servant with her sonne were cast out, for mocking of Isaack; so the Jewes for deriding of Christ, are cast out of the land of promise: * and so many as beleeve not in Christ whom they crucified, are deprived also of the celestiall Canaan. Perer. 4. Augustine further fitly expresseth this comparison, betweene the carnall and spirituall Israelites by the history of Ionah: resembling the Jewes, envying the calling of the Gentiles to Ionah, angry for the saving of Ninive: the ceremonies and carnall rites to the gourd, that shadowed but for a time: Christ to the worme, that smote the gourd: and removed the ceremonies, bringing in true righteousness and everlasting comfort and refreshing.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. Christians may have their plentifull feasts, so they take heed of excesse.

Vers. 8. ABraham made a great feast: This feast was more than ordinary, at the which some say Sem and Heber; and King Abimelech were present: but of the first two guests no likelihood, because no mention is made of them afterward: of Abimelechs presence there is more probability. Muscul. Howsoever, in that Abraham maketh such great preparation for this feast, we learne that it is lawfull for Christians to have their solemne and joyfull feasts and meetings, so that they take heed of excesse: and that the creatures of God may not only be used for necessity, but in plenty and alacrity, so there be no superfluity. Calvin. For as bread was given for mans sustenance, so wine is ordained to make the heart cheerfull. Psal. 104.14.

2. Doct. God is otherwise with his elect, otherwise with men of the world.

Vers. 20. GOd was with the child and he grew: God was with Ismael by his generall providence <◇> care, in that he grew up, thrived in the world and prospered: but there is a more <◇> grace and favour toward the elect: as our Saviour promiseth to be with his till the end of the world, Matth. 28.20. and in this sense S. Paul saith, God is the Saviour of all men, but especially of them which beleeve. 1 Tim. 4.10.

3. Doct. Children ought not to contract marriage without the consent of their parents.

Vers. 21. His mother tooke him a wife out of the land of Aegypt. This sheweth that it belongeth to parents to provide that their children bee honestly bestowed in marriage: and that children ought not contract themselves without the consent of their parents: Abraham provideth a wife for Isaack, Gen. 24.4. Isaack for Iacob. 28.2. By Moses law the daughters vow was not good, unlesse the father did ratifie it: Numb. 30.6. Wherefore the canon law is injurious, that alloweth contracts, and espousals made without consent of the parents. Muscul.

4. Doct. We must only sweare by the name of God, and not of Saints.

Vers. 23. SWeare unto me here by God. Abimelech, though himselfe, as it is likely, were a worshipper of other Gods: yet exacteth no other oath of Abraham, but to sweare by God only: superstitious then is the use of papists, that urge men to sweare not only by God, but by the Virgin Mary and other Saints: whereas the Scripture saith, thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, and sweare by his name, Deut. 6.13. Muscul.

5. Doct. Lawfull to take an oath before a Magistrate.

Vers. 24. ABraham said I will sweare. This example condemneth the Anabaptists: and sheweth that it is lawfull to take an oath before the civill Magistrate: either to testifie the truth, for the ending of strife. Heb. 6. v. 12. or for the confirming of a league, and performing and keeping of faith, as there was an oath betweene Iacob and Laban, Gen. 31.50. Luther.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. No Sacraments but commanded of God,

Vers. 4. ABraham circumcised Isaack, &c. as God had commanded. Wherefore in religious duties, and especially in the administration of the Sacraments, we must follow Gods ordinance and commandment: nothing ought to be altered, added and changed in the substance and necessary parts thereof, otherwise than God hath left them. Saint Paul delivereth to the Corinthians the same, which hee received of the Lord, 1 Cor. 11.23. The Church of Rome is found then to bee a falsifier and corrupter of Gods ordinance, who have brought in seven Sacraments, whereas the Lord commanded but two, and these also of Gods institution, they have defiled with many vaine inventions, and idle superstitious ceremonies of their owne. Calvin.

2. Confut. Hagar was not Abrahams wife.

Vers. 11. THis was very grievous in Abrahams sight because of his sonne: not because of Hagar: it see|meth then that Hagar was not Abrahams wife, as Pererius thinketh, for these reasons: 1. Be|cause Abrahams affection would have beene greater to his wife, than to his childe. 2. Hagar is called a bond-woman still: but if she had beene Abrahams wife, she had beene free: neither would Abraham, if she were his wife, have committed her to the power and government of Sarah, as he did: Gen. 16.6. Behold thy maid is in thine hand, doe with her as it pleaseth thee. The husband only in the family is the gover|nour and head of the wife. 3. It is not likely, that Abraham should have beene commanded to send Hagar away, never to returne, if she had beene his wife: the Scripture alloweth no such perpetuall separation, but in case of fornication. Matth. 5.35. Whosoever shall put away his wife, except for fornication, causeth her to commit adultery.

Neither are the contrary reasons of any value: 1. Thom. Aquin. saith, * that as in the law Moses allowed to give a bill of divorcement, ad evitandum uxoricidium, to avoyd wive-slaughter: so it was lawfull for Abraham to cast out Hagar; for the manifesting of that mystery expressed by Saint Paul, Galat. 4. Contra 1. Aquinas then thinketh, that the very mariage was dissolved, which Pererius denieth, as shall even now appeare. 2. That which Moses permitted, was no approbation, but a toleration, as our Saviour saith, for the hardnesse of their hearts, Matth. 29.6. but this fact of Abraham was lawfull and commendable, the ex|amples therefore is not alike. 3. God will not have his commandement broken: to make a myserie: but if Hagar had beene Abrahams wife, he in putting her away; had violated that precept: they two shalbe one flesh. 4. the myserie better holdeth to make Ismael the sonne of Abrahams bond-maid, rather than of his wife.

2. Perer. this was done not by the will of Abraham, but by the councill of God: therefore Abraham might put her away, though his wife: in v. 21. Contra. 1. proove her first to be Abrahams wife, and then I will yeeld, that at Gods commandement she might be put away. But this being the thing in question, whether she were Abrahams wife: it is more probable that she was not, because of this seperatiō. 2 God useth not to dispense extraordinarily with his law, whereas his purpose and will may otherwise be effected: as in this case, the counsell of God for casting out of Hagar might stand without any contradicti|on to Gods precept, if Hagar be held to be Abrahams concubine, rather than his wife. 3. We find in scrip|ture, that God brought man and wife together, as Eve to Adam, the Angell bid Ioseph not to feare to take Mary, whom hee purposed secretly to send away: but of Gods separating of man and wife, but in the case excepted, we read not.

3. This separation was only from bed and bord, not otherwise, the marriage knot remained insoluble and untied still. Perer. ibid. Cont. If the marriage bond remained, how came it to passe, that Abraham af|ter Sarahs death tooke a new wife Keturah, and not his former wife Hagar.

4. But the Scripture saith, Hagar was Abrahams wife, Gen. 16.3. * Sarah gave her to Abraham for his wife. Contra. 1. The meaning only is, that Sarah gave Hagar to be in stead of his wife, in this office only for procreation of children, and to be in her place: for shee saith, It may be I shall receive a childe by her: neither is Hagar accounted afterward as a wife, but an handmaid still: 2. or wee may say that Hagar is here called a wife, improprié, improperly, for Sarah had no power to give Abraham another wife. Calvin.

3. Confut. Many challenge to be true Catholikes which are not.

Vers. 10. THE sonne of this bond-woman shall not be heire. Like as Ismaeldid challenge the birth-right, and despised Isaack, and by his mothers instigation sought the inheritance, and bare him|selfe bold of his eldership: so it is no marvell, if that they which are but a bastard Church, and Pseudo|catholikes, doe appropriate unto themselves the name of the Church of Christ: like to those, of whom the spirit of God speaketh: which were of the Synagogue of Satan, calling themselves Iewes and were not, Revel. 3.9. But as Ismael, for all his bragging, was no whit nearer the inheritance: so these bolstred out and embossed titles, will no sooner make them the Church of God.

4. Confut. Not lawfull to make allegories of Scripture.

THough Saint Paul, having the instinct of Gods Spirit, doth allegorize the history of Sarah and Ha|gar: it is therefore no warrant to every expositor and interpreter to make allegories of Scripture: which corrupt use the Romane Synagogue alloweth, and others practise: 1. Saint Pauls rare using of alle|gories, ought to teach such, that they also should be verie sparing. 2. Unlesse they could say of themselves, as Paul did, I think I have the spirit of God, 1 Cor. 7.4. They cannot challenge the like liberty in expounding of scripture, as S. Paul did: therefore it may be said unto them, as Christ said to his disciples you know not, what spirit you are of. Luk. 9.55. 3. Perer. to this purpose useth a good reason; It only belongeth to God, which inspired the Scriptures, perfectly to know all things, that were to come, and not only to know them, but to dispose & direct them, as it pleaseth him, wherefore he only can appoint that things formerly done, veram totam{que} figuram gerant, &c. should beare a true and certaine type and figure of things afterward to bee done. Man therefore that cannot dispose of things to come, is not to make types and figures, according to his owne device.

5. Confut. Types are said to be, that is, to signifie the things whereof they are types.

ANd Saint Paul saith, these are 2. testaments, that is, Sarah and Hagar; signifie two testaments, Galath. 4.24. so the rocke is said to be Christ, that is, prefigured Christ, 1 Cor. 10.3. This Pererius acknowled|geth: and yet could not see, that Christ, &c. after the same manner said, This is my body; that is, a figure of my body, as both Tertullian and Augustine expound: although there is great difference (I grant) be|tweene the figure and representation in types, and in sacraments: for there is only a signification of spiri|tuall things: but in the Sacraments, there is a lively and effectuall oblation of the things signified and sha|dowed forth, yet in the phrase and manner of speaking in both, there is no difference. Beza.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Moral. Mothers should nurse their owne children.

Vers. 7. THat Sarah should have given sucke, &c. Ambrose well noteth hereupon, that by Sarahs ex|ample mothers should learne to nurse their owne children: they which of necessity, for want of milke or weaknesse, doe put forth their children to nurse are excused: but of nicenesse to refuse this duty, is worthy of blame: The Prophet saying, thou hast given mee hope at my mothers breasts, Psal. 22.9. and the Apostle commending widowes, that had nourished their children, 1 Timoth. 5.10. sheweth that God hath laid this duty upon mothers: which they that refuse are but halfe mothers, which nourish the infant in their wombes, but forsake it when it commeth into the world. 2. the infants many times drawing the milke of bad women, doe imitate their evill manners, as we see in plants, and young cattell, that follow the nature of the ground that feedeth them, and the dammes that suckle them. 3. The pur|pose of nature is made frustrate, when for this end God hath provided milke for the food of infants: for God hath made nothing in vaine. Calvin.

4. By this meanes also the mothers affection is alienated from the childe, whom shee cannot so well fancy, as whom shee hath nursed and kissed at her breasts. Perer.

2. Moral. Our affections must be subject to Gods will.

Vers. 11. THis was very grievous to Abraham: yet Abraham, though his affection stood otherwise, af]ter the Lord had spoken unto him, doth bridle his naturall affection, and submitteth it to Gods pleasure. Wee likewise must learne to confirme our desires to the Lords will; And if commendable and naturall love, such as Abrahams was, must be overswayed by our duty toward God, how much more unnaturall and unlawfull lust ought to be extinguished, which are flat opposite and contrary to the will of God, Calvin. a man is to forsake and deny himselfe for Christ. Mark. 8.35.

3. Moral. The counsell of inferiours not to be despised.

Vers. 12. IN all that Sarah shall say unto thee heare her voice. Abraham is bidden, to give eare to the counsel of Sarah: And we must learne not to despise the advice of inferiours, when they speake the truth unto us, and perswade us to that, which is right, as the Apostle saith: set up them, which are least esteemed in the Church, 1 Corinth. 6.4. Muscul.

4. Moral. The truest love leaveth not a friend, no not in the instant of death.

Vers. 16. I Will not see the death of the child: Hagars heart would not serve her to see her child dye: but this was but a compassionate and effeminate love: give me such a friend and lover, as will not forsake one in the greatest extremity, and will stand by him in the agony of death, when hee hath most need of comfort: I condemne not the first, if it proceed of tendernes of affection, rather than of nicenesse and want of duty, but I preferre the other. So the Lord said to Iacob, moving him to goe downe into Aegypt, Ioseph shall put his hand upon thine eyes. Genes. 4.6. 4. This duty is the dearest, and nearest all other performed to their friends, to close their eyes, when they were dead.

5. Moral. God heareth our prayers every where.

Vers. 17. GOd heard the voyce of the child, &c. God is every where ready to heare the complaints of the poore: Ismael was heard in the wilderness, Daniel in the Lions denne, the three children in the fiery furnace, Ionas in the whales belly: Therefore Saint Paul saith: I will that men every where lift up pure hands, &c. 1 Timoth. 2.8. no place is then barred to our prayers. Muscul.

6. Moral. Old rancour must be left, where true reconciliation is made.

Vers. 25. AND Abraham rebuked Abimelech. &c. Abraham did well, being now to make a firme and faithfull league with Abimelech, to powre forth all the grieve of his heart at once: not as the fashion of some is, which make semblance sometimes of reconciliation and attonement, and yet doe retaine rancour and seeds of malice in their heart: as Ioab did, that embraced Abner with one hand, and strooke him to the heart with the other.

7. Moral. Inferiour officers often abuse the name and authority of their Lords and masters.

Vers. 26. I Know not who hath done this thing, &c. also thou toldest mee not, &c. Abraham is found to bee here in some fault, that finding himselfe grieved and wronged by Abimelechs servants would complaine of it before the King, but powreth it out upon this occasion. Luther. so many that hold them]selves quiet a long time, sometime in their heat will utter their stomack: But the greatest fault of all was in Abimelechs servants, who abusing their masters name & authority, do without his knowledge take away a well from Abraham: Such is the officious disposition of many inferiour officers and Ministers under Princes and other great men, that they will father their injurious dealings upon their authority, that neither knew, nor consented: So Gehezi abused his Master Elisha. 2 King. 5.22.

CHAP. XXII.

1. The Method.

T His Chapter entreateth first of Abrahams purpose to sacrifice Isaack his sonne, with other things adjoyning, vers. 1. to 20. secondly, of Abrahams kindred, namely of the issue of his brother Nachor by his wife Milcah, and his concubine Reumah, vers. 20. to the end.

In the first part wee have 1. Gods commandement to Abraham to sacrifice his sonne: vers. 1, 2. 2. Abrahams obedience: vers. 3, 4.5. 3. The preparation to the sacrifice, the wood, the fire, the knife, the altar, Isaacks binding, are all expressed, vers. 6. to vers. 10. 4. Gods prevention of Abraham, and provision of another sacrifice: vers. 10. to 15. 5. The Lords commendation of Abrahams faith and obedience, with renewing of the promise.

2. The divers readings.

v. 2. Only begotten sonne. H. only sonne. caet. he. jachad. to unite.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QVEST. I. At what yeare of his age Isaack should have beene sacrificed.

Vers. 1. After these things. 1. Though it be uncertaine in what yeare of Isaacks age, Abraham was bid|den to sacrifice him; yet it is neither like, that he was then but 12. yeare old, as Aben Ezra ex Tostato, seeing Abraham laid a burthen of wood upon his shoulder; neither was he yet 37. yeares old, as some Hebrewes hold, which was the yeare of Sarahs death; for this was done, Sarah being yet living, and in good health; But Iosephus opinion seemeth to bee more probable, that Isaack was at this time 25. yeare old. 2. But that this was done the first day of the seventh moneth, upon which occasion the Jewes observed the feast of blowing of Trumpets, in remembrance of Isaacks deliverance, is but a Jewish tradi|tion without ground. 3. Whereas Nyssen and Augustine thinke, that Sarah knew of this intended sacri|fice, Chrysostomes opinion is more like, that she knew it not,* lest she should have beene too much grieved with the losse of her sonne. Ex Perer.

QVEST. II. Why Isaack was commanded to be sacrificed.

Vers. 2. Take thy onely Sonne, &c. There seeme to have beene two principall ends of this commande|ment of God: 1. that thereby Abrahams faith and obedience might be tried: as the Apostle saith, Heb. 11.17. by faith Abraham offered up Isaack. 2. The other end was, to bee a lively type and representation of the sacrifice of Christ: and to this sense some expound that place, Heb. 11.19. that Abraham received Isaack, en Parabolè, in a similitude or parable; which though it seeme not to be the proper meaning of those words, yet this offering up of Isaack in sacrifice, in many things representeth the death of Christ: 1. as Abraham offered Isaack, so God gave his sonne to dye for the world: * 2. as Isaack was not sacrificed, so Christ was the lambe, that was as though hee had beene killed, Revel. 5▪ 6. his di|vinity died not, and his humanity was revived. 3. the time also agreeth, Abraham was three dayes and three nights in going to the place of sacrifice; as Christ was so long in the grave. 4. the wood is laid upon Isaack, Christ carried his crosse. 5. the ramme is entangled in a thicker, Christ was crowned with thornes. 6. Isaack was offered in the same place, where afterward the temple stood, and our Saviour suffe|red at Hierusalem.

QVEST. III. Of the ten severall tentations of Abraham.

THis was the last and greatest tentation of Abraham, and in number the tenth. 1. Abraham was tempt|ed and tried, when he was bidden to come forth of his countrey, not knowing whither. 2. When by reason of the famine he went downe to Aegypt. 3. When Pharaoh tooke away his wife, that both hee was in danger of his life, and she of her chastity: 4. When there was a strife betweene Lots servants and his. 5. When he was constrained to arme himselfe and his servants to rescue Lot, taken captive. 6. When at Sarahs motion he expelled Agar out of his house. 7. When at ninety nine yeares of his age, he was circumci|sed in his foreskinne. 8. When Abimelech tooke away his wife. 9. When he sent away Hagar and Ismael his sonne. 10. When he was commanded of God to sacrifice his sonne Isaack. Perer. ex Haebreis.

QVEST. IV. Whether this mountaine Moriah, were the same, wherein the Temple was built.

Vers. 2. TO the Land of Moriah: 1. That this was the mountaine, where afterward the temple was built, there is no question: for so it is directly affirmed, 2. Cron. 3.1. 2. But whether Christ were crucified upon this mountaine, it cannot certainly be affirmed, as Avgustine thinketh, receiving it from Hierom. serm. dempor. 71. seeing Christ suffered without the citie in mount Calvarie: unlesse it can bee shewed, that these two mountaines are continued together and so in effect but one 3. But that Cain and Abel did sacrifice in this place, it is unlike, seeing they kept not off from paradise, which was in Mesopotamia: * neither did Noah build his altar here after the floud, because the scripture saith, that the arke rested upon the hills of Armenia, Gen. 8. and immediately upon Noahs comming forth of the Arke, he reared that Altar unto God. 4. This hill whereon the temple stood, was sometime higher than the rest of the City, as Iosephus describeth it, but the Romans cast it downe into the brooke Cedron, so that now it is in a manner a plaine, lower than the other parts of the City. Perer. ex Borchard.

QVEST. V. Of the originall and derivation of the name of Moriah.

FOR the signification of the word Moriah: 1. some interpret it, the bright or shining hill, deriving it of oorh, light: because there was the oracle of God. Aquila. 2. Some would have it so called of Marar, myrrhe, because that place abounded with myrrhe and cynamon, Cantic. 4.6. 3. Some of jara, to feare: because God was there feared and worshipped. Chald. 4. Some of jarah, to teach: because there the law and heavenly doctrine was taught. 5. Oleaster fetcheth it from mar, bitter: because of the bitter grieffe of Abraham offering his sonne. 6. But we neede not goe far for the derivation of this word: Abraham sheweth the originall to be from raah to see: not because it was a conspitious hill, and easie to bee see• or because it was the countrey of the seers and prophets: Lyppoman: but because the lord was there seene of Abraham, and did provide for him. Iun.

QVEST. VI. The greatnesse of Abrahams tentation in the sacrificing of Isaack.

2. Take now thine onely sonne: Many difficulties doe concurre in this tentation of Abraham. 1. He saith not, take thy servant, but thy sonne. Muscul. 2. The only sonne. If hee had had many, t•e grieffe had beene the lesse, but now, Isaack was his onely sonne, Ismael being abdicated and sent away. Calvin. 2. It is added, whom thou lovest, &c. Isaack was a vertuous and obedient child, and Abraham lo•ved him so much the more: if he had beene an ungracious sonne, the grieffe had beene much lesse. Calvin. 4. yea he is bid to offer Isaack, of whom the Lord said, in Isaack shall thy seed bee called: so that Abrahams hope of posterity by this meanes, and the expectation even of all those promises made in Isaack are cut off. Origen. 5. Ipse primus author inusitati exempli, &c. Abraham must be first Author of an unwonted example, in sacrificing humane flesh. Philo, 6. He is bid with his owne hands to kill him, to be the executioner himselfe. Muscul. 7. Hee must offer him for a burnt offering, that no memory or monuments should remaine of him, but he should be consumed to ashes. Perer. 8. He must not doe it presently, but he taketh a journey of three dayes, all which time his soule is tormented with grieffe and care: dum ambulat, dum iter agit, cogitationibus animus ejus discerpitur: while he walketh upon the way, his mind is as torn in sunder with these thoughts. Origen. hom. 7. in Genes. 9. It must bee done upon a mountaine, in the view and sight of the world: if a secret place had beene permitted for this sacrifice, it had been more tolerable. Marlorat. 10. But the greatest conflict of all was, in that the Messiah was promised to come of Isaack, sic in ejus persona perire videbatur tota mundi salus: and so the safety and salvation of the world did seeme to perish in his person. Calvin.

QVEST. VII. How Abraham knew that it was God that bad him sacrifice his sonne.

Vers. 3. Then Abraham rose up early, &c. 1. It appeareth, that the Lord spake not unto Abraham by dreame in his sleep, but being awake: both because Abraham rose up in the night, to addresse himselfe to his businesse: he staid not till he was awaked out of his sleepe: as also this being so hard and unaccustomed charge, it was requisite, that Abraham should have beene in the plainest manner spoken unto, that without all ambiguity he might acknowledge it to be Gods voyce, Cajetan. 2. Now Abraham knew it to be Gods voyce, partly by that experience which hee had of such heavenly conferences: that he knew it as well, as he discerned Sarahs voyce when she spake: partly the Patriarkes and Prophets, by the cleere light and illumination of their soules, did understand such visions to be of God: as the soule naturally discerneth of certaine generall notions and principles: but in these dayes, there being no such cleare light of illumination, it is hard to judge of visions, without some speciall direction & better certainty out of Gods word. 3. Wherefore Abraham nothing doubting, but that God spake unto him, did easily overcome all other troublesome thoughts. As that it might seeme an unnaturall and cruell part, for the father to kill his owne sonne; and that God did appeare to be contrary to himselfe, in commanding him to be killed, in whom Abraham was promised to bee blessed and increased: the first doubt Abraham was satisfied in, because nothing which God commandeth can be against nature, seeing he is the author of nature, although God may worke against the ordinary course of nature. And like as God hath inflicted death justly upon all both good and bad, so at Gods speciall bidding to take away mans life, is not mans act, but Gods: and therefore just. Against the other doubt Abrahams faith prevailed: for hee doubted not, but that God was able to raise up Isaack againe from the dead, Heb. 11.9.

QVEST. VIII. Of the distance of the mount Moreah from Beersheba.

Vers. 3. The third day Abraham lift up his eyes. 1. Neither doe I thinke with Tostatus, that this mountaine Moriah was under 20. miles, and so not a dayes journey from Beersheba, where Abraham dwelt, and that hee as full of care and grieve went but an easie pace: for it was most like, that hee which rose up so early, assoone as the Commandement was given him, would make all haste also to performe it. * 2. Neither need wee thus to reckon the dayes with Perer. that the first day must be accounted, that, which went before, whereof the night was a part, wherein God spake to Abraham, and so hee travelled but one whole day; for this seemeth to bee against the text, that counteth the third day from Abrahams setting forth. 3. Therefore I approve rather Hieromes opinion, which thinketh that from Gerar to mount Moriah, it was three dayes journey: and so we need not force the letter of the Scripture.

QVEST. IX. How the mountaine Moriah was shewed to Abraham.

Vers. 4. Saw the place afarre off. 1. Abraham knew not this mountaine by a pillar of fire upon it, at some Hebrewes thinke: nor by any externall visible meanes: 2. neither by any vision, or dreame: for in the last vision the Lord said, which I will shew thee, v. 2. 3. but it is most like, that God shewed it him by some secret instinct, as he used to speake to his Prophets, and as David was shewed to Samuel, 2 Sam. 16.12.

QVEST. X. In what sense Abraham saith to his servants, we will come againe.

Vers. 5. And come againe unto you. 1. Neither doth Abraham here utter an untruth, saying they would come againe, whereas he in his minde purposed to sacrifice Isaack. 2. neither doth he so speak, including a secret condition, si Deus voluerit, if God will, Thom. Angli. for Abraham knew the will of God was otherwise, that Isaack should be sacrificed. 3. neither was this a figurative speech, in using the singular for the plurall▪ as though Abraham should meane only himselfe, for he meaneth his sonne direct|ly, I and my child, &c. 4. neither yet doth Abraham speake so cunningly or captiously: captiose loqu▪ba|tur, &c. lest any of his servants, knowing his businesse, should have gone about to hinder it: as Ambr. lib. 1. de Abraham. c. 8.5. nor yet did Abraham so speake, because he knew God would raise up Isaack againe to life: as Origen. hom. 8. Genes. The Apostle only saith, that he considered, that God was able to raise him up even from the dead: but that God would doe it so presently, he knew not: neither had it beene such a triall of his faith to sacrifice his sonne, if hee had beene sure, that his sonne should in that instant have beene restored againe to life. 6. I thinke rather that Abraham, being generally by faith assured of Gods power, yet was ignorant in this particular, what would fall out: and therefore spake as a man amazed and astonished: and yet ignorantly prophesied. Prophetavit quod ignoravit. Ambr. lun.

QVEST. XI. Of Abrahams constancy and Isaacks obedience.

Vers. 7. MY Father, &c. 1. Abrahams settled constancy appeareth that notwithstanding these amiable words of his sonne, yet cannot be turned from his purpose: nomina v^otae solent operarigratiam, non ministerium necis: words of life, as to call father; sonne, doe insinuate grace and savour, they minister occasion of death. 2. Isaacks obedience is commended, who willingly submitteth himselfe. 1. being now 25^a yeares old, and so strong enough to resist his old and weake father, yet he yeeldeth him|selfe. Calvin. 2. He was bound, not that his resistance should be feared, but least any involuntarie motion by the pangs of death, might have beene procured. Perer. 3. his willingnesse further appeareth, in that Isaack maketh no request for his life: nemo rogat, nemo se excusat: neither he entreateth, nor his fa|ther excuseth this fact, Poets doe fable, how Iphigenia Agamemnons daughter, was sacrificed to the gods, for the safety of the whole armie; but here we have a true stistory. 4. It is most like, that Abraham had before declared Gods commandement unto Isaack, to the which hee was obedient. Iosephus proceedeth further to shew what the communication was betweene them: but whence knoweth he that? it is out of doubt that Isaack was made acquainted with Gods counsell, wherewith hee rested conten|ted, Luther.

QVEST. XII. Why the Lord would not have Isaack offered up in sacrifice though he so commanded, for the triall of Abrahams faith.

Vers. 11. The Angell of the Lord called to him. 1. I will omit here to make any long mention of the fa|bles of the Hebrewes: how that Sathan appeared in the shape of an old man to Abraham▪ and againe to Sarah; and in the likenesse of a young man to Isaack, to draw them from obedience to Gods commandement, but he prevailed not. Muscul. 2. The heathen also by their poeticall fictions <◇> obscured the credit and truth of this history: for as the Angell of God appeared in this last and extreme point to Abraham, so they have also counterfeited the apparition of their gods in extreme perils. Calvin. 3. Thus it pleased God, that, although Abrahams faith was tried with this hard Commandement, that it should not be performed: 1. for his owne glory sake, lest that Abrahams God might have beene traduced among the heathen, as a lover of humane blood: 2. for Abrahams sakes, that the Lord might more amply reward him for his faithfull obedience. 3. for our sakes, that we might have the example of faithfull Abraham to follow: 4. and for the generall instruction of Christians: that this might bee a lively figure unto them of the sacrifice of Christ: both of Gods love in giving him to dye for the world, and his obedience in humbling himselfe to the altar of the crosse. And therefore Ambrose fitly applyeth those words of Abraham, v. 8. God will provide him a lamb for a burnt offering, to the sacrifice of Christ: which was, that alia hostia, quam Deus pararet, that other offering which God would provide: lib. 1 de Abrah. c. 8.

QVEST. XIII. How the Lord saith, I know now that thou fearest, &c.

Vers. 12. NOw I know, &c. 1. Not that God is ignorant of any thing, or can have any experimentall knowledge of any thing which hee knew not before: for all things are naked in his sight. 2. Neither, as Augustine expoundeth, is God said to know, quia fecit, ut sibi Abraham innotesceret: because he made Abraham to be knowne to himselfe, qu. Genes. 58. for then he should have rather said, Now thou thy selfe knowest, &c. 3. Some doe take it for the knowledge of approbation: I have knowne thee, that is, ap|proved this fact of thine, as it is said, Psal. 1. The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous. Hillary. 4. Some referre it to Gods eternall knowledge: I have knowne from the beginning, that thou shouldest doe this thing, but I appointed it to be done only now: but this had beene no commendation to Abraham: for thus God may be said to know every thing, whether commendable or otherwise. T. hom. Angel. 5. Wherefore the Lord speaketh here, humanitus, after the phrase of man, and by a metaphor. Iun. and in effect it is nothing else, but that Abraham had now declared and testified his faith by his fruitfull obedience. Calvin. as Chrysostome saith, Nunc omnibus declarasti, quomodo Deum sincere colas▪ thou hast made manifest to all, that thou sincerely worshippest God. hom. 47. in Gen.

QVEST. XIV. Why this fact of Abraham is rather ascribed to feare than love.

Vers. 12. THat thou fearest God. It is so said, rather, than that thou lovest God: 1. because the love of God must be joynd with a reverent feare of God: serve the Lord with feare. Psal. 4. and the love of God bringeth forth a filiall and dutifull feare: as the child that loveth his father, will also feare him. 2. the feare of God is generally taken, not for the particular act of feare, but for the whole worship of God: as Psal. 25.14. The secrets of the Lord is revealed, to those that feare him: and so feare in this sense comprehendeth also love. 3. because Abraham had now forgotten his naturall love and affection, toward his sonne, because he feared God, this act is more properly ascribed to his religious feare. Per.

QVEST. XV. This fact of Abraham wherein it excelleth the like among the heathen.

NOW concerning the excellency of Abrahams fact, whereas the heathen objected the like examples among them, to obscure this resolution of Abraham: as how Codrus of Athens offered himselfe for his people: and one Idomeneus King of Creet, as he came from the battell of Troy, being in a great tempest upon the sea, did vow unto Neptune, the first thing, which came forth to meet him, which was his sonne, and so he did: Marius is mentioned by Cyril against Iulian, that sacrificed his sonne: so the Scripture recordeth that inhumane facti of the King of Moab, that did offer up his sonne in sacrifice. 2 King. 4. It shall now appeare what great difference there is, between these examples, and the fact of Abraham, both in the difficulty of the object, the readinesse of his affection, the end also and purpose of the action.

1. Abraham offred up his only sonne, whom hee dearely loved, being the sonne of his old age: a ver|tuous and obedient sonne, upon whom depended, not only the continuance of his name and posterity, but the promise of the Messiah: these things could not concur in any of the other examples.

2. Abraham did every thing with singular alacrity: in the beginning he answered God presently, hee tooke his journey in hand speedily: in the midst, he shewed in his three dayes journey a settled constancy; in laying the wood upon his sonne, and going up the hill, great magnanimity▪ and in the end in building an altar, binding his son, lifting up his hand to strike, fortitude invincible: the like is not to be found in those heathenish presidents.

3. Concerning the end: they did it to purchase some benefit to themselves or their countrey, as Codrus Idomeneus: for feare, as the King of Moab; or to get them immortall fame. Some, because it was the custome of the countrey: as Philo giveth instance of the Gymnosophists among the Indians, that when they were old, did cast themselves into the fire, and their wives after them. But none of these things moved Abraham: not feare of man, for no man knew this oracle but himselfe: not the escaping of any calamity: w^hch was not neare him: nor any desire of praise, for he was alone upon the mountaine: neither was there any such custome in Babylon, or Mesopotamia, from whence Abraham came. Philo. but the only feare and reverence, which Abraham did yeeld unto God, and the love of his Commandements, did induce him to performe this hard part of service.

QVEST. XVI. Of the ramme that was intangled in the bush.

Vers. 13. BEhold there was a ramme caught by the hornes in a bush, &c. 1. Neither is the conceit of Eu/seb. Emissen. to bee received, that thinketh sabech, translated a bush, to be a kinde of goat with upright hornes: neither is it a kind of shrub, or bryer so called, as the septuagint thinke, or of a tree, as Gennad. and Theodoret, nor yet is it fitly translated, erectus, upright, as some read: but the word sabech signifieth the perplexity, winding, or clasping of a bush, a brier. 2. The fable of the Hebrewes, that this ram was created the sixth day, and kept 3000. yeares for this use, is ridiculous, and worthy to bee laughed at.* 3. Ambrose maketh this ram a type of Christ: by his hanging in a tree or bush prefiguring the manner of Christs passion, in hanging upon a tree: lib. 1. de Abraham. cap. 8.

QVEST. XVII. How Abraham would take a ramme which was not his owne.

NOW whereas it may be doubted, how Abraham would take a beast for sacrifice, that was none of his owne: It may be answered; 1. That Abraham having made an altar, and prepared himselfe to sacrifice, did take it to be an irreligious act to depart, having not performed that service, and therefore of purpose looked about, to see what sacrifice might be offered to God. 2. And seeing a ram, hee tooke it as sent of God, and remembred, what he had said before, that the Lord would provide a sacrifice: 3. There|fore, he knowing, that the Lord had provided this offering, he maketh no doubt or scruple to use it: nei|ther is inquisitive to examine who was the owner: seeing that the earth is the Lords and all things there|in: to whose dominion, every mans right and title ought to stoope and give place. Muscul.

QVEST. XVIII. How the Lord will be seene in the mountaine.

Vers. 14. IN the mount will the Lord be seene. 1. The septuagint, reading, the Lord was seene, referre it to the appearing of the Angell in the mount. 2. Hierome reading, the Lord will see, seemeth to understand it, of Gods providing of a sacrifice, as Abraham had said before, v. 8. 3. Some Hebrewes doe take it to bee a prophecie of the Temple, which should afterward bee built at Jerusalem, where the Lord would manifest and shew himselfe: so also the Chalde paraphrast expoundeth. 4. But beside these inter|pretations, which may indifferently be received: this name given upon this occasion, and growing into a proverbe, hath this sense, that in like sort, in the mountaine of the Lord, that is, in due time and place, his children in their necessities, shall be provided for: and therefore Iunius better readeth: in the mountaine of the Lord it shall be provided.

QVEST. XIX. He was an Angell, and not Christ, that spake here unto Abraham.

Vers. 15. AND the Angell of the Lord, &c. 1. This Angell was not Christ: for the Angell addeth, by my selfe have I sworne (saith the Lord:) he speaketh then in the person of the Lord, as being not that Lord himselfe; but Christ, being God, would have spoken in his owne person. 2. Therefore Origen is found to be in a great errour: whose words upon this place are these, unde put, quod sicut inter ho/mines habitu repertus est ut homo, ita inter Angelos habitu repertus est ut Angelus: As among men he was found in habit as a man, so among the Angels he was found in habit as an Angell. Unlesse Origen be favourably inter|preted to speake of the office of an Angell: for so Christ diversly appeared to the Prophets and fa|thers: but if hee meane, that Christ tooke upon him the very nature and person of an Angell, it is a great errour, and contrary to the Apostle, Heb. 2.16. hee in no sort tooke the Angels. 3. Therefore it is an Angell, which as Gods messenger, for the greater authority, speaketh in the name of him that sent him. Calvin.

QVEST. XX. Of the forme and manner of Gods oath.

Vers. 16. BY my selfe have I sworne: 1. Some would have the forme of Gods oath to bee in this particle, chi, translated by the Apostle < in non-Latin alphabet >, certe, surely, Heb. 6.14. the Latine translateth it nisi, unlesse, as though it were 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, as Psal. 95.11. I sware in my wrath, if they shall enter into my rest: as though the oath should be explained thus: let me not live, or let me not be God, if, &c. Perer. But wee need not so curiously to search out any other forme of Gods oath, than that here expressed: I sware by my selfe: the Chalde, by my word.

2. Philo maketh a nice and curious difference betweene swearing by God,^{*} and by the name or word of God: the first, God only sweareth by, man by the second: for to sweare by himselfe, by his name, by his word, are all one: God sweareth by himselfe, Isay 45.23. by his soule▪ Ierem. 51.14. Amos 6.8. by his name, Ierem. 44.26. by his holinesse, Amos 4.2. by his right hand, Isay 62.8. 3. So then like as a debter doth use two wayes to satisfie his creditor, by leaving a pledge or pawne, or procuring some surety: in like manner he that taketh an oath, sometime sweareth by his soule, by his holnesty, faith, &c. as laying these things to pawne, that he will lose the credit of them, if hee speake not the truth: sometime by God, as making him his surety, and witnesse, that he speaketh the truth. So the Lord swearing by his holinesse, goodnesse, &c. doth pledge them, that unlesse that be, which he saith, he will lose them: and swearing by himselfe, he bindeth his Godhead for the performance, as though he should say in effect, If this be not, let me be no more God. Calvin.

QUEST. XXI. Why the Lord tooke an oath.

BUt further it will be asked, what need God had to take an oath, seeing the word of God is certaine of it selfe, and need no confirmation; and an oath is used in doubtfull cases, but to God nothing is doubtfull or uncertaine: an oath is used, when the party cannot be credited without an oath; but Abraham did beleve God. The answer then is this. 1. The Lord sweareth not to any such end, as though any more creldit and certainty by his oath might bee wonne unto his promise. 2. And yet wee take not this to bee a metaphoricall speech onely with Cajetan: that God is said to sweare by himselfe. 3. But the Lord taketh an oath, ad ampliorem confirmationem fidei nostra, for the better confirmation of our faith: and hee doth it, the Apostle saith ex abundanti, more abundantly to shew the stablenesse of his counsell, Heb. 6.17. Calvin. 4. Where we may note the differences betweene this oath and other oathes.^{*} 1. God taketh this oath willingly, not forced thereto of any necessity. 2. He sweareth by himselfe, as having not a greater to sweare by; and Philosheweth the reason: Solus de seipso asseverare potest, quia solus ipse suam novit naturam: He only can beare witnesse of himselfe, because he only knoweth his owne nature. 3. He also further saith; Sententiae nostra ex juramento fides accedit, ipsi juramento ex ipso Deo fides astruitur; Our sentence is credited because of our oath, but this oath is beleaved, because of God that taketh it.

QUEST. XXII. Whether the promises here made are new, or the old renewed.

Vers. 18. IN thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. 1. It is of all hands confessed, that the other three promises were made unto Abraham before. 1. That Abraham should be blessed, Genes. 12.2. 2. That his seed should be multiplied as the starres, and as the sand of the sea, Genes. 13.16. 3. That his seed should possesse the gate of his enemies, which is in effect the same with that Genes. 13.12. all this land will I give thee, &c. God promised Abraham the land of the Canaanites, which were his enemies. 2. But Ambrose thinketh that this was a new blessing, containing a promise of the Messiah; lib. 1. de Abraham c. 8. Paulus Burgensis confirmeth the same by these reasons; because Saint Paul rehearseth this as a speciall blessing concerning Christ, urging these words, in thy seed, which are onely found here; and the Lord confirmeth this by an oath, as Zachary in his song maketh mention of this oath, which hee sware to our father Abraham, Luke 1.73. 3. But these reasons are easily answered; 1. Saint Paul citeth, rather that promise made, Genes. 12.3. in thee shall all the Gentiles be blessed, Galath. 3.8. for hee speaketh of that promise which was made 430. yeares before the law, which must needs be that former given to Abraham at the 75. yeare of his age; but there will want 50. yeares of that summe, if the account should begin at this time, when Abraham was 125. yeares old; And whereas Saint Paul also alludeth unto this place, v. 16. and thy seed; and so expoundeth one place by another, he sheweth, that in effect, they are both but one promise. 2. The adding of the oath, maketh it not a new promise, but confirmeth onely the former; otherwise by this reason, all these promises should be newly made, seeing the oath goeth before them all; and indeed not onely this promise of the Messiah, but the other also concerning the possessing of the land of Canaan was ratified by an oath, Exod. 13.5. Perer. 4. Wherefore here is no other promise made to Abraham, but such as he had heard before; but the same more amply and fully confirmed by an oath, and againe renewed both to Abraham and Isaack: in which two respects, this promise is more excellent than the former, Calvin.

QUEST. XXIII. How Saint Paul applieth this word Seed only to Christ. 3 to the Galath.

Here by the way, it shall not be amisse to explaine that place of Saint Paul, Galath. 3.16. where the Apostle presseth the word seed, shewing that because he saith, seed, not seeds, it must bee referred to one, namely Christ. The Jewes doe make two principall objections against this place. 1. They urge, that this word metaphorically taken for the of-spring of men, is a nowne collective, never used in the plurall number, but put in the singular, only signifieth a multitude, as likewise doth the word populus, vulgus, people, commonalty, &c.

* Answer. 1. True it is, that the word Zeraugh, in the singular number doth often signifie a multitude; but sometime in Scripture it is restrained to one, as Gen. 4.25. the name of seed is given to Seth, the Lord hath appointed me another seed for Habel, Genes. 21.13. Ismael is called Abrahams seed. Wherefore it is not enough to say that this word in the singular is sometime taken for a multitude, unlesse they could shew it so to be used here, Beza. 2. The Apostle then, being not ignorant of the phrase and usage of the Hebrew tongue, doth not contend about the word, but the sense: that the word seed in this place is not taken for seeds, that is, many, but for seed, that is, one specially, Perer. 21. They object further: that whereas it is said, In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, this is but a forme of blessing, by way of comparison, like to that, Gen. 48.20. God make thee as Ephraim, &c. Ans. 1. If this speech did onely shew a forme, not the cause of blessing: it need not have beene said in thy seed, but in thee: that is, Abraham: God make thee like Abraham. 2. Where such formes of blessing are used, they are restrained to Israel: as in the place alleaged. Gen. 48. In thee Israel shall blesse: but here all nations shall bee blessed: how should it come to passe, that all nations should not blesse themselves, but bee blessed, but in being called to the knowledge of God, which is by Christ: wherefore these words shew the cause of blessing, not the forme, Calvin.

Now then, their objections being thus answered, I will shew the right meaning of the Apostle. 1. I first reject Hieromes collection,* reproved by Erasmus: Paulum hoc argumento abusum apud crassos Galatas: that Paul abuseth this argument, having to doe with the dull Galathians: for it becommeth us not so to think of so grave an Apostle, writing by the Spirit of God. 2. Neither is it enough to say, that Paul by the same Spirit whereby Moses did write, did understand him to speake of Christ, Cajetan. in 3. ad Galat. for Paul having to deale with the gain-saying Jewes, would not so much stand upon his Apostolike illumination, neither would they rest upon it. 3. Neither is the word seed taken here not singularly for the person of Christ, but collectively for the whole spirituall seed of Abraham, the people of God consisting of the Jewes and Gentiles, Beza. for this sense seemeth to bee coact and not proper: and the Apostle himselfe denieth it to bee understood of many, but of one. 4. Neither doth Saint Paul ground his argument upon the received opinion and confession of the Jewes, which hee was experienced in, being brought up under the feet of Gamaliel; who all generally did hold this promise of blessing in Abrahams seed, to be understood of the Messiah, Perer: for thus the Apostles reasoning should be inverted, and that made his conclusion, which is his argument: for the Apostle doth not reason thus; This place is referred to the Messiah, Ergo, he saith, not seeds, but seed: But thus rather standeth his argument; In saying seed, not seeds, hee meaneth but one, Ergo, the Messiah, that is, Christ. 5. Wherefore if the Apostles words bee thorowly weighed and examined, he enforceth two conclusions in this one sentence: the first is, that this place out of Moses must needs be interpreted, not of all Abrahams seed confusedly, but of some one specially: the other is, that this being evicted, that the Lord in this promise speaketh but of one, it will follow of necessity that this one must be Christ.

For the first; that Abrahams seed is not understood promiscuè, for all his seed, the Jewes themselves could not deny: for this seed was first restrained to Isaack, and Ismael excluded, then in Isaack it was assigned to Iacob, and Esau refused: in Iacob this seed was singled out in Juda, when the other tribes were carried into captivity, and never returned: therefore seed here cannot bee taken for many, but wee must still proceed in descending, till we come to one in whom this blessing is performed, Calvin.

For the second; that this one must be Christ, it will necessarily follow, because none else can be named▪ in whom all the Gentiles received this blessing: for that place, Psal. 72.17. All nations shall blesse him, and be blessed in him, cannot be understood of Salomon,* who was so farre from procuring a blessing to all nations, that he brought a curse upon his owne nation and posterity, when for his idolatry a rent was made in the Kingdome, the smallest part falling to the share of his sonne Rehoboam. And beside, this Psalme is a propheticall song of Christ under the type of Salomon, as vers. 5. They shall reare him as long as the Sunne and Moone endureth: vers. 11. All Kings shall worship him: vers. 17. His name shall endure for ever. These sayings cannot be uttered of Salomon, or any other mortall man, but onely are true of the Lord Messiah. There being then none else found by whom the Gentiles were spiritually blessed, in being called from their filthy idolatry, to the knowledge and worship of the true God, in being lightened with Scriptures, brought to the acknowledgement, and so remission of their sinnes, but onely Christ: none else in whom they beleeve, whose name is blessed among them: Who can this else bee but Jesus Christ the Messiah? And thus it is evident, that the Apostle hath reasoned strongly from this place, that salvation commeth not by the Law, but by faith in Christ, which is the thing the Apostle in this place intendeth to prove.

QUEST. XXIII. Whether Abrahams obedience, or Isaacks patience were more notable.

IT may seeme that Isaacks obedience in yeelding himselfe willingly to death, was more excellent and worthy of note than Abrahams; because it is a greater patience to suffer death for Gods cause, than to inferre it: Isaack also should have felt the sorrowes and pangs of death in his body, which Abraham was onely to behold. Notwithstanding these reasons, *Abraham*s example of obedience excelled: 1. Because he was to sacrifice his onely, most beloved, and innocent sonne, which was no doubt more grievous unto him, than if he had died himselfe. 2. Isaacks death came unlooked for: it should have beene finished at once: Abrahams grieve, as it pierced his heart three continuall dayes before, so the remembrance of this fact would have continued still. 3. The Scripture giveth sentence with Abraham, which maketh mention in this place, and others beside, of Abrahams offering up of Isaack, but ascribeth no part thereof to Isaack.

Now because that example of the King of Moab,* which offered up the King of Edoms sonne in sacrifice, and not his owne, as the common opinion is, may be thought to resemble Abrahams fact here, it shall not be amisse briefly to examine that place, as it is set downe, 2 King. 3.27.

QUEST. XXIV. Whether the King of Moab sacrificed his sonne, and wherefore.

First then, 1. Neither is it like that the King of Moab having learned of his Priests that God prospered Israel because of Abrahams faith, which doubted not to offer his sonne, as Lyranus: therefore he attempted to doe the like: for at this time the Israelites did not so greatly prosper, the kingdome being divided because of the idolatry of Salomon, and diversly afflicted: and the King of Moab offered not his owne son, but the King of Edoms, as it is expounded by Amos 2.1. For three transgressions I will not turne to Moab, &c. because it burnt the bones of the King of Edom as lime. 2. Neither did the King of Moab this by the advice of the Priests, after the example of Israel, because they used to offer up their sons to Molech, thinking to please the God of Israel hereby, Burgens. For the Israelites rather learned this idolatrous use of the Gentiles: and the Israelites prospered not, but were punished of God for such impieties. 3. Nor yet did the King of Moab this to move the Israelites to commiseration, when they should see to what misery and necessity he was brought, to offer such a bloody sacrifice, as Tostat. and Vatab. for he did it rather to despight them, as shall even now appeare. 4. Nor yet did he offer this sacrifice only with an intent thereby to appease his gods, and to procure their help: which opinion indeed the heathen had of such wicked and devillish offerings, Cajetan. Perer. 5. But it is most likely that the King of Moab assaying to breake thow to the King of Edom, and could not, tooke the Kings sonne of Edom that was to reigne after him, (and therefore is called the King of Edom, Amos 2.1.) and sacrificed him in the sight of his father, to his great grieve, Iunius.

QUEST. XXV. What was the cause of the indignation against Israel.

SEcondly, where it followeth thus; For that Israel was sore grieved, and they departed from him, or there was great indignation against Israel: 1. This is not referred to the indignation or wrath of God, as though the Lord should be offended with Israel, & sent a plague amongst them, because the King of Moab by their evill example did sacrifice the King of Edoms son, as Burgens. for no such thing is expressed in the text. 2. Neither was this indignation conceived by the idolatrous Israelites against the rest, thinking the King of Moab invincible, because of this sacrifice, Cajetan. for this indignation was kindled, not by the Israelites, but against them. 3. And for the same reason the common exposition seemeth not to be so proper, that this indignation and grieve of the Israelites was for the horror and cruelty of this unnaturall fact, which they could not endure to behold, Tostat. for this indignation or wrath should not have beene against the Israelites, but against the King of Moab. 4. Therefore it seemeth more agreeable to the text, that this wrath was on the Edomites part against the Israelites, because it was their quarrell that brought the King of Edom to take part with them against the Moabites, upon which occasion this hard hap fell out upon his sonne: and upon this division they brake off, and left the siege, Iunius.

QUEST. XXVI. Of Huz, Buz, Kemuel, Chesed, the sonnes of Nahor.

Vers. 21. HVz, &c. and Buz. Of this Huz was not named the Countrey where Iob dwelt, Iob 1.1. but of that Huz rather which was the sonne of Aram, Genes. 10.22. Hierome. 2. Of Buz came the family of the Buzites, of the which Elihu was, Iob 32.6. 3. Kemuel here mentioned, was not the father of the Syrians, as the Greeke and vulgar Latine read; nor yet of Aram Naharaim, as Tostatus, or Aram Seba, as Cajetane: for the City of Nahor was in Aram, Genes. 24.10. This name and Countrey therefore was more ancient than Kemuel Nahors sonne, and was rather so called of Aram the sonne of Sem, Genes. 10.22. 4. Neither is Chesed here named the father of the Chaldees, which was Abrahams Countrey, and could not therefore be founded by his nephew. 5. But these sonnes of Nahor were fathers of certaine families in Syria, whereof there was some remainder in Constantius Caesars time: as may appeare by the names of certaine townes, Reman, and Buzan, remembred by Ammianus, Lib. 18. ex Iun.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. How God is said to tempt.

Vers. 1. GOd did tempt or prove Abraham, &c. 1. God is not said here to tempt Abraham, metaphoricè, metaphorically, as he is said to be angry, to repent, in a figurative speech, as Cajetane: but God truly and verily tempteth, that is, proveth and taketh triall of Abrahams faith. 2. And God doth it, Non ut ipse hominem inveniatur, sed ut homo se inveniatur: Not that God need to finde out man, but that man may finde out himselfe, as Augustines saith. 3. God tempteth otherwise than Satan is said to tempt: God properly is the author only of good temptations, but Satan is the tempter unto evill. Evill temptations proceeed not from God, effective, sed permissive, by way of action, but by way of permission: when the Lord withdraweth his sufficient grace, and necessary helpe.

* Gods tempting, and Satans tempting doe diversly differ: 1. In respect of the end, Deus tentat ut doceat, Diabolus ut decipiat; God tempteth to teach, the Devill to deceive, as Augustine saith. 2. In respect of the persons: God tempteth onely the good, to make their faith and obedience knowne: sometimes the weake are tried, that after they have fallen they may repent and be restored: sometimes the strong, that they may be more and more confirmed: But the devill tempteth both good and bad, the good to bring them in|to evill; the bad that they forsake not evill. 3. The object of good and evill temptations are divers; good temptations are especially seene in outward things, as in poverty, sicknesse, persecution, and such like: evill temptations are exercised in spirituall and inward evils, as in evill suggestions, ungodly thoughts, stirring to evill desires, and provoking to sinne, Perer.

2. Doct. The grave motions of the spirit of God, differ from the furious fansies of those led with an evill spirit.

Vers. 4. Then the third day, &c. We see a manifest difference betweene the furious and sudden motions of those which are possessed with an evill spirit; such as Saul had, who in his rage all at once, cast a javelin at his sonne Jonathan to have killed him, 1. Sam. 20.33. and the deliberate actions of those which are guided by the good spirit of God: as here Abraham not suddenly is moved to sacrifice his son, but after three dayes journey, having thorowly advised upon it, he obediently yeeldeth himselfe to Gods commandement.

3. Doct. The obedience of the will is accepted of God for the deed.

Vers. 12. SEeing for my sake thou hast not spared thine onely sonne. God accepteth the resolute purpose and will of Abraham for the done deed. An obedient will then is accepted before God as the worke it selfe: as the Apostle saith, If first there be a willing minde, God accepteth it according to that a man hath, not according to that he hath not, 2 Cor. 8.12. Muscul.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. By faith we are assured of our justification.

Vers. 12. I Know that thou fearest God. It is confessed by our adversaries, that Abraham at this time was certaine that he was in the state of grace: but because it is their opinion, that we cannot by faith ordinarily be assured of remission of sinnes, they have framed divers answers to this place.

1. Thomas Aquinas saith, that this assurance that Abraham had, was a particular experimentall knowledge, that in this worke he feared God, Thom. 1.2. qu. 112. ar. 3. Cont. Abraham not onely in this particular was assured of Gods favour, but was undoubtedly perswaded of the promise in generall con|cerning the Messiah: as the Apostle saith, Neither did he doubt of the promise, &c. but was strengthened in the faith, Rom. 4.20. And this is that which our Saviour saith, That Abraham desired to see his day, he saw it and rejoyced, Ioh. 8.56. His assurance which he had of salvation in the Messiah, procured unto him this great joy.

2. The same Thomas saith, Abraham illud cognovit per specialem Dei revelationem; That Abraham knew this, that he was in the state of grace by Gods speciall revelation. Contra. This assurance that Abraham had,* was not by any particular or extraordinary revelation, but by the proper and ordinary operation of faith: as the Apostle saith, He was strengthened in the faith, Rom. 4.20.

3. Pererius answereth, that this revelation was made to the Patriarks in the old Testament, and the Apostles in the new, which were, as it were, the founders of the people of God, 10. disput. in 22. cap. Gen.

Contra. Saint Paul in the matter of faith maketh no such difference betweene the Patriarks and other beleevers; as he saith, Now it is not written for him onely, that it was imputed to him for righteousness▪ but also for us, &c. Rom. 4.23. And the Apostle saith, That a crowne of righteousness was not onely laid up for him, but unto them also which love his appearing, 2 Tim. 4.8. where the same certainty of the reward is de|creed, the like assurance is not denied.

4. Bellarmino answereth, that hence it is evident that all beleevers are not sure of their justification, seeing Abraham that had served God most faithfully before, yet never till now was assured of his justifi|cation, lib. 3. de justif. cap. 11. resp. ad ration. 1.

Contra. It followeth not, Abraham was not alwayes assured, therefore every beleever cannot be assu|red: but it well followeth, that as there was a time when Abraham had not such assurance, so the faith|full at all times have not such perswasion, and that we grant. 2. It is untrue that Abraham had not this assurance till now, when he offered up Isaack: for the Apostle sheweth, that then hee had this assu|rance, when faith was imputed to him for righteousness, Rom. 4.22, 23. which was before he was circum|cised, Gen. 15.6.

5. Bellarmino againe answereth, that the Scripture commending the righteousness of Abraham and other Patriarks, doth rather make us certaine and sure of their salvation, than themselves, ibid.

Contra. No mans salvation can be better knowne to another than to himselfe: for as the life of the body is more felt where that life is, than of others that see the bodies to live: so saith, which is the life of the soule, as the Scripture saith, The just shall live by faith, is better apprehended of those which have the possession of it, than of such as onely behold it.

2. Confut. The promises not merited by Abrahams obedience.

Vers. 16. BEcause thou hast done this thing, &c. From hence Pererius inferreth, that Abraham, Egregio illo facto meruisse, Deserved by this worthy act, that such promises were made unto him, and that the Messiah should be borne of his stocke, rather than of any other.

Contra. 1. The Apostle doth conclude the contrary, that because faith was imputed to Abraham for righteousness, he was not justified by works, Rom. 4.2, 4. 2. These promises were made to Abraham before he had shewed any worthy worke: even then, when he was first called out of his Countrey, Gen 12.2. they then proceeded from Gods mercy, not of Abrahams desert or worthinesse. 3. The Lord therefore crowneth Abrahams obedience with renewing his promises, to shew us, that they which are justified by faith, ought to proceed and goe forward in good works, whereby their faith is approved, Muscul.

3. Confut. The assumption of the humane nature to the God-head in Christ not merited.

4. BUt to say that Abraham merited, that the Messiah should take flesh of his seed, is not farre from blasphemy; for then he should have merited more than Christ himselfe did, as he was man: seeing that the hypostaticall union of the humane nature with the God-head in one person, was of grace, not of merit: as Augustine well resolveth, Quod Christus est unigenitus aequalis patri, non est gratia, sed natura; quod autem in unitatem personae unigeniti assumptus est homo, gratia est, non natura: That Christ was the onely begotten Son equall to his Father, it was not grace but nature: but in that mans nature was taken to make one person, with the onely begotten, it was of grace, and not by nature.* But now, if the man Christ deserved not the assumption or taking of the humane nature to the God-head, and yet Abraham merited, that his seed should in the Messiah be united to the God-head, it will follow that he merited more than Christ; wherefore that is a sound and Catholike conclusion of Augustine, Neque enim illam susceptionem hominis ulla merita praecesserunt, sed ab illa susceptione merita ejus cuncta caeperunt:* before the taking of mans nature there was no merits at all, but all Christs merits tooke beginning there.

4. Confut. The Chalde Paraphrast corrupt.

Vers. 18. IN thy seed, &c. So readeth the Septuagint according to the originall, in the singular number, and this reading is approved by the Apostle, Galath. 3.16. Wherefore the Chalde Paraphrast is found here to be corrupt: which readeth thus in the plurall number; In thy sonnes shall all the people of the earth be blessed.

5. Confut. Many in Scripture taken for all.

ALL the nations of the earth shall be blessed: And Gen. 17.5. the Lord saith, A father of many nations have I made thee: we see then that in the phrase of Scripture sometimes many are taken for all: by this place therefore that cavill of the Pelagians may be answered, who because the Apostle saith, By one mans disobedience many were made sinners, Rom. 5.19. would inferre that we became sinners not by originall corruption or propagation of sinne, but by imitation, for then the Apostle would have said, not many, but all. But the Apostle by many understandeth all, as he affirmeth, vers. 18. That by the offence of one the fault came upon all to condemnation: for they which are all, may truly be said to bee many. The like cavill in another question is urged by Catharinus a popish writer, who because it is said in Daniel 12.2. That many of them which sleepe in the dust shall awake, some to everlasting life, some to shame: collecteth, that all shall not,* but that some, as namely infants dying without baptisme, shall neither be in heaven nor hell: But this objection may receive the same answer, that as in the promise made to Abraham many is taken for all: so also is it in this place of the Prophet, as before also is shewed the like use in the Apostle.

6. Places of Exhortation.

1. Observ. To beare the death of children patiently.

Vers. 10. Abraham stretching forth his hand, tooke the knife, &c. Origen from this example of Abraham, that doubted not to offer up his sonne, perswadeth parents to beare patiently the death of their children, Laetus offer filium Deo, esto sacerdos anima filii tui: Chearfully offer thy sonne unto God, and be a Priest of his soule. This is nothing (saith he) to Abrahams strength, which bound his sonne himselfe, and bent his sword, Hom. 8. in Gen.

2. Observ. Confidence in Gods providence.

Vers. 14. IN the mount will the Lord provide, &c. We are taught with the like confidence, when all other meanes faile, to cast our care upon God, as Abraham did; for whom the Lord provided another sacrifice which he thought not upon, in stead of his sonne Isaack, Calvin. Therefore it is said in the Psalm. 68.20. To the Lord belong the issues of death: he knoweth how to make a way for our deliverance, though we at the first see it not.

3. Observ. Gods voice must be obeyed.

Vers. 18. IN thy seed shall all the Nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voyce: Whereupon Ambrose giveth this good note, Et nos ergo audiamus vocem Dei nostri, si volumus apud eum gratiam invenire: Let us therefore heare and obey the voice of God, if we will finde grace with him.

CHAP. XXIII.

1. The Argument and Contents.

T His Chapter treateth: 1. Of the death of Sarah, and Abrahams mourning for her, vers. 1, 2. 2. Of Abrahams care for her buriall: both of the communication had with the Hittites, and of the purchase of the ground at the hands of Ephron, vers. 12. to 18. Lastly, of the funerall it selfe, vers. 19.

2. The divers readings.

1. The Explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Of the yeares of Sarahs life, why noted.

Vers. 1. And Sarah lived an hundred twenty seven yeares, &c. 1. The Hebrewes note,* that the death of Sarah is immediately joyned to the birth of Rebecca, according to that saying in Ecclesiastes, The Sunne riseth, and the Sunne setteth, Mercer: 2. She is the only woman, whose whole age is recorded in Scripture. 3. Because the words are, she lived an hundred years, twenty yeares, and seven yeares: some He|brewes note by the dividing of the yeares, that she was at an hundred yeares as faire as at twenty, and as chaste as at seven. But this is too curious, seeing that the like phrase is used in setting downe Ismaels years, Gen. 25.17. in whom the like constancie, especially in goodnesse, appeared not. 4. Isaack was at this time thirty seven yeare old, being borne in Sarahs ninety yeare: therefore the Hebrewes observe that the let|ters of the first word vaiihu, doe make thirty seven, insinuating thereby, that these were the best dayes of Sarahs life, after the birth of Isaack, in whom she joyed. 5. But it is not like that Isaack was now thirty s•|ven yeares old, and Sarah died the same time when Isaack was offered up, the Devill representing the man|ner thereof to Sarah, as the Jewes fable, whereupon shee tooke a conceit and died: for whereas Abraham returned from Mount Moriah to Beersheba againe, and there dwelled, Gen. 22.19. but now he was removed to Hebron, where Sarah died; there must needs some good space of time come between Isaacks offering up, and Sarahs death, Perer: 6. Whereas the word is put in the plurall, the lives of Sarah: we need neither refer it to three lives in man, the vegetative, sensitive, intellectuall life, nor to the changes & alterations, wich see|meth to make one life many: but the word is so used according to the phrase of the Hebrew language, Calv.

QUEST. II. The City of Arba, whence so called.

Vers. 2. Sarah died in Kiriatharba: Which City Arbah, which signifieth foure, was so called; 1. Nei|ther of the foure giants, Ahiman, Sheshan, Talmay, Anach, Num. 13.23. for these were long after Abrahams time. 2. Nor yet of the foure Patriarks, Adam, Abraham, Isaack, Iacob, there buried: for neither can it be proved that Adam was there buried, and it was so called before the other were there buried. 3. Neither was it so named of the forme and fashion of the City, which should consist of foure parts. 4. But the Citie bare this name of Arbah, the father of Anak, Iosu. 14.14. and 15.13. Mercer.

QUEST. III. Of Hebron, supposed to be the City of Iohn Baptist.

The same is Hebron. 1. This City was not so named of Hebron, which came of one of the sonnes of Caleb, mentioned, 1 Chron. 2.42. for it was so called long before his time. 2. It is probable, that this City Hebron was the place of Iohn Baptists Nativity: for this City did belong to Iudah, and was a City of the Priests, 1 Chron. 6.55. it was also situate in the hilly Countrey, Iosua 14.12. so was the City of Iohn Baptist, both a City of Iudah belonging to the Priests, where Zachary his father dwelt, and had the situation in the hill Countrey, Luk. 1.39. 3. This Hebron is said to bee in Canaan, as it is taken for the name of the whole Countrey: for the Canaanites were also one of the seven Nations that inhab•ted that Countrey: to whom Hebron belonged not, but to the Hittites, Perer: 4. Hebron signifieth a society or conju•ction: for there Abraham and Sarah, •saack, Rebecca, Iacob, Lea, lay buried together as honourable couples: from hence then it seemeth the name was derived, Muscul.

QUEST. IV. Whence Abraham came to mourne for Sarah.

Vers. 2. Abraham came to mourne, &c. 1. Neither is it like that Abraham at this time dwelled in Beer[sheba], and Sarah in Hebron, and that he came thence hither to bewaile Sarah: for Abraham as he bewailed Sarah being dead, so he would not be wanting to her in her life. 2. Neither did Abraham come from burying of his father Thare, as some thinke: whom Pererius would have to die two yeare before: but the truth is, that he was dead 62. yeares before: for Abraham was now 137. yeares old, who was borne in the 70. yeare of Tharehs age, who lived 205. yeares in all: so Abraham was 75. yeares old when his father died, Gen. 12.5. to that adde 62. so shall we have Abrahams age of 137. 3. Neither doth this comming of Abraham signifie onely his addressing and preparing of himselfe to mourne, Mercer. 4. But Abraham commeth from his owne tent into Sarahs, to mourne for her, for they had their tents and habitations apart, as it may appeare, Gen. 24.67. Iun.

QUEST. V. Wherefore Abraham weepeth over the corps of Sarah.

Vers. 2. TO mourne for Sarah, and to weepe for her. 1. As Abraham by his weeping shewed his affectiōn, so by his mourning voice he set forth the vertues of Sarah, and bewailed his losses, Perer. 2. He weepeth over the corps, not to provoke himselfe to weepe by the sight thereof, being of late so much lightened with joy for Isaacks deliverance, as some Hebrewes thinke: but according to the use which then was, and after continued among the Jewes, which was to weepe a certaine time at the bodies or graves of the dead, as is evident, Ioh. 11.37.

QUEST. VI. Whether it were lawfull for Abraham to buy a place of buriall.

Vers. 4. Give me a possession of buriall with you, &c. Here a question is moved, whether it were lawfull for Ephron to sell a place of sepulture, or for Abraham to buy it: for answer whereunto, 1. I neither thinke with Hierome,* that Ephron did not well in selling a place of buriall for money, and therefore his name is changed from Ephron with vau, to Ephron without vau: but if it were a fault in Ephron to take money, Abraham could not be without fault in urging him to take it: 2. Neither can Abraham be excused, in redeeming by this meanes his trouble and vexation, as Aquinas thinketh: for we must not doe evill that good may come thereof.* 3. Neither say we with Lyranus, that Abraham buyeth onely the ground, the right of sepulture he buyeth not, but desireth it to be given him: for Abraham desireth it to be given him onely for his money, and not otherwise: as it followeth, vers. 9. 4. Nor yet with Thomas Anglicus, that the Sepulture of the Gentiles is no sacred thing, and therefore it cannot bee symoniacall to sell it:* for it had beene notwithstanding symoniacall in Abraham to buy it, that was no Gentile but a beleever. 5. Nor yet is Cajetans answer sufficient, that the place of buriall was then no sacred thing, there being no positive lawes made as yet of that matter, and therefore it was no sinne: for sinne is not a transgression of humane positive lawes, but of Gods Law. 6. Nor yet say we with Tostatus, that Ephron intended onely to make this field a burying place:* but as yet none were there buried, and therefore the place was not sacred. 7. But I rather preferre Thomas Aquinas other resolution, that this double cave was not yet consecrate or ordained for sepulture,* and therefore Abraham might lawfully buy it, and the other sell it: as it is lawfull to buy a peece of ground to build a Church, or make a Church|yard in. 8. Adde hereunto, that Abraham would bury his dead apart from the Infidels, that had no hope of the resurrection, Calvin: and that the dead should take possession of that land, which should after|ward be given to their living and remaining posterity, Mercer.

QUEST. VII. Abraham why he is called a Prince of God.

Vers. 6. Thou art a Prince of God among us. 1. Not that he was a King, or had any authority over them: as the Septuagint read, Thou art a King from God among us. 2. But either he is so called, because he was as Gods oracle (the Lord speaking to him by visions and dreames) unto whom they had recourse for counsell in difficult matters, Lyran. Tostat. 3. Or because according to the Hebrew phrase, excellent things are so named of God, as the mountaine of God, a man of God: the wrestlings of God, that is, excellent wrestlings, Gen. 38. Calvin. Perer. 4. Or he is so called a Prince of God, because the Lord prospered him, and made him famous for his vertue and godlinesse: as Abimelech said, God is with thee in all thou doest, Gen.21.22. Iun.

QUEST. VIII. Why they did not forbid Abraham a place of buriall.

Vers. 6. None of us shall forbid thee his sepulchre, &c. 1. Some thinke, that the Hittites upon some hope which they conceived of the resurrection, were willing that Abraham should burie his dead among them, Lyppoman. but of that there is no certainty out of the text. 2. But hence it is gathered, that every family and kindred had a peculiar place of buriall for themselves, Mercer. 3. The courtesie of this people is to be noted, that revered Abraham for his gifts, whereas even among Christians many times men are envied and hated for their good parts, Muscul.

QUEST. IX. Why it was called a double Cave.

Vers. 9. The cave of Machpelah, or double cave. It was so called. 1. Not for that in one cave they buried the men, in the other the women. 2. Or because one cave was placed directly over another, Lyran. 3. Or that one was enclosed in the midst of the other, Hamerus. 4. Or because Adam was buried in one, Eva in another, Thom. Anglic. 5. Neither was it so called double, because of the exlency, for that it opened upon Paradise, as the Hebrewes. 6. But it hath this name, because it was a spalcious cave, having many receptacles and corners, Mercer. 7. So that we need not runne here unto alle|gories, as Gregory by this double cave, understandeth the contemplative and active life, whereby men are buried and sequestred from the vanities of the world, ex Perer.

QUEST. X. Why Ephron setteth a price of 400. sickles.

Vers. 15. The land is worth foure hundred sickles of silver, &c. 1. Ephron speaketh not this in Abrahams eare, nor signifying thereby, that the ground cost him so much, and he could not well sell it under, nor yet is it his meaning, that the ground was worth more to another, but to him, as his friend, he would make no greater price: but Ephron dealeth simply, that so small a price was not to be stood up|on betweene them, Mercer. 2. Abraham received gifts of Pharao and Abimelech, and refused them not: but here he would not receive a peece of ground of gift, because it was to remaine to him and his poste|rity. 3. Although Abraham purchased this cave for his money, yet it is true, as Saint Stephen saith, that he had not so much as the breadth of a foot, that is, of Gods gift. 4. Whereas some collect, that these foure hundred sickles signified the terme of foure hundred yeares: which time expired, then the whole Countrey should fall to Abrahams posterity, it is too curious, Mercer. how much a sickle is valued at, hath beene declared before, quaest. 11. in cap. 20.

QUEST. XI. Ephron not faulty in taking Abrahams money.

Vers. 16. Abraham weighed to Ephron the silver, &c. 1. It was the use then to deliver money by weight: and in that it is added, it was currant money among merchants: Ephron did not as R. Isaach imagineth, get some merchant to tell the money, and to refuse that which was not good, but the meaning is, that Abraham payed currant money both for weight and goodnesse, Mercer. 2.

The Hebrewes, whom Hierome follow, and the Cabulists, because Ephron is written here without vau, doe note, that as something was taken from his name, so his credit was empai^r: but this note is not true, for afterward Ephron is expressed with vau, as also it is usuall in the Hebrew tongue to have words set downe sometime fully, sometime with abbreviation. 3. The like curiosity is in the Cabalists: who observe, that the foure letters of Ephrons name, doe signifie 400. answerable to the summe of moⁿey received: for neither did Ephron commit any unlawfull thing in selling, nor Abraham in buying.

QUEST. XII. Of the circumstances and manner of contract which Abraham maketh.

Vers. 17. Over against Mamre. 1. This Mamre and Hebron were all one, as is expressed, vers. 19. from whence not farre off was the plaine or valley of Mamre, where Abraham dwelt so long time: whence he espied and marked this place as fittest for buriall. 2. Here all the circumstances used in bargaining and selling are expressed: as the bounding and confronting of the place, as also the appurtenances, namely the trees. 3. Like as Ieremie in making a solemne purchase, with writing, sealling, witnesses, and delivery, chap. 32. did thereby shew the certainty of the returne of the Israelites into that country againe: So Abraham by making sure worke in this contract, doth professe his hope of ob^taining the land of Canaan, as God had promised.

QUEST. XIII. How Moses and Steven reporting this story, may be reconciled.

There remaineth yet a great question, that whereas Abraham in this chapter is said to have bought a burying place of Ephron the sonne of Zoar: Stephen reporting the same storie saith, ^{*} that Abraham bought it of the sonnes of Emor, sonne of Sichem, Act. 7.15, 16. Now that these places may be the bet^ter reconciled, I will set downe the words themselves, as they were uttered by Saint Stephen, Act. 7.15, 16. ^{*} So Iacob went downe into Egypt, and he died, and our fathers: and were removed unto Sichem, and put in the Sepulcher which Abraham had bought for money of the sonnes of Emor, sonne of Sichem.

Out of these words foure principall doubts doe arise: first, how it is said, ^{*} that the fathers were remo^ved into Sichem: whereas the Scripture maketh mention onely of the burying of Iosephs bones there, Ios. 24.32. But this doubt is easily removed, for although that speciall mention be made of Ioseph onely, both because he was the most honourable of all the Patriarks, and for that he gave a speciall charge to his brethren, and tooke an oath of them for the carrying of his bones out of Egypt, Gen. 50.25. yet it is like, that the rest of the Patriarks were also removed thither. And S. Hierome witnesseth, that in his time the Sepulchers of the twelve Patriarks were shewed in Sichem, Epist. 101.

The second doubt is, how the Patriarks are said to be put in the Sepulcher that Abraham bought: hereof there are three solutions. 1. The Syrian Interpreter readeth in the singular number, He was put, ^{*} and so applieth it onely to Iacob: but all the translations are against this reading, which with one consent read in the plurall, and they were put, and so is also the originall, etethesan, they were placed. 2. Some take it according to the phrase of Scripture, which speaking in the plurall, yet meaneth some one: as Matth 26.8. the Disciples are said to have murmured, whereas Iohn imputeth it onely to Iudas, chap. 12.4. so in this place Iacob is onely understood to be buried in that Sepulcher, Perer. But this answer is not sufficient, for if this be understood of Iacob, then the former speech also, that they were translated into Si^lchem, which is no where extant in Scripture, that Iacob was carried thither: and that instance of Iudas is no^thing like, for though Iudas was the beginning of the murmuring, yet some other of the Disciples might consent unto him. 3. Some doe understand it joyntly of Iacob and the fathers, that part of them were bu^ried in Sichem, part in Abrahams cave in Hebron, Iun. in paral. and some affirme that the twelve Patri^arks were buried in Hebron, though first removed to Sichem, Iosephus lib. 2. antiquitat. 4.

But it is more probable, that they were buried in Sichem, in that place of ground which not Abraham, but Iacob bought of the sonnes of Hemor; as shall be seene afterward.

The third doubt is, that Hemor is said to be the sonne of Sichem, whereas he was Sichems father:*

1. Some answer, that Zohar Ephrons father was also called Hemor; and his father Sichem, Lyranus, Caje/tan. But this is not like, that where we finde an Hemor that was Sichems father in Scripture, wee should without warrant devise another Hemor to be Sichems sonne: and seeing one Ephrons father is mentioned in the story, there was no reason for Stephen to name his grandfather here. 2. Wherefore this doubt is more easily salved thus; that whereas in the originall there is neither father nor sonne expressed, but only thus, Hemor of Sichem, the Scripture will beare it as well to understand father as sonne: as Luk. 24.10. we read Mary of Iames, without any other addition, that is, the mother of Iames,* as another Evange|list expoundeth, Mark. 15.40.

The fourth doubt remaineth: because Abraham is said to have bought the Sepulcher of the sonnes of Hemor; whereas it was Iacob and not Abraham: to this question foure answers are made:

1. Some thinke that Stephen in so long a story might faile in memory, and mistake one name for another, Abraham for Iacob: sic Beda, Eugubinus, Melchior Canus, &c. But this is not like: 1. Because Stephen was full of the holy Ghost, and directed thereby to speake. 2. Though Stephen had slipped,

Saint Luke would not have recorded that errour. 3. The Jewes would have derided Stephen, if hee had committed so apparent an oversight. 4. If the least errour should be admitted in Scriptures, wee should never be at any certainty for our faith.

2. Some others doe affirme, that Zohar Ephrons father was also called Emor; and so Abraham bought it of Ephron the sonne of Zohar or Emor, Lyran. Cajetan. But this exposition I refused before, both for that no such thing is mentioned in Genesis, from whence this story is alleaged: neither any other Hemor of Sichem is read of, but of whom Iacob bought the parcell of ground: as also Abraham bought it of Ephron the sonne of Zohar; but this text saith, of the sonnes.

3. Some doe joine the words thus together, And they were put in the tombe by the sons of Hemor of Si/chem, which Abraham bought, and would have this to be the meaning, that the Sichemites translated the Patriarks from Sichem to Hebron, not vouchsafing them any buriall among them. But beside, that there is no evidence of this fact out of the Scripture, it is more like that the Sichemites, abhorring the memory of Simeon and Levi their cruelty, would rather have unburied them, than honoured them with their fa|thers grave and sepulture.

4. Neither yet can I consent, that Abraham through the errour of the Writers and pen-men was thrust into the text for Iacob: which is the conjecture of Eugubinus, Lyppoman, Calvin, Beza. 1. Both for that there is no similitude betweene the names of Abraham and Iacob, and so one not likely to be mistaken for another. 2. As also there can be no Copy shewed, that readeth Iacob for Abraham; neither Greeke, Syri|ake, or Latine. 3. And it is evident that Stephen pointeth at that Sepulcher which Abraham bought, for Iacob bought not a Sepulcher, but a peece of ground to build an Altar in: and for an hundred lambs, not for silver, for the which Abraham is here said to buy it.

5. Wherefore there remaineth onely this way to reconcile these places, which for my part I doubt not but to preferre before the rest: Saint Stephen in this place abridgeth two histories, one of Abrahams buyling a Sepulcher, the other of Iacobs purchase of a peece of ground from Hemor: so that his meaning is, that Iacob and the fathers were buried, part in Sichem, part in the Sepulcher in Hebron: these words then of Emor of Sichem must be referred to the first words, They were removed to Sichem, sie histor. Scholast. Iun. parall. the words then comming betweene, and were put in the Sepulcher which Abraham bought for mo/ney, must be read with a parenthesis, and the sense suspended to make a perfect sentence. The like example, where two histories are abridged and joyned together, we have Exod. 12.40. The dwelling of the children of Israel while they dwelled in Egypt, was 430. yeares: in which summe is comprehended not onely their dwelling in Egypt, (for so long they were not sojourners there) but in Canaan, in a land not theirs: and yet the one is named, the other understood: so then as the saying is true, In sensu diviso, non composito, dividing the sense and sentence concerning their abode both in Egypt and Canaan: in like manner, in this place the sentence must be divided, and part referred to Abrahams purchase, part to Iacobs.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Lawfull to weepe for the dead, so it be done in measure.

Vers. 2. ABraham came to mourne for Sarah, and to weepe for her. It is lawfull then to mourne and lalment for the dead, so it be done in measure and moderately. Man is not as a stocke or a stone, to be without all naturall passions or affections. We see that our Saviour himselfe also wept going to La/zarus grave, which they interpreted to proceed from his love, Ioh. 11.35. Saint Paul forbiddeth not to sorrow at all, but not as men without hope, 1 Thes. 4.13. Wherefore that saying of Solon, Mors mea ne ca/reat lachrymis, &c. Let not my death want teares, so it be done temperately, is to be preferred before that of Ennius, Nemo me lachrymis decoret, &c. Let no man weepe for me, Perer.

2. Doct. Our mourning for the dead must be in measure.

Vers. 3. ABraham rose up from the sight of the corps, &c. Lest that he might be overcome of griefe, he removeth the object thereof: which teacheth us that we should keepe a measure in our griefe: not to mourne as the heathen doe, that have no hope of the resurrection: or as those passionate women, which wept for their children and would not bee comforted, Matth. 1.16. It is well observed, that the Egyptians mourned for Iacob seventy dayes, Ioseph but seven dayes, Gen. 50.3.10. to shew a difference betweene the excessive griefe of men that have no hope, and the moderate sorrow of the faithfull.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against prayer and sacrifice for the dead.

ABraham rose up from the sight of the corps. The Latine text readeth, ab officio funeris, from the funerall office or duty: by which Pererius would prove, that the Patriarks used to fast and pray, and offer sacrifice for the dead, in cap. 23. Gen. Num. 12. which is a corrupt doctrine, grounded upon a corrupt text: for the originall maketh no mention of any office, but onely that Abraham rose up from the sight of the corps: and the text saith not he came to fast or pray, but to mourne for Sarah.

2. Confut. Against Purgatory.

AGaine Bellarmino saith, Contineri implicite mentionem purgatorii; That the mention of Purgatory is here implied: and that for this cause onely Iacob and Ioseph desired that their bones might be removed into the land of promise, because they knew that their sacrifice should be offered for the dead, de Purgat. lib. 1. cap. 11.

Contra. 1. And is not this now a goodly argument? Abraham rose up from the sight of the corps, Ergo, Sarah was in purgatory. 2. If the fathers went to purgatory, then the bosome of Abraham, a place of rest and comfort, Luk16.25. must be purgatory, for thither the fathers went. 3. What a bold assertion is this, to say that the fathers for that cause desired to be buried in the land of promise: when as the Scripture directly sheweth this to have beene the cause, the profession of their faith and hope, that the land of promise should be given them, as Ioseph saith, God will surely visit you, and you shall carry my bones hence, Gen. 50.25.

6. Morall observations.

1. Observ. Against ambitious desire of honour.

Vers. 6. Thou art a Prince of God among us, &c. Abraham had said before of himselfe, I am a stranger, and a forreiner among you: the more Abraham humbleth himselfe, the more he is exalted of them: Thus honour fleeth away from them that hunt after it, and it is cast upon them that seeke it not, as the shadow followeth the body: so here it falleth out to Abraham, according to the saying in the Proverbs, It is better that it be said unto thee, come up hither, than to be put lower in the presence of the Prince, Prov.25.7. for Abraham in humbling himselfe, is more honoured before the Prince of the people here.

2. Observ. Wisdome and circumspection to be used in contracts.

Vers. 17. IN the sight of the Hittites: The field is made sure to Abraham in the sight of many witnesses: Abraham provideth for his security and quietnesse afterward, that this purchase might be sure to him and his without question: whereby we learne, that it is lawfull for the faithfull wisely to provide and foresee for themselves, and to be wary and circumspect in all their doings, Muscul. according to that saying of our Saviour, To be wise as Serpents, and innocent as Doves, Matth. 10.16.

CHAP. XXIV.

1. The Method.

T His Chapter hath three parts: First, the sending of Abrahams servant to provide a wife for Isaack, with Abrahams instructions, and his servants oath, from vers. 1. to vers. 10.

The second sheweth the servants behaviour in his journey. 1. His prayer unto God, vers. 11.15. 2. The fruit of his prayer, in meeting with Rebecca, vers 15. to 29. 3. His entertainment, vers. 30. to 34. 4. The delivering of his message, vers. 35. to 48. 5. The good successe thereof, in obtaining their consent for Rebecca, to vers. 61.

The third part setteth forth the returne of Rebecca with Abrahams servant, and her receiving and welcome by Isaack, vers. 61. to the end.

2. The divers readings.

v. 7. To thee and thy seed. *S. to thy seed. caeter.

v. 61. Making haste he returned to his master. He tooke Rebecca and departed. cat.

v. 62. Isaack walked by the desart, neare to the Well of vision. S. came from the Well where the Angell of life had appeared. C. the Well of the living, and seeing not. H.B. from Beer lahairo. G. the Well of Lahairo. Tr. P.

v. 63. To meditate. H. to be exercised. S. to pray. cat. suach, to meditate, to pray.

v. 67. Isaack entred into the house of his mother. S. brought her into the tent of Sarah his mother. caeter.

And he saw and beheld her works were right, as the works of Sarah his mother. C. this clause is not in the Hebrew.

* 67. He loved her so much, that he tempered the griefe which hapned by the death of his mother. H. Isaack comforted himselfe after the death of his mother.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Why Abraham is said to be old.

Vers. 1. Now Abraham was old. 1. Neither is the conjecture of some Hebrewes to be received, that thinke because Abraham was said to be old at an hundred yeares, Gen. 18.11. that even then Abraham gave this charge to his servant, to provide Isaack a wife, but he deferred the execution of it till now, when Isaack was of ripe yeares: for it is evident, vers. 10. that the execution of this charge follow|ed immediately upon the giving thereof, Mercer. 2. Neither need we with Rupertus, to make an allego|rie of Abrahams old age: that he is said to be old, perfectione fidei, in the perfection of faith: but he is call|ed old, and the first so named in Scripture, not in respect of those long lived Patriarks, but in comparison of that age wherein he lived. 3. Abraham was now 140. yeares old, not 137. as Lyppoman conjectureth: for Isaack was now 40. yeares old when he married Rebecca, Gen. 25.20. who was borne when Abraham was in his hundred yeare, Perer.

QUEST. II. Wherein Abraham was so exceedingly blessed.

The Lord had blessed Abraham in all things, &c. The word is bacol: which some of the Hebrewes dreame to have beene Abrahams daughter: but this is great boldnesse to affirme that which the Scrip|ture is silent in: and if Abraham had received a daughter by Sarah, as well as a sonne, he would have beene no lesse carefull to have bestowed her in marriage, than he was for Isaack, Mercer. 2. Abraham was prin|cipally blessed in foure things, in his old age, vers. 1. in his great substance, vers. 35. in his issue, vers. 16. and in the victory of his enemies, Perer.

QUEST. III. Why Abraham sendeth his servant, and who his servant was.

Vers. 2. Abraham said to the eldest servant of his house, &c. 1. This servant is thought to be Eliezar of Damascus, which had the government of his house, of whom mention was made before, chap. 15. 2. Who is thought, being now very old, to have come with Abraham into the land of Canaan 65. yeares before, and to have knowne all Abrahams kind•ed, Cajetan. 3. Abraham sendeth not Isaack▪ who then of 40. yeares, might be judged as one of 25. now, lest the Canaanites might have abused his flexible youth, and therefore he committeth this businesse to his grave and prudent servant.

QUEST. IV. Of the putting the hand under the thigh.

Vers. 2. Put now thy hand under my thigh. 1. This was neither the generall custome of those times, as Chrysostome thinketh, for neither Abimelech with Abraham, Gen. 20. nor afterwards with Isa|ack, Gen. 26. and Laban with Iacob making a covenant, Gen. 32. and one swearing to another, doe use this ceremonie, which sheweth it to have beene no generall custome. 2. Neither was this custome derived from the Indians, as Aben Ezra, who in honour of Bacchus, who is fabled to have come forth of Iupiters thigh; and for reverence unto the instruments of generation, which they worshipped under the name of Priapus, did use in taking of an oath, to put their hand under the thigh: for neither Abraham would have imitated such an idolatrous usage, and Dionysius called Bacchus, is found to have been long after Abraham, in the time of Iosua. 3. Neither is it sufficient to say, that this manner was used to signify the firmness of an oath, because the thighs are as the pillars of the body, Oleaster: for the strength of man as well consisteth in his armes and legges. 4. Nor yet was this a token of subjection onely and superiority: for Ioseph a Prince in Egypt, * putteth his hand under his fathers thigh, Gen. 47.29. 5. But either we must say with Hierome, that this usage was retained for the honour of circumcision, which was performed in the parts next adjoining. 6. Or with Ambrose and Augustine, we understand a mystery in this ceremony, because Christ was to come in that flesh, Quae de illa femore propaganda erat, Which should be propagated out of that thigh.

QUEST. V. Of the divers kinds of adjuring.

Vers. 3. I Will make thee sweare, or adjure thee, &c. This word to adjure one, is taken two ways in Scripture: either actively, when we by the reverence of the divine Majestie, doe urge and induce another to speake the truth, or doe or not doe any thing: as Ahab adjured Michaias, and charged him in the name of God to speake the truth, 2 Chron. 18.15. or else it is used passively, when we force another to take an oath, as Abraham here maketh his servant to sweare. The first kinde of adjuration is used two wayes: 1. By way of deprecation and intreaty by the inferiour to the superiour, as the devils doe impudently adjure Christ not to torment them, Matth. 5.7. but it was by way of intreaty, vers. 10. 2. It is used by way of authority and command: 1. Thus the Prince adjureth his subjects, as Saul did the people, that they should eat nothing till night, 1 Sam. 14.24. 2. Thus the Apostles charged and commanded the spirits to come out of men, as Paul did, Act. 16.18. By this kinde of adjuration, * which is with power and authority, spirits may be adjured: but by the other, which is by intreaty and supplication to conjure them, which is nothing else but to intreat them for their helpe, as Magicians and sorcerers doe, it is a great impiety, and plaine idolatry. 3. Yea by a power and authority given from God: thus the senseless creatures may be adjured and commanded, as Iosua by the power of God commanded the Sunne to stand still, and it obeyed, Perer.

The other kinde of adjuring, which is by ministring an oath, * is to be used onely in grave and weighty causes: either divine, as Nehemiah tooke an oath of the people, that they should not give their daughters in marriage to the heathen, Nehem. 13.25. or in humane affaires: 1. For the deciding of controversies, and ending of strife, Heb. 6.16. 2. For the binding of one to the obedient or faithfull performance of his service. As Abraham here taketh an oath of his servant, so officers may lawfully be sworne for the upright execution of their office, and subjects to be loyall and true to their Prince. 3. For the establishing of a league or covenant, as an oath was betweene Iacob and Laban, Gen. 32.53. 4. For the clearing of a suspicion: as the woman suspected of adultery, was charged with an oath by the Priest, Numb. 5.21. 5. For the satisfaction of our neighbour in a matter of trust, Exod. 22.11. so by the law the debtor may be lawfully urged with an oath by his creditor. 6. For the security of a mans life, one may sweare to another: as the Egyptian servant to the Amalekite, required an oath of David for the safety of his life and estate: Sweare unto me by God, that thou wilt neither kill me, nor deliver me into the hands of my master, &c. 1 Sam. 30.15.

QUEST. VI. Why Abraham refuseth to take a wife from the daughters of Canaan.

Vers. 3. Thou shalt not take to my sonne of the daughters of Canaan, &c. The reasons why Abraham would not have his sonne Isaack be linked in marriage with the Canaanites, are these: 1. Because they came of cursed Cham: Generis author maledictionis haereditatem transmisit in suos: The author of their stocke for not honouring his father, did bring a curse as an inheritance upon his posterity, Ambr. lib de Abrah. cap. 9. 2. Because the Canaanites were Idolaters, and of corrupt manners: Primum in conjugio religio quaratur; Religion must first be sought in mariage, Ambr. Againe, Salomon was corrupted and perverted from his faith by his idolatrous wives: for although Nachors stocke were not pure in religion, halving a smattering of imagery and idolatrous worship, as Laban sought for his gods that were stolen from him, Gen. 31.30. yet they had some knowledge and understanding of God, as appeareth in this chapter, vers. 50. This thing is proceeded of the Lord, &c. And beside, their manners were honest and commendable, not like to the Canaanites, as is evident by Rebecca her virginity, and their humanity in entertaining of strangers, Perer. 3. Another reason hereof was, for that the Lord promised the Countrey to Abrahams posterity, and to expell the Canaanites: therefore Abraham, as he refused to bury his dead among them, so much lesse would mingle his seed in mariage with them, Mercer.

QUEST. VII. Why Abraham sendeth not Isaack to chuse his owne wife.

Vers. 4. THou shalt goe. 1. Though Abraham send his servant about this businesse of mariage, yet it was not without Isaacks consent, who knowing this servant to be the minister of his fathers will, yeeldeth himselfe to his fathers choice. 2. Isaack is not sent, not to make a way unto a mystery, as Rupertus thinketh, to shadow forth Christ, who not by himselfe went, but by his Apostles sent to the Gentiles. 3. And though Isaack afterward sent Iacob for the same end, to chuse him a wife from his fathers kindred yet that case was not like to this: for Isaack had two sonnes, Abraham but one: and besides Iacob fled from the wrath of his brother, to save his life, Perer. And further, Isaack was but forty yeares old, a youth in those dayes; Iacob was about seventy seven yeares of age, and so fitter to chuse for himselfe.

QUEST. VIII. In what sense Mesopotamia is called Abrahams Country, seeing he was borne in Chaldea.

Vers. 4. GOe unto my Countrey and kindred. This Countrey and place of Abrahams kindred is named to be Aram Naharaim, that is, Mesopotamia, vers. 10. where was the City of Nahor, which was Charran, Gen. 28.10. Now Charran in Mesopotamia is said to be Abrahams Countrey: 1. Not that he was borne there, as Ramban, and Paulus Burgens. thinke: for the place of Abrahams birth was Ur of the Chaldees, Gen. 11.28. 2. Neither is it called his Country, because as Tostatus thinketh, he dwelled there a long time, even 60. yeares, till the death of his father, which is a great errour: for Abraham stayled not long in Charran: Eucherius thinketh but one yeare, Pererius not so much, Mercerus some two yeares, Iunius five yeares: howsoever the time was not long: for Abraham no doubt being called to goe into Canaan, would make no long aboad by the way, nor yet deferre to obey Gods commandement: So then neither Pererius thinketh right, * that Terah lived 60. yeares in Charran after Abrahams departure: for Abraham came not into Canaan till after his fathers death, Act. 7.4. And Tostatus also is deceived, that Abraham with Terah lived together 60. yeares in Charran: for seeing Abraham was but 75. yeares old when he departed from Charran, if he staid there 60. then was hee but 15 yeare old when he came first to Charran,* which cannot be, for he was then married, Gen. 11.30. But both these errors are builded upon a false ground, that Abraham was the eldest sonne of Torah, and borne in his 70. yeare, whereas the truth is, hee was the youngest, and borne in the 130. yeare of his fathers age, as hath beene before shewed in the questions upon the 11. chapter.

3. Wherefore the solution is this, that Abraham calleth all the region beyond Euphrates his countrey, in respect of Canaan, which was on this side the river: and so Aram, Naharaim, or Mesopotamia, is taken largely, as it comprehendeth Chaldea also, which indeed was Abrahams native country: and so S. Stephen understandeth it, Act. 7.2.

QUEST. IX. How Isaack is said not to goe againe into Chaldea, where he was never before.

Vers. 6. BEware that thou bring not my sonne thither againe. 1. Not that Isaack was wholly at the disposing of the servant, but that he should not promise or undertake to bring Isaack thither againe. 2. Though Isaack was never there before in his owne person, yet hee is said to returne thither in respect of his father Abraham, in whose loines he was, who was called from thence: as Gen. 15.16. in the fourth generation it is said the Israelites shall returne thither againe, though their fathers onely, and not themselves had beene there before, Mercer. And in the same sense we may say to such as are borne under the Gospell; Take heed that ye never returne to poperie againe, Muscul. 3. Two reasons especially moved Abraham, not to suffer Isaack to returne into his country: because God called him from his fathers house, never to returne thither: and so God promised to him and his seed the land of Canaan: which promise might have beene hindred by Isaacks departure, Perer. Mercer. 4. Iacob went thither to fetch a wife and to returne againe; but if Isaacks wife refusing to come, he had gone him|selfe, there was feare of his abiding there still, Mercer.

QUEST. X. Angels ministers and helpers of mariage.

Vers. 7. HE shall send his Angel, &c. 1. This Abraham uttereth not by way of wishing, as Aben Ezra, but he doth confidently assure him|selfe of the assistance of Gods Angel, Mercer. 2. Wee see the gentle nature of the Angels, that are willing to yeeld their ministerie and service to us miserable men, Luther. 3. The dignity of marriage is set forth, which is guided and directed by Angels, Mercer.

QUEST. XI. How Abrahams servant is said to have all his masters goods in his hand.

Vers. 10. HE tooke ten camels, and he had all his masters goods in his hand, &c. 1. Wee do not with Rupertus allegorize these words, by the ten Camels understanding the ten commandements, and by all manner of goods, the spirituall gifts which the Apostles carried to the Gentiles. 2. But this is a reason why he tooke ten camels, because all his masters goods were in his hand: as Iun. and the Genev. read: as it is said before, that he had rule over all that Abraham had, v. 2. see the like phrase, c. 16.6. 3. Others doe read, that he carried of all his masters goods with him: either some of every sort, Perer. or all is understood for many, Mercer. but the other reading is better. 4. That conceit of Rasi is but a toy, that he is said to carry of all his goods, because he had a deed of gift as it were of all his masters goods to Isaack: for it is not like that Abraham had yet disposed of all his goods, seeing his children by Ketura were yet unborne, to whom hee gave their portions, Mercer.

QUEST. XII. Of the abundance and necessary use of Camels.

TEn camels. 1. In Hebrew, it is written with G, not C, a Camel, howsoever use hath otherwise obtained in other tongues, Calvin. 2. In those countreys there was great abundance of camels; as wee read, that the Hebrewes overcoming the Agarens in battell, tooke from them fifty thousand camels, 1 Chron. 5.20. there was also great use of them for their swiftnesse, they would goe an hundred mile a day: for their strength, they would beare seven hundred, or a thousand weight: for their hardnesse, they would forbear drinke sometime eight, yea fifteene daies, ex Iul. Scalig. advers. Car/dan. exercitat. 209. num. 2. 3. It appeareth then, that this was a most solemne message, or embas|sage rather: 1. by the companie that went, (for other servants accompanied him, vers. 32. to guide those camels) by the rich gifts that were carried: by the length of the journey which they undertooke: by the worthinesse of the messenger, the chiefe in Abrahams house, Perer.

TO the citie of Nahor. 1. Not where Nahor was borne, but where Nahor (though now dead) had a long time dwelled,* as it is like not long after that Abraham with his father Thare came thither. 2. The Hebrewes here faigne a miracle without cause, that Abrahams servant came from home to Charlras in a daies journey: whereas they themselves write, that from Hebron thither it was seventeene daies journey: Ptolomie counteth from Beerseba (from whence Hebron was not farre distant) to Charras eight degrees, which make 120. Germane miles, Mercer.

QUEST. XIV. Whether Abrahams servant did well in asking a signe.

Vers. 14. GRant that the maid to whom I say, &c. This asking of a signe was no tempting of God, and it is farre differing from the superstitious conjectures and vaine observations of the Augures and wise men among the heathen. 1. One difference is, as Augustine noteth it, Aliud est mi/rum aliquid petere, quod ipso miraculo signum sit, aliud hac observare, quae ita fiant, ut mira non fint, &c. It is one thing to aske some strange thing, which by the strangenesse thereof may be a signe, another thing to observe those things which are not miraculous or strange, super Genes. qu. 53. such was the flying of birds, the search|ing of beasts inwards, which were superstitiously observed by the heathen, being things ordinarie and usuall, and of no speciall note. But that which this servant asketh to be a signe, was a rare and strange thing, and not usually to be expected. 2. Again Lyranus giveth another note: he did not aske a signe by way of divination, sed praemissa oratione petivit signum à domino: but making his praier before he craveth a signe. 3. Further it is to be considered, that he fetcheth not his signe a farre off, sed ex re prasenti, from the present businesse, Calvin.* and he seeketh no other conjecture, but from her hospitalitie and courtesie, that shee might be in manners answerable to his master, Chrysost. He therefore desireth no vaine, light or impertinent signe to be given him, but a grave, profitable, and fit demonstration from the manners and beh|aviour of the woman. 4. He asketh not a signe as doubting of Gods power, or of the veritie of his pro|misses, but he asketh in faith, relying upon Gods providence, not prescribing unto God, but praying, that what God had determined concerning Isaacks wife, might be made knowne unto him: for thus he saith, Let that be shee, whom thou hast ordained for thy servant Isaack: and hereunto he was much encouraged by that saying of Abraham, vers. 7. he shall send his angell before thee, Muscul. Perer. 5. He was also hereunto directed (whether by dreame as Aben Ezra thinketh) is uncertaine, but certainly by the instinct of Gods spirit, Calvin. Mercer. Wherefore in this manner to aske a signe, not of distrust in Gods power, or doubtfulnesse of his promises, but with confidence in God, nor prescribing unto him, but onely desiring to be assured what is his good pleasure: and this to doe, not with any superstitious minde, but with devout prayer, and by the secret motion of Gods spirit, it is no tempting of God at all. But as Au/gustinus saith of Gedeon asking a signe, Consultatio illa magis quàm tentatio fuit; It was a consultation rather than a tentation.

Now seeing an entrance is made into this question, concerning the lawfulnessse of such ghesses and conj|ectures, as are made by mens speeches, or beh|aviour, of things to come, as Abrahams servant desireth here to be informed by the answer and beh|aviour of the maid, whether she were appointed to be Isaacks wife, it shall not bee amisse some what more fully to discusse this matter.

QUEST. XV. Of the divers kindes of conjecturall and ominous predictions.

There are then foure sorts of such conjectures and ominous predictions of things to come.* The first are naturall, which doe for the most part certainly foreshew that which followeth, as the cause producing the effect: as a cloud rising in the west causeth and foresheweth raine: the Southwind heat, Luke 14.55. or the effect doth sometime premonstrate the cause following, as the lightning the thunder, which though it be first seene and perceived by reason of the quicknesse of sight, yet is it last done. These signes and conjectures, it is not superstitious or vaine to observe.

Secondly, there are some humane conjectures, which are taken by the words, behaviour and actions of men: as when the king of Israel had let fall a word, calling Benhadad brother,* the messengers tooke it for a good signe, the Latine translation saith, acceperunt pro omine, they tooke it for good lucke, 1 King. 20.22. they thereby gave conjecture of the kings favour. So when the king Ahashuerosh had said of Haman, will he force the queene also before me &c. they tooke this as a signe of the kings displeasure, and covered Hamans face, Esther 6.8. The like in forraine stories is recorded of Tarquinius Superbus, king of Rome, who being sent unto by his sonne Sextus Tarquinius, how hee should use the Gabii, that had received him into their citie, he gave no other answer to the messenger, but topped the heads of the poppies in his garden with his staffe: whereby his sonne perceived his meaning, that he should make the chiefe of the citie lower by their heads. By these humane conjectures, we may ghesse of such things which are in mens owne power and purpose to doe: * but otherwise to catch at words and syllables, and to make them as divine oracles, it is a superstitious and ridiculous use: as Cicero giveth an instance, how, when M. Crassus did ship his Armie at Brundisium, one in the haven that brought figs from Cannus a citie in Caria, chanced to crie out, caricas canneas, Cannean figges:* if Crassus had taken this hint, as a signe of evill lucke, and gone no further, he had not perished, Tullie himselfe condemneth such observations as ridiculous, for then; saith he, by the same reason, pedis offensio, abruptio cor/frigiae, & sternut amenta sunt observanda, the stumbling of the foot, breaking of the shooe point, sneezing, and other such things, must be observed as ominous; Perer:

The third sort of predictions is divine: which are either uttered by men inspired of God, being well advised and knowing what they say: as Jonathan encourageth himselfe with this signe,* thereunto directed by the spirit of God: that if the Philistims should say, come up unto us, he would take it as a signe, that God had delivered them into his hand, and so it came to passe, 1 Sam. 14.10. Sometime God directeth mens tongues to speake the truth unawares: as Caiphas prophesied, that it was better for one man to die for the people, than the whole nation to perish, Iohn 11.50. yet Caiphas understood not what he said: of this kinde was that direction given unto Augustine,* much perplexed within himselfe, what profession of life he should betake himselfe unto, by a voice saying unto him, Tolle, lege; Take up thy booke and read: and then opening the booke hee light upon that place, Rom 13.13. See that wee walke honestly, &c. not in gluttonie and drunkennesse, chambering, and wantonnesse, &c. by reading which sentence, hee was resolved to reforme his life, and to leave his youthfull pleasures.

*The fourth kind of ominous predictions is superstitious and diabolicall: whereof Augustine giveth his judgement thus: Cum ad decipiendos homines fit, spirituum seductorum operatio est; When it is done to deceive men, it is the working of seducing spirits: such was that conjecture of the priests and soothsayers among the Philistims, that if the arke which they had put into a new cart, went up the way by Bethshemesh, then it is he (that is, the God of Israel,) that hath done this great evill, 1 Sam. 6.9. This indeed came so to passe, and the event answered the prediction, whereby the devill cunningly wrought, that those idolatrous priests and soothsayers should still retaine their credit and estimation: Pausanias maketh mention of the like superstitious observation in the towne of Phare in Achaia, where after the people had consulted with the oracle, their manner was, going away to stop their eares, and the first voyce which they heard afterward, they tooke as a divine oracle, Pausan. in Achaic. Cicero reporteth of Paulus Aemilius, that preparing to goe against Perses king of Macedonia,* and seeing his daughter sad, and she answering, being asked the reason, because her little dogge called Persa, was dead: saith he, Accipio omen, I take this as a signe of good lucke, my daughter. Such superstitious, curious and vaine observations, are not beseeming a Christian profession: which Sathan useth as meanes to keepe men in a superstitious awe and feare, and to seduce them from trusting in the providence of God.

QUEST. XIV. Why it is said that Rebecca was a virgin, with this addition, and unknown of man.

Vers. 16. A Virgin, and unknowne of man, &c. Lest this might be thought a superfluous speech, because she could not have bene a virgin, unlesse she were unknowne of man, divers interpretations are given. 1. Some thinke that she is called a virgin in respect of her outward habit, and unknowne of man for her chastitie, Cajetan. 2. Others, that because there was a lewd use among the Gentiles, to abuse other parts of the body to their filthy lust, beside the place of virginitie: they thinke shee is called not onely a virgin, but altogether untouched or unknowne in any part of her body, Rasi, Rabbi Salomon. 3. Some, that she was not a virgin onely in body, but unknowne of man, that is, not tempted in her minde of the devill, Origen. hom. 10. in Genes. 4. Some thinke this clause is added, to shew a difference betweene these two words, be•ula and gnalma, which both signifie a virgin: but because the first here used doth betoken a virgin corrupted: as Ioel 1.8. mourne like a virgin for the husband of her youth: therefore it is further expounded, unkowne of man, Leo Castro. in 7. Isai. ex Perer. 5. But this may be a sufficient answer, that the scripture useth sometime a repetition of the same thing in other words, for a more sure demonstration of that which is affirmed: as Augustine saith, firmamen/tum esse sententiae in repetitione; that the strength of the sentence is in the repetition: and therefore for the more full manifestation of the virginitie of Rebecca, because many goe for virgins that are not, the same thing is twice expressed, Mercer.

QUEST. XV. Of the word almah, that it alwaies betokeneth a virgin.

*NOW further as touching the word gnalmah, whereas the Jewes to obscure that prophecie, Isay 7.16. a virgin shall conceive &c. doe affirme, that it is sometime taken for a young woman corrupted, as Prov. 30.19. the way of a man with a maid, gnelam: for answer hereunto, 1. We neither will grant with Cajetane, that the word is here taken for a woman, not a virgin, because saith he▪ the way of a man with a virgin may be knowne by the markes of her virginitie, but with a woman not so easily▪ for the wise man speaketh not here of such markes, but of the secret and close meetings of such, which can hardly be known. 2. Neither need wee with Lyranus, to referre it to the incomprehensible mysterie of the incarnation of Christ in his mothers wombe: who expoundeth this place by that of Ieremie, a woman shall compasse a man, Ierem. 31.22. for it is evident by the verse following: such is the way of an adulterous woman, Prov. 30.20. that the wise man speaketh of such lewd practices before. 3. Nor yet doth it fully satisfie to say, that the wise man calleth her a virgin, which though shee bee not so, yet would be so talken, Iunius: for still the objection remaineth strong against that prophecie, Isay 7.16. that virgin should likewise be so taken there. 4. But the best answer is, that he speaketh of such a maid or virgin, whose chastitie or virginitie is in the first attempt violated, (being a virgin till then) and yet would conceale the fact, as though no such thing were done: so that notwithstanding any objection out of this place, Hieroms observation is justified, that gnolam in scripture, is alwaies taken for a virgin uncorrupted, lib. 1. advers. Iovin.

QUEST. XVI. Of Rebeccaes receiving of the gifts.

Vers. 22. The man tooke a golden abilliment, &c. It may bee questioned how it stood with the modestie of the maid, to take these gifts of a stranger. 1. Some defend it, for that there was no danger, seeing hee was an aged and reverent person of whom shee received them, and it was done in the presence of the whole company that came with him, Perer. 2. Some thinke, that she might take them as •••ward or her paines which shee tooke, in watering ten Camels, whereof each, as the Hebrewes ⟨◇⟩ will drinke •en Hydria, or great pitchers full. 3. But the true answer is, that before he gave her these gifts, he had asked of her whose daughter she was, as appeareth in the 47. verse, and it is like she also had inquired of him: so that he resolved upon her in his minde to be the woman appointed for Isaack, and thereupon gave her these gifts, Mercer.

QUEST. XVII. Of the jewell of halfe a shekel weight.

OF halfe a shekel weight. 1. Leaving the Hebrewes conceits, ^{*} that this halfe shekel represented that halfe shekel, which the Israelites were taxed at, Exod. 30. the two bracelets, the two tables; the ten shekels, the ten Commandements. 2. The Jewell was not for the eares, but an ornament of the forehead or nose, weighed neither two sickles, as the Latine, nor one sickle as the Chalde readeth, but halfe a sickle. 3. Neither need wee to make it answerable to the bracelets, of ten shekels weight, to say with some He|brewes, that there was a precious stone in it, that weighed halfe a shekel; or with Vatablus, that because a shekel is not here expressed, but only bechang, halfe, that it weighed halfe the weight of ten shekels after|ward expressed: for it may appeare, that where bechang is put alone, there the other word shekel must be supplied, as Exod. 38.26. halfe (a shekel) for a man. 4. Wherefore the proportion was correspondent, that the jewell for the frontlet should be but of halfe a shekel weight, both in respect of the place, which required no cumbersome ornament, and for that it was of gold: an halfe shekel whereof, that is, the 4. part of an ounce might be valued at 14. or 15. shillings sterling.

QUEST. XVIII. Why it is said she went to her mother, not her fathers house.

Vers. 18. The maid ran and told them of her mothers house, &c. 1. Not that her father Bethnel was dead, as some thinke; for he is named, v. 50. 2. Neither is her mothers house named, because shee might have a step-mother beside, to whom she would not first tell this newes, Cajetane. 3. Neither went she to her mothers house, because her father being old, had committed the government to his sonne La/ban. 4. But for that the women dwelled in houses by themselves, it is like she went first to her mother, from whom the rest of the family presently heard it, Mercer.

QUEST. XIX. How the Scriptures which in shew are contrary, may be reconciled.

Vers. 38. Thou shalt goe to my fathers house, &c. But Abraham said, Thou shalt goe to my cuntry and my kindred, v. 4. and other things beside seeme to be diversly reported, as v. 40. the Lord will send his Angell, and prosper thy journey; but Abraham saith, v. 7. he will send his Angell before thee, and no more: againe, v. 47. he saith, he first asked Rebecca whose daughter she was, and then gave her the jewels: but v. 23. it is s^t downe that hee asked her afterwards. Wherefore to reconcile these and such like places of Scripture, which seeme to be repugnant, certaine rules are to be observed.

The first rule is, that where the difference is in words and not in sense, as in the first place objected, there is no contrariety at all.

The second, that it is no repugnancy, if in one place a matter bee set forth more fully and without circumstances: if one expresse that which another denieth not, but only concealeth, as in the second instance proposed: the difference is not great.

Thirdly, if the order upon some speciall reason bee changed, and that is set downe last, which another hath first, as in the third instance produced, it need give no offence. And these three varieties do often occur in the Evangelists, which doe rather commend and set forth the truth of the history, than disgrace it: that hereby it may appeare that they did not conferre together, or write all after one manner, of purpose, but in some variety of order and words were directed by the Spirit to write one truth.

Other rules also may be propounded for the reconciling of places of Scripture,* which seeme at the first sight to be repugnant, in respect of the divers computation of time. 1. When as one writer doth inclusively account the time, which another doth exclusively; as Luke c. 9.29. saying, that Christ about an 8. dayes after was transfigured, includeth in this number, both primum & ultimum, the first and last day: Matthew saying after 6. dayes, doth exclude these two dayes, making mention of those six that came betweene: sic Augustin. lib. de consens. Evang. c. 56.

2. Sometime the principall part of the time is rehearsed, and the small or odde numbers omitted; as 1 King. 2.11. David is said to have reigned 40. yeares over Israel, 7. yeares in Hebron, and 33. yeares in Jerusalem; whereas the precise account of his reigne in Hebron was 7. yeares 6. moneths, and in Jerusalem, 33. yeares; which make in all 40. yeares, 6. moneths, 2 Sam. 5.5.

3. Sometime, the yeares of a Kings reigne are reckoned, which he reigned alone, sometime those where|in he reigned with another: so Iotham reigned 16. yeares alone, but twenty yeares, counting those, where|in he governed under his Father, 2 Kings 15.5.30.33. Perer.

QUEST. XX. Why Abrahams servant refused to eat or drinke.

Vers. 33. They set before him to eat, but he said, I will not eat. 1. Hee neither refused to eat, because un|suall meat was set before him, such as hee was not accustomed unto in Abrahams house, as some Hebrewes thinke. 2. Neither doth he deferre till he had spoken his words, that is, said grace, as some interpret: for though, it is not to bee doubted, but that they used in Abrahams house to receive their meat with thanksgiving; yet hee meaneth the delivering of his message. 3. But that is a meere fable, that hee would not eat, because they set poyson before him, to have his goods, which poyson was returned upon Bethuel, who thereupon died: and this fable the Hebrewes would build upon the word sam,* poyson, answerable to the word sume, here used, which signifieth to place or set: for neither were they so poore, that they needed Abrahams goods; nor so dishonest, so to deale with their nearest kinsmans ser|vant: nor yet is there any affinity betweene those two words, the one beginning with samech, the other with shin, Mercer. 4. Neither doth he refraine from eating and drinking, fearing lest afterward hee should not tell a sober tale. 5. But his diligence is commended, who preferreth his masters businesse before his meat and drinke.

QUEST. XXI. Perswasions used by Abrahams servant to further the mariage.

Ver. 35. The Lord hath blessed my master, &c. 1. The servant beginneth to use perswasions to make a way for the mariage intended: 1. That hee was rich, and not by evill meanes, but by Gods blessing, Muscul. 2. That Isaack was borne of Sarai in her old age, and so not without a miracle, as a man ordained of God for some great matter, Calvin. 3. And lest they might object, why being so rich, he tooke not a wife neare hand, he addeth, that his master gave him speciall charge not to take a wife of the daugh|ters of Canaan, Mercer.

QUEST. XXII. Certaine fabulous conceits of the Hebrewes refused.

IT shall not bee amisse to note certaine fabulous collections of the Hebrewes: 1. Vers. 39. They thinke that Eliezar secretly insinuated, that if hee could not otherwise provide a wife for Isaack, hee would offer his owne daughter: but that Abraham absolutely refused, because he was of the Canaanites. But yet they say that this Eliezar for his faithfull service was taken alive into Paradise, as Isaack came alive from thence: 2. Vers. 42. Where he saith, I came this day to the well: the Hebrewes thinke that he came from Hebron to Charras in a day, which is noted to be seventeene dayes journey: and this day noteth the time not of his departure from home, but of his comming thither, Mercer. 3. V. 47. They note, that he put the jewels so upon her face, that he touched not her flesh, whereas the meaning is, that hee gave her them rather to put them on her selfe.

QUEST. XXIII. Whether Abrahams servant gave the gifts before he knew who she was.

Vers. 47. WHEREAS before v. 22. he first brought forth the jewels, before hee asked her whose daugh|ter she was, whereas here he first is said to aske her: 1. Neither is it like that he asked her, before he brought them forth: as Iun. Perer. 2. Neither doth he here report it otherwise than it was done, lest they might have accused him of levity, to give jewels to one whom he knew not: as Rasi. 3. But first he brought them forth, and then asked her the question, and after gave them, Mercer.

QUEST. XXIV. Why Laban is set before Bethuel.

Vers. 50. Then answered Laban, and Bethuel. 1. Neither was this Bethuel the brother of Laban, as Ly|ran. 2. Neither was Bethuel *Rebecca*s father dead, as Iosephus. 3. Neither is *Laban*s impiety noted, who taketh upon him to speake before his father: as Rasi. 4. Nor yet is Laban first named, as more excellent in wisdom than his father: as Aben Ezra. 5. But for that his father being old, or sickly, had committed his houshold government to Laban, Iun. Mercer.

QUEST. XXV. The space of ten dayes for *Rebecca*s abode how to be understood.

Vers. 55. Let the maid abide with us at the least ten dayes. 1. She meaneth not (that is, *Rebecca*s mo|ther) to have her stay a yeare, or at the least ten moneths, as the Hebrewes, and Onkel|s, for this had bin an unreasonable request, seeing the man made such haste. 2. Neither (the words standing thus, let her abide, dayes, at the least ten,) by dayes, are understood seven dayes of mourning for Bethuel, whom they supposed to have beene dead: for then they would not have requested for seven dayes first, and then for ten, but have begun with the greater request first. 3. Neither is the vulgar reading the best, to joyne the words together, at the least ten dayes: for in the originall, dayes goe before. 4. The best reading then is, let her abide dayes, that is, certaine, or at the least ten, Iun.

QUEST. XXVI. Of the willingnesse of Rebecca.

Vers. 58. I Will goe, &c. 1. Not that she said in effect, I will goe though you will not, as Rasi: for this thought or speech had no• become the modesty of the maid: 2. but rather her obedience to her parents appeareth, to whom she consenteth, Calvin. 3. and her will was no doubt directed by the Spi|rit of God, Muscul.

QUEST. XXVII. How Isaack dwelled in Beersheba, Abraham remaining in Hebron.

Vers▪ 6•. Isaack came from the way of Beer-lahai-roi, &c. 1. Not that Isaack went thither to fetch Hagar to be Abrahams wife after Sarahs death, as some Hebrewes: for she was not Keturah, as shall appeare afterward. 2. Neither because Abraham had married another wife, as some suppose, did Isaack dwell apart from him in Beersheba, his father remaining in Hebron, as Calvin: for it is not like that Abraham would want the presence and comfort of his dutifull sonne. 3. Nor yet for a time did Isaack dwell apart, employed as is most like in some speciall affaires in that countrey, Merc. 3. But it is most like that Abraham at this time dwelt in Beersheba, both because Abrahams servant returned thither, as also there was Sarahs tent, into the which Isaack brought Rebecca, v. 67.

QVEST. XXVIII. Why Isaack used in the evening to walke in the field.

Vers. 62. TO pray in the field. 1. Some read to talke or conferre in the field. Aquila. 2. some to talke with his workmen. Cajetan. 3. some to exercise himselfe in the field. Septuag. 4. Some to give himselfe to meditation. Ambr. Iun. 5. some to meditate and contemplate the heavens, and starres, & other naturall things. Lyran. 6. some to talke with himselfe, as they doe which are given to meditation. 7. some to take the aire. Vatabl. 8. But it is most like hee went into the field to pray unto God: and to pray with deepe meditation: for so the word suach signifieth, both to meditate and pray: and it may be, that he intended his prayer specially, concerning this businesse of his mariage.

QVEST. XXIX. How and wherefore Rebecca lighted downe from the camell.

Vers. 6.4. She lighted downe from the camel, &c. 1. She neither bowed her selfe a little upon the camell, as Ramban. 2. neither did she hurt her selfe in lighting downe, forcing by the fall the markes of her Virginitie, whereby Isaack suspected that the servant in the way had deflowred her: as the Hebrewes fable. 3. But she did for reverence unto Isaack, light downe from the beast. Mercer. 4. so that we need not with Gregory to make an allegory hereof: who by Isaack walking in the evening, understandeth Christ comming in the end of the world, and by Rebecca lighting from the camel, the Church of the Gentiles, forsaking her vitious life and manners. Gregor. in 42. Iob.

QVEST. XXX. Why they used to cover the face.

Vers. 65. She tooke a vaile and covered her. 1. The covering of the head sometime is a signe of mourning, as David covered his head, when he mourned for Absolom. 2 Sam. 19.4. 2. sometime it is a signe of great reverence, as Elias covered his face in the mount Horeb, when hee talked with God, 1 King. 19. 3. It is also a signe of displeasure, as they covered Hamans face, when the King was incensed against him, Esther 7.4. but it is here a signe of modesty and shamefastnesse: as Tertullian writeth of the Arabian women, quae non caput, sed faciem ita totam tegunt, ut uno oculo liberato contentae sive dimidia frui luce, potius quam totam faciem prostituere: which doe not only cover their head, but their whole face, that having but one eye to see with, they had rather enjoy but halfe the light, than prostitute their whole face. Caius Sulpitius Gallus, is said to have divorced his wife, because she was seene abroad with her face uncovered. Valer. Maxim. l. 6. c. 3. ex citation. Perer.

Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. It is lawfull to take an oath where there is just cause.

Vers. 3. I Will make thee sweare, &c. Abraham both sweareth himselfe, where none required an oath, Gen. 14.12. he also sware to Abimelech, who demanded an oath of him, Gen. 21.31. and here he requireth an oath of his servant. It is therefore lawfull to take an oath, where there is just cause. Muscul. Therefore that saying of Origen is some what hard, perfectis viris jurare ipsis, &c. for perfect men either to sweare themselves, or to adjure others, it is uncomely. homi. ultim. in Matth.

2. Doct. Children ought not to marry without their parents consent.

Vers. 4. TAke a wife to my sonne Isaack. Abraham provideth a wife for Isaack: It is not then lawfull for children to enterprise mariage without the consent of their parents: so Rebeckas parents doe dispose of her for marriage, v. 51. Rebeckah is before thee, take her and goe: and she afterwards giveth consent to their choice, v. 58. wherefore great wrong is offered to the right of parents by the popish Calnons, that allow contracts made without the parents consent. Calvin.

3. Doct. Angels Presidents and Ministers of marriage.

Vers. 7. HE shall send his Angell before thee, &c. The holy Angel is appointed to be a guide in this bulsinesse of mariage: which therefore is hence concluded to be an holy thing, seeing such holly spirits are presidents of this action: As the Apostle also saith, Mariage is honourable among all men, Heb. 13.3. If Angels vouchsafe their presence and assistance in mariage: how can it be a polluting or prophalnation of orders, as some popish writers affirme? Greg. Martin. dis. c. 15. sect. 11.

4. Doct. Jewels and ornaments, how farre lawfull for women.

Vers. 22. HE tooke an abillement of gold: concerning the use of these ornaments and jewels, as simply they are not unlawfull, the manner and person of wearing them considered: so these capti|ons must bee admitted. 1. that although these tokens were sent unto the spouse, and it was the use of the bride to decke and attire her selfe. Ierem. 2.32. yet did they not usually thus apparrell themselves, as with gold and such like, as S. Peter sheweth, 1 Pet. 3▪ 3.5. 2▪ The simplicity of that age is to be considered, that did not set their delight upon such things, as we read note of 〈◇〉, that she bare a pitcher of wa|ter upon her shoulders, our gentlewomen in these dayes, th••urge 〈...〉, for bracelets and jewels, would be loth to doe in other things as Rebecca did. 3. Their speciall care was to decke and ad|orne the hid man of the heart, with a meeke and quiet spirit, 1. Pet. 3. 4. Let our nice and curious wo|men first imitate them therein, then let them plead their example for the rest.

1. Confut. Peter not the chiefe among the Apostles.

Vers. 2. ABraham said to the eldest servant of his house, which had the rule: To this servant Pererius re|sembleth Peter. 1. because of his age: 2. and he was likewise by Christ set over his whole house, that is, the Church, as this servant was over Abrahams house: 3. as this servant was sent to chuse a wife for Isaack, so S. Peter was the first that converted the Gentiles to Christ, and invited them to this spirituall marriage: for Peter first of all the Apostles was instructed by vision, that the Gentiles were to be called: and the first conversion of the Gentiles, namely of Cornelius and his family was wrought by Peter. Perer. in 24. Gen. num. 5.

Contra. 1. That Peter was one of the eldest in yeares among the Apostles, wee deny not: but that hee was the eldest of all, as it seemeth this servant was, cannot be proved. 2. That hee was set over the whole Church of Christ, is but a friers dreame: all the Apostles were in equall commission: and all were sent immediately of Christ to preach the Gospell, a my father sent me, so send I you, Ioh. 20.21. that charge of our Saviour, pasce oves, feed my sheepe, will not beare such universall jurisdiction: for neither all Christs sheepe, are committed, only to Peter: and feeding, signifieth not ruling or commanding, but teaching and instructing: a duty (Saint Peter himselfe being Judge, common to all pastors and presbyters: feed the flock, &c. 1 Peter 5.2. 3. Neither is it true, that Saint Peter first preached to the Gentles. 1. for Saint Paul was converted, Act. 9. before Peter saw that vision. Act. 10. who immediately upon his conversion preached to the Gentiles in Arabia and Damascus. Galath. 1.15, 16, 17. 2. Saint Peter indeed was both the first and last, that was resolved by vision, of the calling of the Gentiles: but Saint Paul was sure thereof before by revelation, and communicated not with Peter about his vision, before he preached to the Gentiles, Galath. ibid. 3. Neither is it true that Cornelius family was the first, that was called among the Gentiles: for Andronicus and Iunia were in Christ before Paul, Rom. 16.7. who was converted before Cornelius was called. 4. Though the priority of preaching to the Gentiles were yeelded to Peter, yet the superiority goeth not together with it. 5. Lastly, all this being presupposed, yet it is but a simple argument, that is grounded upon types and figures, as this is for Saint Peters supremacy, out of this place.

2. Confut. Marriage cannot be contracted by Proctors betweene the parties being absent.

Vers. 4. TAke a wife to my sonne: Thomas Anglicus by this president would authorise the marriage of parties absent by messengers and proctors going betweene them, in 24. c. Genes. But no such thing can be hence gathered: for Abrahams servant did not conclude the marriage betweene Rebecca and Isaack, but only procured the espousals and promise of marriage: which was not fully contracted and concluded, till they both met, and then the text saith, he tooke Rebecca and she was his wife. v. 67. Perer.

3. Confut. Against the invocation of Angels.

Vers. 42. O Lord the God of my master Abraham: though Abraham had said to his servant, that the Angell of God should goe before him, v. 7. yet the servant, prayeth not to this Angell, that was appointed to be the president of his journey: but he only directeth his prayer unto God: as the scripture biddeth; Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. Matth. 4.10.

6. Places of Morall observation.

1. Observ. Not to sweare rashly.

Vers. 5. ANd the servant said, what if the woman will not come? &c. The servant is very cautelous, and circumspect in taking his oath; lest he should binde himselfe to any inconvenience by his oath, he casteth all doubts afore, and desireth to have the matter explained to the which hee sweareth. Muscul. so ought wee to bee well advised in taking of an oath: which the Prophet calleth swearing in judgement. Ierem. 4.2.

2. Observ. Our countrey not to be hated, for some abuses therein▪

Vers. 4. THou shalt goe unto my countrey, &c. Abraham hateth not his countrey, though hee knew the same to be addicted to Idolatry: As many doe in these daies, who being runnagates from their countrey for superstition rather than religion, have practised the subversion of Prince and countrey by forrein invasion. Muscul.

3. Observ. All our affaires must begin with prayer.

Vers. 12. HEe said, O Lord God of my master, &c. This servant commending the successe of his businesse and journey by prayer unto God, doth teach us to begin all our actions and enterprises with prayer: as the Apostle saith: I will that men pray, every where lifting up pure hands, &c.

4. Observ. A faithfull prayer hath present effect.

Vers. 15. YEt he had left speaking Rebecca came. Thus the Lord gave present audience to the prayer of his servant, as appeareth by the immediate effect thereof: According to the saying of the Prophet, before they call will I answer, and while they speake I will heare, Isay 65.24. Mercer.

So the Angell said to Daniel: In the beginning of thy supplication the commandement came forth, Dan. 9.23. as soone as he beganne to pray, the Lord heard him.

5. Observ. Children must not be brought up delicately.

Vers. 16. SHe went downe and filled her pitcher, &c. Rebekah was trained up by her mother to doe do[m]esticall and houshold works, she was not brought up delicately: even shee that was ap[po]inted to be the mother of Patriarks, Prophets, Kings, had this simple and hard education: which may be a lesson to fathers and masters, not to bring up their children and servants delicately or wantonly: but to bring them to labour in their youth: and children and servants may here learne obedience, not to thinke scorne to doe such homely services, which their parents and masters shall thinke good to require of them, Musculus.

6. Observ. It is lawfull sometime to conceale part of the truth.

Vers. 39. WHat if the woman will not follow me? Here the servant leaveth out in his discretion Abrahams charge given him: Beware that thou bring not my sonne thither againe, vers. 6. as also other speeches of his master: As the Lord that tooke me from my fathers house, &c. for these speeches would have but further offended them, as though Abraham had held them to be a forlorne and wicked people, that he counted it a benefit that God called him out from them, and would by no meanes that his sonne should returne thither, Mercer. Muscul. We learne then that every truth in all places, and upon all occasions, is not to be uttered: as Jeremy thereunto moved by the King, concealed the chiefe matter where[in the King communed with him, and telleth the Princes what he thought good to impart unto them, Ierem.38.27.

The first of Isaack and Jacob, the second of Ioseph.

HEB. 11.20, 21.

20. By faith Isaack blessed Iacob and Esau, concerning things to come.

21. By faith Iacob when he was a dying, blessed both the sonnes of Ioseph, &c.

AMBROS. Officior. lib. 1.

Quid sapientius sancto Iacob, qui Deum vidit facie ad faciem? quid justius, qui ea, quae acquirerat cum fratre divisit? quid fortius, qui cum Deo luctatus est? quid modestius, qui filiae injuriam mallet praetexere conjugio, quam vindicare? What was wiser than holy Iacob, who saw God face to face? what more just, who what he had gotten parted with his brother? what stronger than him, who did wrestle with God? what more modest, who had rather right his daughters wrong with marriage, than revenge it?

TO THE MOST HONOVABLE LORD, THE L. DVKE OF LENOX, AND TO THE RIGHT Honourable, the Earle of Marre, Lords of his Majesties most Honourable Privie Counsell: Grace, mercie, and Peace, from the Lord JESUS.

Right Honourable, as the highest Majestie in his wise provi|dence hath united and conjoyned your Honours, not onely in one consent and judgement of religion, but also in the joynt ad|ministration and regiment of this Nation and Kingdome un|der his excellent Majestie: so I thought good to make your Honours, with other of your Honourable place, united Pa|trons of these my labours: and as he saith,  non debet charta dividere, quos amor mutuus copulavit*; It was not fit that I should sever you in this my duty, who are combined in your mutuall amity.

Men of noble birth, delight much in antiquities, and it is their glory to derive their bloud by many descents from their thrice renowned ancestors: here I present to your Honourable view, that noble and most ancient family of Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob, who were in favour with God, and in honour and great reputation with men: whose children they are, which imitate their piety and obedience: that famous Matron Paula, whom Hierome so much commendeth, was by her father descended of Aeneas, and the noble house of the Gracchi, by her mother of Agamemnon,  of whom Hierome made this Epitaph, thought her Christian profession more honourable, than her noble birth and condition: and so I doubt not, but that it is also your honourable resolution, to say with the Apostle, who having rehearsed his great privileges after the flesh, his birth, paren|tage, and profession, thus concludeth: I count all these things but losse, for the ex|cellent knowledge sake of Christ Iesus, for whom I have counted all things as losse, and doe judge them as dung, that I might winne Christ: as Hierome also saith well, Summa apud Deum nobilitas, clarum esse virtutibus; I it is the greatest no|bility with God, to shine with vertue.

Here your Honours have the worthy example of the Patriarks to follow: the Hea|then presidents are but counterfeit and deceitfull: they had the shadowes of vertues ra|ther

than the substance: * as Ambrose saith well of Polemo, who of a drunken and riotous companion, by hearing of Xenocrates, became a Philosopher? Siresip•ir a vino, fuit semper tamen temulentus sacrilegio; If hee were sober from wine, yet hee was drunke with superstition. But these holy examples are seasoned with grace, and savour of true religion: Abraham was famous in Pharaohs Court, so was Isaack in Abime/lecks, and Iacob in another Pharaohs also, for their piety and vertue: So they which walke in their steps, shall be great both with God and man: Abraham told Abimelech plainly of the wrongs which his servants had done him, Gen. 21.15. so is it the part of good Courtiers, to shew unto the King, the wrongs and oppressions that are done in the lan•, to succour the poore, to releve the oppressed, to countenance the truth, to main|taine justice and equity. Iacob being in Bethel saw a ladder, which reached to heaven, and the Angels ascending and descending upon it: * whereupon one thus noteth; In the house of Bethel there is alwayes both going up, and comming downe: this I say, not that the goers down should dismay you, but the climers up incourage you. So in the Princes Bethel and Court, there be examples of both sorts, of some that are declining and sliding backe, onely seeking to make themselves great, and to bee enriched by the Kings favour: some there are, though the smallest number, which doe ascend upon this ladder, not aspiring to their owne honour, but using their favour to the glory of God, and benefit of his Church. Thus I trust your Lordships have learned to scale this ladder of honour, to the which you are called: to raise up those which are in the dust, to set for|ward the truth, to nourish and encourage the Preachers thereof, to speake for the innocent, to hold out your helpfull hand to the needy: so shall your Honours ascend from step to step, till you come to the top of the ladder, where Christ sitteth, who shall cast and tumble downe from thence all unfaithfull Stewards, and cut them off to have their portion with hypocrites, Matth. 24.51. but shall say unto you, and all other, that shall serve him faith|fully herein in earth; It is well done good servant and faithfull, thou hast beene faith|full in little, I will make thee ruler over much, enter into thy masters joy, Amen.

Your Honours ready to be commanded in the Lord, ANDREW WILLET.

THE FIRST BOOKE OF THIS SECOND PART OF GENESIS, Containing the Historie concerning the Patriarks, ISAACK, IACOB.

Hitherto hath beene continued the holy story of those three great Patriarks, Adam before the floud; Noah in the floud; Abraham after the floud: the rest of this Booke of Genesis followeth, which setteth forth the life, acts, and death, of the three other fathers, Isaack, Iacob, Ioseph.

CHAP. XXV.

QUEST. I. Why Abraham tooke a wife in his old age.

Vers. 1. Abraham tooke another wife. 1. Not giving way unto his lust or of any incontinency, as some of the Hebrewes: as Baal haturim saith, it is a griefe to see a man eat, if he eat not with him: 2. Neither was this done for any such mystery, as Origen supposeth, to signifie the spirituall marriage of the minde with wisdome, which is most ripe in old age, hom. 11. in Genes. 3. And yet this use may be made of Abrahams second marriage, to convince such heretikes as condemne second marriage. Augustin. lib. 16. de civit. Dei. c. 34. as also whereas the sonnes of Abraham by Hagar and Keturah were the greatest adversaries to the Isr•elites, as the Ismaelites, the Madianites: so they which beare the name of the Church as papists and other heretikes are the greatest enemies to the Church of God. 4. But the speciall cause why Abraham married in his old age, was to shew the efficacie of Gods blessing, in increasing him with a large posterity, as the Lord said unto him: I have made thee a father of many nations, Genes. 17.5. Mercer• as also to have a comfort in his olde age, now living a part from Isaack, and having committed over to him the affaires of the houshold, Cajetan.

QUEST. II. How Abrahams body being said to be dead at one hundred yeares, yet was able for procreation at one hundred forty yeares.

BUt whereas Saint Paul saith, that Abrahams body was even now dead, being almost 100. yeares old, Rom. 4.19. how was it not now more dead, being 40. yeares elder, for Isaack was now 40. yeares old, when he married Rebeccah, Gen. 25.20. who was borne in Abrahams 100. yeare.

To this some answer, that Abrahams body was said to be dead only in respect of barren Sarah, Mercer. But that seemeth not to be so: because the Apostle maketh mention together both of the deadnesse of Abrahams body and Sarahs wombe: wherefore I preferre rather Augustines opinion, that Abrahams body though dead in it selfe, was revived by the power of God, not onely for the generation of Isaack, but this strength of nature continued a long time after, for further procreation, Calvin.

QUEST. III. Whether Keturah were Hagar.

* Called Keturah: some affirme that this was Hagar, upon these grounds: 1. Because the Madianites, which came of Keturah, are called Agarenes, Psal.83.6. the Ismaelites, Moab, and Agarenes: 1. Chron. 5.19. They made warre with the Hagarenes, with •ethur, Naphish and Nadab, which were the sonnes of Ismael, Hieron. tradit. Hebraic. in Gen. 25.

Answer. These places prove not, the M•dianites or any other of Keturah to be called Agarenes: but that the name Agarenes was common to all that came of Ismael: whereof some were called Ismaelites, some Itureans, some Nabeans, &c. Iunius in 1 Chron. 5.19.

2. Keturah signifieth incense, whereby is signified that Hagar all this while living continently, was consecrated to God, as incense: and therefore Abraham, Sarah being dead, sent for her, Lyranus. Answer. Concerning the signification of this name, it skilleth not, but that Hagars name was not changed it may appeare, for that vers. 12. she is called by the name of Hagar still.

3. But it was most fit and beseeming, seeing Hagar had beene Abrahams lawfull wife, and yet living, that he should rather take her than any other, Thomas Anglic.

Answer. Shee was not Abrahams lawfull wife, but his concubine: and seeing she was a bond-woman, there was no reason that she should succeed in a free womans place, and rather because of that mystery which the Apostle noteth: which maketh Sarah and Agar figures of two mothers, one of the carnall sort, the other of the faithfull and spiritual seed.

4. Therefore Ismael and Isaack are said to have buried Abraham: as being returned to fraternall society▪ Thom. Anglic.

Answer. No such thing can be gathered hereby, that Hagar and Ismael were restored to Abrahams house: but the reason why Ismael only is ioyned with Isaack in performing this last duty is this because the other sonnes were sent farre away in Abrahams life time into the East country: But Ismael being neare dwelling (for Isaack at this time had his habitation about Hagars fountaine, which she named Beer-la|hai-roi, vers. 11.) would not be wanting in this office toward his father.

Wherefore the true opinion is, that this Keturah was some other woman and not Hagar. 1. The words of the text give it: that Abraham proceeded, or added this, and tooke him a wife,* &c. but if she had beene his wife before, then Abraham had not added or proceeded to doe as it were a new worke, Caje•an. 2. Agar is called by her owne name in this chapter, verse 12. therefore she was not Keturah. 3. Hagar could not be lesse now then 80. yeares old (Abraham being 85. when hee tooke Hagar; and now 140. some. 55. yeares before, and Hagar being supposed then to be 25.) at which yeares it is not like she could bring Abraham so many sonnes: seeing it was a great miracle for Sarah to beare at 90. Tostatius. 4. Abraham is said to have concubines, therefore more than one concubine, namely Hagar: and Keturah is directly said to be Abrahams concubine, 1. Chron. 1.32. Mercer.

QUEST. IV. Keturah not married in Sarahs lifetime.

Abraham had taken him another wife, &c. 1. Abraham did not take this wife while Sarah lived, as some thinke, Calvin. Genevens. in hunc locum: for Moses setteth downe the story in order: and seeing he tooke not Hagar but at Sarahs instance, and because he had no sonne, it is not like, that ha|ving two sonnes, he would grieve Sarah with assuming another wife: and where it is objected, that Abraham should have staid a widower 3. yeares, if he married not Keturah till now: this need not seeme strange that he deferreth his second marriage, both because he would first provide a wife for Isaack▪ and for that he mourned no lesse time for his wife than Isaack did for his mother, who was not comforted o|ver her death, till he married Rebecca, Genes. 24.67.

Neither need it move any question, whether this Keturah were of the daughters of Canaan:* for seeing Isaack of whom the promised seed should come, was provided for, Abraham for this second of-spring which he knew should not increase the people of God, was not so carefull to decline marriage with Ca|naan, Tostat. Mercer.

QUEST. V. Of the names and countries of Abrahams sonnes by Keturah.

Vers. 2. Which bare him Zimram • Iosephus thinketh that some of these inhabited the region Tr • glodytis in Africa, which cannot be, because they were sent to inhabit the East countrie, * vers. 6. as most of them had their seat in Arabia foelix: as may appeare by the remainder of their names, as Zimram gave the name to Zamram in the region of the Cinedocolpites in Arabia foelix: of Iocksan was named the towne Camasa, in Syria palmyrins, Iun. ex Ptolom. 5. Geograph.

Medan, Midian: of Medan tooke the name the towne Madiania in Arabia foelix, Iun. and the country Madianaea, on the south of Arabia, Hieron. of Midian, the country Madianitis had the name, * in the bor|ders of Arabia petraea. Therefore Pererius is in an error▪ which thinketh these two all one country, and confuteth Hierome for distinguishing them, in 25. Gen. numer. 19.

Of this Midian came the Midianites, of whom was Balaam, which gave that wicked counsell against Israel: from hence Moses had his wife, who is also called a Chusite, or Aethiopisse: for there were two countries called Chus, or Aethiopia. one eastward, which was Arabia, another the occidentall Aethiopia in Africa beyond Egypt, Perer. These Madianites were also called Ismaelites, Genes. 37.25.28. Iud. 7.33. & 8.24. because they were in their dwelling dispersed and mingled among the Ismaelites, being yet of a divers kindred and originall, the one of Agar, the other of Keturah.

Ishbak the founder of Laodicea Scabiosa in Suria: of Shuah came the Saccai, * inhabiting the East part of Syria, by Batanaea, Iun.

vers. 3. Sheba. There were three almost of this name; one the son of Chus, * Gen. 10.7. a people inhab|biting neere to Persia: another Sheba of Iocktan, of the posterity of Sem, Gen. 10.38. who are thought to inhabit India: the third is Sheba of Keturah, in Arabia deserta, Perer. Iun.

Dedan. There was another Dedan, the son of Raamah son of Chus, Gen. 10.7.1. * These were two divers people, as appeareth Ezech. 27.15.20. where two nations are rehearsed with their divers merchandise. 2. Neither of these could inhabit so far as Aethiopia in Africa, as Hierome supposeth, for being so far re|mote▪ they could have no traffike with Tyrus, as the Prophet sheweth, Ezech. 27.3. It is evident, that the Dedaneans were not farre from the Idumeans, Ier. 49.7, 8. Perer. of this Dedan seemeth to take name Adadain Syria Palmiren •, Iun.

Vers. 4. The sonnes of Midian, Ephah. These two countries are joyned together by the Prophet, * The multitude of camels shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah, Isa. 60.6. and Hierome saith, that these two are countries beyond Arabia, which abound with Camels: the whole province is called Saba, Hier. li •. 17. in Isaiam.

Hepher: Of him Iosephus would have Africa so called: which is not like, * seeing all these are said to dwell in the East countries: and yet there is no great probability, that it should be called Africa of Afer the son of the Lybian Hercules, Perer.

The rest of the posterity of Keturah, either were no founders of severall nations, or their seats are un|knowne: only this generall direction we have, that they settled themselves towards the East in Arabia, or Syria, not farre off one from another.

QUEST. VI. Of what goods Isaack was made heire, and why.

Vers. 5. ABraham gave all his goods to Isaack. 1. Abraham had no lands or possessions to give to Isaack: for he possessed nothing but certaine wels of water, and the grove which he plan|ted in Beersheba, Gen. 22. and the double cave which he bought of Ephron. 2. They were therefore moveable goods, as they are called, which Abraham gave to Isaac as sheepe, beeves, silver, gold, maid servants, men servants, wherein Abrahams substance consisted, Gen. 24.35. Abraham was greatly encreased in all these things, 90. yeares before his death, when Lot and he for their greatnesse were constrained to divide households, Gen. 13. and such was Abrahams greatnesse, that even kings, as Abimelech, desired his friendship, Gen. 21. 3. Hee made Isaac heire of all this, both because he was the sonne of Sarah his first and chiefe wife, and because God had declared Isaac to be Abrahams heire, Perer.

QUEST. VII. The difference of lawfull and unlawfull copulations in Abrahams time.

Vers. 6. TO the sonnes of the concubines. Wee see then, in Abrahams time there was a difference betweene wives and concubines, and that all copulations were not lawfull: as Cicero noteth, that in the beginning, there was a time, when men lived as beasts, &c. nemo legitimas viderat nuptias▪

◇◇ certos quispiam inspexerat liberos, &c. no man knew what lawfull marriage was, nor did acknowledge his owne children▪ Cicero. in prooem. de invention. Well might this brutish fashion be received among the heathen, but in the church of God among the faithfull it was not so: but even then, when as yet no positive lawes were made to restraîne unnaturall lusts, and unlawfull conjunctions in marriage, they were a law to themselves, and made a great difference betweene honest marriage, and dishonest lust.

1. In Abrahams time, it is evident that there was a distinction betweene a wife and a concubine: Sarah was Abrahams wife, Hagar his concubine: hereof more shall be said in the next question. 2. They made a difference betweene marriage with a free woman and a bond-woman, as Hagar the bond-woman with her sonne was cast out. 3. That age discerned betweene matrimoniall acts and adulterous: Abimelech confesseth adulterie, that is, commixtion with another mans wife to be sin, Gen. 20. 4. Another difference was made betweene marriage and fornication, Gen. 34.32. Should he use our sister as a whore? so the sonnes of Iacob answered their father. 5. Betweene lawfull marriage and unlawfull copulation with the fathers concubine, or sonnes wife: as Ruben was accursed because he lay with Bilhah his fathers concubine, Gen. 35.22. and Iudas having committed the like fault with Thamar his daughter ignorantly, would doe it no more, Gen. 38.26. 6. A great difference they made betweene voluntary commixtion, and violent forcing: therefore Simeon and Levi were incensed against the Sichemites, because Sechem had forced their sister, Gen. 34.2. Perer.

QUEST. VIII. The difference betweene a wife and a concubine.

NOW whereas Keturah seemeth to be reckoned among Abrahams concubines; yet was she indeed Abrahams wife, as she is called. Gen. 25. 1. Neither in that sense Abrahams concubine, as Hagar was.

1. There are foure principall differences betweene a wife and a concubine: the wife was taken solemnly with espousals, contract, consent of friends: as Iacob tooke Lea and Rachel, so did he not Zilpah and Bilhah: the wife was taken into the house to be the mother of the family, and governesse of the house; the concubine was a servant still of the family, as Hagar was to Sarah: the wife was taken as an inseparable companion to the husband during his life, the concubine might bee put away, as Hagar was from Abraham: the wife was chosen, whose issue should onely be heires of the house, but the sonnes of the concubine inherited not: as the sonnes of Gilead said to Iephtah, Thou shalt not inherit in our fathers house, for thou art the sonne of a strange woman, Iud. 12.2.

2. Now where all these properties concurred, she was properly and truly a concubine: such an one was Hagar, who was neither contracted to Abraham by any solemne espousals, nor yet had the government of the house, but was at Sarahs checke, neither continued shee all her daies with Abraham, nor her sonne admitted to be heire.

*3. But where all these properties are not seene together, but some one of them, there sometimes shee that is the wife, by a certaine abuse of the word, s called a concubine: as the Levites wife, before shee was yet solemnly espoused unto him with consent of her parents, is called his concubine, Iud. 19.1. for as yet she did commit fornication with him: but afterward having her fathers consent, he is called his father in law, vers. 4. so here in this place Keturah is called Abrahams concubine, for that her children were not admitted to be heires with Isaack: but otherwise she was Abrahams lawfull wife. And for the same reason, sometimes a concubine is called a wife, as Zilpah and Bilhah are said to be Iacobs wives, Genesis 37.2. because their children were coheires with the rest, and fathers of the tribes.

*4. There appeareth then great difference betweene Hagar and Keturah: Hagar was neither solemnly taken to be Abrahams wife, but given him onely for procreation, and while Sarah Abrahams lawfull wife was yet living, shee remained a bond-woman still, and was not made free: she was cast out of the house: But Keturah was solemnly taken to be Abrahams wife, she was a free woman, Sarah was now dead, she left not Abraham while she lived: wherefore Keturah was not properly Abrahams concubine, but for that reason onely before alleaged. But Hagar was verily his concubine, as Leowell determineth; Aliud est uxor, aliud concubina, sicut aliud ancilla, aliud libera, propter quod Apostolus ad manifestandum harū personarum diseretionem testimonium ponit, ex Genes. &c. A wife is one thing, a concubine another: a free woman is one thing, a bond another: and therefore the Apostle to shew the difference of these persons, doth al|leage a testimony out of Genesis, where it is said to Abraham, Cast out the bond-woman and her sonne, for the sonne of the bond-woman shall not be heire with my sonne Isaack Leo epist. 90. c. 4. & citatur par 2. c. 32. q. 2. c. 12. & concil. Triburiens. c. 38.

QUEST. IX. Why Abraham sent away the sonnes of Keturah.

Abraham gave them gifts, and sent them away from Isaack, &c. The reasons of Abrahams so doing are these: 1. because that countrey was not like to hold them, Abraham knowing that his seed should exceedingly multiply, Perer. 2. Abraham did it to take away all occasion of strife that might fall out betweene brethren, as for that cause before, Abraham and Lot were separated, Calvin. 3. lest that Isaack and his seed might have beene corrupted by their evill manners, and false worship, whom Abraham did foresee, not to belong to the people of God, Perer. 4. The greatest reason of all was, because the inheritance of that land was promised to Isaacks seed, which he would not have disturbed by his other sonnes, Muscul. Mercer.

QUEST. X. What East countrey Abraham sent Keturahs sonnes into.

SEnt them Eastward to the East countrey, &c. 1. Not Eastward in respect of Isaacks dwelling, for some part of the land of Canaan was so towards the East. 2. nor yet Eastward in respect of the situlation of the world: for so India is counted in the East, whither indeed Hierome thinketh that they were sent: but it is not like that Abraham would send his sonnes so farre off. 3. They were then sent into the East countrey in respect of Palestina, as into Syria, Arabia, where the Ismaelites, Idumeans, and Midianites inhabited: which countries in the Scripture are usually called by the name of the East: as Iacob going into Mesopotamia is said to goe into the East country, Gen. 29.1. Balaam came from Aram out of the mountaines of the East, Num. 23.7. Iob also is said to have beene the greatest of all the men of the East, Iob 1.3, 4. Into these East countries they were sent, not because the people there were addicted to art magicke, whereunto Abraham saw his sonnes inclined, as the Cabalists coniecture: but it is like that those countries to the which he sent them, were as yet vacant and unpeopled, Mercer.

QUEST. XI. Of the computation of the yeares of Abrahams life.

Vers. 7. THis is the age of Abrahams life, 175. yeares: Pererius upon this place gathering into a summe the storie of Abrahams life, falleth into many apparent errorrs in Chronology, which briefly shall be noted. 1. He saith, that Abraham was borne in the seventy yeares of his father Terahs age: where|as it is cleare, seeing Araham in his fathers two hundred and five yeare, was seventy five yeares old, Gen. 11.32. & 12.4. that he was borne in the hundred and thirty yeare of his fathers age. 2. As one absurdity being granted, many follow, and one errorr breedeth many: so upon this false ground he buildeth other uncertaine conclusions, as that Abraham was borne after the flood, 292. yeares: whereas he was borne 60. yeares after, an. 352. after the flood: for so long after is the 130. yeare of Terahs age. 3. He saith,* that Noah died in the 58. yeare of Abrahams age, whereas Noah died 2. yeares before Abraham was borne. 4. Further he affirmeth, Terah Abrahams father to have died in the 135. yeare of Abrahams life, whereas he must end his life sixty yeares before, in the seventy five of Abrahams age: for so old was Abraham when he went out of Charran: whence he departed not till the death of Terah, Act. 7.4. 5. He proceedeth further in this his new coyned Chronologie, that Abraham died in the 467. yeare after the flood, and 2123. yeares after the creation, whereas it was the 527. yeare after the flood, and 2183 yeares from the beginning of the world, wherein Abraham left his life. 6. Further he saith, that Abraham left S•m alive behinde him: whereas it is certainly gathered, that S•m died 25. yeares before, in the 15•. yeare of Abrahams life, and 502. yeares after the flood, Genes. 11.11.

QUEST. XII. How Abraham yeelded up his Spirit.

Vers. 8. HE yeelded up the spirit and died, &c. 1. Though the word gav• rather so signifieth, expira|re, to give up the ghost, than deficere, to faint: Hieromes reason is not so good, * quia non co•venit Abraha deficere, it was not fitting that Abraham should faint and decrease: for no morall decreasing or fainting is here spoken of, but onely naturall. 2. Neither is this word, which signifieth to yeeld up the Spirit, used onely of the just, as Rabbi Salomon and Lyran••: for the same is uttered of the old world, Gen. 7.21. all the flesh yeelded the breath: and of Ismael, vers. 17. of this chapter. 3. Neither is Oleasters reason sufficient, why we should read rather he fainted, than yeelded up the spirit, because it followeth, he died: and so the same thing would be twice expressed: for this expiring or yeelding up of the spirit, shew|eth the facility and easinesse of his death: as the word following betokeneth the thing, that he dy|ed; so this declareth the manner: not that he dyed without any sicknesse, or grieve, as Aben Ezra: for the faithfull are not exempted from the common condition of mankind, Vatah. but it sheweth that he willingly rendred up his soule into the hands of God, Calvin. 4. Cajetanes collection is not here to be refused, that three things are set downe by Moses concerning Abrahams departure: 1. that he dyed, that is, was dissolved, which belongeth unto the whole man, as consisting of body and soule: 2. that hee was buried, which concerneth his body: 3. that he was gathered unto his people, in respect of his soule which was joyned to the blessed company of the Saints: Cajet. in hunc l•um.

QUEST. XIII. How Abraham died in a good age, and full of yeares.

IN a good age, satisfied or full of daies. 1. In that Abraham is said to have died in a good old age, where|as many before him were of longer life, and much elder, of whom this phrase is not used:

Philo galthereth, that it was not the old age of his body, but his perfection of vertue, that made a good old age: Disce soli viro bono contingere senectutem bonam: Know, that onely a good old age happened to a good man: sic etiam Calvin. 2. Hee was full: because daies is not added in the originall, the Hebrewes gather that he was full, not onely of daies, but of all other blessings, ex Mercer: and he was satisfied with daies, as not desirous to have his life prolonged, Calvin. Thus even some among the Heathen were satisfied with daies: as Cicero writeth of Cato, that he should say, Siquis deus mihi largiatur, et ex hac aetate repuscrascam, & in cunis vagiam, valde recedem: that if God should grant me to become a childe againe, and to cry in the cradle, I would refuse it, Cicer. de senectus. Therefore Abraham was in another sort full of daies, because his daies were full of vertue: hee had not spent his life in vaine, but as Apelles the cunning painter was wont to say, nullus dies sine linea, no day without a line: and Titus the Emperour, if any day had passed, wherein he had not done some good, would say to his friends: Diemperdidi, I have lost a day: so no doubt Abraham did passe over his time in fruitfull workes, Perer.

QUEST. XIV. How the sinner is said to die before his time.

Abraham then received a great blessing of God, in living both long and well; and dying in his time: not as the Preacher saith of the wicked man, lest thou die in tempore non tuo, in a time not thine, Ecclesiast. 7.19. which is so spoken, 1. Not that a man can die before the time appointed of God: for a mans daies are determined with God, Iob 14.5. 2. Nor yet so onely, because the wicked is never prepared or fit for death, both because he is destitute of vertue, as also hee expecteth not death, in which respects in some sense he may be said to die not in his time, being neither ripe for it in vertue, nor looking for it. 4. But the sinner is said to die before his time; when the naturall course of his life, which he in the judgement of man (though not in the determination of God) might have lived, is by some violent and extraordinary kinde of death shortened and cut off: as Nadab and Abihu, for offering in strange fire, were thus before their time consumed with a fire sent from God, Levit. 10. ex Perer.

QUEST. XV. What it is to be gathered to his people.

Vers. 8. And was gathered to his people. 1. This people are not the sunne, moone and starres, or the invisible idaea, or formes, according to the which, these sensible things were made: or the foure elements, of the which the bodies of men are compounded, as Philo imagineth: these are but Platonicall conceits: * and who seeth not how improperly the name of people agreeth to any of these? 2. Neither with Augustine, by people doe we understand the society and company of Angels: for Ismael also is said, vers. 17. to be gathered to his people. 3. Neither can it bee applied to Limbus patrum, where all the just men were from the beginning of the world, as Lyranus, Rupertus: unlesse they will say, that Ismael also went into the place of just men, who was also gathered to his people: and whereas they make Limbus patrum, a member of hell, a place of darknesse, Abraham went not thither: seeing Abrahams besome was a place of rest and joy, where the Angels were, for they carried Lazarus soule thither. But these blessed spirits are Angels of light, and not of darknesse. 4. We also refuse Burgensis conceit, who noteth a difference of phrase in the old and new testament, when the Scripture speaketh of the dead: they are said, that die in the new testament, to die in the Lord, which phrase is not used of any in the old testament, because they were not admitted ad beatificam Dei visione , to the blessed presence and sight of God. Contr. Indeed I grant, that after the manifestation of the Messiah to the world, the Scripture speaketh more clearly of the faithfull departed in the new testament, because the Messiah was then come: but not for any such cause pretended: for even the soules of the faithfull departed in the old testament, did enjoy the presence of God, as David saith, I shall behold thy face in righteousness, and when I awake, be satisfied with thine image, Psal. 17.15. he doubted not but that his soule first apart should see God, and then both body and soule in the resurrection: and the Scripture speaketh evidently, that Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob, did live with God: for of them God is called, who is not the God of the dead but of the living, Matth.

22.32. 5. Neither this phrase, to be gathered to his people, doth only signifie to be in the state of the dead, and equivalent to that phrase, to sleepe with their fathers, which is spoken of the wicked, as well as of the righteous: as idolatrous Ahaz is said to have slept with his fathers, 2 King.16.20. Mercer. For if it were no more but thus, to be gathered to his fathers, that is, to die, and be buried: the same was said before: and such repetition of the same thing might be thought needlesse. 6. Wherefore beside this sense, this phrase doth further shew the divers state of the soule after this life, that both Abraham had his people, the just and righteous, to whom he was gathered, as also Ismael his: that the soules which goe hence are not solitary and alone, but goe as it were from one people to another, from one city to another, Luther, Calvin, Perer.

QUEST. XVI. Why Ismael is joyned with Isaack in the buriall of his father.

Vers. 9. His sonne Isaack and Ismael buried him, &c. 1. Isaack is set before Ismael, not as though he had repented him of his presumption against Isaack, and gave him the prioritie, as the Hebrewes imagine: but Isaack is preferred before Ismael for the dignity of his prerogative. 2. Neither doth this shew that Abraham had called Ismael home againe, after he was cast out: for that had beene against the counsell of God, that the bond-woman with her sonne should bee cast out. 3. But it is like that Abraham being sicke and wearing away sent for Ismael, dwelling not farre off, and reconciled him and Isaack, Mercer.

QUEST. XVII. How Isaack was blessed after Abrahams death.

Vers. 11. After the death of Abraham God blessed Isaack, &c. 1. We refuse here the fond conceit of the Hebrewes, that Abraham blessed not Isaack because of Esau which should come of him; and therefore God and not Abraham is said to blesse Isaack: for although no expresse mention be made of Abrahams blessing Isaack, it is not to bee thought, that Abraham omitted it: and seeing God blessed Isaack, Abraham had no reason to withhold his blessing. 3. This blessing of Isaack was rather spirituall than temporall, for Isaack was married twenty yeare before he saw his posterity, or had any children borne: whereas Ismael begat twelve Dukes: Isaack therefore with patience expected Gods promise and blessing upon him, Mer. 3. We see here also performed that promise of God, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed, for Isaack is blessed after Abrahams death, Marret.

QUEST. XVIII. Of the dwelling of Ismaels sonnes.

Vers. 13. *These are the names of the sonnes of Ismael, &c. Nebaioth, of whom came the Nabathaei in Arabia Petraea, and Napathaei, in Arabia foelix, or the happie: of Kedar, the Kedarens, as Lampridius, or Cedraei, as Plinie calleth them, in Arabia petraea: of Adbeel the Adubeni or Agubeni, with Ptolomy in Arabia the happy: of Mibsam, the Mnasemanenses in Arabia the happie: of Mishma the Raabeni, in Arabia the desert, where Ptolomie placeth the towne Zagmais: of Dumah the Dumaei, betweene the Adubenes and Raabenes, where is the towne Dumetha: of Massa, the Masani, neare to the Raabenes: of Chadar the Athritaei: of Thema the Themanei, in Arabia foelix, where is the towne Thema: of Iethur, the Itureans in Coelae-Syria: of Naphish, the Nubaei Arabians, neare to the mount Libanus: of Kedma the Cadmonaei, called Esites because they worshipped fire, by the corrupt use of the Hebrew word ish, fire: ex I•ni•.

QUEST. XIX. The Massorites curious observation.

Vers. 14. Misma, Dumah, Masha: 1. Of Dumah and Masha mention is made, Isay 21.11. where some translate masha, burden: in the same place also Thema is mentioned, verse 14. another of the sonnes of Ismael here rehearsed. 2. The Massorites doe note that this is one of the 14. verses through the whole Bible, that consisteth of three words, Mercer. 3. And further they observe, that these three names, the first derived of shamang, to heare, the second of dum, which is to keepe silence, the third of nasha, to beare, doe signifie the three principall things that make a quiet and good life: to heare, to keepe silence, to beare: but these notes are too curious, Mercer.

QUEST. XX. Why mention is made of Ismaels age.

Vers. 17. There are the yeares of the life of Ismael, 137. yeares: The Hebrewes thinke that Ismael a wicked mans age is recorded for this end, that we may have a perfect account of Iacobs yeares: for if Ismael died the same yeare that Iacob went from his father, unlesse he be supposed to have hidden himselfe 14. yeares in Hebers house before he came to Laban, as the Hebrewes thinke, which is not like, he shall want 14. yeares of his age; as they further gather thus: Iacob was 63. yeares old when he fled from his fathers house because of Esau, his father being then 123. yeares old, and Ismael 137, 14. yeare elder than Isaack: then he served 14. yeare before Iosephs birth: Ioseph was 30. yeare old when he stood before Pharao: then followed 7. yeares of plenty, and two yeares of dearth, when Iacob went downe to Egypt: all maketh but 116. yeare: But Iacob then confesseth when hee appeared before Pharao to bee 130. yeare old: the 14. yeares wanting they imagine Iacob to have spent in Hebers house.

But this computation of the Hebrewes faileth many waies. 1. Heber was dead long before Iacobs 60. yeare: he died some 4. yeares after Abraham, in the 19. yeare of Iacobs age, as may be gathered thus: * Heber was borne 67. yeares after the flood, Gen. 11. v. 10. to 15. and lived 464. yeares, which make together 531. yeares after the flood, and Abraham died 527. yeares after the flood, as is before shewed, quest. 11. 2. It is also an uncertaine conjecture, that Ismael died the same yeare that Iacob went toward Mesopotamia, neither can it be proved. 3. These 14. yeares may be otherwise supplied: if we say that Iacob might be 14. yeares in Labans house before he served for his wives, Mercer: or, which is the more likely, that Iacob was 77. yeares old, before he went out of his fathers house, Concent. 4. Therefore for this cause is mention made of Ismaels age, who is the onely evill man, whose whole age is recorded in Scripture, but to shew the fulfilling of Gods promise, who condescended to Abrahams request, that Ismael might live in Gods sight, Genes. 17.18. for so the Lord endued him with long life, and blessed him with much prosperity and an honourable issue.

QUEST. XXI. How Ismael is said to dwell in the presence of his brethren.

Vers. 18. And they dwelt from Havilah to Shur, &c. And he lay, or his lot fell before all his brethren. 1. The meaning is not, that Ismael did issue out or fall upon all his brethren, as the word Naphal signifieth, whereof commeth the word ← Nephilim, Giants, Muscul. 2. Neither, that hee full, that is, died, Aben Ezra. 3. Or that he died before his brethren, that is, his sonnes in a full age, Lryan. 4. Or that he died before his brethren, as though his life was shorter than of the rest. 5. But either it may be expounded his lot fell, Iun. or if this seeme to be coact, as Calvin thinketh; the word also signifieth, to he, Iud. 7.12. so that this is the sense, that he lay, that is, dwelt, as the Septuagint and Chalde translate, before his brethren; that is, he bordered upon them, his brethren the sonnes of Keturah; not he onely in person, but his posterity, inhabiting this large countrey, whereof the desart of Sur was the bounds on the south, the land of Chavilah (not that in India, but another in Arabia, where the Geographers place the Chaulateans) on the East, Assiria on the North, so that this sheweth the accomplishment of that prophelcie, Gen. 16.12. he shall dwell in the presence of all his brethren, Mercer. Iun.

QUEST. XX. Why Isaack is againe said to be the sonne of Abraham.

Vers. 19. THese are the generations of Isaack, Abrahams sonne, &c. 1. Although the birth of Iacob and Esau was long before Ismaels death; for at that time Ismael was but 74. yeares old; 14. yeare elder than Isaack, who was 60. at the birth of his children; but Ismael lived in all 137. yeare; yet Moses finisheth and knitteth up briefly the story of Ismael because he maketh haste to set downe the story of Isaack and Iacob, the Patriarkes of the Church and people of God. 2. Yet hee dwelleth not long in the history of Isaack, handling the life and acts of Iacob, in the most part of this booke behinde, and as it may appeare for these reasons: 1. Because all the children of Iacob, the twelve Patriarkes, were founders of the visible Church; * whereas Esau came of Isaack. 2. For that greater variety of temptations and changes happened to Iacob, than to Isaack, wherein he shewed experiment of his vertue. 3. More excellent visions were manifested to Iacob, than to Isaack, six in all, Genes. 28.2. Genes. 31.3. cap. 32.4. and 5. chap. 35.6. Gen. 46. whereas two onely were revealed to Isaack expressed c. 26. ex Perer. 3. Isaack is here againe called the sonne of Abraham, not because some sorcerers of that time held him to be Abimelechs sonne, and therefore to put the matter out of doubt, hee is againe repeated to be Abrahams sonne; thus the Hebrews conjecture; but because Genealogers must beginne from the first famous aulthor, or father, Moses beginneth with Abraham, to whom such large promises were made concerning his seed.

QUEST. XXI. Why Isaack staid three yeares after Sarahs death for Rebecca.

Vers. 20. Isaack was 40. yeare old when he tooke Rebecca to wife, &c. 1. The Hebrewes doe but fable, that Rebecca was borne about Sarahs death, and that Isaack stayed for her 3. yeares after: for though the report of *Rebecca*s her birth about that time came to Abraham, Gen. 22. yet then it was not done; and if Rebecca had beene then borne, Isaack must have stayed longer for her than 3. yeares: Rasi thinketh Rebecca was then 10. yeare old, and that Isaack stayed for her three years more; but it is more like that she was then 30. yeares of age, ten yeares younger than Isaack, as Sarah was to Abraham, Mercer. 2. Rupertus allegorie also is but forced, that as Sarah died 3. yeares before the marriage of Isaack and Rebecca, so from the baptisme of Christ three yeares before his passion, the law began to die. 3. Mention is here made of Bethuel and Laban, to shew the grace of God toward Rebecca, that was a rose between two thornes, having a superstitious both father and brother, Muscul. as also Laban is brought in, to make a way for the storie following, whose daughters Iacob married, Iun.

QUEST. XXII. Whence Mesopotamia was called Padan.

Vers. 20. OF Padan Aram. This was not the name of a city, but a country; for the name of Laban and Bethuels city was Charran. 1. It was not called Padan Aram, that is, the region or coun|treys of Aram. 2. Neither because Padan in the Syrian tongue signifieth a paire, is it so called, because there were two countreys of Syria, or Aram; Aram Soba, and Aram Naharaim, or Mesopotamia; and the name of Padan to be given to Mesopotamia, as the chiefe. 3. But a part of Mesopotamia was so called, because of two floods which parted and divided the river Chaborah and Euphrates: a monument of this name Padan, appeareth in the name Aphadans, given unto two townes, one situate by Euphrates, the o|ther by the river Chabora, Iunius ex Ptolem.

QUEST. XXIII. Wherefore barren women were the mothers of the Church.

Vers. 21. BEcause she was barren: We finde in Scripture, that many excellent women appointed to be the mothers of holy men, were barren: as Sara, Rebecca, Rachel, Anna the mother of Sa|mu|el, Elizabeth the mother of Iohn Baptist: the reasons are yeelded to be these: 1. That we might know genus Israeliticum non naturali successione, sed gratia esse multiplicatum; that the Israelites were multiplied, not by naturall succession, but by grace, Theodoret. qu. 74. in Genes. 2. Vt ex mirabili partu sterilium foeminae praestrueretur fides partus virginis: that by the miraculous bearing of barren women, a way might be made to beleieve the birth of a virgin, Chrysost. hom. 49. in Genes. 3. This was also done, ad consolandos autem sterilium conjugum, to comfort the minds of barren couples, Chrysost. ibid. 4 It might be that God would qualifie the excesse of Isaacks love by this meanes, Calvin.

QUEST. XXIV. Why and how long Isaack prayed for his wife.

Vers. 21. Isaack prayed to the Lord for his wife. 1. He knew that the impediment was in his wife, and not in himselfe, because of Gods promise made to Abraham, Gen. 21.17. I will greatly multiplie thy seed: and therefore he prayeth for Rebecca. 2. It is not like that hee continued in this prayer twenty yeares, so long as Rebecca was barren, as Chrysostometh thinketh, hom. 49. in Gen. for some experience Isaack first had of her barrennesse, which could not be immediately after their marriage. 3. Neither as Rasi, did hee expect ten yeares, (as Abraham so long tooke triall of Sarah before hee tooke Hagar; and hereupon the Hebrewes after ten yeares triall of barrennesse doe take liberty to repudiate their wives:) for the ten yeares, after the which Sarah gave Hagar to Abraham, are to be counted not from their marriage, but from their comming into Canaan. 4. The time therefore cannot be presently set how many yeares Isaack continued praying for his wife: but it is like he continued and waited in prayer, for so the word gnathar here used, signifieth to frequent and multiply prayer. 5. And where the word is nocach, he prayed, in respect or toward his wife: we need neither to understand his wife allway to be present when he prayed, or that they prayed together, one in one corner, the other in another, as the Hebrewes: but the meaning is, that he prayed in the behalfe of his wife: though it is not unlike but that sometime they prayed together.

QUEST. XXVII. Why Isaack did not thinke of second marriage, as Abraham tooke Agar.

NOW Isaack seeing his wife to be barren, did not take unto him another, to have children by, as Abraham did Hagar. 1. Not as the Hebrewes imagine, because he was consecrate unto God in mount Moriah, and therefore could not be twice married: for the Priests were consecrate unto God, and yet second marriage was not prohibited unto them. 2. But it is like that Abraham who expected the promised seed 25. yeares, taught Isaack with like patience to wait upon God. 3. And Abraham himselfe might shew some dislike of his forwardnesse in taking Hagar, Mercer: 4. And beside the case herein was unlike, because Rebeckah made no such offer to Isaack, of another to beare in her stead, as Sarah did to Abraham, Perer. 5. And notwithstanding that Isaack onely had Rebeckah, Abraham two other beside Sarah, he is not to be simply preferred before Abraham: for as Augustine well determineth this question, Non ex bonis singulis inter se homines comparari debere, sed in unoque considerata sunt universa, &c. that men must not be compared together in particular gifts, but all must be considered together*: that although herein Isaack exceeded Abraham, yet he in measure of faith and obedience did goe beyond him.

QUEST. XXVIII. Whether Gods purpose is furthered by prayers.

The Lord was intreated of him, and Rebeckah conceived. Although the Lord promised to multiplie Abrahams seed by Isaack, and that Iacob was predestinate of God, and therefore Gods purpose could not but stand; yet here it seemeth to be effected by Isaacks prayers, that Rebeckah should conceive: because Isaack had no certaine promise whether by Rebeckah, or at what time he should be increased. For answer hereunto: 1. We say not with Thom. Angl. that Gods counsell and predestination is conditionall: Deus non praedestinat talia absolute, sed sub congruis conditionibus; * God doth not predestinate such things absolutely, but under certaine conditions. For Gods purpose of election and predestination is without any condition: as the Apostle saith, That the purpose of God might remaine according to election, not by workes, but by him that calleth, Rom. 9.11. Gods election standeth not by any condition, in him that is called, but by the will of the caller. 2. Neither doe we thinke, praedestinationem sanctorum praecibus juvariposse, * quoad effectum, licet impediri non possit: that Gods predestination can be helped in respect of the effect by the prayers of the Saints, though it cannot be hindred: which is the opinion of Thomas Aquinas, 1. par. qu. 23. ar. 8. for the Apostle saith, Who was his counsellor, or who gave unto him first, and he shall be recompenced, Rom. 11.35. As neither God was assisted in his eternall counsell, neither can he be helped in the execution thereof. 3. Nor yet doe we allow that saying of Gregorie; that God so predestinates eternall life, ut postulando mereantur accipere, that yet it may be merited by prayer: and as Aquine speaketh, that God doth creaturis dignitatem causalitatis communicare, that God doth communicate to creatures the dignity of being causes: for the Apostle calleth it election of grace: and if it be of grace, it is no more of workes, Rom. 11.6. therefore workes as causes cannot be subordinate to election of grace. 4. Yet seeing as God hath predestinated the end, so he hath ordained the meanes and way leading thereunto: therefore by faith, prayer, hope, patience, the elect are brought to be partakers of the happy end: not as causes procuring the same, but as meanes to assure them thereof: for these are fruits of our election: as the Apostle saith, He hath chosen us in him, before the foundation of the world, that wee should be holy, Eph 1.4. So Ambrose upon these words of the Apostle, who hath saved us, &c. not according to our workes, but according to his owne purpose and grace, 2. Tim. 1.9. thus inferreth: Quomodo redint egraretur, praedestinavit, quo tempore, per quos, qua ratione salvari possunt, ut neque merito suo, qui salvantur, neque hominum, per quos vocantur, sed Dei gratia istud donum praestari videatur per fidem Christi: God hath predestinate how a man should be restored at what time, by whom and what meanes he should be saved, that neither by their merit that are saved, nor theirs by whom they are called, but by Gods grace this gift is bestowed through faith in Christ. So in this place Isaacks prayer is not the condition, cause, or helpe of Rebeckahs conceiving but even Isaacks prayer was as wel preordained of God, as Rebeckahs bearing: God appointed that Isaack should pray, and that Rebeckah thereupon should conceive: and as Gods purpose for the conception of Rebeckah could not be altered, so also Gods prescience concerning the stirring up of Isaack to pray to the same end, could not be deceived.

QUEST. XXIX. How the children strove together in the wombe.

Vers. 22. The children strove together, &c. 1. They did not exultare, leape, as Ambrose readeth, nor gastire, skip, as Augustine, o Iudene, play, as Hierome:* but the word signifieth to beat one upon another, as is shewed beside upon 2. Which motion was neither naturall, as Aristotle saith, that male children doe strive in the right <◇> the <◇> day, the female in the left, in the 90. day: de histor. animal. lib. 7. c. 3.4. Neither was this <◇> voluntary: non <...> scientia cerrandi, they strove not together, as having any skill to <◇>, Rupert. But <...> was extraordinary, both because Rebeckah was so affected with the strangenesse of it, Calvin. as also for that it portended two kinde of people, that should one strive against another, Perer.

QUEST. XXX. Why Rebeckah saith, why am I thus.

WHy am I thus. 1. Not as though she should say, cur vivo, why live I? as Mercer. 2. Neither yet she fearing some abortion or miscarrying of the infant, wished she had not conceived, Muscul. 3. But she doubted whether she had conceived or no, or whether it might be otherwise with her, Iun.

QUEST. XXXI. How Rebecca consulted with God.

Vers. 22. SHee went to aske the Lord. 1. Shee neither tooke a journey for her health sake: as Aristotle giveth advice, that women with childe, desidia non torpeant, sed singulis diebus spatium aliquod deos venerandi causa conficiant: should not give their bodies to rest, but every day should take some journey to visit the gods, &c. lib. 7. politic. c. 16. 2. Neither did she goe to Sem, who was dead ten yeares before, nor to Heb•r, who dwelt too farre off, as the Hebrewes thinke. 3. Neither yet was there any Priest, to whom she should resort, as Chrysost. 4. Not yet need she goe to any Prophet, as Oleaster, her husband being a Prophet. 5. Nor yet is it like she went to Melchisedeck, to Mount Moria, as Eusch. Gennad. which was too far a journey of three daies at the least, Gen. 22.4. for a woman great with childe to take in hand: and if Sem were Melchisedeck, he was not then alive. 6. Neither need she goe to any of the altars, which the Patriarkes had made to aske counsell of God, seeing God was every where present to the prayers of the faithfull. 7. Neither are we to imagine, that she used any such superstitious way, as to lay agu• castus, lawrell, or any such thing under her head, to have a dreame or a vision, as she had seene her friends to doe in her owne countrey: sic author histor. scolastic. in Gen. c. 66. for she was farre from such superstitious toies, ex Perer. 8. Nor yet did she consult with God by Abraham then living: as Aben Ezra, Iun. for this oracle was given her by Gods owne mouth, rather than mans, Calvin. 9. But she went to some secret place to pray, and received some revelation from God, Muscul. Calvin. Mercer. Perer.

QUEST. XXXII. How many waies they used to consult with God in Israel.

FOure waies they used to aske counsell of God in Israel: 1. Beside the casting of lots, which was but seldome used, as by Iosua, in Achans cause, Iosua 7. and by Samuel at the election of Saul, 1 Sam. 10. and by Saul to finde out the transgression of his vow by Jonathan, 1 Sam. 14. there were three waies beside to aske counsell of God, which are mentioned together, 1. Sam. 28.6. by dreames, urim, and pro|phets; 2. The second way was by dreames and visions, as the Lord spake to the elder Patriarkes: but this way God seldome revealed his will by, after he sent them prophets: and for these visions they used to prepare themselves by fasting and prayer, Dan. 10.3. 3. They used in hard and difficult matters to seeke unto the prophets, as Saul went to Samuel, 1. King. 9. Ieroboam sent his wife to Ahiah the Prophet, *1 King. 14. These Prophets had such matters revealed unto them three waies: 1. The Lord instructed them aforehand, as he did Samuel, before Saul came at him. 2. Sometime at the same instant, when they were consulted with: as the Angel of God spake to Elijah, 2. King. 1.15. 3. Sometime the Prophet presently gave no answer, but waited upon God by prayer, as Dan. 9. or stirred himselfe up extraordinarily, that the spirit might come upon them, as Elisha did, 2. King. 3.15. 4. They also consulted with God by the priest,* who asked counsell of God for them by his Vrim: as Abiathar applyed the Ephod for David, 1. Sam. 23.9. & 30.7. Now the Priest received answer by the Ephod: not as the Hebrewes fable, by finding written in the foulds and pleats of the Vrim, the sentence or answer of God: nor as Iosephussuppo|seth, by the extraordinary shining of the stones in the Vrim: which miraculous kind of answering he confesseth to have ceased two hundred yeares before his time, 3. antiquit. Iudaic. for how could the shining of the stones be a signe in such variety of matters which were demanded of the priests: and more than two hundred yeares before Iosephs time, who lived vnder Domitian, were such gifts of prophecyng ceased: as under Iudas Maccabeus, 1 Maccab. 4.46. yea long before that the Church complained, We see not our signes, there is not one prophet more, Psal. 74.9. And further, the Scripture would not have beene silent, in setting downe such a miraculous gift. Therefore God did otherwise reveale unto the priest, and inspire him with the knowledge of his will, by the illumination of his minde: for so Vrim signifieth illumination, Perer.

QUEST. XXXIII. How the elder is said to serve the younger.

Vers. 23. Two manner of people shall be divided out of thy bowels, &c. the greater shall serve the lesse. 1. The Hebrewes apply this text against the Empire of the Romans: whose Emperors they say came of the Idumeans, as Iulius Caesar, & the rest that succeeded him: who though they held the Iewes in subjection, in the end should be destroyed, sic David Kimhi, Rabbi Salomon, ex citat. Perer. 2. But the right literall meaning is of the Idumeans, and Israelites, the posterity of Esau and Jacob: for so we read that the Idumeans were subdued unto Israel by King David, 2. Sam. 8.14. and so continued to the reigne of Iotham, Mercer. 3. Neither were the Israelites onely superiour in temporall dominion, but also in spiritual blessings: for they were the visible Church of God, Edom was cut off, Calvin. 4. Spiritually these two people doe signifie the carnall Iewes, subdued unto the Christians; being yet themselves the elder people, August. lib. 16. de civitat. c. 25. Againe, by the striving of Esau and Jacob in their mothers wombe, is signified the continuall fight in the wombe of the Church, betweene the true and carnall professors, which are said to be the greater, because they are more in number: but as the greater here did serve the lesse, so the wicked, while they persecute the righteous, quibus nocere volunt, prorsunt plurimum, stirrunt ipsi maxime nocent: they profit those whom they goe about to hurt, hurting themselves most, Augustin serm. de tempor 78. Beside, Origen draweth from hence this mysticall sense, understanding these two people to be within vs; and this strife and combat to be betweene the flesh and the spirit, vertue and vice, hom. 12. in Genes.

QUEST. XXXIV. How Jacob was sanctified in his mothers wombe.

Further, whereas Jacob strove with Esau in his mothers wombe, which was an extraordinary motion and worke of Gods spirit: here ariseth a question, whether Jacob were sanctified in his mothers wombe: which doubt, not resolved, but onely expounded by Pererius, may thus briefly receive satisfaction. 1. that first, if sanctification be taken for an actuall and inherent holinesse, so neither Jacob nor any other were sanctified, but onely Christ: in which sense the Angel saith to Marie, That holy thing which shall be borne of thee, shall be called the sonne of God, Luke 1.35. 2. There is also a certaine holinesse ascribed to all the children of the faithfull, because they are within the covenant, 1. Cor. 7. vers. 4. whereby they are distinguished from the seed of unbelievers: Jacob was sanctified otherwise than thus. 3. There is a particular sanctification, that is, a setting apart, or preparing of a thing to some speciall use: as Paul was separated from his mothers wombe in the purpose of God to preach the Gospell, Galath. 1.15. Thus also was Jacob sanctified and separated to be the father of the people of God. 4. A thing also is said to be sanctified, when any extraordinary worke or motion is wrought upon it by the spirit of God: as Iohn Baptist was sanctified in his mothers wombe, when as at the voice of Maries Salutation, the Babe sprung in his mothers belly, Luk. 1.44. and thus Jacob also was sanctified and stirred by the spirit to wrestle with his brother: not that he had any sense or understanding in fighting against the carnall generation, but he was used as an instrument by the spirit to prefigure that state and condition of the people of God which should be resisted and wrestled against by the world.

QUEST. XXXV. Esau why so called.

Vers. 25. HE that came out first was red, &c. 1. In that Esau came out red, it betokened his bloody disposition; in coming forth all hayrie, as a beast, it shewed his savage and cruell nature, Muscull. 2. This birth of Esau was extraordinary: for children are borne usually with haire only on the head, eyelids and eye browes: in the other parts it groweth afterward: and such hairy conceptions are not without much grieve and trouble, causing loathsomenes in the stomacke, heart-burning, and such like, Perer. 3. Hee was called Esau, that is, already made and perfect, of the word gnasah, to make, which is passively to be taken, that he came forth with haire, as a perfect man, not actively, as though he should be active and prompt in his businesse, Mercer. 4. He had three names, Esau, because he was compleat, Edom of the red pottage, and Seir, that is haire, Perer.

QUEST. XXXVI. Of Iacobs holding Esau by the heele, what it signifieth.

Vers. 26. Afterward came his brother out, and his hand hold Esau, &c. 1. It is not to be supposed, that Iacob at the time of the birth, as he came forth, held Esau by the heele, and that one birth immediatly followed another, for this had beene against the common course, the head of the infant first comming forth, and might have put the mother in danger: but it is like rather, that Iacob before his birth put forth his hand, holding his brothers heele, which by the mid wife was put into his place againe, and then after a while he was borne also, and came out orderly with his head first, Mercer. 2. for so is the usuall and naturall manner, for the head of the infant to appeare first: to come out footling, that is, with the feet first, is against nature, as Nero was borne: and hereupon, they which were borne with such difficultie had the surname of Agrippa. Varro writeth, that the infant in the wombe is pitched upon his head, with his feet upward, as a tree hath the branches uppermost, Perer. 3. Hee was called Iacob, of gachabh, which signifieth to supplant, taking it in the proper sense, because he held Esau by the heele, not in the metaphoricall, to deceive, as Esau wresteth the word, to bring his brother into hatred, Genes. 27. yet this name was a prediction of that which fell out afterward, that Iacob should supplant and overthrow his brother, Perer. 4. The conceit of Rasi is but weake, that Iacob was first conceived in his mothers wombe, though Esau were borne first, and that therefore the birthright did belong unto him: for the right of birthright consisted not in the priority of time, but the election of grace. 5. Yet this is strange in Iacobs birth, as Aben Ezra noteth: that Iacob putting forth his hand, did breake that rime or skin, wherein the infant is inclosed, which did prognosticate, that he would breake in upon his brothers birth right.

QUEST. XXXVII. Of the divers studie and profession of life in Esau and Iacob.

Vers. 27. Esau was a cunning hunter, &c. 1. Hunters and hunting in Scripture, are for the most part taken in the worst sense, as Nimrod is called a mighty hunter; not because this exercise is unlawfull, but for that it is more sutable to men of fierce nature, Muscull. 2. Otherwise the delight it selfe is lawfull and commendable, both profitable to keepe the body in health by moderate exercise, as also to prepare and accustome it to labour, and make it fit and serviceable for warre, Perer. 3. Iacob was a simple man without fraud, and lived a quiet life, dwelling in tents, which the Hebrewes expound, of frequenting the tents of Sem and Heber for knowledge: but it is a description of those which keepe catell, and follow tents, as in this sense, Gen. 4.20. Iubal is said to be the father of them that dwell in Tents, and of such as have cattell, Iun. 4. Esau is said to be a man of the field, not as the Latine translateth, an husbandman, but one continually conversant in the field, because of his game, a field man, as the Septuagint.

5. By the lives and dispositions of these two, Gregorie noteth the divers studies of worldly men, that hunt after the pleasures of this life, as Esau did, and of holy men, that give themselves to the contemplation and studie of vertue with Iacob, lib. 5. moral.

QUEST. XXXVIII. Why Isaack loved Esau.

Vers. 28. Isaack loved Esau, &c. 1. By this we see that parents are carried with blind affection, to favour those children which are evil conditioned, Muscul. 2. But Isaack is not said simply to love Esau, but for his venison sake, he loved not his evil conditions, Cajetan. 3. He loved him, because he saw him active and well exercised, his forward qualities he thought might in time be allayed. 4. Some thinke that Esau by his flattery insinuated himselfe, and so doe make a metaphor of these words, hunting was in his mouth; but the other sense is more agreeable, Mercer. 5. Rebecca loved Jacob, not so much thereunto inclined by the oracle received, as moved by the gentle and obedient behaviour of Jacob, Mercer.

QUEST. XXXIX. Of Jacobs red pottage, and Esaus greedie demanding of it.

Vers. 30. Esau said to Jacob let me eat, &c. 1. It is but a toy devised here of the Hebrewes, that Abraham died this very day,* when Esau sold his birth-right, when he was 15. yeares old, lest he should live to see the wicked manners of Esau: for upon this day they say Esau killed a man, ravished a woman betrothed: and Jacob sold lentils they say, which used to bee set before those which mourne for the dead, thereby conjecturing, that he mourned for Abraham: But these are uncertaine conceits, having no ground in Scripture: ex Mercer. 2. This was rather the usuall food which Jacob prepared for himselfe; for if it had beene common for the whole house, Esau might have had otherwise accesse unto it, Perer. 3. Esau was very hungry as hunters commonly are, and seemed to be very ravenous and unsatiable: for 1. he saith feed me, or let me swallow at once (so the word lagnat signifieth, onlly found in this place) as Camels are fed, by casting gobbets into their mouth. 2. Beside for haste, he doubleth the word, this red red, Mercer. 3. He saith he must die if he have it not: as men of appetite cannot governe themselves, but they must die, if their humour be not satisfied, Perer. 4. The Hebrewes note, that as Esau was red, so he delighted in red things: in red pottage, (which beside the rednesse of the lentiles, might be coloured with saffron, or such like) he dwelt also in a red soyle, called therefore Idumea, &c. Mercer. 5. Although this may seeme to be but a light matter, which passed betweene Esau and Jacob, yet considering that they were of discretion to know what they did, and Esau was of yeares and strength to follow hunting till hee was wearie, Iun. and beside his parents upon this accident gave him a name Edom, Calvin. this action was governed by Gods providence, and the prophecie began now to take place, the elder shall serve the younger.

QUEST. XL. Whether Jacob offended in causing Esau to sell his birthright.

Vers. 31. Sell me now thy birthright. 1. Jacob may be thought to have dealt cruelly with Esau and uncharitably, that would give him no reliefe being ready to die, but upon such hard conditions: but the answer is, that Esau coveted Jacobs pottage, not of necessity, for there was other meat in the house, whereby he might have satisfied his hunger, but of an unsatiable greedinesse. 2. But Jacob was too covetous to cause Esau to sell for so small a trifle so rich a thing, as his birthright, which included many priviledges, as the priority and government of his brethren, a double portion to the rest, the priesthood and right to sacrifice, Exod. 19.22. and 24.5. and beside was a type and figure of everlasting life, Vatabl. here the answer is not as the Hebrewes thinke, that Jacob gave a greater summe, and this to be onely as an earnest, for no such thing appeareth in the Scripture: but the true answer is this, that Jacob knew by the instruction of his mother, that the birthright by Gods appointment belonged unto him, and therefore as a wise man he taketh this occasion to recover his right from him that was an usurper of it. 3. But seeing this birthright was a sacred thing, for otherwise Esau should not be counted a profane person for selling it, how could Jacob buy it without sinne? Answer. *Jacob intelligitur suam vexationem redemisse: * Jacob did but redeeme his owne vexation:* he buyeth not a thing which was not belonging to him, but onely recovereth that which was his owne: and this is not simoniacal in sacred things, for a man to redeeme his quietnesse, and peaceable possession: 4. But seeing Esau sinned in selling his birthright, how could Iacob be without sinne? yes, Iacob offended not, being hereunto no doubt stirred and incited by the spirit of God, and sparing from his owne belly to obtaine such a blessing, preferring things spirituall before temporall: but Esau sinned, in setting so light by the blessing of God, as shall appeare in the next question, Mer. yet this extraordinary fact of Iacob is not to be drawne into imitation.

QUEST. XLI. Whether before the law the first borne did alwaies exercise priesthood.

BUt whether the priesthood did goe with the birthright, and that the first borne did execute the priests office, it is questioned among the learned: for the solution whereof, 1. I neither thinke with the Hebrewes, that the first borne of the family alwayes had the preheminance of the priesthood: for Abel the younger brother, offered sacrifice as well as Cain. 2. Neither with Oleaster, that this was never practised, whose opinion is that the priesthood was not due to the first borne before the law of Moses: in hunc loc. for the contrary is evident, Exod. 24.5. 3. Neither do I wholly assent to Hierome, who thinketh, that omnes primogeniti ex stirpe Noe, that all the first borne of Noahs stocke were priests, epist. 126. ad Evag. for then Iapheth rather than Sem should have had that prerogative: for hee was elder than Sem, being borne in the 500. yeare of Noahs age, Gen. 5.32. Sem two yeare after, Gen. 11.10. yet Sem was the Priest of the most high God, supposed to be Melchisedeck: and Noah saith, Blessed be the Lord God of Sem, Gen. 9.26. 4. Neither doth the Apostle call Esau prophane only as Pererius thinketh, because he sold the Priest|hood annexed to the birth-right: for it was a holy thing in respect of the spirituall blessing annexed unto it: In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, Gen. 22.18. 5. This then is our opinion rather, that before Moses, the father of the house was the Priest for the family: as wee read that Iob every day offered sacrifice for his sonnes: but after the father was deceased, then the first borne succeeded both in the inheri|tance and priesthood: and so after Isaacks decease, the birth-right should also have conveyed with it the Priesthood, Mercer. But that ordinance, that the first borne should exercise the Priesthood and offer sacrifice, though he were not the father of the family, is no older than Moses, Exod. 19.22.24.5. Who then were sanctified and set apart unto God, Exod. 13.2.

QUEST. XXXVII. How many wayes Esau offended in selling his birth-right.

Vers. 32. LOe I am almost dead, &c. Esau diversly offended in selling his birth-right. 1. Because he esteemeth his birth-right only by the present commodity and pleasure of this life: for whether he meane in respect of his daily danger in hunting, he was subject to death, as Iun. Or generally speake of his mortality, as Mercer. Or, which is most like, of his present faintnesse, Calvin. Hee onely limiteth his birth-right to this life, as though it could not profit him afterward: whereupon the Hebrewes gather, that hee denied the resurrection. 2. Esau offended in his intemperancy and ravenous desire, that preferred his belly before so great and rich a birth-right. 3. In that for so meane a value hee would forgoe such an inheritance: for whereas Aben Ezra would excuse the matter, because Isaack was now become very poore,* and therefore Esau set the lesse by his patrimony; it hath no ground at all: for whereas Abraham was velry rich, and left all to Isaack, and God blessed Isaack beside, how is it like that Isaack in so short a time could bee wasted? 4. Another sinne was Esau his profanenesse noted by the Apostle, Heb. 12.16. that parted with a spiritual blessing for a temporal and momentany pleasure. 5. His unthankfulnesse to God ap|peareth, in that he no more regarded the dignity of the first borne given unto him. 6. His obstinacy, in that he repented not his folly, but after he had done, went away carelesse: and therefore it is said Esau contem|ned his birth-right, vers. 34. 7. His falshood and persidious nature appeareth, who though hee had passed over his birth-right to Iacob with an oath; yet seemed to make but a scoffe of it, and purposed not in his heart to performe it, Perer.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the immortality of the soule.

Vers. 8. WAs gathered to his people. Theodoret from hence well concludeth the immortality of the soule, and the hope of the resurrection: for if men wholly perish, and did not passe to ano|ther life, Moses would not have said, He was gathered to his people: qu. 109. in Genes. our Saviour also useth the like argument, to prove that Abraham was alive to God: because the Lord calleth himselfe the God of Isaack, Abraham, and Iacob; God is not the God of the dead, but the living, Matth. 22.23.

2 Doct. Order of time not alwayes observed in the sacred histories.

Vers. 20. ISaack was 40. yeare old, &c. Whereas Moses setteth downe the death of Abraham, and of Ismael, before he describeth the birth of Esau and Iacob, which was 15. yeare before Abrahams death, and 63. yeares before Ismael died; for Abraham lived 175. Ismael 137. yeares, and where Isaack was youn|ger than Abraham by 100. and than Ismael by 14. they are found so long to have lived after the birth of these twins: from hence then it is evident, that the order of time is not alwayes observed in the sacred hi|stories, but that sometime is set downe first, which was done last.

3. Doct. Against the casting of mens nativities.

Vers. 23. THE elder shall serve the younger. This example is urged by Augustine against the Genethliakes, that is, casters of mens nativities: for hereby the vanity of their observations appeareth, in that these two twins conceived at once, and borne together, were of such divers natures and qualities, August. de civit. Dei lib. 4. c. 5. And whereas they answer, that in the birth of twins there may bee great diversity, by reason of the swift motion of the planets, which change their aspects and conjunctions every moment: as one Nigidius Figulus would demonstrate by the example of a wheele, which while it was swiftly car|ried about, he marked twice with inke; which markes, when the wheele had left running, were found not to be farre asunder: whereby he would insinuate, that in a small distance of time, a great part of the cele|stiall globe may be turned about. But to this fansie Augustine answereth, that if the celestiall motions be so swift, and continue not in one stay, then hardly can any man discern, under what constellation any is borne: and Gregory thus wittily derideth their follies▪ that if Esau and Iacob were not therefore borne under one constellation, because one came forth after another: by the same reason, neither can any be borne under one constellation, because hee is not borne all at once, but one part after another. H•m. 10. sup. Evangel.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against Limbus patrum.

Vers. 8. WAs gathered to his people, &c. This the Popish writers do understand of the fathers in Lim|bus patrum, whither Abraham also went: sic Lyran in Gen. 49. Rupert. lib. 6. in Gen. cap. ult. Contra. 1. The place to the which Abraham went, is called Abrahams bosome, Luke 16, which Augustine by no meanes thinketh to have beene a member or part of hell, * as they make Limbus. 2. The Apostle sheweth to what people the faithfull are gathered: Ye are come, &c. to the company of innumerable Angels, &c. to the spirits of just and perfect men, Heb. 12.22, 23.

Where then the spirits of just men were, there also were the Angels: for so we read that Lazarus soule was carried by the Angels into Abrahams bosome: But the Angels are not in Limbus patrum; upon this reason Lyranus refuseth the interpretation of Augu/stine and Tostatus,* who by this people to the which Abraham was gathered, understand the society of An|gels, which is in no place but heaven: Lyranus also holding that all the just men from the beginning of the world went to Limbus, is confuted by Paulus Burgens. who saith, that Abraham was the first that went to Limbus, because of him first this phrase is used in Scripture, That he was gathered to his people. Thus we see that these Patrons of Limbus cannot agree among themselves: for what certainty of opinion can there be, which is not grounded upon Scripture?

2. Confut. Election is not of good works foreseene.

Vers. 23. The elder shall serve the younger. S. Paul inferreth upon this text, that wee are not elected by workes, but according to the purpose of him that calleth, Rom. 9.11. here then the error of the Pelagians is confuted, who taught that men were elected for their good workes foreseene of God before: But this error is repugnant to Scripture, Eph. 14. He hath chosen us in him, that we should be holy: he saith not, because we were holy: so that good workes are not a precedent cause of our election, but a consequent effect thereof.

3. Confut. The soules merited not before they came into the body.

HEre also that error ascribed to Origen is overthrowne, who thought that the soules have a being before the bodies, and that they are disposed of in this life, according to the merit of the former life, which they lived in before they entred into the body: for the Apostle expounding this place, saith, before they had done either good or evill: and immediately before, yer the children were yet borne, Rom. 9.11. therel|fore before they were borne they had neither done good nor evill.

4. Confut. S. Paul alleageth the examples of Esau and Iacob, not for temporall election, or figuratively onely of eternall, but originally and properly.

IT is therefore evident, 1. That neither Moses writing this prophecie, The elder shall serve the younger, did not only speake of the externall inheritance and preeminence of Iacob before Esau, neither did Paul so understand Moses: for then the example had not beene pertinent to S. Pauls purpose, who goeth about to prove these two things; that all are not the children of promise which are the children of Abraham after the flesh, which he shewed by the instance of Ismael and Isaack, vers. 7. The other point is, that Gods election is of grace, not by workes, as appeareth in the example of Esau and Iacob: wherefore the one was hated of God, the other loved, before they had done good or evill. If the Apostle then had brought in an example of temporall election, it had been impertinent, seeing thorowout the Chapter he treateth of eternall. 2. Neither yet was this outward preheminance of Iacob, and refusall of Esau, a signe onely and figure of their eternall election and reprobation, as Lyranus in 1. Malach. And therefore not directly implied in the words, but so applied by the Apostle: for, as the Preacher saith, No man knoweth either love or hatred of all that is before them, Eccles. 9.4. that is, Gods love or hatred is not discerned by the condition of out|ward things. 3. Neither is it the literall and historicall sense only, to shew that Esau was temporally reje|cted: but. S. Paul by his divine spirit doth draw it to a mysticall sense, as Pererius thinketh, in 25. Gen. nu/mer. 45. for S. Paul understandeth Moses no otherwise than Malachy did: Esau have I hated, Iacob have I loved, chap. 1.1. who out of Moses words inferreth a conclusion of Gods everlasting love toward Iacob. 4. Wherefore the truth is, that the very literall and proper sense of these words, The elder shall serve the younger, written first by Moses and cited by S. Paul, doth principally describe the everlasting state and condition before God; and are especially to be referred to the celestially inheritance: but secondarily, the promise of the externall inheritance of Canaan is here also comprehended. This may be made evident by these two reasons: 1. That is the proper sense of the place, which is principally and chiefly intended by the Spirit: but so is this spirituall sense: as the Prophet expoundeth this place of Gods eternall love and hatred of Iacob and Esau: 2. That is the proper sense of the place, from the which an argument is framed, and a conclusion inferred: but out of this spirituall sense concerning everlasting election, the Apostle reasoneth and concludeth election to be only of grace, not by workes: Ergo, it is the proper sense.

6. Places of Morall observation.

1. Observ. The reconciliation of brethren.

Vers. 9. His sonne Isaack and Ismael buried him. They which were separated during their fathers life, are now united and reconciled in his death: which teacheth us, that brethren, which have beene long at variance, should yet, when the time of mourning for their father commeth, returne in affection, Muscul. Not as Esau, that intended when his father was dead, to execute his malice toward his brother, Gen. 27.41.

2. Observ. To continue and persevere in prayer.

Vers. 21. Isaack prayed to the Lord for his wife. It seemeth, seeing Rebecca continued barren twenty yeares (for Isaack was married at 40. and was 60. yeares old when Esau and Iacob were borne) that Isaack continued many yeares in prayer, and waited from moneth to moneth, from yeare to yeare, till the Lord had condescended to his prayer: whereby wee are taught, that wee should not give over in our prayers, neither limit God to heare us within a time, but still patiently expect his gracious pleasure: as the Apostle exhorteth that wee should pray continually, 1 Thes. 5.17. Mercer.

3. Observ. Gods will many times revealed to the weaker sort.

Vers. 28. Isaack loved Esau, &c. Rebecca was better affected toward the chosen seed, than Isaack was so was Sarahs heart toward Isaack, but Abraham loved Ismael: whereby wee see, that man times God revealeth his will to the more infirme sex: and as S. Paul saith, chuseth the weake things of <◇> world, to confound the strong, 1 Cor. 1.17. Muscul.

4. Observ. Of frugality in meats and drinkes.

Vers. 29. Now Iacob sod pottage, &c. By this we may see, how frugall and sparing the diet of those godly Patriarkes was; Iacob here contented himselfe with lentill pottage. These lentils came from Egypt, and was the usuall food in Alexandria, for young and old, which was commonly vendible in their Tabernes, Gell. lib. 17. c. 18. from thence the use of lentils became very common in other countries, the Philosopher Taurus used to sup with them, and Zeno the Stoike prescribed to his schollers, how they should seeth and dresse their lentils, with the twelfth part of Coriander seed, Athen. lib. 4. The like frugality and parsimony was used in famous countries among the Gentiles. The Arcadians lived of akornes, the Argives of apples, the Athenians of figs, the Tyrinthians of peares, the Indians of canes, the Carmanes of palmes, the Sauromatians of millet; the Persians, nasturtio, of cresses.* These examples ought to make Christians ashamed, who use to pamper their bellies, and feed their fansies with curious delights, and exquisite dainties, Perer. S. Paul giveth a rule for this: meats for the belly, the belly for meats, God shall destroy both it and them, 1 Cor. 6.13. that therefore men should not bee so carefull to feed and fill their bellies with dainty fare and costly meats, seeing they both must fall to corruption.

5. Observ. Against prophane persons that sell heaven for earthly pleasures.

Vers. 33. HE sold his birth-right. Esau, that for a messe of red pottage did part with his birth-right, is a president and patterne of all those which for the momentany pleasures and profit of this life, doe sell and lose their hope of eternall life, Mercer. As that rich glutton, Luke 16. which purchased his ease and pleasure in this life, with the everlasting paine and torment of his soule afterward: for this cause is Esau called a prophane person, Heb. 12.16. which for one portion of meat sold his birth-right.

CHAP. XXVI.

1. The Argument or Contents.

FIrst, in this Chapter is shewed the occasion of Isaacks going to Gerar: which was by reason of the famine. vers. 1. And Gods Commandement, vers. 2, 3. with the renewing of the promise made to Abraham, 4, 5.

Secondly, this Chapter treateth of Isaacks abode and dwelling in Gerar, with such things as there happened. 1. The question that arose about his wife, vers. 7• to 12. 2. The envy of the Philistims against Isaack, because hee prospered and waxed rich, vers. 13. to 18. 3. The contention betweene Isaacks servants and the Philistims concerning certaine fountaines, vers. 18. to vers. 23.

Thirdly, there is declared the departure of Isaack from Gerar, to dwell in Beersheba, and the covenant there made betweene him and Abimelech, vers. 23. to the end.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull questions.

QVEST. I. Whether this Abimelech were the same with whom Abraham had to deale.

Vers. 1. AND there was a famine in the land, &c. 1. This other famine in Abrahams time, was that fa|mine mentioned chap. 12. where Abraham went downe into Aegypt, Mercer. for chap. 20. when Abraham sojourned in Gerar, there is no famine spoken of, which Pererius supposeth to have beene the cause of Abrahams going thither. 2. This Abimelech might be either the same, with whom Abraham had to deale, who might bee now not above an hundred yeare old, or another King of that name: for the Kings of Gerar were called by the name of Abimelech, as the Kings of Aegypt, Pha|raohs: Phicol also might be the name of office, or the same man might serve the father and sonne, Mercer. 3. Therefore we need not with Augustine, quaest. 75. in Genes. to thinke this story to have beene done long before, and to be set downe by way of recapitulation: for it seemeth that Abraham was now dead: other|wise he should have beene constrained also to have sojourned for the famine: and Isaack was now toward an hundred yeare old: seeing he was 60. at Esaus birth, who in the end of this chapter, at forty taketh a wife, Perer. 4. Isaack went to Gerar, thinking not there to stay, but to goe downe to Aegypt, if the Lord had not otherwise charged him: for Egypt, by reason of the over-flowing of Nilus, which made the ground both fat and moist, was very fruitfull and fertile, Pererius.

QVEST. II. How and when God appeared to Isaack.

Vers. 2. FOR the Lord appeared unto him, &c. 1. Some think that God appeared unto him not by dreame, because it is not expressed, but by open vision, as Cajetan: but it skilleth not how God appea|red, certaine it is, that he had a vision. 2. The Lord appeared not so often to Isaack, as to Abraham, because the promises were to be but renewed and confirmed to him, Mercer. 3. It seemeth that this vision was shewed to Isaack before he tooke his journey, and purposed to goe into Aegypt: and that the Lord at the first named not the place, where he would have him stay, but onely in generall, abide in the land which I shall shew thee: as the Lord said to Abraham, Genes. 12.1. and that herein he had some particular direction afterward: so that the first verse is set downe by way of anticipation, Mercer.

QUEST. III. Why the Lord would not have Abraham goe downe into Aegypt.

Vers. 2. GOe not downe to Aegypt. 1. Isaack is forbidden to goe downe to Aegypt, not because he was consecrate unto God, and therefore was not to goe out of Palestina, as the Hebrews: for Ca|naan being now pestered with such wicked inhabitants, was no holier than other Countries. 2. But either the Lord did keepe him from Aegypt, lest he might have beene intangled with the pleasures of that coun|tre, Calvin. 3. Or corrupted with the vices of the inhabitants, Mercer. 4. Or rather because the Lord had purposed that Iacob and his seed should goe downe to Aegypt, and there be kept in servitude: the Lord would not have Isaack prevent that determined captivity: for when Abraham sojourned in Aegypt, God had not yet revealed so much to Abraham concerning the hard entertainment of his seed, which followeth afterward, chap. 15.

QUEST. IV. Of Abrahams obedience, and whether it were greater than Isaacks.

Vers. 5. BEcause that Abraham obeyed my voyce, &c. 1. Augustine concludeth from hence that Abra|hams faith and obedience was greater than Isaacks, because all is granted for Abrahams sake, lib. 16. de civitat. Dei. c. 36. Abraham indeed had the priority of faith and obedience, and therefore is call|led the father of the faithfull: but to make an unequall comparison of these three Patriarkes, whom the Scripture doth consort together, Exod. 32.13. remember Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob thy servants, we have no warrant, they might be all excellent in their kinde. 2. Neither doe wee approve here the Hebrewes collection, that Abraham kept all the rites and ceremonies of Moses law before it was given: many we grant he observed, as the Sabbath, offering of sacrifices, the difference of cleane and uncleane beasts, but not all: Mercer. 3. The Cabalists curious observations are not here worth the rehearsing: who by the ten words of this verse understand the decalogue: and by the first word of the verse, guechebh,* which noteth 172. they insinuate the yeares of Abrahams life, who all this time from three yeares of his infancy knew and worshipped God: and beside they say, there are just 172. words in the decalogue. 4. Abrahams obedience is expressed in these particulars: 1. In keeping Gods ordinances, that is, his spec^oall Commandements, as in leaving his countrey, in casting out the bond-woman, in sacrificing his sonne. 2. By Commandements, are understood the precepts of the morall law. 3. By statutes or ceremonies, circumcision, sacrifices, and such other rites: 4. By lawes, the documents of faith, and religion, wherein he exercised and trained up his houshold, Mercerus.

QUEST. V. Why Isaack stayeth in Gerar.

Vers. 6. SO Isaack dwelt in Gerar. 1. Though Gerar were a more bar^oen countrey than Egypt, and it is not unlike, but that the famine raigned and raged there also▪ yet God stayeth him there, that Isaack might have experience of Gods providence,* who was able even in a land of want to provide for him. 2. It is fit also he should stay in Gerar which belonged unto the land of Canaan promised, Mercer. 3. This verse is one of the 14. that consisteth only of three words.

QUEST. VI. Isaacks infirmity in causing his wife to dissemble.

Vers. 7. She is my sister; &c. Isaack falleth into the same infirmity which Abraham twice before committed, in giving counsell to his wife to dissemble.

1. Neither Abraham nor Isaack can bee excused, because they were Prophets, and did fore-see what should ensue: for all the actions of the Prophets were not propheticall: and this had beene to presume of Gods power, to faile in the meanes, and to trust for deliverance from God.

2. Neither doth this excuse Abraham and Isaack here, that he would specially provide for his life, because of the promised seed, for as he beleevved Gods promise, so hee needed not to have doubted, but that God by lawfull meanes would have preserved his life.

3. Neither, as Lyranus, because the Kings did not take their wives, till they had beene a yeare before prepared, as we read of the Kings of Persia, did Abraham thinke that within a yeares space God would provide: for this pompous custome of Kings came in afterward.

4. Neither can Isaack be excused, as Augustine thinketh, because Rebecca was indeed his sister, that is, his cousen German: for in saying she was his sister he denieth her to be his wife.*

5. Wherefore it must needs be confessed, that this was Isaacks weaknesse, as Abrahams before; not only in his dissimulation, which was the more tolerable, it tending not to the hurt of any other, though not justifiable, Mercer. But chiefly, because he doth as much as in him lieth, prostitute his wives chastity, and bring her into danger: and so Ramban confesseth that Abraham before herein grievously offended. But Isaacks offence is greater, for that he could not take heed or be warned by domesticall examples, Muscul.

QUEST. VII. How Isaack sported with Rebeccah.

Vers. 1. HE saw Isaack sporting or playing. 1. The Hebrewes thinke that Abimelech saw Isaack carnally knowing his wife: and so they expound that of Ismael, Gen. 21.8. where the same word met/sachek is used, that Ismael sported, that is, lay with other women: thus thinketh Lyranus. 2. But it is more like that Isaack used some familiar gesture and signe of love, which was comely with his wife, * but not with his sister: and thus Augustine saith that holy men may sometime descend ad foeminei sexus infirmitatem, to the infirmity of that sex, and hee compareth it to the fathers playing with children, as Aelianus maketh mention of Socrates and Agesilaus, and Architas Tarentinus, how they used to sport and recreate them|selves with children: lib. 12. de var. histor. 3. Augustine further doth allegorize this sporting of Isaack: Quid absurdum, si Propheta Dei carnale aliquid lusit, ut eum caperet affectus uxoris, cum ipsum Dei verbum caro factum sit, ut habitaret in nobis? What marvell if the Prophet of God did sport carnally, to please his wife, seeing the word of God became flesh to dwell with us? But we need not so farre to fetch allegories, the historicall sense is plaine and full enough.

QUEST. VIII. Of the great increase that Isaack had of his seed.

Vers. 12. AFTERward Isaack sowed in the land, &c. 1. Isaack sowed not in any ground of his owne, which he had purchased, or bought with his money: for vers. 17. hee removeth and departeth from thence: but he hired ground for his present use, Calvin. Mercer. 2. Hee found an hundred measures, not in respect of others, or so much more than he expected, or than that ground was wont to yeeld, but an hundred measures for one which hee had sowed, Perer. 3. The Septuagint read an hundred of barley, mistaking the word, for shegnarim signifieth measures, or estimation, segna..... barley, Mercer. It was therefore wheat which he did sow for the use and sustentation of his family, or he had this increase gene|rally in all the graine which hee did sow. 4. Forrein writers doe make mention of greater increase. Herodotus saith, the countrey of the Euhesperides yeeldeth 100. fold, of the Cynipians 300. fold, lib. 4. Pliny writeth, that in Byzacium in Africa, for one bushell of seed they receive 150. of increase: ou• of the same place, the governour sent to Augustus Caesar 400. stalkes which came of one graine, lib. 18. c. 10. But these were most fruitfull soyles, that gave this increase in seasonable yeares: whereas this countrey was barren, where Isaack did sow, and in the time of famine: and therefore this increase was ad|mirable, Perer.

QUEST. IX. Of the valley of Gerar where Isaack pitched his tents.

Vers. 17. Isaack departed and pitched his tents in the valley of Gerar, &c. 1. Though the word (nachal) signifieth a valley, or brooke; yet it is not fitly here translated a brooke, as the Latine Translator readeth, and Pererius justifieth the same: for there was no need to digge wels where the water ran: neither is it like these pits were made to containe the water that came downe, as Perer. But in digging they sear|ched for water, and at the length found a spring, vers. 19. 2. Neither yet was it a fruitfull valley, where Isaack now pitched his tents: for then he needed not to have digged so many wels. 3. But it is like to have beene a dale, thorow the which the hasty raine that fell, did run: and so by reason of the sand and gravell, which was carried downe, it seemeth it was a barren plat, neglected of the inhabitants, wherein Isaack might dwell without envy, Muscul.

QUEST. X. Of the wels of water first digged by Abraham, and after by Isaack.

Vers. 18. AND Isaack returned and digged, &c. The meaning is not that Isaack returned to Gerar to dig the wels againe, which his father had digged before, as both the English translations read: for to returne to dig, is nothing else but to dig againe, as Iunius translateth. 2. Neither were these other wels, beside those mentioned vers. 15. as Ramban, Mercer. For wee doe not read, that Abraham ever dwelt in this barren dale of Gerar. 3. But as Rasi thinketh, these were the same wels before mentioned, which Abraham had first digged, and the Philistims stopped, and Isaack renewed them, calling them by the same names, vers. 33. this was done before he came from Gerar: and departing thence he diggeth new wels in the dale, and calleth them by new names, though some thinke he giveth new names upon new occasions, to the old wels, Calvin. Mercer. 4. He digged the wels of Abraham againe: both for more certainty to find water, and the labour was easier, and he had better right unto them, seeing his father possessed them before. 5.

Origen allegorizeth this story, comparing the Evangelists and Apostles to Isaack which revived the wels of doctrine, which the Patriarkes and Prophets had first digged: and by the fountaine of living water, he understandeth the true sense of the Scripture, which we should dig for: hom. 12. and 13. in Genes. 6. The Hebrewes also have devised here divers allegories: some, by these three wels, understanding the three Temples, the one built by Salomon, destroyed by the Chaldeans, the other reedified after the captivity,* and demolished by the Romans, the third they referre to the time of their Messiah, when they promise to their nation (rehoboth) that is, roomth and liberty: some by the wels renewed by Isaack, understand the Proselytes converted to the knowledge of God by Abraham, and corrupted by the Philistims, whom Isaack againe restoreth: ex Mercer. But these fabulous allegories are not much to be regarded.

QUEST. XI. How the Lord protecteth his, and is their peculiar God.

Vers. 24. THE Lord appeared unto him the same night, &c. 1. Whether God appeared unto Isaack, being awake, as Lippoman, or asleepe, as Tostatus, it is not certaine out of the text: Isaack had some infallible signe, whereby he was assured of Gods presence, Mercer. 2. The Lord calleth himselfe the God of Abraham, as being his peculiar God, in respect of Gods speciall care and protection of Abraham, and Abrahams singular faith and obedience toward God: like as the heathen had their nationall gods, which indeed were no gods: * the Assyrians worshipped Belus, the Egyptians Isis, the Tyrians Baal, the Athelnians Minerva, the Samians Iuno, the Lemnians Vulcan, the Romans Quirinus, &c. But the Lord Creator of heaven and earth is the peculiar God of Abraham, and of the faithfull, Pererius. 3. The Lord promiseth to be with Isaack, that is, to protect him: God protecteth his foure wayes. 1. By giving wisdome to foresee and prevent dangers. 2. By preventing the occasions, and delivering from the imminent perils. 3. By repressing the rage of Satan and his ministers. 4. By giving strength and patience to endure trouble, Perer.

QUEST. XII. Why Abimelech with the rest came to Isaack.

Vers. 20. THEN came Abimelech, &c. 1. Some thinke it was not the same Abimelech which made a covenant with Abraham so long before, well nigh 80. yeares, but his son bearing the same name. Abimelech, which signifieth, my father the King, might be a common name to all the Kings of Gerar: and so might Phicol (which signifieth, the mouth of all, bee a title proper to the Captaines of the Army) Merc. Muscul. But it is rather like that it was the same Abimelech (because of the same chiefe Captaine Phicol) who might bee now somewhat above 100. yeares old. 2. Ahuzzah was a proper name of one of his chiefe friends, not a nowne collective, betokening the college or company of his friends, as Onkelos, Lyranus, Tostat. 3. Abimelech commeth a farre journey, not of love or good will, but partly pricked in conscience, for the wrongs which he had offered to Isaack, Chrysost. hom. 52. in Gen. partly providing for their posterity, that Isaack would doe them no hurt, Mercer. 4. Origen, by these three that came to Isaack, understandeth the tripartite wisdome of the Gentiles, the morall, naturall, rationall, which dissenting at the first from the Christian faith, were afterward reconciled to it: hom. 14. in Genes.

QUEST. XIII. Why Isaack made a feast to Abimelech and his company.

Vers. 3. HE made them a feast. 1. Isaack did this of a simple and sincere affection, that they might know there remained no grudge or purpose of revenge in his minde: for to invite unto feasts is a signe of remitting and forgetting of former wrongs: as Augustus Caesar did bid Catullus the railing Poet to supper, in token he had forgiven him, though Alexander dissemblingly brought Philotas to his table, to have the better opportunity to murther him: as Absolom served his brother Ammon. 2. Some thinke that the next morning the oath before betweene them made, was againe ratified: Mer. But it is more like, that the oath was deferred till the next morning, as being the fittest time for serious consultations: it was the Persians barbarous manner, in the midst of their cups to advise of their weightiest affaires, Perer.

QUEST. XIV. Wherefore the well is called Shibah.

Vers. 33. SO he called it Shiba. 1. Some interpret this word abundance or saturity, because of the plenty of water that was found, as Hierome, who findeth fault with the Septuagint, because they trans|late it, oath. But sabang signifieth to abound, not shabang, which is here used. 2. It is more like, that this was both the same well which Abraham digged, and the same name derived from the oath which was made betweene Isaack and Abimelech, as before betweene Abraham and Abimelech: for so this story saith, that Isaack gave them the same names which his father gave them, vers. 18. Mercer. Calvin.

QUEST. XV. Of the marriage of Esau.

Vers. 34. WHen Esau was forty yeare old, &c. 1. The Hebrewes thinke, that Esau till hee was forty yeare old, gave himselfe to a vitious and a licentious life, which may well be: and that to imitate his father, who was married at forty, he doth the like. 2. This his marrying into the flocke of Cal|naan, was abdicationis praeludium, a fore-runner of his casting off, and missing of the blessing, as it followeth in the next Chapter, Calvin. 3. Tostatus thinketh that in the forty yeare of Esau,* which was the hundred of Isaack, Sem died: but Pererius thinking to correct his oversight, falleth into a greater errour, referring the death of Sem, to the 50. of Esau, and 100. of Isaack: whereas they are both in a great errour, for Sem died in the 50. yeare of Isaacks life, 60. yeare before this time: which was 502. yeares after the floud.

QUEST. XVI. The evill qualities of Esau his wives.

Vers. 35. THEy were a grieve of minde. 1. Some read rebellious, of marah, to rebell, sic Chald. But it ra|ther commeth of marra, to be bitter. 2. And so were the wives of Esau bitter unto Isaack and Rebeckah: and a great offence of mind unto them, both in respect of their corrupt manners, and their di|vers profession, being given to idolatry, as the Canaanites were, Tharg. Hierosol.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. God maketh rich.

Vers. 12. THE Lord blessed him. Gods blessing is given as a reason of Isaacks increasing and growing rich: whereupon Augustine noteth, Etiam ipsa bona temporalia nec dari posse, nec sperari debere, &c. nisi ab uno Deo: That these temporall goods cannot be given or hoped for, but from the only God, quast. 76. in Genes. as the wise man saith, Prov. 10.22. The blessing of the Lord maketh rich.

2. Doct. The soules of the righteous live with God.

Vers. 24. I Am the God of Abraham. Abraham was now dead, and yet the Lord professeth himselfe to be his God: whereby we are taught, that the soules of the righteous after this life, doe live with God: for as our Saviour saith, He is not the God of the dead, but of the living, Matth. 22.32. Muscul.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against the breaking of covenants.

Vers. 15. THE Philistims filled all the wels, &c. Though that Abimelech had made a covenant with Abraham concerning the well, Gen. 21.30. yet after Abrahams death, they goe from the covenant▪ such are the enemies of the Church, of whom the Prophet speaketh, Isa. 33.8. He hath broken the covenant: &c. he regardeth no man: such are the Romanists, which hold, that faith is not to be kept with heretikes: as they brake the safe conduct granted to Iohn Hus, and Hierome of Prage, Mercer.

2. Confut. Of restoring the ancient doctrine with the ancient names.

Vers. 18. HE gave them the same names which his father gave them. The Philistims both stopped the ancient wels, and abolished the names, Isaack restoreth both: so the Church of Rome hath abolished both the true ancient doctrine of the Sacraments, as also taken away the name thereof: calling it by an idolatrous name of their owne invention, of the Masse, Muscul. We therefore with Isaack have restored the pure doctrine of the ancient primitive Church, together with the names, as the Communion, the Lords supper, the Lords day, &c. As the Prophet saith, Aske for the old way, which is the good way, and walke therein, Ierem. 6.16.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Observ. Not to imitate our fathers infirmities.

Vers. 7. HE said, she is my sister. Abraham before had offended in the same kinde, and yet Isaack can|not take heed: so apt children are to imitate the infirmities of their parents, Mercer. But we should rather learne to decline from our parents errings, as the Prophet saith, If he beget a sonne, that seeth all his fathers sinnes, &c. and feareth, neither doth the like, &c. Ezek. 18.14.

2. Observ. The punishment of adultery.

Vers. 11. HE that toucheth this man, or his wife, shall dye the death. Thus by the light of nature they were taught, that adultery was a grievous sinne: and Abimelech pronounceth the sentence of death against such as should violate another mans wife: as the Lord had said before to Abimelech, Thou art but dead, because of the woman which thou hast taken, Genes. 20. vers. 3.

3. Observ. Adversity and prosperity tempered together.

Vers. 12. ISaack sowed, &c. Thus the Lord tempereth adversity and prosperity, sorrow and joy together: like as the night and day, summer and winter, doe one succeed another: Isaack after these grie|vous tentations, concerning his wife, is increased and blessed of God: likewise, vers. 20. when his servants had strived for two wels, they peaceably enjoy the third, calling it

Rehoboth, roomth: as the Psalme saith, Weeping may abide in the evening, but joy commeth in the morning, Psal. 30.5. Muscul.

4. Observ. Not good to make haste to be rich.

Vers. 13. THE man waxed mighty, and still increased. Isaack was not made rich at once, but hee increased by degrees: for the wise man saith, He that maketh haste to be rich, shall not be innocent, Prov. 28.20. Men should not therefore strive suddenly to be rich, but wait patiently for his blessing, Perer.

5. Observ. Envy for good things.

Vers. 14. THE Philistims had envy at him, &c. They had no reason to envy at him, and to send him away, whom they saw to bee blessed of God. But as Chrysostome saith, Ita se habet invidia, nihil cum ratione operatur: Such is the nature of envy, it doth nothing with reason: Bonis proximi magis quam propriis malis intabescit invidia: Envy rather pineth at other mens goods, than her owne evill, Hom. 52. in Gen. Such was the envy of Cain toward Abel, that slew him because his owne workes were evill, and his brothers good, 1 Ioh. 3.12.

6. Observ. The Kingdome of God must first be sought.

Vers. 25. HE built an altar, &c. First Moses maketh mention of the building of an altar for the service of God, and afterward of the digging of the well: which sheweth, that first of all, things must be sought that belong to the worship of God: as our Saviour saith, Seek ye first the Kingdome of God, and the righteousness thereof, &c. Calvin.

CHAP. XXVII.

1. The Argument or Contents.

T His Chapter sheweth the purpose of Isaack intending to blesse Esau, vers. 1. to 5. and the disposing of the blessing to Iacob by Gods providence: and the preventing or dis|appointing of Esau, in the rest of the Chapter: where concerning Iacobs obtaining of the blessing, we are to consider, 1. The meanes, which was the counsell and device of Rebeckah, vers. 5. to 18. 2. The execution or putting of the same in practice by Iacob, vers. 18. to 27. 3. The successe which God gave unto it, Isaack giveth Iacob the blessing, vers. 27. to vers. 30.

In the rejecting of Esau, 1. his grieve and sorrow is expressed for the losse, vers. 31. to 37. 2. his importunity to receive a blessing of his father, which hee had, to vers. 41. 3. His hatred toward Iacob, because of the blessing, and his malicious purpose to take away his life, vers. 41. 4. Iacobs deliverance from his brothers cruelty, by departing into Mesopotamia, through the counsell of his mother.

2. The divers readings.

* v. 9. goe to the sheep, and bring two kids. S.C. goe to the flock: cat. tsun signifieth a flock of sheep or goats. two of the best kids. H. faire and tender. S. two kids of the goats: caeter. that is, sucking kids. T.

- v. 43 flye to my brother Laban in Haran. caeter to Mesopotamia to my brother Laban in Aran. S.*

3. The Explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Of the cause of Isaacks blindnesse, and of his age.

Vers. 1. Isaack was old, and his eyes dimme: vers. 2. I know not the day of my death, &c. 1. Isaacks blindnesse neither was caused by the smoke of the sacrifices, which Esaus wives off•red to their idols, as the Hebrewes: nor yet was he by any extraordinary worke of God smitten blind, although God dispolsed of his blindnesse so, that thereby his purpose tooke place concerning Iacob: but Isaack was now very old, being of 137. yeares: and blindnesse is incident to old age, as other infirmities of the senses, as of the hearing, the taste, as Barzillai confesseth to David, 2 Sam. 19. Moses example, whose eyes were not dim, at 120. yeares, Deut. 34.7. is extraordinary. 2. Isaack thinketh his end at hand: not as the He|brewes thinke, because he was within five yeares of his mothers age, that is, 123. Whereas Sarah died at 127. for Isaack was now 137. yeares of age, Iacob being now 77. yeare old, at what time hee went into Mesopotamia, as is shewed before, qu. 19. in chap. 25. But Isaack, who lived after this 43. yeares, doth daily meditate of his end, Mercer. Perer. 3. Though Isaack was blind and weake in his eyes, yet it seemeth his body was of a strong constitution, seeing he was able to eat of wild flesh, which is of harder digestion, Pererius.

QUEST. II. Wherefore Isaack biddeth Esau prepare him meat which he did love.

Vers. 4. Make me some savoury meat, that my soule may blesse thee, &c. 1. Some thinke, that it was the manner of those dayes, that the eldest, before he received his fathers blessing, did performe some service: Lryan. But this no where appeareth in Scripture. 2. Some thinke, <◇> this was done, that Esau might seeme to deserve his fathers blessing: Thom. Anglic. But spirituall blessings, such as Isaack be|stowed upon Iacob, cannot be merited by temporall service. 3. Gregory compareth the Jewes to Esau, which sought by their owne workes to please God: the Gentiles to Iacob, that found a more compendious way by faith, Hom. 6. in Ezechiel. 4. Some by Esaus portion of meat, to the which a spirituall bles|sing is promised, doe signifie the duty of the people, in paying temporall things, for receiving spirituall. 5. Rupertus by Isaack promising a blessing for a temporall meat, shadoweth forth such Bishops in the Church, as doe for temporall rewards sell spirituall blessings. 6. But Isaack blind in eyes, and blind in affection, doth herein shew his partiall love to Esau: the Lord in his secret providence over-ruling this action, and disposing this occasion to the effecting of his owne purpose.

QUEST. III. Why Isaack preferred Esau for the blessing before Iacob.

Vers. 4. THat my soule may blesse thee, &c. 1. Neither is it like, as Ramban and other Hebrewes thinke, that Rebecca only knew the divine oracle concerning Iacob, and had not yet communicated it to Isaack. 2. Nor yet that Isaack understood the oracle otherwise than Rebecca did, that Esau was preferred for the birthright, because Iacob held him by the heele, and would have hindred his first comming out, but could not. 3. But Isaack rather of a carnall affection, forgetting what sentence God had given before of his two sonnes, doth favour Esau for some temporall regard, and so we read, that the Prophets of God were deceived till they received further direction from God, as Samuel in the choyce of David, 1 Sam. 16. Mercer. 4. Yet this equality is observed, that both the parents doe not affect the one, and altogether neglect the other: but as Ambrose saith, Mater deferat affectum, pater iudicium: mater circa minorem tenera pietate propendat, pater circa seniore naturam honorificentiam servet: The mother sheweth affection, the father judgement: she tenderly affected toward the younger: the father giveth the honour of nature to the elder, lib. 2. de Iacob c. 2. Perer.

QUEST. IV. Why Iacob is bidden to bring two kids.

Vers. 9. BRing me thence two kids. 1. Not as though Rebecca had her flocke by her selfe, as receiving two kids every day of Isaack for her dowry, as the Hebrewes imagine: 2. Neither, was one for meat, the other for the passeover, which was not yet instituted. 3. But hee brought two, that the daintiest morsels might be culled out of both, and that if the one were not dressed to Isaacks liking, the other might, Mercer. Rupertus by the two kids understandeth the profession of the two Testaments, the Old and the New: but this is forced.

QUEST. V. Of Rebecca's confidence.

Vers. 13. VPon me be the curse, &c. 1. Iacob, though in generall perswaded of Gods promise, that it should take effect, yet faileth in particular, doubtfull of the successe of this meanes. 2. And Rebecca, not of a womanly rashnesse, as Aben Ezra thinketh, thus saith, but looking to the truth of Gods promise, she doubteth not of the conveying of the blessing, Mercer.

QUEST. VI. What cloathes of Esau Rebecca tooke.

Vers. 14. REbecca tooke faire cloathes of her elder sonne Esau, &c. 1. I will let passe the allegories hereupon framed: as how Ambrose understandeth by these cloathes put upon Iacob, the Scriptures taken from the Jewes, and given to the Gentiles: and Augustine applieth it to Christ, who was cloathed with our sinnes, as Iacob with Esau his rough garments, ex Perer. 2. These faire cloathes were neither priestly garments, for the first-borne did not execute the priesthood while his father lived: neither were they Isaacks garments, which he had worne in his fathers house: much lesse those garments of skin, which were made for Adam, at the sight whereof the beasts did flye away: which afterward Nimrod did weare,* whom Esau slew, and tooke his garments: these are but Jewish fables: but it was the rayment properly made for Esau, which were rather in Rebecca's custody, than in his wives, whom hee saw to bee displeasing to his parents, Mercer.

QUEST. VII. Whether Iacob offended in his dissimulation.

HEre further a question is moved, whether Iacob sinned in dissembling himselfe to be Esau: 1. Some excuse Iacob herein, because Iacob non studio nocendi contextit fraudem, did use fraud, but without a fraudulent mind, or desire to hurt, having respect to the promise of God, Chrysost. hom. 53. in Genes. 2. Some because primogeniti benedictionem non per fraudem surripuit, sed sibi debitam accepit, hee did not by fraud steale the blessing, but received it as due, Gregor. hom. 6. in Ezech. 3. Augustine excuseth Iacobs fraud, because it was done in mystery. 4. Tostatus, because Rebecca, spiritu Dei mota, being moved by the Spirit, perswaded Iacob. 5. Some make a difference betweene dissimulation or lying in words, which no way is lawfull, and dissembling in behaviour, which may bee excused: because words doe properly expresse the minde, the behaviour and gesture but accidentally, Perer. 6. All these wayes doe make Iacobs dissimulation some way excusable, but not simply justifiable: for although the will and purpose of God were thus brought to passe, yet there was some failing in the meanes; though the action in generall intendment was good, yet the execution wanted not particular error, Mercer. Muscul.

QUEST. VIII. Of divers kinds of dissimulation: and whether it be lawfull upon any occasion to dissemble.

BUt for the further explanation of this point: there are divers kinds of dissimulation: one is unlawfull, when as one dissembleth to anothers hurt, either in the breach of charity, as Merchants in buying and selling, or the hindrance of faith, and with offence, as Peter by his dissimulation caused the Gentiles to doe like the Jewes, Galath. 2. There are three kinds of dissimulation tolerable, and commendable. 1. When it is done for deliverance out of danger, without the hurt of another, as David by faining himselfe mad, escaped, 1 Sam. 21. after this manner, the Physitian by a prudent dissimulation deceiveth his patient for his health. 2. When one dissembleth to profit his brother, as Ioseph caused his plate to bee put into his bro|thers sakes mouth: whereby they were brought to know themselves: our Saviour made shew, as though he would have gone further, to try the humanity of the two Disciples. 3. When some common service is to be performed to the Church or Common wealth: of which sort are the stratagems and policies used in warre: by such meanes Iosue circumvented the men of Hai, and surprised their City, Iosu. 8. 4. There is ano|ther kind of dissimulation, which commeth by the extraordinary motion of Gods Spirit, as the Hebrewes pretending to borrow of the Aegyptians, robbed them. 5. Iacobs dissimulation may thus be excused, because Gods extraordinary worke was in it, though not his specia|l motion: it faileth in the other points: for it seemeth to tend to the hurt both of Isaack, deceiving him, and of Esau, depriving him of his bles|sing. 6. The reason why dissimulation in outward gesture, if it faile not in the end, is tolerable, is this: because the meaning of the speech is in the speaker, and therefore if he tell a lye, he cannot bee guiltlesse: but the meaning of the gesture is in him that doth interpret it to his owne understanding, so that the par|ty is freed: and if Iacob only had dissembled his habit, and not in his speech, in saying he was Esau, his fault had beene the lesse or none at all.

QUEST. IX. Whether Iacob lied unto Isaack, and in lying sinned.

Vers. 19. I Am Esau thy first-borne: divers have laboured to excuse Iacob, and to cleare him of the sinne of lying: 1. Some thinke that Iacob indeed lied to his father, but that therein he sinned not: because some kind of lye is by them approved: of this opinion is Origen, who saith that a man, cui necessitas incumbit •entiendi, sic uti debet mendacio, ut condimento: which is urged to lye, may sometime use a lye as a sause: likewise Cassianus: Ita mendacio utendum, quasi ei natura insit elebori: A man must use a lye as the Physitians use elleborus, that is, in case of extremity onely: which opinion they seeme to have borrowed from Plato, who alloweth Magistrates (though not private men) hostium, vel civium causa mentiri, to lye to de|ceive the enemy, or to profit a citizen: lib. 3. de publie. But the Scripture condemneth all kinde of lying: for the Apostle saith, No lye is of the truth, 1 Iohn 21.22. that is, of God: but the Devill is the father of lying:

and when hee speaketh a lye, hee speaketh of his owne, Iohn 8.44. therefore the true Virgins and servants of Christ are thus described: In whose mouth there is found no guile, Apocal. 14. 5. Beside, that which is evill of it selfe in the kinde thereof, cannot any wayes be good: a lye is contrary to the order of nature,* which hath given unto man the voyce and words to expresse his minde and the meaning of the heart: Now for authority, against Plato we may set Aristotle, who saith, that a lye is in it selfe evill and wicked, lib. 4. Ethicor. c. 7. and Pythagoras was wont to say, that in these two things wee are made like unto God, in telling the truth, and bestowing of benefits: Aelian. lib. 12. Against Origen and Cassianus we may oppose Augustine, who condemneth all kind of lying, even that which is called jocosum, a lye in sport: libr. cont. mendacium, and Gregory, who upon those words of Iob 27.3. As long as my breath is in me, &c. my lips shall speake no wickednesse, nor my tongue utter deceit: inferreth, that omne mendacium est iniquitas, every lye is iniquity, ex Perer.

2. Some thinke that Iacob lied to his father, but that he sinned not, because hee did it by the revelation and counsell of God: so Chrysostome saith, Ne considera, quod mendacia erant, &c. Consider not that they were lyes, which Iacob told, but that God willing to have the prediction fulfilled, dispensed and disposed all things: hom. 53. in Genes. Of the same opinion are Gabriel Biel in 3. distinct. 38. and Petrus Aliacens. Familiari consilio spiritus excusantur: They are excused by the familiar counsell of God, 1. Senten. qu. 12.

Contra. 1. If God did perswade Iacob to lye, then hee should be the author of lying, and so of sinne: 2. This will shake the credit of the Scriptures and holy writers, if it bee granted that God inspireth lies. 3. Neither doth it appeare, that this counsell was of God, but of Rebecca's owne device.

Vers. 8. Heare my voyce my sonne, in that which I command thee. 4. If Iacob had received any revelation from God, he would not have beene so doubtfull as hee was to enterprize this matter. 5. God indeed orde|red and disposed of this meanes, and made it worke to effect his owne purpose: but God disposeth of many things to a good end, which he ordained not, neither commanded.

3. Some thinke that Iacob lied not at all to Isaack, and therefore sinned not: * 1. Augustine excuseth Iacob's speech by the mysticall sense: where he saith, I am Esau, he saith, if it be referred to Iacob's person, it is a lye: if to Iacob's body, that is, the Church, it is true: for as the Scripture saith, Many shall come from the East and West, &c. and sit downe with Abraham, Isaack and Iacob in the kingdome of heaven, and the children of the kingdome shall be cast out, Matth. 8.11, 12. and so the younger taketh away the birth-right of the elder. 2. Theodoret saith Iacob was Esau, because he had bought his birth-right. * 2. So Thom. Anglic. that as Christ said Iohn Baptist was Elias, not in person, but in office and vertue, so Iacob saith he was Esau, in regard of his prerogative and birth-right. 4. Some excuse Iacob, that he should call himselfe Esau, which signifieth made or perfect, signifying that he was the making, that is, the sonne of Isaack, and the first borne by the decree of God, Perer.

Contra. 1. A mysticall or figurative sense in Scripture is not to be admitted, where the historicall may without any inconvenience be received, as here it may; for to grant that Iacob might fall into this infirmity, is no absurdity, seeing holy men in Scripture are detected of greater faults; and Saint Peter is reproved of Saint Paul for his dissimulation, Galath. 2.

2. Iacob saith not only, I am thy first borne, but Esau thy first borne, vers. 19. and as Cajetan noteth, hee saith, he is Esau, v. 24. without the addition of the first borne; therefore the second answer is not sufficient.

3. The example of Iohn Baptist is not alike, for there they which heard our Saviour, did know that hee meant not Elias person, but some other similitude in respect of his office and gifts; but here

Isaack under|standeth Iacob to speake of the person of Esau, and therefore biddeth him come neare, that he might feele him; they which excuse this fact of Iacobs by that of Raphael to Toby, who said he was Azarias the sonne of Ananias the great, would justifie one lye by another.

4. Esau was so called, for that he was perfectly borne: and therefore Iacob could not in that sense name himselfe Esau; and though he had, yet he had deceived Isaack who inquireth still after the person of Esau.

5. Neither, because Isaack, after he perceived the fraud, was not angry with Iacob, neither did revoke the blessing pronounced; or because the Scripture saith, that Iacob was a plaine or simple man; or for that God appeared afterward to Iacob; doth all this prove, that Iacob committed not a lye; as Thomas Anglic. objecteth. For 1. God casteth not off his because of some infirmity, neither doth an action awry de|rogate from a mans uprightness and simplicity, and it is confessed, that God over-ruled this action, and disposed of it according to his owne purpose, as God can turne and apply evill actions to a good end: yet all this cannot exempt Iacob from dissimulation.

6. Though this speech of Iacob, I am Esau thy first borne, could find some excuse, yet the other can hard|ly be made good; I have done as thou badest mee, and eat of my venison; * for neither had Isaack given the charge to Iacob, but to Esau; neither was that flesh, which Iacob brought, got in hunting; some would have it understood of some other thing that Isaack had given to Iacob in charge: some say that Iacob re|spected his fathers generall intention, which was to employ his first borne in that service, and to give him the blessing, and that first borne was himselfe, Cajetan. But who seeth not, how farre fetcht these inter|pretations are; for it is cleare that Iacobs speaketh of his fathers bidding in action, not in intention; and yet he intended as he spake, to blesse Esau and not Iacob; Perer. himselfe confesseth, that these two last speeches of Iacob can very hardly be excused from untruth, howsoever he thinketh the first may: in Gen. 27. Numb. 57.

Wherefore the best solution of this question is, that Iacob told an officious lye to his father: 1. As is evi|dent by his three speeches; I am Esau thy first borne, and I have done as thou badest mee, and eat of my veni|son: for none of all these are true. 2. Yet was not this dissimulation of Iacob either injurious to Isaack, for he in this his error perceived the purpose of God, and was content the blessing should stand; no yet pre|judiciall to Esau, who in effect lost nothing due unto him, but only the right by this meanes was restored to Iacob. 3. God useth Iacobs infirmity, and maketh it to serve his owne purpose: this lye then of Iacobs, though in respect of these circumstances it be extenuated, yet is not justified, nor yet to bee drawne into example: of this opinion are our best writers, Calvin, Muscul, Mercer, Luther; and of the other side, Lyra|nus, Tostatus, Cajetan, Lippoman.

QUEST. IX. Of the midwives excuse made to Pharaoh.

HEre because the example of the midwives, which made that excuse to Pharao, in preserving the child|drens lives, is some what like to this of Iacob, I will briefly shew what is to be thought thereof.

1. Gregory thinketh, they lied, saying to Pharaoh, The Hebrew women are lively, and are delivered before the midwife come at them, Exod. 2.19. and therefore they only received a temporall reward: it is said the Lord made them houses, & ulterius, quod expectarent mercedis suae pramium non haberent: and therefore should looke for no further reward, lib. 18. moral. Contra. But it is further added: The midwives feared God: and the Scripture pronounceth them blessed, that feare the Lord, Psal. 112.1. And none are blessed without the assurance of everlasting life.

2. Thomas Aquinas saith, that in respect of their feare and reverence of God, they were everlastingly rewarded: but for that externall act of lying, they received onely a temporall reward, In 2.2. qu. 100. ar. ultim. Contra. But the act of lying is simply evill, and therefore is worthy of no reward: God prospered the midwives, not for their dissembling, but because they feared God, and refused to destroy the infants.

3. Some commend the midwives for their disobeying of Pharaohs cruell edict, but blame them for their dissembling, Genevens. annot at.

4. But seeing the Scripture commendeth this fact of the midwives, I thinke rather that they spake the truth, and that the Lord gave extraordinary strength to the Hebrew women in this extremity, to be delivered with speed, because of the danger. As for that reward, in building of them houses: it is to be referred rather to the increasing and propagation of the Israelites, than to the midwives: as the 20. verse sheweth, God prospered the midwives, and the people were multiplied, Iun.

QUEST. X. How divers examples in Scripture may be defended from lying.

NOW, that we may know how to discerne of such examples in Scripture, which are produced by those which defend lying; whether they are to be thought to have lyed, these rules must be observed: 1. It is one thing to conceale the truth, another to lie: as Abraham did hide the truth, when he said Sarah was his sister. 2. It is one thing to lie, another to speake figuratively: as it is said, the seed of Abraham should be multiplied as the sand of the sea, Gen. 21. 3. A sentence may be uttered in a mysticall or allegoricall sense, without any lye or untruth: as our Saviour saith, I will dissolve this temple, and build it in three dayes, Ioh. 2. hee spake of the temple of his body. 4. Though divers holy men and women be commended in Scripture, we must not thinke that straightway all they did or said is commendable: but as their doings were imperfect, so in their sayings also they might erre, Perer.

QUEST. XI. How Isaack was deceived in all his senses.

Vers. 20. How hast thou found it so quickly? &c. 1. Two things gave occasion of suspition to Isaack, to enquire whether it were Esau his sonne: the voyce of Iacob, and his so soone returne. 2. And Isaack was thus inquisitive, because he intended to blesse Esau, whom he affected, because he was serviceable and obsequious, and provided his fathers diet, and therefore intended to bestow his best blessing upon him, Perer. 3. He mistrusteth his sight, because it was dimme, and his eares being heavy, and thinketh to try out the matter by his feeling, as Thomas would not beleieve, till he had first felt Christs side. The Hebrewes say Isaack used beside the sense of tasting in his meat, and of smelling the odour of the garments, and so used all his senses, Mercer. 4. Yet God did astonish and dull all his senses, to shew that mans purpose cannot stand against the counsell of God, and partly that Isaack thereby might bee rebuked for his preposterous love to Esau, Calvin.

QUEST. XII. Why the Lord suffered Isaack to be deceived.

Vers. 23. For hee knew him not. 1. Isaack though hee suspected somewhat, was put out of doubt by his feeling, and smelling, by that opinion he had of Iacobs simplicity, and for that hee thought he had spoken in secret to Esau, without any others privitie. 2. It pleased God that Isaack should be thus deceived, (beside the reasons before alleaged) that we might know, Nullum hominem plenam habuisse scientiam, &c. That no man ever had a fulnesse of knowledge but Christ,

Hierom. epist. 125. And Gregory here|by thinketh the calling of the Gentiles to be prefigured: as it is in the Psalme, A people which I have not knowne, shall serve me, Psal. 18. hom. 6. in Ezech. 3. It seemed good also unto God, that the blessing should be conveyed to Iacob by this meanes: 1. That the manifold wisdome of God may appeare, in bringing his purpose to passe by divers meanes and wayes. 2. That his provident care toward Iacob might hereby bee made manifest. 3. And the Lord would worke it this sodaine way, rather than by revelation to Isaack, le^t Esau a furious man, if his father had willingly given away the blessing, should have been incensed against his parents, Pererius.

QUEST. XIII. Why Isaack compareth his sonne to the smell of a field.

Vers. 27. The smell of my sonne is as the smell of a field, &c. 1. Isaack by the present smell of *Esau*s gar|ments, which savoured of the field, taketh occasion, as by an externall signe to utter a spiri|tuall blessing, Mercer. And as every man borroweth similitudes from his trade, as the mariner, the sou|dier, and such like; so here Isaack blesseth by the similitude of the field wherein Esau was exercised: as Hierome noteth of Amos, who beginneth his prophecie thus, The Lord shall roare from Sion, Amos 1.2. because he being a field-man, kept the woods where the Lions roared. 2. The field is commended for three things, pleasure in the variety of flowers to the eye, sweetnesse of the fragrant odours to the smell, abundance and fruitfulness of corne, wine, oyle, to the taste; who knoweth not the pleasant savour of the fields in the spring, of the corne in harvest, and of a vineyard in the time of vintage, Perer. 3. Gregorie by the smell of a field garnished with divers flowers, understandeth the variety of gifts, and the graces of Gods spirit in the Church: Ambrose maketh Iacob this field replenished with divers vertues. 4. Some thinke that these garments kept this savour which they had in paradise, being supposed to be the same that Adam did weare; but these are but Jewish fables: they were either perfumed garments, or Re|beckah might of purpose make them sweet: or it is most like they savoured of the fresh springs and flowers, it being now Spring time, (as Aben Ezra thinketh) thorow the which Esau was accustomed to walke.

QUEST. XIV. The meaning of Isaacks blessing upon Iacob.

Vers. 28. GOd give thee of the dew of heaven. 1. Isaack doth not only pray, as Iosephus setteth it downe, or wish well to his sonne, as R. Levi, but this speech is a certaine prophecie and declarati|on of the blessing which should fall upon Iacob and his posterity, Luther. Mercer. 2. Here are foure bles|sings contained, 1. Of abundance: 2. Of victory: 3. Of domesticall preeminence: 4. Of outward pro|sperity, Cursed be he that curseth, &c. Perer. 3. He maketh mention of the dew of heaven, especially in regard of the drie and thirsty Countrey of Canaan, where they have no raine but twice in the yeare, in seed time in the moneth of October, and in May which is called the latter raine; and therefore the earth was chiefly moystened with dewes, Perer. By his brethren and sonnes of his mother the posterity of Esau is understood, which Isaack unwittingly pronounceth of Esau; for Iacob, whom he blesseth, was yet unmarried. 4. But this blessing was not fulfilled in Iacobs time, who rather was subject to his brother Esau, yet in his posterity, to the which Iacobs faith looked, it came to passe: for the Idumeans were ser|vants to the Israelites. 5. This benediction is diversly allegorized. Gregory by the dew of heaven under|standeth the contemplative life; by the fatnesse of the earth, the active. Theodoret, the divinity and hul|manity of Christ; Rupertus by the dew, interpreteth the grace of Gods spirit: by the fatnesse of the earth, the opening of the heart.

QUEST. XV. Of the cause of Isaacks feare.

Vers. 33. Isaack was stricken with a marvellous great feare. 1. Not as the Hebrewes fable, because hee saw Esau accursed for ever, seeing hell wide open to receive him. 2. Neither as Cajetane, did it proceed of a strife in Isaacks minde, betweene his love toward Esau, and Gods will revealed concerning Iacob: for Isaack is resolved the blessing shall stand. 3. And it is more than to marvell, as the Latine text addeth, Vltra quam credi potest admirans; Marvelling beyond measure. 4. But Isaack feared and was troubled, (being as in a trance and ecstasie, as the Septuagint and Augustineread, wherein the will of God was revealed to him) because he had beene so grossely deceived, in not remembring how the Lord had cho|sen Iacob before Esau, Calvin. And this feare was as a stay and bridle to Isaack not to reverse the blessing pronounced, Iun.

QUEST. XVI. How Isaack saith Iacob came with subtilty.

Vers. 35. THy brother came with subtilty, &c. 1. We need neither with Tostatus to excuse Iacobs fraud and craft, that herein he offended not at all: 2. Nor with Lippomanus, to justifie Iacobs deceit, who maketh three kinds of fraud: one eruditionis, of instruction, as was the thrusting of Iosephs cup into Benjamins sacke: another noxiae deceptionis, of hurtfull deceit, as the Prophet of Bethel deceived the man of God, 1 King. 13. The third, inspirationis divinae, by divine inspiration, as this of Iacobs was: so he maketh foure kinds of simulation or dissembling; una providentiae, one of providence, which Iosua used against H•i: altera doctrinae, the other of doctrine, as Christ made as though he would have gone further: tertia calliditatis, the third of deceit, as the devill can transforme himselfe into an Angell of light: quarta significationis, the fourth of signification, as this was of Iacob: for as is shewed before, Iacobs infirmity in this dissimulation (though it pleased God to use the same to effect his purpose) cannot be wholly defended. 3. Nor yet will we strive about the word, as Lyranus saith (mirmah) sometime signifieth prudence, wisdome, as the Chal|dee translateth: and in the civill law, there is a title, de dolo mal•, of evill craft; whereby it may bee galthered, that all deceit is not evill. 4. Neither yet will wee aggravate Iacobs oversight with some, who thinke, that for this lie made to Isaack, his sonnes lyed unto him concerning Ioseph, which they note as a punishment. 5. But we take the word as it properly signifieth, for deceit and fraud: though Isaack to please his sonne committeth some oversight in transferring the fault upon Iacob, Iunius. 6. And yet though there were a fraud, and error personae, error of the person, which is sufficient to disanull other civill contracts: yet for as much as God ratified the blessing thus pronounced ignorantly by Isaack, the sentence was to stand, Perer.

QUEST. XVI. Esau falsly chargeth Iacob.

Vers. 36. WAs he not justly called Iacob? 1. Esau doth cavill at Iacobs name, which was not given him in respect of any such supplanting, but because he held Esau by the heele. 2. Hee lyeth in saying, he tooke away my birth-right, for Esau sold it unto him, and confirmed it with an oath, Mercer. 3. Neither did hee take away his blessing for having the birth-right, the blessing did justly bellow unto him: for the birth-right and blessing could not be divided and separated, Mercer. Iun.

QUEST. XVII. Why Isaack had but one blessing.

Vers. 38. HAs thou but one blessing? 1. True it is, that principall blessing which carried with it the spirituall promises in Christ, was but one, because Christ is one: Esau by joyning him|selfe to Iacob might have be•ne partaker of this blessing, but apart by himselfe hee could not, because without the Church there is no salvation, Mercer. 2. For this cause Ismael was excluded Abrahams house, that the blessing might remaine in Isaack: so Esau is excluded, and Iacob made the heire of blessing. But Iacob gave a blessing to all his children, because they all belonged to the visible Church; yet the more principall blessing was promised unto Iudah, of whom the Messiah should come. 3. Though there be no speciall mention of any such blessing given by Abraham to Isaack: yet it is not like that Abraham was wanting therein: and the manifest promises so often renewed concerning Isaack, the ejection of Ismael, and sending away of all the rest of Abrahams children,* might stand in stead thereof. 4. Though the blessing of all parents, specially such as feare God, be effectually toward their children: yet the ancient Patriarchs and Prophets, that were the founders of the people of God, had speciall prerogative in blessing, as Isaack, Iacob, Moses, &c. Perer. 5. Esau doth not desire a peece onely of the blessing, Isaack having made mention of two blessings, vers. 37. his preeminence over his brethren, and abundance of wheat and wine: the Hebrewes thinke that Esau yeelded the preeminence, but desired the other to be given him: neither doth he desire to be partaker with his brother in his blessing, or to have some other blessing given him, as Perer. But he coveteth the whole blessing, both envying that his brother should be preferred before him, Philo. and of a lightnesse of minde, thinking that the blessing might be reversed, Mercer.

QUEST. XVIII. Of *Esau*s teares, that they found no repentance.

Vers. 38. Esau lift up his voice and wept, &c. 1. Whereas the Apostle, Heb. 12. saith hereupon, that Esau found no place of repentance, though he sought it with teares: it is not understood of *Esau*s repentance, as Thom. Aquin. expoundeth: which because it was rather for a temporall losse, than for his sinnes, tooke no place. But the Apostle meaneth, that Isaack repented not of that which he had done to Iacob, notwithstanding *Esau*s teares: in like sense the gifts of God are said to be without repentance, Rom. 11.29. that is, God doth not repent to change his decree, sic Beza, ex nostris, Cajetan, Perer. 2. Where the Apostle saith he was rejected, he meaneth from the greater blessing which belonged to the birth-right and inheritance; for Esau obtained of his father the smaller blessing. 3. *Esau*s teares proceeded of envie toward his brother, not of any true sorrow: for he doth not acknowledge any fault in himselfe, but layeth all the fault upon his brother, vers. 36. and beside, he upon this hated his brother, and purposed to kill him, vers. 41. which is not the fruit of true repentance; and therefore it is no marvell that it was not accepted with God, Calvin.

QUEST. XIX. Of the blessing which Isaack gave to Esau.

Vers. 39. Behold the fatnesse of the earth, &c. Isaack indueth Esau also with a temporall blessing, but with some restraint. 1. First here is omitted, plenty of wheat and wine, which was given before to Iacob; whereby is signified, that *Esau*s Countrey should not abound with such plenty as Iacobs, Perer. 2. In Iacobs blessing it was added, God give thee of the dew of heaven: but here no mention is made of God: so the meaning is, that Iacobs posterity should depend upon God for these externall blessings, so should not *Esau*s race, Mercer. 3. There is a spirituall blessing pronounced to Iacob, they shall be blessed that blesse thee, which is omitted here. 4. Where the Prophet saith, I hated Esau, and made his mountaines waste, Malach. 1.3. Idumea was a desart and barren Countrey in respect of Canaan; yet in it selfe it was not void of some fatnesse and fruitfulnessse, as here Isaack promiseth, Calvin.

QUEST. XX. Of *Esau*s subjection to Iacob, and the casting off of his yoke.

Vers. 4. By thy sword shalt thou live, &c. 1. That is, both Esau should get his living by the sword, Mercer. and his posterity, the Idumeans, should bee a savage and cruell people, Calvin. 2. He should serve his brother, which came to passe in their posterity seven hundred yeares after this propheticie, in Dauids time, who subdued Edom, and put garrisons there, 2. Sam. 8.14. Ambrose noteth this for a benefit, that Esau was made Iacobs servant; Intemperanti profecit sobrium, & prudenti imprudentem stultuit obedire: He set the sober over the intemperate, and appointed the foolish to serve the wise, lib. 2. de Iacob. c. 3. 3. Thou shalt get the mastery: some translate, when thou hast mourned, and referre it to that heavy chance, when the idolatrous King of Moab sacrificed the King of Edoms sonne, and not long after the Edomites shook off the yoke of the Israelites, sic Iun^a in hunc locum: which reading is better: for the word here used eu hiphel, signifieth to mourne, or to be humbled, as Psal. 55.2. I mourne in my prayer: the Edomites after they had served Israel some foure hundred and fiftene years, in the dayes of Ioram Iehosophats son, they departed from Iuda, and made them a King of their owne, 2 King. 8.20. and in this liberty they continued eight hundred yeares, till the time of Hircanus, who subdued them, and made them to be circumcised. But after this Herod the sonne of Antipater, an Idumean, obtained to be King of the Jewes: so that in him also after a sort the Edomites got the mastery over Iudah, Perer.

QUEST. XXIII. Of Esaus purpose to kill Iacob.

Vers. 41. THE dayes of mourning for my father, &c. 1. That which joyned and reconciled Ismael and Isaack, the death and buriall of Abraham, doth encourage Esau to kill his brother, Muscul. 2. Yet it was but a fained mourning which he would afford his father, seeing he purposed to slay his brother, Calvin. 3. He would not doe it so long as his father lived, lest he should accurse him, and deprive him of all blessings: so he refrained for feare, not of conscience, Mercer. 4. He onely maketh mention of mourning for his father: it should seeme that he little regarded his mother, whom he ought equally to have revered, Perer.

QUEST. XXIV. How Rebecca knew of Esau his bloody purpose.

Vers. 42. IT was told Rebeckah. 1. Though it be said that Esau thought in his minde to kill Iacob, yet it is like that hee could not conceale or dissemble his murderous heart, but uttered it in the hearing of his wives, or some other, by which meanes it is more like it came to Rebeckahs knowledge, than by revelation, as Augustine thinketh: because the words are, it was told or reported to Rebeckah, Mercer. 2. She called Iacob, or sent for him, who (as the Hebrewes thinke) had hid himselfe for feare of his brother. 3. Esau his hatred was such, that he could not be satisfied nor comforted but by the death of Iacob, thinking then to recover his birth-right againe.

QUEST. XXV. Of Rebeckahs counsell given to Iacob to escape away.

Vers. 44. TARrie there a few dayes, &c. 1. Yet Iacob stayed twenty yeares, a longer time than Rebeckah supposed: of which long stay the frowardnesse of Laban was a cause: some thinke because of these words it is said of Iacob, when he had served seven yeares for Rachel, they seemed unto him but a few dayes, &c. Gen. 29.20. yet not his mothers words, but the love of Rachel made that time seeme so short, Mercer. 2. She thinketh that Iacobs absence, and the continuance of time, would allay Esaus implacable wrath: some mens anger is soone kindled, and as soone abated: such Aristotle calleth Acrechiólous, extreme chollericke men: others doe keepe wrath long, whom he nameth Picrochiólous, of their bitter choller; and such was Esau his anger. 3. Rebeckah promiseth to send for Iacob, which the Hebrewes thinke she performed, in sending her nurse Deborah to him, which died in Iacobshouse after his returne, * Gen. 35.9. 4. She feareth to be deprived of them both in one day, not because, as the Hebrewes thinke, as they were borne together, they died together: but lest that if Esau killed Iacob, she knew Gods justice would overtake the other, Mercer.

3. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. We must be cloathed with Christs righteousness.

Vers. 15. She cloathed Iacob, &c. Like as Iacob being apparelled with faire perfumed garments was accepted of his father: so we cannot be pleasing unto God unlesse we be cloathed with the righteousness of Christ: as the Apostle saith, Not having mine owne righteousness, but that which is through the faith of Christ, Calvin. in vers. 27.

2. Doct. The Patriarks by temporall blessings were stirred up to seeke for spirituall.

Vers. 28. God give thee of the dew of heaven, &c. The Fathers rested not in these temporall blessings, but thereby as by certaine degrees were to ascend higher, and be brought to the meditation of heavenly things, Mercer. As the Apostle sheweth, If they had beene mindfull of that Countrey from whence they came out, they had leasure to have returned, but now they desire a better, that is an heavenly, Heb. 11.16.

3. Doct. Election not of works, but of grace.

Vers. 30. Then came Esau from hunting. If Esau and Iacobs works be compared here together; we shall see that Esau doth nothing but praise-worthy: he obeyeth his fathers minde, taketh great paines to hunt for flesh, he carefully maketh it ready: but contrariwise Iacob dissembleth, hee offereth Kids flesh for venison, maketh himselfe Esau, deceiveth his father: and this difference is set forth to this end, to shew that election standeth not by works, but is of grace, Calvin. As Saint Paul saith, That the purpose of God might remaine according to election, not by works, by him that calleth, Rom. 9.11.

4. Doct. The efficacie of the blessing dependeth not upon the minister, but the word of God.

Vers. 33. I Have blessed him, therefore he shall be blessed. Though Isaack ignorantly had pronounced the blessing upon Iacob, yet it remained effectually and of force: so they which blesse and pronounce remission of sinnes in the name of God, though they be weake men, and compassed with infirmities, yet their sentence shall stand, being agreeable to the will of God: the force thereof dependeth not upon their ministry, but upon the word of God; Whatsoever ye binde in earth shall be bound in heaven, &c. Matth. 18.18. Calvin.

5. Doct. The Jewes supplications, why not heard.

Vers. 38. He lift up his voice and wept. Esau, because he sought a blessing apart to himselfe, and scorned to associate himselfe to Iacob, to whom the promise was made, could not prevaile with his teares: so the Jewes, notwithstanding their prayers, fastings, howlings, lamentations powred forth unto God, are not heard, because they refuse the true Messiah, and seeke a way by themselves to goe unto heaven, Luther.

6. Doct. The meanes which serve under Gods providence must not be neglected.

Vers. 43. Arise and flie to Haran, &c. Rebecca, though she was fully assured that Iacob should have the blessing and inheritance, yet she is carefull to use the means, and not immediately to depend upon Gods providence: whereby we are taught, that as we are not to relie upon the meanes which the Lord setteth before us for our deliverance, and for the perfitting of his good pleasure toward us, yet we must not neglect them: our Saviour promised to be with his Disciples to the end of the world, yet hee wisheth them, if they be persecuted in one City, to flie to another, Matth. 10.23.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Saint Peter reproveth for his dissimulation.

Vers. 19. I Am Esau thy first borne, &c. Pererius well collecteth, that it is not necessary to exempt Iacob here from a veniall sinne, seeing that Saint Peter; who was not inferiour in grace and knowledge, is noted for his dissimulation, and thereof reproveth by Saint Paul, in 27. Gen. Numer. 46. contrary to the opinion of Hierome, who would excuse Peter from all fault, and thinketh that all that discourse was but a set match betweene them: to this opinion the Rhemists seeme to incline, Galath. 2. Sect. 9. but it is confuted by Augustine, Epist. 19. who discusseth this point at large with Hierome; saith he, Qua fronte in altero reprehendit, quod ipse commisit: With what face could Saint Paul have reprehended that in another, which he did himselfe: if so this had beene a set match betweene them, Epist. 11.

2. Confut. Against the authority of the booke of Tobie.

Pererius would excuse this dissimulation of Iacob, saying, I am Esau, &c. by that of the Angell, who to Tobie inquiring of his tribe and kindred, answered, I am Azarias of Ananias the great, Tobie 5.12. for as this speech was figurative, that the Angell was not the sonne of Ananias so called, but of the grace of God, which is signified by that word: and so Iacob meaneth that he was not Esau in person, but in respect of his prerogative: Contra. Thus he hath shaped a defence of one lie by another: for the Angell saith, he was of Ananias, and of thy brethren: he meaneth then that Ananias, which was of kindred to Tobie; And this is one reason which impaireth the credit of this Booke, because the Angell is brought in lying, which is not the use of the holy Angels in the Canonickall Scripture.

3. Confut. Sacraments depend not upon the intention of the minister.

Vers. 23. Wherefore he blessed him, &c. The blessing which Isaack pronounceth loseth not his force by his ignorance or wrong intention, who purposed to blessed Esau and not Iacob, but upon the promise and word of God: whereby is confuted that point of popish doctrine, that the sacraments depend upon the intention of the minister; as though it were in mans power to frustrate the institution of God, Calvin. The Apostle saith, Shall their unbeliefe make the faith of God without effect, Rom, 3.3. neither shall the unbelieving or not rightly intending minister frustrate the force of the Sacrament.

4. Confut. Against the error of the Chiliastes.

Vers. 28. God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatnesse of the earth. Upon this place, with the like, Tertullian foundeth his error, which is called of the Chiliastes, that Christ should reigne with the Saints a thousand yeares here upon the earth: Vtriusque indulgentia exempla sunt: sicut idem justum est Deo ellic exultare famulos, ubi sunt ipsius nomine afflicti, &c. here saith Tertullian, in Isaacks blessing upon Iacob, both are promised, the joyes of heaven and of earth: and it is just with God that his servants should there rejoyce, where they were for his name afflicted, Lib. 3. cont. Marcion. Contra. Isaack here prophesieth not of the state of the Church after this life, but in this world: unlesse they will say, that in the next life we shall have wheat and wine, which are here mentioned: neither doth it follow, that because they suffered in earth, they should there also bee rewarded: but as the Israelites were afflicted in Egypt, and recompensed in Canaan: so the faithfull for their travell and labour in the earth, shall finde rest in heaven.

5. Confut. Obedience for feare of punishment not commendable.

Vers. 41. The dayes of mourning for my father will come shortly, &c. Esau forbeareth a while from slaying his brother, not of any conscience, but for feare of his fathers curse & displeasure: we see then that obedience which is caused for feare of punishment, is but a forced obedience, nor of any acceptance with God, which notwithstanding is so much commended of the Papists, Calvin. Saint Paul saith, Love is the fulfilling of the Law, Rom. 13.10. they then which doe not yeeld their service of love, doe not keepe and fulfill the Law.

6. Places of Morall observation.

1. Observ. The meditation of death profitable.

Vers. 2. I Know not the day of my death: The ignorance of the time of our end ought to stirre us up to watchfulnesse, and to make all things strait with God and the world: as here Isaack resolveth to hasten the blessing of his sonne, because of the uncertainty of his end, Muscul. for our Saviour exhorteth us to watch, because we know not when the Master of the house will come, Mark. 13.35.

2. Observ. Parents curse how much to be feared.

Vers. 12. SO shall I bring a curse upon mee, and not a blessing, &c. Iacob is afraid to purchase his fathers curse, whereunto the Scripture attributeth much: we read how heavie Noahs curse was upon Cham: Augustine reporteth a strange story of a woman of Caesarea in Cappadocia, who after the death of her husband, receiving wrong at the hand of her children, which were ten in number,* seven sonnes and three daughters, accursed them all: whereupon presently they were all stricken with a shaliking and trembling of all their parts, and for shame they dispersed themselves into divers Countries; of which number, two, Pallus and Paladia, a brother and sister came to Hippo, Lib. 27. de Civit. Dei, cap. 8.

3. Observ. God must be sought and fled unto in time.

Vers. 34. Blesse me also my father, &c. Esau came too late for the blessing which was bestowed before: and he coming out of time, (another having prevented him) could not obtaine it, no not with teares; we must seeke the Lord therefore in time, and enter in while the doore is open, lest if we stay till the doore be shut upon us, we remaine without; so the Prophet saith, Seeke the Lord while he may be found, call upon him while he is neare, Isay 55.6. Calvin.

4. Observ. Outward blessings common to the just and unjust.

Vers. 39. The fatnesse of the earth shall be thy dwelling, &c. Esau is blessed with temporall gifts, as the fatnesse of the earth, as Iacob was before; so that wee see that these externall blessings of the world are granted as well to the ungodly as the righteous; as our Saviour saith, That God sendeth raine upon the just and unjust, Matth. 5.45. Perer. Which teacheth us that we should not much care for these outward things, but desire the best and more principall gifts.

5. Observ. Persecution for righteousness sake.

Vers. 43. Flee to Haran, &c. Iacob is constrained to flee and shift for himselfe because of the blessing▪ so while the faithfull doe seeke for the Kingdome of heaven, and spirituall things, they must make account to finde hard entertainment in the world, Calvin. But Christ hath given us a comfort; Blessed are they which suffer persecution for righteousness sake, Matth. 5.10.

6. Observ. Gods promises to be expected with patience.

FURther, whereas Iacob which hath the blessing, is driven from his fathers house, and is constrained to serve twenty years under an hard master: and Esau in the meane time had the rule of his fathers house, prospered and became a mighty man: and yet for all this, neither Rebeckah nor Iacob despaired of Gods promise, or doubted of the blessing: it teacheth us, that although the wicked doe for a while flourish in the world, we should not doubt but that God in his good time will performe his promise toward his, Mercer.

7. Observ. Injuries must first be forgotten, and then forgiven.

Vers. 45. Till thy brothers wrath be turned away, &c. and he forget, &c. The forgetfulnesse of wrongs bringeth forth forgiveness: but where injuries are remembred, they are hardly remitted, Muscul. We must therefore forget, and then forgive: as Ioseph did forget all the wrongs that his brethren did unto him, and considered how the Lord turned it to his good, Gen. 50.20.

8. Observ. Wives must not exasperate or provoke their husbands.

Vers. 46. I Am weary of my life for the daughters of Hoth. Rebeckah as a wise and discreet woman, not willing to grieve her husband, concealeth from him the malicious hatred of Esau toward Iacob, and pretendeth another cause of sending away Iacob, namely, to provide him a wife from her owne kindred, and not to match into so wicked a race as Esau had done, Mercer. By which example women should learne, that as their husbands ought not to be bitter to them, so they againe should not exasperate their husbands with quicke words, or froward deeds: as Sarah obeyed Abraham, and called him Lord, 1 Pet. 3.6. she did with milde and dutifull words seeke to please him.

CHAP. XXVIII.

1. The Argument and Contents.

FIrst, Isaacks charge to Iacob concerning his marriage, and his blessing, are set forth, vers. 1.5. 2. Esau his hypocrisie, who to please his father taketh a wife from Ismaels house, vers. 6. to 10. 3. Gods providence is declared in a vision to Iacob, how the Lord promised to bee with him, and to conduct him, vers. 10. to 16. 4. Iacobs feare, devotion, and vow, are expres|sed, vers. 16. to the end.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Why Isaack biddeth Iacob goe into Mesopotamia.

Vers. 2. ARise, get thee to Padan. Aram. 1. Isaack herein followeth the counsell of Rebeckah, to send Iacob into Mesopotamia; being perswaded it came from God, as Abraham was bidden before to heare the voice of Sarah, Iun. 2. Though Abraham would not suffer Isaack to goe into that Countrey, yet Iacob is commanded by his father: both because by this means he should escape the danger threatned by his brother, and for that there was no such feare, lest Iacob should not returne, seeing there was of that kindred already planted in Canaan, and therefore his wives that he should marry would be the more willing to come with him: but Isaacks case differed in both these points. 3. Isaack reneweth the same blessing in effect which he had given before to Iacob for his further strengthening, lest Iacob might have thought that the blessing which he had obtained by craft was of the lesse force.

QUEST. II. Why Rebeckah is said to be the mother of Iacob and Esau.

Vers. 5. Iacob and Esaus mother. 1. Neither as Rasi, is it hard to ghesse wherefore Esau is added. 2. Not (as Ramban) because she is called Iacobs mother before, is she now said to be the mother of both, to avoid suspicion of partiality. 3. Nor yet because as the Hebrewes imagine, Iacob and Esau were twins, and lay wrapped in the same skinne, contrary to the ordinary course. 4. Or to assure Iacob of deliverance from danger, seeing he went to his uncles house, to whom they were both alike deare. 5. But Esau is added to make way for the story following, where mention is made of Esau, according to the manner of the Hebrew speech, Iun. 6. As also by the preferring of Iacob before Esau, it appeareth, that Isaacks judgement was altered, and that now he gave the preeminence to Iacob.

QUEST. III. Why Mahalath is said to be the sister of Nebaioth.

Vers. 9. Sister of Nebaioth. 1. Nebaioth is added, not for that he was her brother also by the mother, and the rest were not. 2. Nor yet onely because he was the eldest sonne, and most renowned amongst his brethren. 3. But he is named as the chiefe of Ismaels house, who was now dead, and the go|vernment committed to his eldest sonne Nebaioth: for Iacob was now 77. yeares old when he went into Mesopotamia, in the 63. yeare of whose age Ismael died, who was fourteene yeares elder than Isaack, and lived 137. yeares: and Isaack was 60. yeares elder than Iacob: so that Ismaels 137. yeare, doth fall into Iacobs 63. yeare: see more of this, Quest. 20. in chap.25.

QUEST. IV. Why Esau marrieth Ismaels daughter.

Vers. 9. HE tooke unto his wives Mahalah, &c. 1. Which was not as Rupertus thinketh, Quo magis eos offenderet, to offend his parents the more: for then he would have married againe from the Canaanites. 2. Neither yet chiefly did he it for multiplication of his seed, that he might therein be equall to his brother, Marlorat. 3. But Esau chiefest intent was to please his father in this marriage, because Ismael was his fathers brother. But Esau tooke not a right course herein, seeing he both multiplied wives, and graffed himselfe into the flocke of him that was of the bond-woman, and belonged not to the covenant, Mercerus.

QUEST. V. Whether Bethel where Iacob slept and pitched a stone, were the same City with Ierusalem.

Vers. 11. HE came unto a certaine place. The Hebrewes thinke that this place where Iacob rested was the Mount Moriah, where Abraham offered Isaack, where afterward also the Temple was built: of the same opinion are Lyranus, Cajetanus, and before them Augustine, quaest. 83. in Gen. But this conceit hath no ground at all, and many reasons make against it. 1. This place was neare to Bethel, but Bethel was farre from Ierusalem; as may appeare by Ieroboams act, who set up two golden Calves, one in Dan, another in Bethel, to the intent that the people should not goe up to Ierusalem to sacrifice, 1 King. 12.29. 2. Ierusalem was the possession of the children of Benjamin, Bethel belonged to Ioseph, Iud. 1.21, 22. therefore they were not the same City. If any object that there were two Cities called by the name of Bethel, as the Rabbines thinke, and that one of them is numbred among the Cities that fell to Benjamin, Iosu. 18.22. yet in the same place, vers. 28. Ierusalem is reckoned for another City of *Benjamin*s part: Ierusalem then and Bethel are still two Cities. 3. Borchardus which himselfe spent many years in viewing the land of Canaan, sheweth that Bethel could not be Ierusalem, because this stone which Iacob erected, and *Deborah*s monument were then to be seene, not at Ierusalem, but beside the towne called Bethel, Perer.

QUEST. VI. Why Iacob slept all night in the field.

Vers. 11. HE came to a certaine place. * 1. The Hebrewes fable that Iacob went from Beersabee to Char|ran in one day, as they affirme the like of Abrahams servant: and because in this verse the word macho is thrice named, some of them understand the three Temples that should be built, some the three principall feasts: but these things have no ground. 2. Some say that the Sunne did set miraculously before his time: Iosephus thinketh that Iacob durst not goe to the City because of the envie of the Inha|bitants: but the reason why he lay in the field all night, is because it was late before he came thither: Ibi dormivit, ubi nox cum comprehendit; There he slept, as Chrysostome saith, where the night overtooke him, Hom. 54. in Gen.

QUEST. VII. Why Iacob went so meanly furnished for his journey.

HE tooke of the stones and laid under his head. Abraham sent his servant with camels and other com|pany to attend him, with jewels of gold, but Isaack sendeth forth Iacob alone, with a staffe; where|of the reasons may be these: 1. I will omit the allegories of Augustine, who by Iacob going with a staffe to take a wife, understandeth Christ by his Crosse redeeming the Church, Serm. 79. de tempor. of Ruper|tus, who by Iacobs poverty setteth forth the small preparation of the Apostles, sent forth to preach the Gospell with a scrip and a staffe: or of Gregory, who saith, that in itinere dormire, to sleepe in the way with Iacob, is to sequester the minde from the cogitation of earthly things: and caput in lapide ponere, est Christo menta inharere; to lay the head upon a stone, is with the minde to cleave to Christ, Lib. 4. Moral. 2. But these indeed are the causes. *Theodore*t saith, Vt manifestius divina providentia declararetur, that Gods providence might more fully appeare toward Iacob: who himselfe thanketh God, that whereas he went but with his staffe, he returned with bands, Gen. 32.10. 2. Another reason is this, Iacob went secretly and not accompanied, Vt melius fr|tris conatus declinaret, that he might the better avoid the practices of his brother, Thom. Anglic. 3. Beside it may be an example of labour, patience, and frugality to the servants of God; ex Perer.

QUEST. VIII. The divers expositions of Iacobs ladder.

Ver. 12. Then he dreamed, and behold there stood a ladder upon the earth, &c. 1. Some by this ladder understand the genealogie of Christ: Saint Luke setting forth the same by descending from Adam downward, Saint Matthew by ascending from Ioseph upward. 2. Augustine by God standing upon the ladder, understandeth Christ hanging upon the Crosse: by the Angels ascending, the Preachers handling mysticall doctrines; by the Angels descending, Preachers applying themselves to morall doctrine, Serm. 79. de tempore. 3. Some by this ladder interpret the Church, which is the gate of heaven, without the which there is no salvation. 4. Some by this ladder insinuate a Christian profession, in the which are divers degrees and vertues to rise by: by the Angels ascending, such are understood as are given to contemplation: by the Angels descending, such as follow an active and practicall life. 5. Philo sometime by this ladder describeth the soule of man: the head he maketh the understanding, the feet the affections: the ascending & descending is the discourse of the reason: sometime he expoundeth it to be the uncertaine state of the world, wherein as in a ladder, some ascend and are advanced, some descend and are dishonoured, ex Perer. 6. But the proper and literall meaning of the ladder is, to set forth Gods providence, both in generall, whereby he governeth all things in heaven and in earth, Psal. 113.6. The degrees of the ladder are the divers meanes which God useth: the Angels ascending and descending, are the ministering spirits, which God sendeth forth for the execution of his will: even the Heathen Poet Homer by the like similitude of a golden chaine, which Iupiter sent downe from heaven to earth, describeth the divine providence. And in particular, the speciall care which the Lord had of Iacob to protect him in his journey, is by this ladder exemplified. The ladder is the way that Iacob was to goe, the Angels ascending and descending, doe conduct him backward and forward: God standeth upon the top of the ladder, ruling all by his providence, Iun. For whereas foure things troubled Iacob, his departure from his parents, his leaving of his Countrey, his solitary journey, his poverty: the Lord doth give him spirituall comforts against them all: I will be thy keeper; I will give thee this land; he saw Angels ascending and descending to be his companions: and thou shalt spread abroad to the East and West, &c. Perer. 7. This ladder also in a mysticall signification betokeneth Christ, as he himselfe expoundeth, Ioh. 1.51. and specially in these points: 1. The two natures of Christ are expressed, who above is God of his father, beneath is man out of Iacobs loynes. 2. Christs office is described, who is the onely way and the ladder whereby wee ascend to heaven, Calvin. 3. The Angels ascending and descending, are the blessed spirits, which first ministered to the person of Christ, Ioh. 1.51. And secondly, doe minister for the good of his body, namely, the elect, Heb. 1.14.

QUEST. IX. How in Iacob all the world should be blessed.

Vers. 14. Thou shalt spread abroad to the West, to the East. 1. This is first understood of the possession of the large Countrey of Canaan, which was extended toward the foure parts of heaven: and secondarily it is referred to the spirituall posterity of Iacob, that should bee dispersed thorowout the world, Mercer. 2. Whereas it is said, In thee, and in thy seed; he sheweth how in Iacob all Nations should be blessed, because of him should come the promised seed, Calvin.

QUEST. X. What things were promised to Iacob.

Vers. 15. I Will never forsake thee, &c. 1. Because these promises made to Iacob in Christ, were not onely temporall, but spirituall; not onely concerning this life, but the next, 1 Tim. 4.8. Iun. 2. Where/soever thou goest, which is not to bee taken largely, but with this restraint, so long as hee walked in the wayes of God, the Lord promiseth to be his guide, Muscul. 3. Till I have fulfilled all I have promised thee: not onely these things which the Lord now spake, as Mercer. but which Isaack promised and pronounced unto Iacob, vers. 3, 4. Iun. yea and all those promises made to Abraham and his seed, were made likewise to Iacob, Rasi.

QUEST. XI. How the Lord is said to be in one place more than another.

Vers. 16. The Lord is in this place, and I was not aware, &c. 1. God in respect of his power and locall presence is every where alike: but in respect of some speciall declaration of his presence, he is more in one place than another, as in some apparition and vision: as the Lord bid Moses put off his shooes because the ground was holy where the Lord then appeared, Exod. 3. so in the Tabernacle where the Lord gave answers in the Poole of Bethesda, where the Angell stirred the waters, the Lord was present after a speciall manner: as he is also in the assemblies and congregations of his servants: and as here in this heavenly apparition to Iacob, Perer. 2. The Hebrewes imagine that Iacob for the space of foureteene yeares, while he was in Ebershouse, never almost lay downe, but watched, giving himselfe to meditation, and therefore reproveth himselfe now for sleeping: but that this is a fable, I have shewed before in Gen. 25. quest. 20. 3. And I was not aware. * So the Lord to the faithfull performeth more than they could conceive and expect, Calv. And the servants of God perceive not at the first that which in processe of time is revealed unto them, as it is said of Samuel, that at the first he knew not the Lord, neither was the word of God revealed to him, 1 Sam. 3.4. that is, in such familiar manner as afterward the Lord shewed himselfe in, Gregor. lib. 2. in 1 Sam. 4. Bernard excellently sheweth the difference of Gods presence: Est in omni loco, &c. sed aliter atque aliter: apud homines males est puniens & dissimulans, apud electos operans & servans, apud superos pascens & cubans, apud inferos damnans & arguens, &c. God is every where, but after a divers manner: he is among the wicked punishing, yet forbearing, among the elect working and saving, in hea|ven refreshing and dwelling, in hell condemning and reprovng, Serm. 6. de Dedication. Eccles. &c.

QUEST. XIII. Why Iacob called the place fearefull.

Vers. 17. How fearefull is this place? 1. Three things were here wrought upon Iacob; while he slept he had a vision, when he awaked he had the revelation and understanding of the vision, and beside a reverent feare came upon him, Cajetan. 2. Which feare was not in respect of any danger, from the which the Lord promised to deliver him, Mercer. nor yet such a feare as the wicked are stricken with all, but a reverent feare, such as the godly have when they enter into Gods presence, Muscul. 3. This place was not the Mount Moriah, as some think, where afterward the Temple was built, for Bethel and Jerusalem are far distant, as is shewed before, quest. 5. neither is here Bethel a name appellative, but proper, given to that Cilty which was called Luz before, vers. 19. but that fable of the Hebrewes, that the Mount Moriah removed from his place, * and went before Iacob, is ridiculous, ex Mercer. 4. He calleth it a fearefull place, and the house of God, both because God there appeared, and the heavens opened, and for that hee thought it a meet place to be consecrated to the worship of God, Iun. and it may well signifie the Church of God, where the Lord doth reveale himselfe to his servants, Rupertus.

QUEST. XIII. Of the stone which Iacob powred oyle upon.

Vers. 18. HE tooke the stone that was under his head. 1. These were neither twelve stones, according to the number of the twelve tribes, which did all grow into one, as the Hebrewes imagine: * neither were they many stones, as Iosephus: for though he gathered divers stones about his head, as Iunius collecteth out of the 11. vers. yet one was fittest for Iacob to rest his head on, and to reare for a pillar, Mercer. 2. The oyle did not fall from heaven, as the Hebrewes, nor yet is it like he had it from Luz; but it was such as he carried with him for his refreshing in his journey, and whereof there was great plen|tie in that Countrey, Mercer.

QUEST. XIV. Whether Iacob did well in setting up a pillar, and anointing it with oyle.

SEt up as a pillar; and powred oyle. 1. The word is matseba, a pillar, of jat sab, which signifieth to stand: three sorts there were of such pillars: some for religious uses, forbidden Levit. 26.1. some for morall, to put the people in minde of some benefit, as the twelve stones pitched in Jordan: some for evill uses, as Absolons pillar, which he set up to keepe a memoriall of him. 2. The Gentiles used superstitiously to powre oyle upon stones; but Iacob taketh not this usage from them: it is more like that Satan brought the Gentiles superstitiously to counterfeit those holy rites, which holy men consecrated unto God: and againe, the Gentiles did adore and worship such stones, as Arnobius confesseth of himselfe, when he was yet an idolater, when he saw a smooth stone anointed with oyle, Tanquam inesset vis presens adulabar; affa|har; I did speake unto it, and flatter it, as though some present vertue were in it. But Iacob ascribeth no di|vine vertue unto this stone, Perer. 3. Whereas they are forbidden to reare up any pillar, Levit. 26.1. this fact of Iacob was long before the promulgation of that law: and besides they are forbidden to erect any such pillar to bow downe unto it: they might set up stones and pillars for commemoration of some worl|thy fact, as Iosua pitched the stones in Jordan, but not for adoration: and so Iacob here doth set up this stone for a remembrance of this vision, as also he doth consecrate it with oyle, as peculiar for the service of God, for in the same place he afterward built an Altar to God, Gen. 35.7. but he was farre off from any sulperstitious opinion of this stone. 4. Augustine findeth out here a greater mystery, making this stone anoin|ted with oyle, a figure of Christ, who is so called of his anointing, Lib. 16. de Civit. Dei, cap. 38.

QUEST. XV. Whether the City of Luz were built at this time.

Vers. 19. NOTwithstanding the name of the City was called Luz. 1. There is another word (alam) which signifieth certainly, truly, which the Septuagint unskilfully joyne with Luz, and make of both one corrupt name, Vlammaus. 2. Some thinke that there was here no City at this time, but that Luz was built long after, Calvin. But the text it selfe sheweth, that at this time there was a City, and that Ia|cob being overtaken of the night, lodged abroad in the field, Mercer. 3. Neither yet as some thinke, did Iacob lodge in the City, for the towne would have afforded him a softer pillow: and whereas Iacobs saith, that God appeared unto him at Luz, Gen. 48.3. he meaneth not the towne it selfe precisely, but compre|hendeth under that name, the field where he lodged, that belonged unto the City Luz.

QUEST. XVI. Luz and Bethel, whether one City or divers.

HE called the name of the place Bethel, &c. A question is here moved, whether Luz and Bethel were all one City, seeing that the border of Iosephs inheritance, Iosu. 16.2. is said to goe from Bethel to Luz: for the solution whereof: 1. It is not like that Luz and Bethel were two Cities at the first, which being neare together were joyned into one, and two principall parts of the same City retained the names of Luz and Bethel, sic Tostat. Lyran. 2. Neither were there two Bethels, one in the tribe of Ephraim, another of Benjamins lot, as Chimbi thinketh, and Genevens. in annot. Iosua 18.13. for Bethel was bordering onely upon Ephraim, but within the lot of Benjamin, Iosu. 16.2. Iosu. 18.21. 3. Neither was this Bethel as some thinke, belonging first to Ephraim, and then fell to Benjamins lot: for no such thing appeareth, but that originally it was allotted to Benjamin, Iosu. 18.22. 4. Nor yet need we to say with Pererius, that Bethel is taken two wayes, strictly, for the very place where God appeared to Iacob, excluding the City; and largely, as comprehending the City & all together. 5. But the truth is, that there were two Cities called by the name of Luz, one that ancient towne whose name was changed into Bethel, another afterward built by one that went into the land of the Hithites, which kept the name of Luz still, Iud. 1.26. and this is that Luz, spoken of in the place objected, Iosu. 16.2. Masius in 16. Ios. Iun. 6. This Bethel by the Prophet Osee is called Bethaven, 4.15. that is, the house of iniquity, because Ieroboam there set up his golden calfe, 1 King. 12. and not farre from Bethel was there a place called Bethaven, Iosua 7.2. which name, the other occasion concurring, was translated to Bethel, Perer.

QUEST. XVII. How Iacob voweth that the Lord shall be his God.

Vers. 20. If God will be with me, &c. 1. Iacob was farre off from conditioning with God, that he should no otherwise be his God, than if he performed these things. 2. Neither doth Iacob here utter his infirmity, as doubtfull of the performance of these things. 3. Nor yet doth he thus say, as though he thought the promise of God conditionall, that he would not otherwise be his God unlesse he performed these things, Perer. for God expresseth no condition in his promise. 4. Nor yet need we answer, that Ia/cob doth not vow the generall worship of God, whereunto he was bound by his profession, having relceived circumcision, but a speciall service, in consecrating that place to Gods service, and offering of tythes: or that it is lawfull for a man to tie himselfe by a new bond to performe that to God which he is other|wise bound to doe; as the Prophet David saith, Psal. 119.126. I have sworne and will performe it, that I will keepe thy righteous judgements: both these answers are true, though not pertinent to this place, ex Perer. 5. Wherefore Iacob doth not bring this forth as a condition, If God will be with me? this particle (im) is not here a conditionall, but a word of time, as it is taken, vers. 15. untill, if, that is, when I have performed, &c. so is it taken here, when God hath beene with me, and kept me in this journey, Iun^a Mercer. and the words following are not to be read, then the Lord shall be my God: but, when the Lord hath beene my God: so they are not parcell of the vow, which is complete in the 22. vers. but they are part of the realson of this vow, Rasi, Iun.

QUEST. XVIII. To whom Iacob voweth to pay the tenth.

Vers. 22. I Will give the tenth. 1. Some thinke that he payed the tenth to Semor Eber: but Sem died before Iacob was borne: and Eber also was dead many yeares before this, in the 19. yeare of Iacob, who is now supposed to have beene 77. yeare old. 2. Therefore this giving of tithe was nothing else but the consecrating of the tenth part of his goods to be bestowed in building of Altars, and in sacri|fices for the service of God: and such things as are devoted to religious uses, are truly said to be given unto God, sic Cajetan. Mercer. 3. Some Hebrewes referre this to the consecrating of Levi to the Priesthood: but (as Aben Ezra) not men, but cattell and beasts used to be tithed.

4. Places of Doctrine.

I. Doct. The ministry of Angels.

Vers. 12. THE Angell of God went up and downe. By this is expressed the ministry of the Angels, that are continually imployed for the good of the elect: they ascend to report our necessities, they descend to be ministers of Gods mercies; as the Apostle saith, Are they not all ministring spirits, sent forth to minister for their sakes that shall be heires of salvation? Heb. 1.14.

2. Doct. How Gods providence is seene in permitting evill to be done in the world.

Hereby also is set forth Gods providence that watcheth over all things; for the Lord standeth upon the top of this ladder, whereby is signified the administration and government of the world. Against which providence, whereas it is objected that many evill things are committed in the world, to the which the Lord is no way consenting; Thomas Aquine answereth, that although some defects are against the particular nature of things, yet they are for the good of the universall; and therefore as Augustine saith, Deus non sineret malum esse in operibus suis, nisi sciret benefacere etiam de malis: God would not suffer evill to be in his works, if he did not know how to turne evill into good. But it will be said, God ought to draw men against their will unto good. Dionysius answereth, Non est providentia divinae violare naturam, sed est cujusque naturae conservatrix: Gods providence doth not change or violate nature, but is the preserver of nature: leaving to things indued with reason to follow their owne will and inclination, Lib. de Divin. nominib. cap. 4 par. 4.

3. Doct. How God forsaketh not the elect finally.

Vers. 15. I Will not forsake thee, &c. Gods promises to his servants are so stable and firme in Christ, that they are sure finally not to be forsaken, as the Lord said to Iosua, I will never faile thee nor forsake thee, Heb. 13.4. Calvin.

4. Doct. Lawfull to vow.

Vers. 20. IF God will be with me, &c. By Iacobs vowing, both their error is condemned that take away the use of all vowes from Christians, and their superstition that vow not as they ought; Iacob, 1. directeth his vowes to God,* the papists vow unto Saints. 2. He voweth to testifie his thankfulness, they vow to merit. 3. He voweth such things as were in his power, as to pay tithes; they such things as are beyond their reach, as single life, where the gift is not. 4. Iacob voweth such things as God commanded, they vow things of their owne inventing, as to goe in pilgrimage, to fast with bread and water, to garnish Idols, and such like; concerning the which we may say with the Prophet, who required this at your hands? Isay 1.2. Calvin.

5. Doct. Signes called by the names of the things.

Vers. 22. This stone shall be the house of God. This stone was not Gods house, but a monument or signe of the place of Gods worship, for there Iacob to fulfill this vow, afterward at his returne built an Altar to God, Gen.35.7. Thus by a metonymie, that which is proper to the thing, is given to the signe, in which sense the bread in the Eucharist, is called the body of Christ, Marl.1.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. How the Angels are reporters of our prayers unto God, and yet no mediators.

Vers. 12. Loe the Angels of God ascended and descended upon it. Hence Pererius would gather, that the Angels descended from heaven to reveale unto us the counsels of God, and to execute his will, so their office is by ascending to report unto God our prayers, vowes, and necessities, in Gen.25. numer. 23.

We grant, that the Angels doe report unto God the affaires of the world, and the acts and gests of men, and so their supplications in generall: but this they doe as messengers, not as mediators. The Prophet Zachary sheweth a distinct office of the Angelicall spirits, and Jesus Christ, there called the Angell of the Lord: they returne this answer to Christ, We have gone thorow the world, and behold, all the world sitteth still, and is at rest. But the Angell of the Lord, Christ the Mediator of his Church, steppeth forth and prayeth, O Lord of hosts, how long wilt thou be unmercifull to Ierusalem! Zach. 1.12. So then, though the Angels be witnesses of our devotion, and beholders of our teares and plaints, they have no office of mediation, neither have we any warrant to pray unto them.

2. Confut. Against the Platonists, that make three kinds of providence.

Vers. 12. THere stood a ladder upon the earth, and the top reached to heaven. Gods providence then descen|deth from heaven to earth: contrary to the opinion of the Platonists, noted by Gregor. Nyssen. lib. 8. de provident. cap. 3. who make three kinds of providence, the first of God, in taking care onely for things celestiall and spirituall, and the generall causes of other things in the world: the second they a|tributed to the second ranke of gods, who provided for all things betweene the Moone and the earth: the third they yeelded to the spirits who governed the actions of men. But the Scripture teacheth us, that all things in heaven and earth are ruled by Gods providence, in so much that a sparrow cannot fall upon the ground without the will of God, Matth. 10.29. as the Prophet David also saith, Who is like unto the Lord our God, that hath his dwelling on high, who abaseth himselfe to behold things in the heaven, and the earth? Psal. 113.5, 6.

3. Confut. Iacobs ladder doth not signifie the monasticall profession.

*PEreri*us interpreteth this ladder out of a counterfeit peece of Bernard, to be the discipline of Monal|sticall life, and namely, the way and rule of Benets order, whereby the founder of that order S. Be|nedit went to heaven, numer.34. Contra. 1. First then it is requisite, if this ladder signifieth Monasticall discipline, that he which first saw it, should have beene a professed Monke: but I thinke they will not say that Iacob was a Monke: the most speciall part of which profession consisteth in the vow of single life. 2. Christ himselfe standeth upon the top of this ladder, to whom the way and ladder is directed: he then that climbeth this ladder must ascend by faith in Christ; but the Monks thinke to climbe up to heaven by their merits. 3. Iacob was a figure of Christ, upon whom the Angels of God should ascend and descend, Ioh.1.51. it is great presumption then to put Benet in Christs place, that Iacob should bee a figure of him. 4. This ladder sheweth the way that every true Israelite of Iacob should ascend by: but every true Israel|lite and Christian is not a Monke.

4. Confut. Philo confuted concerning the ascending and descending of soules.

PHilo understandeth the ayre to be this ladder: Basis terra, coelum caput; The earth is the foot of this lad|der, the heaven is the head or top: the Angels are the soules, Quas aer habet stellis pares, which the ayre is filled with, equall to the starres in number: some of these descend into the bodies, some ascend: Alia ad corpora recurrunt, Some returne to the bodies againe: thus Philo Platonizeth, Lib. de somniis. In this device of Philo three notable errorrs are discovered: 1. The ayre is not the seat or region of soules, but the spi|rits of the just are in heaven where Jesus Christ is, and the holy Angels, Heb. 12.22, 23, 24. 2. The soules had no being before their bodies, that they should descend into them as from another place: God formeth the spirit of man within him, Zachar. 12.1. 3. Neither doe the soules once separated from the bodies, re|turne any more to cohabit in earthly and mortall bodies; The spirit returneth to God that gave it, Ec|cles. 12.7.

5. Confut. Against the Helvidians.

Vers. 15. I Will not forsake thee till I have performed, &c. The Helvidians, because it is said that Ioseph knew not Mary •|ll she had brought forth her first-borne sonne, Matth. 1.25. would gather thereupon, that he knew her afterward: they may as well conclude here, that after God had performed to Iacob that which he promised, that he did forsake him then, Muscul.

6. Confut. Temples have no inherent holinesse, but in regard of the use.

Vers. 17. THis is no other but Gods house, &c. This proveth not that Temples and Churches are more holy places in themselves, which is the opinion of the Romanists. 1. Their Temples being polluted with idolatry, are prophane and unholy. 2. Though before Christs comming the Lord chose his speciall place where he would have sacrifices offered, and not in any place beside, and so some places were privileged with a legall kinde of sanctity, more than others: yet now since that Christ hath every where opened heaven to the prayers of the faithfull, that distinction remaineth not. 3. Even Bethel retained not an inherent holinesse, but in respect of the religious use: for after that it was by Ieroboam defiled with Idolatry, it was no more Bethel, the house of God, but Bethaven, the house of iniquity.

7. Confut. Against the anointing of Altars.

Vers. 18. HE powred oyle upon the top of it, &c. Hence Rabanus groundeth that superstitious use of anointing the Altar with oyle: Altare post aspersionem aquae Chrysmate ungitur ad imitationem Patriarchae Iacob; The Altar after the sprinkling of water is anointed with Chrysme, after the imitation of the Patriarche Iacob, Lib. de institut. Clericor. cap. 45. Contra. 1. The ceremonies of the law, which were figures and shadowes of things to come, are not meet ornaments for the Gospell, such were their washings, anointings, sacrifices, and other rites: they were shadowes of things to come, but the body is Christ, Coloss. 2.17. The body then being come, what need the shadow? 2. The same ointment that Christ was anointed with, his members also receive: but that was a spirituall unction, Luk. 4.18. The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me. Of this anointing the Apostle speaketh: You have an ointment from him that is holy, and ye have knowne all things, 1 Ioh. 2.20. 3. But if Iacobs anointing must be a patterne, why doe they also sprinkle water, which he did not? Iacob also used profane and common oyle, such as he carried for his journey; but their oyle must be hallowed first and consecrated: Iacob here maketh no Altar, but setteth up a pillar for a monument: why doe not they by the same example powre oyle upon their Crosses and Pillars in the high-way?

8. Confut. Bethel become Bethaven, and Rome Babel.

Vers. 19. HE called the name of that place Bethel. Yet afterward when it was prophaned by idolatry, it was called by the Prophets Bethaven, the house of iniquity: we need not therefore marvel if that Rome, sometime the Church of God, bee now become Babel, the fountaine of corrupt doctrine, the place and seat of Antichrist: they cannot shew such warrant for the consecration of Rome, as the Scripture speaketh for Bethel, which of the house of God was made an habitation of filthy Idols; and so is Rome, Muscul.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Observ. We must not amend one error by another.

Vers. 9. Then went Esau to Ishmael, &c. Esau in stead of correcting his former error, in taking him wives from the daughters of Canaan, committeth another, in matching into the stocke of Ishmael, that was also a stranger from the covenant: he thought he should please his father, though he did not thorowly reforme himselfe, if he came a little nearer: such is the reformation of hypocrites, they thinke they have done well if they can dawbe over their sinnes, and set some colour upon them by a pre|tended reformation: as Herod did, Who seemed to reverence Iohn, and when he heard him, hee did many things, and hea•d him gladly, Mark. 6.30. Mercer. Calvin.

2. Observ. Patience and labour to be endured for vertue.

Vers. 11. HE tooke of the stones of the place, and laid under his head. Iacob is set forth unto us as a sin|gular example of labour and patience: who both lay hard, and fared coursly by the way. Philo noteth hereupon, Non decet virtutis sectatorem vita delicata, &c. A delicate life becommeeh not a follower of vertue. This example serveth to reprove those who place their whole felicity in this life, in dainty fare, lying in soft beds, and other such delicacies: which was the happinesse of that rich glutton, Luk. 16. Beside, this example doth teach us, that if we have the like hard entertainment in the world, wee should comfort our selves by the example of Iacob, Calvin. So Saint Paul saith, I have learned, in what/soever state I am, therewith to be content: I can be abased, and I can abound, Phil. 3.12.

3. Observ. We must alwayes be going forward in our Christian course.

Vers. 12. THE Angels went up and downe. None of them were seene to stand still upon the ladder, but were in continuall motion, either ascending or descending: which teacheth us, that in our Christian profession we should be alway going forward: Qui non proficiunt, necessario deficiunt; They that goe not forward, goe backward: the Angels either ascend or descend, Perer. The Wise man saith, Hee that is slothfull in his worke, is even the brother of a great waster, Prov. 18.9. He that buildeth not up in Chri|stian profession, pulleth downe.

4. Observ. Reverent behaviour to be used in the Church of God.

Vers. 17. HE was afraid and said, how fearfull is this place? &c. Iacob perceiving that God was present, and that the place where he was was Gods house, because the Lord had there shewed him|selfe, he doth stirre up himselfe to a reverent feare, as being in the sight and presence of God: which his example doth teach us how we ought to behave our selves reverently and humbly in the Lords house: Bernard well saith, Terribilis plane lo•us, dignus omni reverentia, quem fideles inhabitant, quem angeli sancti frequentant, quem sua praesentia Dominus dignatur: A fearefull place indeed, and worthy of all reverence, where the faithfull inhabit, the Angels frequent, God himselfe vouchsafeth to be present: as the first Adam (saith he) was placed in Paradise to keep it: Ita secundus Adam versatur in Ecclesia sanctorum, ut operetur, &

custodiat; so the second Adam is conversant in the congregation of the Saints, to be working there, and watch|ing over them: Bernar. serm. 6. de dedication. The Prophet David saith, I will come into thine house in the multitude of thy mercies, and in thy feare will I worship toward thy holy temple: Psal. 5.7.

5. Observ. To be content with our estate.

Vers. 20. IF he will give me bread to eat, cloathes to put on, &c. Iacob requireth not any superfluous or un|necessary thing, but onely needfull and sufficient provision: like as the Prophet prayeth, Give me not poverty, nor riches, but feed me with food convenient, Pro. 30.8. We learne hereby to be con|tented with a little, and not to covet abundance: there is a saying, Cuiparum non est satis, nihil est satis: he that a little sufficeth not, nothing will suffice: the Apostle saith, Godlinesse is great riches, if a man be content with that he hath, 1 Tim. 6.6.

CHAP. XXIX.

1. The Argument and Contents.

IN this chapter, first is declared the entertainment of Iacob into Labans house: where wee have, 1. his communication with the shepheards, verse 1. to 9. 2. his salutation of Rachel, verse 9, to 13. 3. his manner of receiving into Labans house.

Secondly, Iacob covenanteth with Laban for Rachel, and serveth first seven yeares, then Leah is given for Rachel by Labans craft, after he serveth seven yeare more to enjoy Rachel, vers. 16. to 30.

Thirdly, the issue and fruit of Iacobs marriage is expressed, the barrennesse of Rachel, and the fruitfulness of Leah in bringing forth unto Iacob foure sonnes: and the cause hereof is shewed, because Leah was despised.

2. The divers readings.

v. 1. to Laban of Bathuel the Syrian, the brother of Rebeckah mother of Iacob and Esau. * S. the rest have not these words.

v. 8. we may not. B. G. we cannot. caet. iacol. to can. *

till all the shepherds be come together. S. all the flockes. caet.

and wee doe remove the stone. H. they doe remoue. caet. verse. 9. while they spake. H. while hee spake. caeter.

v. 13. Having heard the causes of his journey. H. He told Laban all these words or things. caeter.

v. 21. the daies of my service are fulfilled. C. my daies are fulfilled. caet.

v. 22. great troupes of friends being called together. H. he called together all the men of the place. caeter.

v. 27. fulfill seven yeares for her. G. fulfill or passe over a weeke for her. caeter. so likewise, v. 28. fulfill a weeke of daies of this marriage. H.

v. 30. obtaining the desired marriage, he preferred the love of the second before the first. H. he went into Rachel, and loved Rachel more than Leah. caet.

v. 35. he called. T. she called. caeter.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull questions. *

QUEST. I. Of the three flockes, and the stone laid upon the wels mouth.

Vers. 2. THree flocks of sheepe lay there, &c. there was a great stone upon the wels mouth, &c. 1. I will omit the allegories that are here devised: the Hebrewes by the three flocks, understand the people, Levites, and Priests, three orders in Israel: others by the stone would have signified the doctrine of the Pharises, which was an impediment to the knowledge of the law. 2. They used to lay a great stone upon the wels mouth, not only to preserue men from danger by falling into it, but to keepe the water, that it might not be troubled or corrupted: for it seemeth, there was great scarcity of water in that country, Mercer.

QUEST. II. Of Rachels keeping her fathers sheepe.

Vers. 9. Rachel came with her fathers sheepe. 1. So was it the fashion of that country, to set their daughters to keepe their sheepe: as the seven daughters of Reuel Moses father in law did, Exod. 2.16. Rachel seemeth thereof to have her name, which signifieth a sheepe, Muscul. 2. Rachel was thus imployed, and Leah stayd at home, for that shee was the elder, and now marriageable, or because of her tender eyes, which might not endure the sunne, Mercer.

QUEST. III. Whether Iacob rolled away the stone alone.

Vers. 10. HE rolled away the stone: 1. Some thinke, that he with the rest did remove this stone, In. 2. But it is rather like that Iacob did it alone, being now a man of perfect strength, seventy seven yeares of age, whereas the other might be youths, and some maidens: as also Iacob calsting affection to Rachel might put forth his strength to shew her pleasure, and to insinuate himselfe, Mercer.

QUEST. IV. Of divers kinds of kissing and whether it were lightnesse in Iacob to kisse Rachel.

Vers. 11. ANd Iacob kissed Rachel, &c. 1. We reade of divers kinds of kisses: 1. one an unchaste kisse, such as harlots use, Prov. 7.13. 2. a modest kisse used among kindred, as Isaack kissed Ia|cob, Gen. 27. Iacob here kisseth Rachel. 3. a kisse of courtesie, as they used to salute strangers, and to entertaine them into their house, Luk. 7.45. Our Saviour saith to the Pharisee, thou gavest me no kisse. This kinde of kissing was much used among the Romanes, who used one to kisse another in the way, insomuch, that Tyberius Caesar, as Suetonius writeth, did forbid it by a publike edict. 4. They used also among the Romanes a kisse of triall, the kinsfolks used to kisse the women, to see if they had drunke any wine, which was not lawfull amongst them: as Plinie maketh mention of Egnatius Mecennius, that killed his wife for drinking of wine out of a tun, and yet he was by Romulus acquitted of the murder, lib. 14. cap. 14. 5. There was a fraudulent kisse, such as Iudas gave that betrayed Christ. 6. There was an holy kisse, which the Christians did use one to give to another in their holy assemblies, in token of love, before they received the sacrament: whereof Saint Paul speaketh: Greet one another with an holy kisse, 2. Corinth. 13▪ 12. ex Perer.

2. Iosephus misreporteth this story, that Rachel wept and fell upon Iacobs necke, whereas it was Ia|cob, lib. 1. antiquit. 3. Lest it might be thought a light part in Iacob to kisse a woman unknowne, I agree unto Aben Ezra, that here we must admit hysteron proteron, for first Iacob told Rachel who he was, as it followeth in the next verse, before he kissed her, Mercer. 4. Augustine allegorizeth this fact of Iacob▪ that as he first watered Rachels flocke before he kissed her, sic nisi per aquam baptismi, &c. so unlesse by baptisme the people of God obtaine remission of sins, osculum accipere a Christo, 1. pacem ejus habere non meretur, they cannot obtaine a kisse from Christ, that is, injoy his peace, Aug. serm. 80. de temp.

QUEST. V. Why Iacob wept.

Vers. 11. Lift up his voyce and wept, &c. Iacob weepeth for joy that he had so happily continued so long and painfull a journey,* not as Esau wept for grieffe, Genes. 27.2. The Hebrewes thinke that he wept, because he had no giftes to bestow upon Rachel, as Eliezer did upon Rebecca, Gen. 24. they further imagine, that Iacob came forth accompanied with servants, camels, and gifts, but that he was robbed of all be Eliphaz Esaus eldest sonne by the way, who yet spared his life: but these are tales. It is like that Rebecca sent Iacob away privily because of Esau, lest he should have lyen in waite for him. 3. So likewise they imagine that Laban came forth hastily to meet

Jacob, thinking that he had come as richly furnished as Eleezer, whom Abraham sent: and seeing no companie, at the last he kissed him, to trie if he had any pearles in his mouth: and finding nothing, that thereupon he saith, thou art my bone and my flesh, that he had no other cause now to give him entertainment, but that he was his kinsman.

QUEST. VI. Whether Leah were bleare-eyed.

Vers. 17. LEah was tender eyed. 1. Not faire eyed, as Oukel's translateth, as though Leah had nothing comely but her eye, but Rachel was all comely. 2. Not yet was she lippis oculis, bleare-eyed, as the Latine translateth, and Tostatus expoundeth, fluebat crassus humor quotidie ex oculis, ut esset lippus, 1. similis lachrimanti, that there issued out of her eyes continually a thick humor, so that she was bleare-eyed, as if she continually wept: the word is raccoth, tender: her eyes seemed to have beene dull and heavy, which made her pore-blinde, or to looke a squint, which is a great deformity in a woman. 3. This her infir|mity came not by continuall weeping, as the Hebrewes imagine, lest she should have beene given to Esau to wife: for it is like, that they had not yet heard so much as of the name of Esau: but this weake|nesse of her sight might proceed from her weake constitution, whose name may seeme to have beene derived of laah, which is to wax faint, or feeble, Mercer.

QUEST. VII. Why Jacob served seven yeares for Rachel.

Vers. 18. I will serve thee seven yeares for Rachel thy younger daughter, &c. 1. It was the use in these countries, as afterward among the Grecians and Romanes, for the husband to endowe his wife, and to give unto her or her parents and friendes some gifts. Among the Germans the espousals were not good if the husband gave not the wife her dowrie, Tacit. de morib.

German. the Indilans did use for a paire of oxen to buy their wives, Strab. lib. 15.* the Massilians were not to give by way of dowry above 100 peeces of gold: the Cretensians halfe their goods: the ancient French gave as much as they received: the Saxons gave unto their wives parents, 300. shillings, Perer. 2. The like custome was in Israel, David espoused his wife for 100. foreskins of the Philistims, 2. Sam. 3.14. the Prophet Osee bought his wife for 15. peeces of silver, and an homer of barley, &c. c. 3.2. Jacob, because he had nothing to give, offered his service. 3. He himselfe setteth downe the time of 7. yeares, not as the Hebrewes think, because Rachel was now but 5. yeare old, and therefore he would stay till she were marriageable: it is not like, that a maiden of 5. yeare old could keep her fathers sheep: but Jacob knowing Labans covetous mind, doth covenant for a reasonable time of service, Mercer. 4. Laban dealeth subtilly with Jacob, not simply promising Rachel, but saying it is better, * &c. for he had even now that crafty fetch to marry Leah first. 5. The 7. yeares seemed but a few daies to Jacob, not during the time of his service, because he comforted himselfe with the hope of his love, sic Calvin. they seemed not long in his judgement, but in his affection, Perer. but after the time was over, Mercer. 6. Rupertus hath here a fit allegorie, making Jacob a type of Christ, who came in the forme of a servant, and indured much travaile and labour in the daies of his flesh, to marry himselfe to Rachel of the Gentiles, yet first offering himselfe to Leah the Synagogue of the Iewes, ex Perer.

QUEST. VIII. Whether Jacobs love toward Rachel were inordinate.

Vers. 18 Jacob loved Rachel. 1. He loved her because shee was beautifull and comely: for of the three corporall blessings, strength, health, beauty, this hath the preheminance: Plato called it the principality of nature, Socrates, a tyranny not long, Aristotle, a greater commendation than all Epistles. 2. Jacob though he might herein shew some infirmity, he simply offended not, for to desire beauty to be a provocation of lust, is unlawfull: but to affect it to this end, for more loving society and procreation of children, and where it is accompanied with vertue, all which here concurred in Rachel,^{*} is excusable: for as meat pleaseth better in a cleane dish, so vertue in comely persons is more amiable, Hugo. and some actions there are that without some delight cannot be so well affected: as eating of meats, learning of arts such is the matrimoniall society, Augustine: yea holy men may faile in some circumstances of vertuous actions, as in the zeale of justice, in the workes of charity, in the love of their spouses, which defects are excused by the lawfulnessse of the actions, and the exercise of other vertues, Perer. ex Thom. Anglic.

QUEST. IX. How Jacobs terme was ended.

Vers. 21. GIve me my wife, &c. for my terme is ended. 1. Not which Rebeckah his mother did set him, neither speaketh he of the terme of his owne yeares, that by reason of his age, he could stay no longer, to have any children, Iun. but he meaneth his seven yeares of service were expired. 2. It is therefore unlike, that in the beginning of the seven yeares this was done, as R. Levi▪ or before the seven yeares compleat, as Ramban: for Laban being an hard man, would remit nothing of the time agreed upon.

QUEST. X. Of marriage feasts, and why Laban made a feast.

Vers. 22. Laban gathered together all the men of the place, &c. 1. Not all, but many of the neighbours were called together: for thus in Scripture often generall speeches are restrained: Genes. 41.57. all countries came to Egypt to buy corne, that is, very many. 2. This company was called together, not to advise with Laban, how to deceive Iacob, as some Hebrewes thinke; for Laban was crafty enough of him|selfe, Mercer. but that Iacob before so many witnesses should not goe back from that marriage, where|in he should be deceived, Calvin. 3. This solemnitie of marriage though it be not of the substance there|of, yet for more honesty and decency▪ and for the ratifying of marriage, and to avoyd secret contracts, it is very fit to be used, Tostatus. 4. It was the laudable manner of those times, to make marriage feasts, as appeareth both in the old and new testament: Iud 14.10. Sampson made a feast at his marriage; our Saviour vouchsafed to be present at the marriage feast, Iohn 2. and this custome may very well be re|tained so it be used with moderation, that the concourse of unruly company be prevented▪ and excesse avoyded; therefore Plato prescribeth at marriage feasts, not above five friends of each side▪^{*} and as many kinsfolkes to be called together, but to be drunken with wine he counteth it maxime alienum in nuptiis, to be least of all beseeming marriage, Perer.

QUEST. XI. Of Labans fraud in suborning Leah.

Vers. 33. When the even was come, he tooke Leah, &c. 1. Their manner was to bring the spouse home at night, and covered with a veile, for modesty and shamefastnesse▪ which was the cause that Iacob knew not Leah at his first going in unto her; and it is like that she was silent all night, lest she should have beene discerned, and her silence he imputed to her modesty; some thinke that Ia|cob came not neare her, but continued all night in prayer, but it is unlike,^{*} seeing that Iacob had longed se|ven years for this marriage. 2. Leah cannot be here excused, who was in fault, yet drawn into it by her fa|thers counsell, and desirous also herselfe to be married to such a worthy man, Perer. and she might thinke that Iacob and her father were agreed. 3. But Laban was in the greatest fault, and therefore Iacob doth expostulate with him. 1. He is unjust of his promise in not giving Rachel betroathed to Iacob. 2. Hee dissembleth, excusing himselfe by the custome. 3. He offereth wrong to his daughter, to cause her to commit adultery. 4. And to Iacob, in thrusting upon him a woman whom hee desired not. 5. Though there were such a custome, he should have stood upon it in time, when Rachel was espoused: now the custome could not serve to violate the law of nature, to cause Iacob to commit adultery, being betroa|thed already to another, Perer.

QUEST. XII. Whether Iacob fulfilled seven daies or yeares before Rachel was given him.

Vers. 27. FVlfill seven for her. 1. Some understand this of seven yeares, for the word Shebang is sometime taken for seven daies, sometime for seven yeares, Mercer. Vatab. Genevous. but this is not like, for Rachel was given to Iacob first, and then he served seven yeares for Rachel, but if it should be taken for seven yeares, then Iacob should not have had his wife till these seven were fulfilled, vers. 28. 2. But it is better understood of daies, as Hierome expoundeth it: ut septem dies pro nuptiis prioris sororis expleat, that he fulfilled seven daies for the marriage of the elder sister: Hieron. tradition. in Genes. for it was the manner to keepe the marriage feast 7. dayes, Iud. 14.15.17. Augustine yeeldeth this reason, valde iniquum fuisset Iacob fallaciter deceptum differre alios septem annos: it had beene most unjust to deferre Iacob so craftily deceived seven yeares longer, qu. 89. in Genes.

QUEST. XIII. Iacobs multiplicity of marriage, no argument of his intemperance.

Vers. 29. Laban also gave Rachel his daughter Bilhah, &c. Laban gave unto both his daughters handmaids, both to attend and wait upon them, as also to be a solace and comfort unto them in a strange country whither they were to goe, Perer. 2. These afterward were joyned unto Iacob for procreation, beside either Laban or Iacobs intention: and in that Iacob had two wives and two concubines, it argueth not his intemperancie. 1. Because he intended onely to marry Rachel, & praeter animi voluntatem Leam accidisse, and that Lea was given unto him beside his minde. 2. Iacob also in this multiplicitie of marriage, chiefly propounded to himselfe the procreation and multiplying of his seed. 3. He took his maids, not of his owne minde, sed ut conjugem placaret, but to please his wives, that they might have children by them. 4. And againe it must be considered, tunc temporis non datam fuisse legem, qua multiplices nuptias prohiberet, that there was at that time no law which did forbid multiplicity of marriage, sic Theodoret. qu. 84. in Gen. ex citat. Perer.

QUEST. XIV. At what time Leahs foure eldest children were borne.

Vers. 34. His name was called Levi, 35. shee called his name Iehudah. 1. The Hebrewes fable, that Michael called from heaven to Levi,^{*} and gave him that name, and endued him with gifts fit for the Priesthood: and further, Leah now having borne three children, saith her husband should be joyned unto her, because she had borne her part of the twelve sons, which she as a prophetesse did foresee should be borne unto Iacob, of his two wives and two handmaids: but these are fabulous and vaine conjectures: they also in the name Iehudah, doe include Iehovah, the letter Daleth being added in the fourth place, because he was the fourth son: but these light collections are not to be stood upon. 2. Some think that these children began to be borne in the beginning of the first seven yeares, as R. Levi: but the text overthroweth that conceit, for Iacob went not into Lea, till he had ended his terme of seven yeares, vers. 21. Some thinke that these and the rest of the children were borne to Iacob in the last seven yeares, and the six yeares beside of Iacobsservice: but the story is otherwise, that all Iacobs children were borne before he entred into a new covenant to stay still with Laban, his two seven yeares being expired, Genes. 0.25. But it is more probable, that all Iacobs children, only Benjamin excepted, that was borne in the land of Canaan, that is, eleven sonnes and one daughter, were brought forth in the compasse of the last seven yeares: for it is not necessary to assigne their birth successively, one to be borne after another, but that their mothers might be with childe at once: and so it is not improbable, that foure women in seven yeares might bring forth 11. or 12. children, Mercer.

4. Places of doctrine.

1. Doct. God directeth even the least actions of his servants.

Vers. 1. Iacob lift up his feet: that is, he went cheerefully and willingly: and in that mention is made of so small an action, as the lifting up of his feet, we learne, that even the least and ordinarie actions of the faithfull are directed by the spirit of God, and guided by his providence, Mercer: as our Saviour taketh knowledge of Nathaniels sitting under the figge tree, Ioh. 1.48. so the Apostle saith, that all things worke together for the best, to them that love God, Rom. 8.28.

2. Doct. Men may hold the truth in generall, and yet faile in particular.

Vers. 15. SHouldest thou serve me for nought? Laban here speaketh reason, and seemeth to know what is just and right, but afterward he failed, and recompenced Iacob but meanely for his faithfull service: as Iacob complaineth, Thou hast changed my wages ten times, Gen. 31.41. Thus we see, that carnal men may hold generall principles a right, but when it commeth to their owne particular, then they are blinded with selfe-love, Calvin. So dealt Herod with Iohn Baptist: he did acknowledge him to be a just and holy man, yet to please his wives daughter, commanded him to be beheaded.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Custome not to be pretended where greater enormities are admitted.

Vers. 26. IT is not the manner of this place, to give the younger before the elder. He pretendeth a custome in the lesse matter, in the meane time he transgresseth the custome and all good order in a thing of greater importance, in thrusting upon a man in the night one sister for another: thus after the like manner the Romanists object the custome of the Church against the marriage of Ministers, whom they call Priests; and in the meane time they breake all good order, while for want of the due remedie, fornication and uncleane lust is suffered to be practised amongst them, Muscul.

2. Confut. Iacobs polygamie and marriage of two sisters, not justifiable.

Vers. 30. SO entred he into Rachel also. This multiplicity of wives which is called polygamie, is diversly excused. 1. Augustine saith, Nulla lege prohibebatur, it was forbidden by no law: quan/d^o mos erat, crimen non erat: It was no fault, when the custome was so: as in times past it was a shame for the Romans to have talares tunicas, side garments, but now every one of honest sort doth weare them, Aug. lib. 22. cont. Faust c. 47.

Contra. 1. Though there were no written law in those times, yet their owne conscience grounded upon the light of nature, and the faithfull tradition of the fathers, might have discerned it to be a fault: seeing that God in the beginning for one Adam made but one Eve, and Lamech of the wicked race is the first found in Scripture to have had two wives. 2. And though custome may be pretended for many wives, yet to marry two sisters there was no such custome, Mercer. 3. The example of long garments is nothing like: for it is a thing indifferent, which may be thought comely or uncomely, as time and place doth vary: but that which is simply unlawfull, and against the first institution, as polygamie is, cannot be borne out by any custome.

2. Some say that polygamie is after a sort against nature, yet so as it may be dispensed with, as it is like after the flood, to Noah this indulgence was given, Perer. in 29. Gen. numer. 31.

Contra. 1. If Noah had beene dispensed with for many wives, then had there beene greatest cause to have used that liberty: and if polygamie for propagation were tolerable, God might have preserved in the arke more than for every man one woman. 2. Against a written law and institution, as this is of having one wife, Gen. 2.24. A man shall leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife, not wives; a dispensation unwritten cannot be admitted.

3. Divers allegories are made of Iacobs two wives: Augustine by Leah, figureth the people of the Iewes, by Rachel the Gentiles. Rupertus saith contrary, that Rachel was a type of the Iewes, Leah of the Gentiles, August. ser. 80. de tempor. Rup. in Gen. 29. Gregorie by Leah interpreteth the active life, by Rachel the contemplative, Homil. 14. in Ezech. ex Perer.

Contra. 1. By the diversitie of these allegories it appeareth, they are mens collections, and humane devices, and therefore cannot excuse the transgression of a divine ordinance. 2. And though these allegories might be warranted by the Scripture, yet thereby is not the fact justified: Christs comming for the suddenesse thereof in Scripture is compared to the comming of a theefe; yet I trust thereby is not a theeves sudden approaching approved. 3. This then is the resolution of this question: 1. that Iacob shewed his infirmity in this not double, but quadruple marriage, yea and the same incestuous in the marriage of two sisters. 2. yet Labans fault was greater than Iacobs, who by his craft induced him unto it. 3. God in his deepe providence used this oversight of Iacob, as a meanes greatly to increase and multiply his seed. 4. Iacob and the rest of the Patriarkes, in their manners and generall example of life, * but not in some particular acts, such as this is, are to be imitated, Mercer.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Observ. Education of children in labour.

Vers. 9. Rachel came with her fathers sheepe, for she kept them. Thus in that simple age did they bring up their children, not idly and wantonly, but in labour and houshold workes: Laban had many servants beside in his house, yet he setteth this faire damzell to keepe his sheepe: though this be not an example now to men of good sort and place, thus to imploy their daughters, for the particular; yet they should follow it so far to provide that their children bee industriously brought up, and not to give them the reines of licentious liberty. Thus we reade, that Iames and Iohn were with their father Zebedeus in a ship mending their nets, Matth. 4.25. hee trained them up in the workes of his owne vocation.

2. Observ. Service of kinsmen.

Vers. 15. Though thou be my brother, shouldest thou serve me for nought? Laban was willing to detain Iacob still, because he was a faithfull servant: which is a rare thing in kinsmen nowadaies, who thinke they may by authoritie helpe to consume their masters substance, if they bee of kinne unto him: while in the meane time they doe but loyter in their businesse, Luther. But Saint Paul giveth a rule for all servants, whether allied to their masters or not, that they should be obedient unto them in singlenesse of heart, Eph. 6.5.

3. Observ. Iacobs continent behaviour.

Vers. 20. Iacob served seven yeares for Rachel. 1. Iacobs singular continencie herein appeareth, that notwithstanding Rachel were continually in his sight, yet before the time came he governed his affection toward her: having the feare of God before his eyes, and being exercised in continuall labour with frugall diet, which might be a meanes to containe him in his chaste course, Perer. An example it may be to fellow-servants, to take heed of dalliance and unchaste behaviour.

4. Observ. Neglect of wife or husband, in scripture is counted hatred.

Vers. 31. When the Lord saw that Leah was hated or despised, &c. Yet was she not simply halted, for Iacob performed unto her matrimoniall duties, but lesse respected than Rachel▪ thus the Scripture counteth the neglect of wife or husband hatred: It is not then enough, not to breake forth into capitall hatred, but they must one be heartily affected to another, Calvin. Husbands love your wives, as Christ loved his Church, and gave himselfe for it▪ Ephes. 5.25.

5. Observ. God crosseth mens preposterous affections.

Vers. 31. But Rachel was barren. Thus the Lord useth to chastise and correct the preposterous affectiōns of his servants: as Iacobs love with Rachels barrennesse: as God did qualifie Jonas joy in delighting too much in the shadow of his gourd, by causing it to wither.

6. Observ. Wives must seeke to please their husbands.

Vers. 32. Now my husband will love me: Leah desireth nothing more than to please her husband, and to use all meanes to procure his love: so should wives seeke to content their husbands, and to forbear all things that might grieve them, Calvin. Therefore Saint Peter especially commendeth in women a meeke and quiet spirit, 1 Pet. 3.4.

7. Observ. As Gods blessings are multiplied, so our praises of him should increase.

Vers. 35. Now will I praise the Lord: She had praised the Lord before, at the birth of Ruben, saying, The Lord hath looked upon my tribulation: and of Simeon, The Lord hath heard that I was hated: but now upon the occasion of a new benefit, she praiseth him againe: which teacheth us, that as Gods mercies are multiplied toward us, so we should increase and goe forward in giving of thanks: as the Prophet saith, *Sing unto the Lord a new song, Isay*42.10. Calvin.

CHAP. XXX.

1. The Argument and Contents.

FIrst, in this chapter Moses sheweth how Iacob was increased with eight children, partly by his wives maids, partly by his wives: by Rachels maid two, vers. 4. to 8. by Leahs two, vers. 9. to 14. then by his wives, first by Leah three, and the occasion expressed, shee agreed with Rachel for her sonnes mandrakes, vers. 14. to 21. then by Rachel one, vers. 2•.

Secondly, how Iacob is increased in substance: where Iacob entreth into a new covenant with Laban, to have all the party-coloured and spotted sheepe for his walges, to vers. 35. then Iacobs device is expressed, how the strongest sheepe became spotted, vers. 36. lastly, the good successe that Iacob had in this devi•e, vers. 43.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Whether Rachel envied her sister.

Vers. 1. Rachel envied her sister. 1. Some thinke that this was a kind of zeale, rather than envie, she grieved rather at her owne infecundity or barrennesse, than that her sister was fruitfull, Perer. 2. But the text is evident, that shee envied her sister: shee was offended, that her sister was fruitfull and she barren. Neither is there any inconvenience to yeeld to those holy women their infirmities, they were not Angels, Merc. chavah, signifieth both to envie, and strive with emulation or zeale.

QUEST. II. Of Rachels impatient and immoderate desire of children.

Glve me children or else I die. 1. She saith not so, as though Iacob of purpose had restrained his naturall force, as R. Levi. 2. Neither is it her meaning that Iacob should by his prayer obtaine children for her, as Isaack had done for Rebecca, for then Iacob would not have beene angry with her. 3. Neither did she thus say, as though she did not know that God was the giver of children, which she confesseth, vers. 6. God hath given sentence on my side. 4. But thus in her womanly heat she breaketh forth, as though the fault was in her husband, seeing she should otherwise die, either for grieffe, or that she might as good be dead, as beare no children, Mercer. and that her name by this meanes should die with her, Perer. 5. Three reasons made her so desirous of children. 1. Her envy for her sisters happinesse. 2. That she might be the more deare to her husband. 3. Because of the promised seed. Perer.

QUEST. III. Of the causes of barrennesse.

Vers. 2. Iacob was angry and said, Am I in Gods stead, &c. 1. There are naturall causes of sterility or barrennes: either some originall defects in the birth, as some are borne unapt for generation, or else it may come by diseases, sometime the constitution of the body is an impediment, as in fat bodies, where nature is turned into the nutriment of the body: Aristot. lib. 2. de generat. animal. c. 2. 2. There is a supernaturall cause of barrennesse, when it pleaseth God to restraints the wombe, as in the women of Abimelecks house, Genes. 20.18. Foure keyes to open and shut are in Gods hand, which the Lord hath not committed to any other, either Angell or Seraphim: the key of raine, Deuter. 28.12. The Lord shall open his good treasure, the heaven to give raine: the key of food, Psal. 104.28. Thou openest thy hand and they are filled: the key of the womb, the key of the grave, when the dead shall be raised: Perer. ex Tharg. Hierosolym. 3. Plato himselfe confesseth, that procreation was the gift of God: ^{*}Quamvis in mortali animalante fiat, restamen divina est, & pregnatio & genitura ab immortalib. est: Generation, though it be done in a mortall creature, yet it is a divine thing procured by an immortal power: Plat. in Symp.

QUEST. IV. In what sense Rachel saith, she shall beare upon my knees.

Vers. 3. Shee shall beare upon my knees. 1. Not as though Rachel should be her midwife or nurse, as Onkel's. 2. Or that by her example Rachel should the sooner conceive, as the Hebrewes. 3. But that as it followeth, Rachel might have children by her maid, for the children of the bondmaids were accounted as the dames: her meaning is, that she might dandle them upon her knees, and play with them as mothers doe with their children: so is this phrase taken, Isay 66.12. them shall ye sucke, ye shall be borne upon her sides, and be joyfull upon her knees. 4. Rupertus doth fitly allegorize this saying of Rachel, lib. 7. comment. in Genes. 36. as they which Bilha brought forth were borne upon Rachels knees: so qui per pr•dicationem invidentis au•ivit verbum, teneat in Catholica ecclesia verae perfectionem fidei, & ita nihil differet à legitimis fil•s: so he that heard the word by the preaching of envious teacher•, holding the true faith in the Catholike Church, may differ nothing from the lawfull children of the Church, as the sonnes of Iacob shandaids received their inheritance, and had their l•t▪ amongst their brethren.

QUEST. IV. Whether Ruben brought unto his mother mandrakes.

Vers. 14. Glue me of thy sonnes mandrakes, &c. 1. It is most like that they were rather pleasant and sweet flowers, where with they used to strew their husbands bed, than that he•be which is called mandrakes, for these reasons: 1. Ruben was now but a child of 5. or 6. yeares old, and not above, (for he was borne in the beginning of the 7. last yeares) and therefore had no discretion to make choice of flowers for their vertue, but for their colour or smell. 2. It was now wheat harvest, in the spring time, which in those countries was in the beginning of May, when the Mandrake apples are not ripe: for so the Septuagint read, Mandrake apples. 3. The Mandrakes have a strong smell, which the Arabians call Iabrochin of the ranke savour of goats: whereas these herbs called dudaim are commended for their sweet smell, Can. 7.13. The mandrakes have given a smell, and in our gates are all sweet things, Iun.

*2. Whereas Augustine saith of the mandrakes, Rem comperi pulehram, & suaveolentem, sapore in sipido: I found them to be faire in shew, sweet in smell, vnsavory in taste, lib. 22. com. Faust. c. 56. he may speake of that kind of mandrakes, which grew in those hot countries in Africa, which might have a more fresh smell: but otherwise concerning the mandrakes knowne to us, Plinie a diligent searcher of the nature of herbes saith, Odor ejus gravis, sed radicis & mals gravi•r, &c. sic noxi•vires, gravedinem afferunt ipso •lfactu: The smell is very strong, specially of the root and apple: the force thereof •ery hur•full: the very smell bringeth heavinesse, Plin. lib. 25. c. 13. Levinus Lemnius confirmeth this by experience, that by laying of a mandrake apple in his studie, he became so drousie, that he could not shake it off till the apple was relmoved, lib. de herb.

*3. Epiphanius thinketh that the mandrake inciteth and provoketh either man or woman to lust: as it is held that they have vertue to cause women to conceive: and that Rachel desired them for that cause. 1. But Augustine refuseth this reason, because Rachel notwithstanding her mandrakes, conceived not. 2. Neither would Leah, having now ceased to beare, have given them away if they had any such vertue, Mercer. 3. Galen saith, that Mandragoras is cold in the third degree, lib. 7. simplicium Medieament, and therefore it is unapt for conception. 4. Mathiolus therefore saith it is a fable, that the root of Mandrakes representeth the shape of a man, and is good to make women to conceive, and thinketh that such roots, bearing such a shape, are made by art of couseners that goe about to deceive, ex Perer.

*4. Concerning the fashion and kinde of this herbe, R. David saith, that there are two sorts of them, the white is the male, the blacke the female: in them both three parts are most notable, the leaves, fruit, and root: Dioscorides saith, that the leaves of the female are somewhat lesse than lettuce leaves, greene and of a strong smell: the leaves of the male are bigger, and of a white colour: the apple of the female as big as an hasle nut, like to fruit of the service tree, of wan colour, of the male the apples are as bigge againe, of a saffron colour: the root is twofold, sometimes threefold, winding one within ano|ther, blacke without, white within, Diosc•r. lib. 4. c.

61. Pythagoras called it anthropomorphon, not because it perfectly representeth a mans shape, but hath some semblance of the trunk of a mans body without armes, Mathiolus.

*5. The properties of the Mandragoras are these: 1. By reason of the coldnesse thereof, it casteth them into a dead sleepe that eat or smell thereof: and therefore Physitians use it, when they cut or seare, to stupifie the sense. 2. If it be taken in the weight of a dram, it depriveth of the use of reason, Dioscor. 3. It is drunke against the venome of serpents, Plin. lib. 25. c. 23. 4. The seed thereof is good to purge the place of conception, and to stay the immoderate flux of the monethly course: and therefore it may per accidens helpe toward conception, especially in fervent climates and hot countries, Perer. ex Avicenna. Lemnio.

6. Some thinke then that these flowers were mandrakes, which is not like, as is shewed before; some take them to be lilies, as Oleaster; some for violets, as Onkelos: some for enchanted or love-flowers, but Rachel would not use any such: it is uncertaine what flowers they were, Mercer: it is more probable that they were amabiles flores, amiable and lovely flowers both for smell and sight, as Iunius, and the word dudaim well answereth thereto, being derived of dodh, beloved.

QUEST. V. Whether Iacobs wives gave the children their names.

Vers. 20. Shee called his name Zebulun. 1. Some thinke that Iacob gave the names and not his wives, Iun. Genes. 29.35. 2. Some that Iacob knowing his wives to have the gift of prophecie, as may appeare by the event, that answered to these names, in the severall blessings given unto them, Genes. 49. did suffer his wives to give them names. 3. But it is most like that Iacob consented with them in the imposing of these names, Mercer.

QUEST. VI. Of Dinah, whence she was so named, and when borne.

Vers. 21. After that she bare a daughter, &c. 1. Some thinke that Iacob had other daughters beside Dinah, but that is not like, seeing no mention is made but onely of Dinah, Calvin. 2. This name signifieth judgement or contention, which name might be given to Dinah, because of that contention which fell out with the Sichemites by reason of her, Mercer. 3. But whether this Dinah were Iacobs wife is uncertaine, and whereas the Hebrewes imagine, that this Dinah and Zebulun were borne at once, * and that Dinah in her mothers wombe was a male, but at the prayer of Leah was made a female, who pittied her sister Rachel, which as yet had borne no childe at all, lest she should have beene despised:

these are but idle and fabulous fansies, wherein these blinde Rabbines are so much exercised. 4. This Dinah was borne next before Ioseph: whom some affirme to have beene borne before Gad, Asser, Issachar, Zebulun, Dinah: But the course of the story will not beare it, for betweene Ioseph and Benjamin, Iacob had not any of his children borne.

QUEST. VII. Of the time of Iosephs birth and age.

Vers. 25. As soone as Rachel had borne Ioseph, &c. 1. Hence it is evident, that Ioseph was borne in the end of Iacobs 14. yeares service, for immediately upon the birth of Ioseph, Iacob consulted with Laban about his departure; but after this Iacob covenanteth to serve six yeares longer for his sheep, Gen. 31.41. these 14. yeares before the birth of Ioseph so me would have to prefigure those 14. yeares which Ioseph indured in Egypt, before he was exalted: for he was sixteen yeare old when he was sold into Egypt, & 30. yeares old when he stood before Pharao, Mercer. 2. Upon this account of Iosephs age, it further is collected, that Ioseph was 39. when Iacob was

130. for Ioseph was 30. when he came before Pharao, Gen. 41.46. then passed seven yeares of plenty, and two yeares of dearth, Genes. 45.11. when Iacob came downe into Egypt, who was then 130. yeares old, Genes. 47.9. If Iacob were 130. at Iosephs 49. then when Ioseph was borne, Iacob was 91. then 14. yeare before that, when Iacob went downe into Mesopotamia, he must be 77. and 7. yeares after, when he married his wives, he was 84. thirteene yeares after that when he had served 7. yeares more for his wives, and six for his sheepe, he was 97. yeares old, Perer.

QUEST. VIII. Laban whether he divined of Iacob.

Vers. 27. I Have found by experience. 1. The word is nachash, which the Septuagint translate, I have conjectured, o••nisamen, as Augures use to doe, and this kinde of conjecture was made by serpents: nachsha with double cametz, is a serpent, with double patach, it signifieth the conjecture made by serpents. 2. But this word also signifieth to know or learne by experience, as it is used, Gen. 45.5. Ioseph by his drinking cup, found in the mouth of Benjamins sacke, had experience of them, as his steward saith▪ 3. Therefore Theodorets observation is here unnecessary, that Moses setteth downe, verba impiorum, the words of the wicked, as they spake them, as here Labans divination, * as though he had divined by his idols. 4. As also hee giveth the like instance of Leah, that she should use the prophane word of fortune, verse 11. saying good lucke, ghad: which some take for Iupiters starre, some for Mer/curie, or Mars, alledging that place, Isa. 65.11. They furnish their drinke offerings to Gad: where it is more fitly translated a number, as the other clause sheweth, they have prepared a table for the multitude: and so is it to be taken here, a number commeth: 1. for so the name Gad answereth to Iacobs prophecie, Gen. 49.19. Gad, gedadh: Gad, an army shall overcome him, &c. he is therefore called Gad, because a company as an army of children was comming, as Leah imputeth the procreation of her children to the Lords blessing, Gen. 29.32, 33. therefore she was far off from imputing it to fortune, or to the stars, much lesse to give her child a superstitious and idolatrous name, which Iacob would not have suffered, Calvin.

QUEST. IX. How Laban blessed at Iacobs feet.

Vers. 30. THE Lord hath blessed thee by my comming. The Hebrew phrase is, at my feet. 1. which is not understood of Iacob going and comming about his businesse, but of his comming to Labans house, since which time God blessed him. 2. Some thinke that Iacob meaneth, that since his comming God had given Laban sonnes, whereas hee had none before, because Rachel kept his sheepe, Mercer. it may well bee that in fourteene yeares space Laban might also be increased with sonnes, which are mentioned afterwards, Gen. 31.1. but Iacob meaneth the increase of Labans wealth: the little which thou haddest is increased, &c. 3. Hence was taken up that proverb used in Africa: homo bonipedis, a man of a good foot, that is, whose comming is prosperous, who in the African language was called Namphanio: which name was given to a famous Martyr in Africa, derided by one Maximus a Grammarian, but defended by Augustine, epist. 44. Si vocabulum interpretemur, non aliud significat, quam hominem boni pedis; If we interpret the name, it signifieth nothing else but a man of a good foot. 4. Rupertus fitly applyeth this to Christ, shewing how that ad Christi in•r•i•tum dives effectus est mundus, the whole world was enriched and blessed at the comming of Christ, Perer.

QUEST. X. What kinde of colours the sheepe were of which were sorted out for Iacob.

Vers. 32. SEparate thou all the sheepe with little spots, &c. 1. There are three words used to expresse the party-coloured cattle, that should fall to Iacobs share; nachod, which signifieth that which is marked with small spots, and therefore it is expressed by another word, baradh, Gen. 31.10. spotted as with haile or ashes. The Septuagint translate in both places, < in non-Latin alphabet >, dispersed or sprinkled with spots. The other word is talū, that which is marked with great spots, as Iosu. 9.5. the same word is used to signifie peeced or clouted shooes: which where they are worne, are mended with patches, Mercer. to this kinde of great spotted, belongeth gnaracadh, used vers. 35. spotted in the binding places or legges, for so gnacodh, and nachod, are compared together, Genes. 31.8. Therefore Oleaster is deceived, that taketh nachod for the great spotted, talū for the lesse spotted: this word talū, vers. 35. is translated by the 70. 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 whitish, wherein there are white markes, as it is expressed, vers. 35. The third word is chum, not blacke as some read, for they belonged to Laban, nor red, or yellowish, but rather browne, as of a foot-colour; which is caused by smoake and heat, for so chum signifieth heat: the 70. read 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 : all the sheepe and goats then either sprinkled, or ring-straked, or of a duskish colour, are separated for Iacob, Mercer.

*2. The Septuagint reade so, as though they which were parti-coloured among the goats onely should be his reward: but the 35. verse maketh the matter plaine, that the meaning is, that the spotted both among the goats and sheepe should be Iacobs part, Pererius.

3. Neither must these three colours be restrained, as though the darke or browne colour belonged to the lamb, the small and little spotted to the goats, as may seeme to be gathered out of the 32. verse: but the meaning is, that all either lambs, or goats of any of those colours should be divided from the rest: but the browne colour is given to the lambes as most usuall among them, the spotted to the goats for the same reason, Mercer.

4. Herein appeareth Gods providence toward Iacob, that whereas the white and blacke sheepe were most set by in Mesopotamia,* the particoloured in Palestina, (and therefore the shepherds are called N^ochudim, Amos 1.1. that is, keepers of spotted cattell, Mercer.) it so falleth out that Iacob being to returne into Canaan, is increased with that kinde of sheepe, Perer.

5. Concerning other greater cattell, Iacob also was very rich in them: he had camels and asses, vers. 43. yet those he had not from Laban in this bargaine, neither had he charge but only of the smaller cattell: these of the greater sort Iacob had by his owne purchase, and exchange for smaller cattell, Perer.

QUEST. XI. How Iacobs righteousness answereth for him.

Vers. 33. MY righteousness shall answer or testifie for me to morrow, or hereafter, &c. 1. As yesterday is taken for the time past, Gen. 31. 2. so to morrow is used for the time to come, a part for the whole: as the Apostle saith, Iesus Christ, yesterday, and to day, and the same for ever. 2. Some referre the words following to justice, when it shall come for my reward before thee, Calvin. But the better reading is in the second person, when thou shalt come to my reward, that is, to see and examine it: and the words, before thee, must be joyned with the first clause: my righteousness shall answer for me, before thee, Mercer. Iun. 3. He speaketh not of his righteousness in generall for the time past, but in this particular, for the time to come, as it followeth in this verse, that if he found any thing with Iacob, but particoloured according to the agreement, he should count it as theft. 4. And Iacob doth as it were answer a secret objection: it may seeme improbable, that whereas the cattell of one colour are given mee to keepe, they should bring forth particoloured: God that seeth my justice and innocency, shall give sentence on my side by an extraordinary blessing, Muscul. 5. Iacob doth not absolutely stand upon his justice before God, but onely urgeth his innocency and faithfulness, in his service toward Laban. In like manner David cleareth himselfe; Iudge me O Lord according to my innocency, &c. Psal. 7.8. Muscul. Perer.

QUEST. XII. Whether Iacob dealt fraudulently with Laban, concerning his particoloured sheepe.

BUt whereas Iacob saith, my righteousness shall make answer for mee, it may be questioned, whether this were a plaine and just part in Iacob, by the device of the pilled and straked rods, to deceive Laban and inrich himselfe? the solution of which question is this: 1. That Iacob did not this of his owne head, but by Gods direction, Genes. 31.10. But who knoweth not that God being Lord of all, may transerre the right of things from one to another, where no other inferior title or property is challenged: as God gave the land of the Canaanites the ancient possessors thereof, to the Israelites, Calvin. Mercer. 2. Iacob by this meanes doth recover but his owne, which was due unto him in a double right, both in respect of his 20. yeares service, all which time he served without wages: so Iacob saith, yee know that I have served your father withall my might, but your father hath deceived mee, and changed my wages ten times, Gen. 31.6, 7. As also in regard of his wives dowry, which complaine of their fathers hardnesse: have we any more portion or inheritance in our fathers house, doth he not count us as strangers, hath he not sold us? &c. therefore all the riches which God hath taken from our father is ours and our childrens, Gen. 31.12.16. It is lawfull therefore for one by his cunning and industry to recover his goods, which he cannot otherwise get, especially Gods direction concurring withall: as the Israelites borrowed of the Aegyptians their best things, which were but a due recompence for their long service. 3. The saying is, volenti non fit injuria, a wrong is not done to him that is willing withall. It was thus agreed betweene Laban and Iacob: and Laban tractatus est prosuo ingenio, Laban is handled in his kinde, Calvin. for hee thought by this meanes to have gained to himselfe, and to have sent away Iacob with nothing: and it was a thing very unlikely, that sheepe all of one colour (such as Iacob onely had in his keeping) should bring forth particoloured. 4. The meanes which Iacob used, was not artificiall or fraudulent, but naturall, not depending of mans skill, but Gods blessing: therefore Iacob chooseth that for his wages, which not by mans wit, but Gods working was to take effect, Mercer. Thus the author of this device, Iacobs right, Labans covetous and cousening minde, and the meanes being laid together, will cleare Iacob in this action of fraudulent and unjust dealing.

QUEST. XIII. Of the corrupt reading of the vulgar Latine.

Vers. 35. ANd all that had white in them, and all that had blacke, &c. The Latine text is here very corrupt, reading thus: all the flocke of one colour, that is, of white and blacke, he delivered into the hands of his sonnes: which reading is contrary to the originall, that saith, the spotted onely with white, or particoloured and the duskish or blacke, were given to Labans sonnes to keep, and they which were of one colour to Iacob. 1. The Romanists would justifie their vulgar Latine, some understanding by Labans children, Iacobssonnes, for they were Labans after a sort: but this cannot be, for Ruben Iacobs eldest sonne was not now above six yeares old, borne in the first yeare of the second seven: and therefore Iacobs children were not being so young fit to guide the flocks, Mercer. and beside Laban might have thought that the father and sonnes might have conspired to deceive him. 2. Wherefore Lyranus and Tostatus misliking this first solution have devised another, that this is understood not of the first division of the flocks, when indeede none but the parti-coloured were committed to Labans sonnes, but of the second partition, after that the ewes had lambes, when Laban came to view which were of one colour, which of divers, and then he tooke the whole coloured sheep, as belonging to him, and gave them to the charge of his sonnes. Contra. 1. It appeareth not, but that after the first separation of the flocks, whereof some were committed to Iacob, some to Labans children, all those which were under Iacobs charge, together with their increase, continued with Iacob still, and he separated the party coloured from the rest, and the one was in view and sight of the other, vers. 40. whereas the flocks first divided were three daies journey asunder, vers. 36. 2. This division mentioned, vers. 35. was the very same day, wherein this agree|ment was made, and therefore it was the first, not the second division. 3. If this were admitted, then the Hebrew text should be convinced of falsity, which readeth not, the flocks of one colour; but, all that had white markes in them: that is, were spotted with white.

3. Wherefore we doubt not rather to refuse the Latine translation as corrupt and divers from the He|brew, and the Septuagint, with the Chalde in this place; and approve rather the judgement of Cajetan, who giveth this censure of the Latine translators: *Scito prudens Lector; * quod universa haec pars textus us{que} ad finem capituli, apud latinum interpretem paraphrasis est, potius quam textus. &c.* Vnderstand discreet reader, that all this part of the text to the end the Chapter, with the Latine interpreter, is a paraphrasis rather than the text. And a little after he saith: Antiquus interpres, nescitur, quo spiritu haec ita summaverit: Wee cannot tell, with what spirit the old interpreter hath thus summed the text, Cajetan. in hunc locum.

QUEST. XIV. Of the divers meanes which Iacob used to make the sheepe to bring forth party-coloured.

Vers. 37. Then Iacob tooke rods, &c. Iacob used three industrious meanes to cause the sheepe to bring forth partycoloured: 1. He useth pilled and straked rods, and putteth them in the wat|ering places, at such time as the sheepe were in heat, that is, in ramming time. Hierom sheweth the cause: Vt ex duplici desiderio, dum avidè bibunt, & ascenduntur a maribus, tales faetus conciperent, quales umbras arietum in aquarum speculo contemplabantur, tradition, in Genes. That of a double desire, while both they drinke greedily, and were coupled with the males, they might be conceived with such young, as they saw the shadowes of the rams in the water: for the coloured rods made also the shadow of the rams to appeare party-coloured. 2. Another policie which Iacob useth is set forth, vers. 40. that he set the particoloured sheep before, and Labans whole coloured sheep behinde, and turned their face toward the parti-coloured; but his owne sheep that were of divers colours, he turned not toward Labans: and this he did not alwayes, but in ramming time, that Labans sheep by the sight of the parti-coloured might bring forth like unto them: this is the right meaning of the verse, which is corruptly translated by the Septuagint, and Latine: the Chalde also and Genevens. doe transpose these words, among the sheep of Laban, and joyne them with the parti-coloured, &c. whereas there were none such in Labans flocke: and therefore this clause must be inserted thus in the beginning of the sentence, And turned the face of the sheep which were in the flocke of Laban, &c. as the Bis. translation readeth, sic Iun. Mercer. Vatabl.

3. Iacobs third device is expressed, vers. 42. Iacob put the rods into the gutters onely, in the ram|ming time of the stronger sheepe, that is in the first season of their coupling, as Oukelos expoundeth, which is supposed to be in the spring, when the sheep were lively and strong, Muscul. Mercer. Luther. The weaker sheepe conceived in the autumnne, and then Iacob put not in the rods, not to deceive Laban, that when he came he should not see them, as Kimhi thinketh, for Laban used not to come to take a view of the sheepe in ramming, but in lambing time: but Iacob used thus to doe, that Laban might have some in|crease of his colour, although by this meanes the stronger fell out to be Iacobs.

QUEST. XV. Whether Iacobs device were by miracle or by the workes of nature.

THis device of Iacob by the sight of particoloured rods, to cause the eawes and goats to be concei|ved with young of the like colour. 1. Is neither to bee held altogether miraculous as Chrysostome thinketh, non erat juxta naturae ordinem quod fiebat, &c. it was not according to the course of nature that was done, but miraculous and beyond natures worke, hom. 57. in Genes. much lesse doe we receive the fabulous conceit of one Hosaias an Hebrew, that the eawes •onceived alone without the males, by the sight only of the rods in the water, ex Mercer. 2. Neither do we ascribe this altogether to the work of na|ture, although the cogitation and conceit of the minde be very much in the forming of shapes, and there|fore as Plinie noteth, plures in homine quam in caeteri animalibus differentiae, there are more diversities of shapes among men, than bruit beasts, because of the variety of their conceits, lib. 7. c. 12. Galen writeth of a woman, that by beholding of a faire picture, by a deformed husband had a faire childe, lib. de theriaca. Quintilian writeth of a Queene that upon the like conceit brought forth an Aethiopian. Hypocrates maketh mention of a woman that being delivered of a beautifull childe, much unlike both the parents, should have beene condemned of adultery, but was freed by a learned Physitian that imputed it to a picture, which she had in her sight, ex Perer. The Hebrews report of an Aethiopian that had a faire child,* and a Ralbin being asked the reason thereof, shewed the cause to be a white table that was in her sight, at the time of conceiving. The like report is, that a woman brought forth a mouse, because a mouse chanced to run before her, when she was with childe, Mercer. The like operation hath the object of the sight in bruit beasts for this cause, the fashion is in Spaine to set before the mares when they are horsed, the most goodly beasts of that kinde, Muscul. The like practice is used by the Dove-masters, that they may have a brood of faire pigeons, Isydor. libr. 12. Etimolog. Although then that nature had her worke, yet we cannot say that nature wholly did it. 3. Wherefore God wrought here together with nature, and that after an extraordinary manner: first, because this devise was revealed vnto Iacob by the Angell of God in a dreame, Genes. 31.11. Secondly God gave a rare effect to this devise that it failed not, whereas if it had beene according to the ordinary worke of nature, there might have beene some change and alteration: and it is well noted by Valetius: that both the male and female concurred in the same imagination and fantasie of the parti-coloured, which was the cause that they alwaies brought forth of the same colour. lib. desacr. philos. c. 11.

QUEST. XVI. Of the naturall reason why the imagination should be so strong to worke upon the body.

NOW further, that we may see the naturall reason, why that Iacobs sheepe brought forth party-coloured. 1. That sheepe by drinking of certaine waters, doe change the colour of their wooll, Aristotle maketh mention: as there is a River in Assyria called Psychrus, of that coldnesse, which causeth the sheepe that drinke thereof to yeane blacke lambs: in Artandria there are two rivers, the one maketh the sheepe white, the other blacke: the river Scamander doth dye them yellow: Aristot. lib. 3. de histor. animal. c. 12. But this alteration is caused by the matter and quality of the water being received and drunke, whereas Iacobs sheepe conceived by the very sight. 2. The phantasie and affection is very strong to worke upon it owne body, sometime upon another: children have beene bewitched by the malicious sight of those that have intended them hurt, some by immoderate joy have presently dyed, as Philippides the Comicall Poet, for his unexpected victory of his fellow Poets: and a woman for the returne of her sonne, whom shee supposed to have beene slaine in the warres, in the extremity of joy, ended her life as the Romane histories testifie:* hence it is that the very sight of that, which goeth against the stomacke procureth vomit, some by the seeing of others blood have sounded: others for feare looking downe from a steepe place have tumbled downe, they which are stricken with sudden feare doe was pale in their face, their hands tremble, their voyce is taken away, and all the body is distempered: such is the operation of the conceit of parents in the conception of their children, which causeth such variety of shapes, of colour, gesture, ex Mar. il. ficin. lib. 13. de Platon. Theolog. cap. 1. 3. As we see by experience, that the imagination of the minde doth bring forth such effects in the body, so the reasons thereof may be yeilded to be these. 1. The power and dominion, which the soule hath over the body, the one is the moover and stirrer, the other the thing mooved: the soule is to the body as the workeman to his worke, which he frameth and fashioneth according to the idea, and conceit of the mind, and so it is in the conception and generation of children, Tosta. q. 10. in c. 30. 2. Another reason may be taken from the nature and property of imagination, Imaginari non est neque animi, neque corporis, sed conjunctim, to imagine is not proper to the soule or body apart, but to them both together, as the rest of the affections of love and hatred and the like are: the mind then is like to that which it imagineth, and the body with the mind begetteth that which is like to it selfe, so it commeth to passe, that the likenesse, which the phantasie imagineth the body begetteth, Valles.³ A third reason is, from the nature and power of the seed, which as it floweth from all the parts of the body, and therefore worketh materially the similitude of the same parts, so also is it procured by the minde and phantasie and therefore expresseth also that quality in the birth, which was in the minde from whom it was sent, Perer. ex Valles.

4. Places of Doctrine.

Doct. 1. Abrahams seed begotten by the power of God.

Vers. 21. GOd opened her womb, &c. In that God made Leah and Rachel fruitfull, of whom came the promised seed, it sheweth that it was not the worke of nature, but the gift of God, Muscul. And as Abrahams carnall seed was propagated by God, so much more the Spirituall: which are borne, not of bloud, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God, Iohn 1.13.

Doct. 2. The children of the barren wombe most excellent.

Vers. 24. SHe called his name Ioseph: as the children of the barren are noted in Scripture to have beene most excellent, as Isaack of Sarah, Ioseph of Rachel, Samuel of Anna, Iohn Baptist of Elizabeth, Muscul. so also they which have beene begotten of spirituall barrennesse, that is converted from a sinfull life, have prooved most excellent instruments, as Zacheus, Luke 19. and S. Paul of a persecutor made an Apostle.

Doct. 3. Wives not to be married without consent of parents.

Vers. 26. Glve me my wives and children, &c. They were already Iacobswives and children, yet he craveth leave of his father in law that he may peaceably depart with them: this condem[neth] their preposterous course, that adventure to take away mens daughters, and make them their wives against the minde and without the consent of their parents, Muscul. whereas the Apostle leaveth the belstowing of the virgin in mariage, wholly to the disposition of the father, 1 Cor. 7.38.

4. Doct. The house of God must be provided for by tithes and other revenues.

Vers. 30. WHen shall I travell for mine house also? As Iacob first served Laban for nought, contenting himselfe with the marriage of Leah and Rachel, but afterward hee expected wages, to provide for his house: so Rupertus doth fitly allegorize this place: at the first the Apostles preached the Gospell freely to win unto Christ Leah of the Jewes, and Rachel of the Gentiles: But now it is the ordi[nance] of Christ, that as Laban provided for Iacobs house, so the Church by the care of Christian magi[st]rates should bee endowed with tithes and revenues for the maintenance thereof: as the Apostle saith, The Lord hath ordeined that they which preach the Gospell, should live of the Gospell, 1 Cor. 9.14.

5. Doct. Married persons must take heed of brutish fantasies.

Vers. 38. THen he put the rods which he had pilled, &c. Seeing that the fantasie of the mind, procured by the object of the sight, or some other cogitation, in the time of conception, is of such force to fashion the birth: it becommeth men and women, not to come together with bestiall appetites, and un|cleane imaginations, (for by such meanes, monstrous & mishapen births are often procured) but then chiefly to have holy thoughts, and cleane cogitations, Mercer. And that then most of all they may fulfill that saying of the Apostle: That husbands dwell with their wives as men of knowledge, 1 Peter 3.7.

5• Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against the invocation of Saints.

Vers. 2. AM I in Gods stead, &c. Iacob thus answering Rachel, that called to him, to give her children, as though hee were God, may sufficiently confute the blindnesse of all those which invoke Saints, and call upon them for helpe: We may verily think, that if God so thought good, that they should make answer, they would say as Iacob did to Rachel, Are we in Gods stead? Muscul. And as our Saviour saith to the Jewes, There is one which accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust, Ioh. 5.45. so the Saints, whom the Romanists superstitiously worship, will be their accusers.

2. Confut. Against the slander of the Maniches.

Vers. 16. I Have bought thee with my sonnes mandrakes: Faustus that wicked Maniche hereupon taketh occasion to open his blasphemous mouth, habuisse inter se veluti quatuor scorta certamen, quae|nam eum ad concubitus raperet: that Iacobs wives as foure strumpets did strive betweene themselves who should lye with him: Augustine here answereth, 1. Nulla ancillarum virum ab altera rapuit: none of them did strive to have their husband from another: but Iacob kept his turnes, and observed an order, when to goe in to his wives: for what need the one to have hired out the other, Nisi ordo esset alterius, &c. If it had not been Rachels turne, &c. 2. Ipsas faeminas nihil aliud in concubitu appetuisse, &c. It is certaine that these women co|veted nothing else but children, in companying with their husbands, and therefore being barren themselves, or ceasing to beare, they substituted their maids. 3. Si concupiscentiae, non justitiae fuisset servu|Iacob, nonne per totam diem in voluptatem illius noctis aestuasset, &c. If Iacob had not beene a servant of justice, rather than of his owne concupiscence, he would all the day long have thought upon the pleasure of that night, when he was to lodge with the fairer: this sheweth then, that Iacob being content to change the course, and to goe into her, which was lesse loved, was not a man given to fleshly concupiscence, but only sought the propagation of his seed: sic August. lib. 22. cont. Faust. c. 18.

6. Morall Observations.

1. Observ. To preferre the glory of God before love of wife and children, &c.

Vers. 2. Iacobs anger was kindled against Rachel. Though Iacob loved Rachel well, yet when hee seeth Gods glory to be hindred, he forbearth her not, but is incensed against her, which teacheth us, that we ought to preferre the glory of God before the love of parents, wife, or children, Mercer. As our Saviour saith, If any man come unto me, and hate not his father, mother, wife, children, &c. he cannot be my Disciple, Luke 14.26.

2. Observ. Not to rejoyce in evill.

Vers. 18. GOd hath given mee my reward, because I gave my maid to my husband, &c. Although Leah gave her maid to her husband of a good intention, only for procreation, yet because it was a breach and prophanation of holy matrimony, which God had ordained, shee offended rather therein, than was to expect a reward. Thus many times men flatter themselves in their sinnes, and thinke that they are rewarded of God, when they doe evill, Calvin. As Micah having made him house-gods, and entertai|ned a Levite, thus vaunted himselfe: Now I know the Lord will be good unto me, because I have a Levite to my Priest, Iud. 17.13.

3. Observ. Continency in marriage.

Vers. 16. AND Leah said, come in to me, &c. Both Iacobs continency here appeareth, that did not give himselfe to carnall appetite, without moderation, but observed certaine times, when he paid his debt unto his wives, Perer. As also the modesty of those matrons is manifest herein, who offered not themselves to goe in to their husband, but expected till he came in to them: Muscul. This is that which the Apostle saith, That every one should know how to possesse his vessell in holinesse and honour, not in the lust of concupiscence, 1 Thessal. 4.5.

4. Observ. The time appointed of God, not to be prevented.

Vers. 26. GIve my wives and my children, &c. Iacob though he knew, that he was to returne into his countrey, yet preventeth the time which God had appointed, for hee yet stayed six yeares longer: so many times the children of God through their haste, doe run before the time which God hath set: as Moses being ordained to be the deliverer of Israel, yet shewing himselfe before his time, was constrained to save himselfe by flying, Mercer.

5. Observ. Choyce to be made of good servants.

Vers. 27. I Perceive the Lord hath blessed me for thy sake. Thus also was Potiphars house blessed because of Ioseph, Gen. 39.3. Masters therefore should have a speciall care to make choyce of godly ser|vants, that God may blesse the worke under their hands, Perer.

CHAP. XXXI.

1. The Contents.

IN this Chapter, first we have Iacobs departure from Laban, with his wives, and children, and cattell: where wee have, 1. The occasion that moved Iacob, the murmuring of La|bans sonnes, and change of Labans countenance, vers. 1, 2. 2. The Commandement of God for Iacobs departure, vers. 3. 3. Iacobs consultation with his wives: first Iacob maketh report of his faithfull service, vers. 6. Labans churlish dealing, vers. 7, 8. of Gods blessing, vers. 10. to vers. 14. then his wives give their consent, vers. 14. to 15. and so Iacob departeth, he and his, vers. 17. to 22.

Secondly, there is described Labans pursuit, and expostulation with Iacob: where is set forth Labans accusation, and Iacobs recrimination. 1. Laban accuseth Iacob of two things, the secret carrying away of his daughters, vers. 26, 27. the stealing away of his gods, vers. 30. Iacob defendeth himselfe, in shewing the cause why he went a way secretly, vers. 31. in giving Laban leave to search for his gods, which hee doth, but findeth them not, by reason of Rachels excuse, to vers. 36. 2. Iacob againe accuseth Laban for his hard dealing, making profession of his great travell and faithfull service, and Gods blessing, to 42. then Laban yeeldeth himselfe, vers. 43.

Thirdly, there is declared in this Chapter, how Iacob and Laban make a covenant together: 1. The co|venant it selfe is expressed, vers. 49. to 52. 2. The ratification of it of each side by an oath, and ceremonies: Laban sweareth by the God of Nahor, 53. and together with Iacob, maketh an heape of stones, vers. 47, 48. Iacob sweareth by the feare of his father Isaack, 53. and offereth sacrifice, vers. 54, 55.

2. The divers readings.

v. 43. are mine and my daughters. S. are mine, &c.*

v. 47. Laban called it, the heape is witnesse, Iacob called it, the heape of witnesse. H.S. Laban called it legar sa|hadutha, Iacob called it Galeed. caet. gnal, is an hillocke or heape, gnedh, a witnesse: put together, gnalgndh.

v. 49. and Laban added, &c. H. and he called it a watch tower.* S.C. and he called it Mispah. G.B.T.

v. 54 and he offered sacrifice. H.S. Iacob offered sacrifice. caet. they did eat and drinke. S. they did eat. caeter.

3. The explanation of doub•full questions.

QUEST. I. How Laban had changed Iacobs wages ten times.

Vers. 7. HE hath changed my wages ten times. 1. Neither *Cajetan*sexposition is to bee received, that his wages was not so often changed, but it is (saith he) an hyperbolicall speech: for where the words may be taken properly, what need a figure to be admitted? 2. Rasi is in the other extreme, who talketh the word monim, here used, for ten peeces of coine, so that he would have his wages changed ten times ten times, that is, an hundred times. 3. Hierome taketh it literally, and so doth Augustine, that he was deceived twice every yeare, for the five last, the first not counted, because twice in every yeare in Italy, and likewise in Mesopotamia, the Ewes have young: as Hierome alleageth out of Virgil; bis gravidæ pecudes, •wes twice with young. 4. The Septuag. read, for ten times or turnes, ten lambs: which Augustine would justifie, because a lamb may be taken for the lambing time: as arista, an eare of corne, is taken for harvest: and so their meaning should be, that Iacob was deceived ten lambing times, q. 95. in Genes. But it is more like, that the Septuag. translated the word monim, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, money: which by the Scribes, was made 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, by the addition of one letter: ex Mercer. 5. Wherefore I rather thinke, that here a certaine number is taken for an uncertaine: that neither lesse than ten times Iacob was deceived, nor yet just so many times: but that he was very often beguiled at Labans hand: as the Lord saith, That the Israelites had tempted him ten times, Num. 14.22. and Iob complaineth of his friends, that they had ten times reprovèd him, Iob 19.2. that is, often, Mercer.

QUEST. II. Whence Iacob had his first particoloured goats that he saw in a dreame.

Vers. 12. SEe all the he goats leaping upon the she goats, that are particoloured, &c. That are particoloured, must be referred to the he goats, not to the females, because gnac•dim is of the masculine gen|der: this difference is well observed by the Greeke and Latine translators, Iun. Mercer. and therefore our English translations are herein faulty, that apply it to the she goats. But here the question is, from whence Iacob had these particoloured goats, that leaped upon the females: 1. Neither had Iacob these particolou|red by miracle, as the Hebrewes affirme, that an Angell brought them from Labans flocke. 2. Neither did Iacob borrow them of other shepherds, for that had beene a fraud. 3. Neither did he put his owne partico|loured, after they were increased, to Labans white cattell: for then he needed not to have used the device of the rods, and beside it had beene a fraud. 4. Nor yet are they called particoloured, because they so ap|peared in the water, while they leaped upon the ewes, by reason of the pide and straked rods that were put into the gutters: 5 Nor yet are they so named in respect of the issue and effect, because they had parti|coloured lambs, as if the rams that leaped the sheepe had beene of that colour, as Mercer. 6.

But this vision is not to be referred to the beginning of this particoloured breed, but at once sheweth to Iacob the great increase of them like to be, that he should have particoloured both male and female of his owne, in such abundance, that they should ingender among themselves, and grow into flocks.

QUEST. III. Whether it were an Angell that spake unto Iacob in Bethel.

Vers. 13. I Am the God of Bethel, &c. 1. These two visions, though reported together to Iacobs wives, yet were not shewed at once to Iacob, but at sundry times: the one concerning the particoloured cattell, 6. yeares before: but the other for his returne, in the end of the 6. yeare, immediately before Iacobs departure from Laban, vers. 3. Mercer. 2. This Angell was not any ministring Spirit, which spake in the name of God, as some thinke, Mer. 3. But it was Christ himselfe, for here hee is called the God of Bethel: and in that vision, beside the Angels ascending and descending, the Lord himselfe stood at the top of the ladder, who spake to Iacob: Christ Jesus then was the great Angell of Gods presence, that appeared before to Iacob in Bethel, and now againe speaketh to him in vision.

QUEST. IV. Why Rachel is set before Leah, and speaketh first.

Vers. 14. Then answered Rachel and Leah: 1. Rachel is named before Leah, as before, vers 4. because she was Iacobs principall wife, the chiefe matron of the house; Leah was thrust upon him undesired: for this cause afterward in the forme of blessing, which they used toward Ruth, Rachel is preferred before Leah, even by the Bethlemites, that came of Iudah, of Leah, Ruth 4.11. 2. Hebrewes note this as a presumptuous part in Rachel to speak before her elder sister, and therefore they say, she died first: but the truth is, the singular number is here used for the plurall: and this answer, though it might be made by Rachel, was with the consent of both. 3. In that they say, All the riches which God hath taken, &c. is ours and our childrens, they doe somewhat obscure Gods blessing, as though God had given them but their due, in as much as they being Labans daughters, together with their children, had interest in his goods, Calvin. Mercer.

QUEST. V. Of the reasons that made Iacobs wives willing to depart.

Vers. 14. Have we any more portion? &c. Iacobs wives use foure reasons of their willingnesse to depart: three domesticall, and one divine. 1. Because they looked now for no more portion in their fathers house, than that which they had gotten, they had no reason to stay any longer: they say not, as some read, Have we not yet any portion? &c. for they had a great part by Gods providence out of their fathers substance, as they confesse, vers. 16. 2. He hath sold us: he hath beene unkind to us, setting us forth with no dowry, but selling us for 14. yeares service, and making againe and advantage thereof to himselfe. 3. They say, Should he still eat up our money? that is, should we remaine here still, and suffer him to devoure our substance? some doe otherwise read, And hath eaten up our money, referring it to the time past, that whereas he had sold them, for Iacobs service, the price or money, that is, Iacobs labour he took to himselfe, Mercer. But the other reading is better: which the particle gam, etiam, also, doth imply: should hee yet, or still, devoure, &c. 4. The divine reason, which they use, is from the Commandement of God, vers. 16. Whatsoever God hath said unto thee, doe it.

QUEST. VI. What the teraphim were which Rachel stole from Laban.

Vers. 19. Rachel stole her fathers idols: the word is teraphim: 1. Some by these teraphim, understand the Priestly ornaments and implements that belong to sacrificing: because Ose 3.4. the Prophet saith, the children of Israel shall remaine a long time without Ephod and Teraphim: Hieron. epist. 113. ad Marcel. But in this place the Prophet sheweth, that the children shall bee without any forme of Church or common-wealth, even such, as when it was deformed with teraphim, worship of idols, Iun. 2. Some thinke that the teraphim were other pictures and resemblances, than of men, as Aquilastransla teth them, morphomata, figures, shapes: but that teraphim had an humane shape, appeareth, 1 Sam. 19. where Mich•l put an image in the bed, in stead of David. 3. Some thinke that the teraphim, was made of the head of the first borne child, which was embawmed and so kept, from the which by the working of the devill, they received answers, Lyran. But if teraphim had beene such a thing, it is not like Rachel would have stollen it away. 4. Some thinke that they were certaine images, which they consecrated for divination, from whence they received answers, R. Kimhi: and they did represent the head of a man, made of some kind of metall: such a head Albertus Magnushad, which Thomas Aquinas his scholler brake, Tostat. and hereupon they derive the word from the root, raphaph, which signifieth, remisse, weake, because the oracles which they gave, were many times uncertaine and false. It is true, that some teraphim were used for such purpose to consult withall: as Zachar. 10.2. The teraphim have spoken vanity: but yet all were not so used, as the teraphim which was in Davids house. 5. And yet upon this example it cannot bee gathered, that there were some teraphim, which were not idols: as Ramban inferreth, and Perer. numer. 4. for although David himselfe were farre from idolatry, and idols in Sauls time were publikely removed, yet there might be some reliques of superstition privately remaining: and this in Davids house might bee secretly kept by Mich•l without Davids knowledge, or it was as an implemēt not regarded, Mercer. 6. Wherefore it is most like, that these teraphim did resemble an humane shape, and that they were consecrated to superstiti|ous uses, as those idols of Laban were, which he therefore afterward called his gods, vers. 30.

QUEST. VII. Wherefore Rachel stole away her fathers idols.

IT is further questioned, wherefore Rachel stole away Labans idols. 1. Not as some thinke, that Laban should not consult with them, to know which way Iacob was gone: sic Aben Ezra, Tostat. for though Laban missed them presently, that is to be imputed to his superstition, who did often visit his idols. 2. Neither did Rachel this, to revoke her father from idolatry, as Rab. Salomon, to whom give con|sent, Basil, Nazianzene, Theodoret, for then shee needed not to have beene ashamed of her fact: neither would Iacob so sharply have censured the fact to bee worthy of death. 3. Nor yet did Rachel steale them away being made of some precious metall, that it might be some recompence unto her for part of her dow|ry, Perer. numer. 7. for this had beene plaine theft. 4. Neither yet, as Iosephus thinketh, did Rachel carry away her fathers gods, that if he should pursue after them, haberat, qu•confugeret, (◇) impetratura, she might have recourse unto them, to aske pardon, and to appease her fathers wrath: for this had beene plaine idolatry. 5. Nor yet was this done by way of mystery: as Gregory collecteth: that as Laban found no• his idols with Iacob: sic diabolus ostensis mundi thesauris, in Redemptore nostro vestigia •rena (◇) non invenit: so the devill, having shewed the treasures of the world, did not finde in our Redeemer any foot|steps of terrene concupiscence, &c. 6. But it is most like that Rachel, though much reformed, and reclaimed from her fathers superstition by her husbands instruction, yet was somewhat touched therewith still: and therefore of a superstitious mind did take away her fathers idols: and hereof it was, that long after able, Iacob reforming his house, caused all the strange gods to be removed: sic Chrysostom. hom. 47. in Genes. Mer|cerus, Calvin.

QUEST. VIII. Whether Rachel were any thing addicted to superstitious worship.

BUt some are of contrary opinion, that Rachel was not a• all addicted to her fathers superstition: whose reasons are these: 1. Because Rachel did worship God, and prayed unto him, Genes. 29.22. God re|membred Rachel and heard her: and if she had purposed to worship these idols, she would not have used them so irreverently to have sate upon them, &c. Theodoret. qu. 89. in Genes. Cont. Though Rachel were a worshipper of God, yet she might have her imperfections: and some reliq• of superstition might remaine: Iacobs family professed the worship of God, and yet there were found amongst the• strange Gods, Genes. 35. 4. Neither is Rachels gesture to bee much regarded in such a necessity: rather her superstitious minde may therein appeare, how she was addicted to those images, seeing she sought excuses, to keepe them still: her manner of sitting was no signe of irreverence, but it served for an excuse, both to pacifie her fathers wrath, which she feared, and to with-hold those superstitious monuments still which she loved: 2. Where|fore it is more like, that Rachel was not free from all touch of superstition: both because she had beene a long time trained up under a superstitious father, and could not so easily forget her manner of education, though much qualified with Iacobs instruction: as also for that, wee reade that a good while after, such images and mammets were found in Iacobs house, Gen. 35. which are like to have beene these which Ra/chel had stollen from her father: sic Chrysostom. ex ponti•i. Cajetan. Oleaster. ex nostris, Musculus, Mercer. Calvin.

QUEST. IX. How Iacob is said to have stollen away Labans heart.

Vers. 20. TH•s Iacob stole away the heart of Laban, &c. 1. This word is not taken, as 2 Sam. 15.6. where it is said, that Absolon stole away the heart of the people from David: the meaning cannot be so here, for Labans heart was not toward Iacob. 2. Neither, because Rachel had stollen away his tera|phim, where Labans heart was: for Iacob yet knew not that. 3. Neither yet it is so said, because the hope of Labans heart was gone, Iacob being departed, who was so profitable to him. 4. But because Iacob gave no notice of his going, he is said to steale away his heart, that is, to deceive and disappoint him, and secret|ly convey himselfe away: It is therefore rather to bee read, to steale away from his heart: for so the word ceth, sometime signifieth, as Gen. 44.4. when they went out of the city, jut••, ceth, hagnor.

QUEST. X. What river it was that Iacob passed.

Vers. 21. HE passed the river; that is, Euphrates. 1. Sometime it is called the great river, Iosu. 1.4. sometime, the river, without any addition, Iosu. 24.3. and in this place. 2. For three causes is the river called great, and so much celebrated in Scripture. 1. For that it was the greatest river beside Nilus that was knowne to the Jewes. 2. For that it was one of the rivers of Paradise. 3. Because it was the bounds of that large land of Canaan promised to Abrahams seed, Genes. •5.18. Perer. 3. Iacob is said to passe the river, as declining the ordinary way, fearing lest Laban might overtake him, Mercer.

QUEST. XI. How the 7. dayes of Labans pursuit are to be accounted.

Vers. 23. HE followed after him 7. dayes journey. 1. These 7. dayes must not bee accounted from Iacobs first setting forth, as Rasi thinketh▪ for Iacob being three dayes journey from Laban, who was now gone to sheare his sheepe, vers. 19. which were removed 3. dayes journey from Iacobs flocke, Genes. 30.36. while the messenges went to tell Laban, Iacob was gone •. dayes journey: and so was in all six dayes journey before Laban: by this reckoning Laban should overtake Iacob in one day, from Carras to Gilead, which was not possible: Laban then overtooke Iacob the seventh day, after that he himselfe set forward, that is, 13. dayes after Iacobs departure, Mus•ul. •. Neither with 〈...〉 wee suppose, that Laban returned to Carras 〈◇〉 City, which was in the 〈◇〉 betweene the two ••ockes, as hee think|eth, to take his friends with him, and so to pursue Iacob for the City was not 〈◇〉 off from the place where Iacob kept his sheep•, whence hee sent for his 〈◇〉 into the 〈◇〉, vers. 4. and therefore it could be little lesse than 3. dayes journey from Laban▪ who is 〈◇〉 like, for 〈◇〉 haste and expedition, to take his journey from the place, whither the 〈◇〉 was brought him. 3. Though Iacob was six dayes journey before Laban, he might well overtake him in seven dayes, 〈...〉 was encumbered with his children and cattell, and could not drive fast, and for that hee had pitched his tents in Gilead, there pur|posing to refresh himselfe, supposing the danger and feare of Labans pursuit to be over, Mercer.

QUEST. XII. How Laban is charged neither to speake good or evill.

Vers. 24. Take heed thou speake not ought save good, &c. The Hebrew phrase is from good to evill. 1. Which is not to begin with good words and end with evill, as Onkelos seemeth to take it. 2. Nor yet is he forbidden only not to speak evil, as the Latine and Septuagint, with others. 3. But he is for|bidden to speak any thing at all, either good or bad, either faire words or soule, not simply, but concerning Iacobs returne againe into Mesopotamia: and so Laban accordingly forbeareth to speake any thing at all of that matter: the like phrase is used, Gen. 24.50. Mercer. Iun.

QUEST. XIII. When God appeared to Laban, and where he pitched his tents.

Vers. 25. Then Laban overtooke Iacob. 1. This vision, which Laban had, was not in the beginning of his journey as some thinke, but in the same night that he came to Gilead: for so he saith: Yester|night, or the last night, (for so the word cemesh signifieth) the God of your Father appeared unto me: when he was now purposed to bee revenged of Iacob, the Lord staid him. 2. They pitched their tents both in the same mount not farre asunder: some say Iacob was in the top of the hill, Laban in the bottome, some affirme the contrary, but this is uncertaine, Mercer. It is most like, that Iacob seeing Laban to approach, set himselfe in as good order as he could, doubting the worst, Muscul.

QUEST. XIV. How Iacob saith, let him not live.

Vers. 32. With whom thou findest thy gods, let him not live, &c. 1. Not, as though he should say, I will kill him with mine owne hand. 2. Neither by vertue of this curse, as the Hebrewes note, did Rachel afterward dye an untimely death: for Iacob knew not that she had them. 3. But either they are words of imprecation, whereby Iacob wisheth that God would shew his judgements upon him, that had committed that theft, Mercer. Or else he giveth power to Laban, even to take away their life, Calvin.

QUEST. XV. Of the divers takings of the word brother in Scripture.

SEarch before our brethren. 1. Hierome noteth, that the word brother is foure wayes taken in Scripture: 1. For them that are so by nature and properly, as Iacob and Esau were brethren. 2. For them of the same nation, as the Israelites were all brethren, Act. 7.26. 3. They that were of one kindred were called brethren: as Abraham saith to Lot, Wee are brethren, Genes. 13.8. 4. They that are of the same Christian faith and profession: 1 Cor. 5.11. If any that is called a brother, &c. 2. By brethren here wee understand not with Hierome,* Iacobs children, which were yet of small discretion: Ruben the eldest not being above 13. yeare old: nor yet some other of his wives kindred, that Iacob brought away with him out of Mesopotamia, for they had beene no competent Judges in this case: but the brethren were those whom Laban brought with him of his kindred, vers. 23. to whom Iacob referreth the judgement of this matter, Mercer.

QUEST. XVI. Of the order in Labans searching of the tents.

Vers. 33. Then came Laban into Jacobs tent. 1. Neither as Rasi thinketh, had Iacob and Rachel one tent: for the text sheweth, that Laban went first into Jacobs tent, and then into Leahs, and from thence to Rachels. 2. Though last mention bee made of Rachels tent, that is because there the idols were hid: Laban last of all searched the maids tents: and out of Leahs tent he went into Rachels, Mercer.

QUEST. XVII. Of Rachels excuse.

Vers. 35. The custome of women is upon me. 1. Not that women, while their monethly custome is upon them, are not able to rise: but many times they are beside that infirmity troubled with the head-ake, and are stomacke-sicke, and not fit to be disquieted. 2. As also they counted women in that case in times past uncleane, they would neither talke with them, nor suffer them to breathe upon them: which might be the cause that Laban answereth not a word to his daughter, but goeth presently out of her tent: hereof the word niddah, that signifieth an uncleane woman, is derived of nadah, which is, to remove, or send farre off: because women at that season were separated from the company of others, Mercer. 3. Rachel made this excuse, not either in detestation of the Idols, vouchsafing them no better place than the Camels litter, nor yet so much of love to keepe them, as of feare because of the present danger: in the meane time Laban by this excuse was blinded and deluded.

QUEST. XVIII. Whom Iacob meaneth by the feare of Isaack.

Vers. 42. The feare of Isaack. 1. Iacob neither meaneth that feare of Isaack▪ when his father would have offered him up in sacrifice, as some interpret, for that was but a naturall feare of death: for his patience and obedience was more commendable at that time than his feare. 2. Neither doth Iacob speake of his owne feare and reverence toward his father. 3. Nor yet of Isaacks feare or worship of God. 4. Or of Isaacks feare and care for the prosperity of his sonne Iacob; all these are here unproper to be mat|ched with the God of Abraham. 5. But feare is taken here not actively, but passively, for God himselfe, that is feared, Calvin. who sometime is called by names effectivè, in respect of the effect: so is God called our strength, our health, salvation; or objective, by way of object; so is God called our hope, our love, our joy, our feare, because he is the object of all these, Perer. Rasi thinketh, that hee is called not the God, but feare of Isaack, because Isaack was yet living, and God doth not call himselfe by the living: but this is a false note, for Gen. 28.13. he is called the God of Isaack: some doe in this difference of names, note a distinction of the persons; and understand the God of Abraham to bee the father, the feare of Isaack to be Christ, of whom he was a speciall type. This collection may bee admitted, Mercer. So then by the feare of Isaack, Iacob meaneth the God whom Isaack feared and worshipped: having a re|ference to that feare also, whereby Isaack was restrained from revoking the blessing given to Iacob, Gen. 27.33.

QUEST. XIX. Of the Syrian name which Laban gave, and of the use of that language in the Scripture.

Vers. 47. Laban called it Iegar-sahadutha, &c. 1. Laban though he came of Thare the father of Abraham, in whose family the Hebrew tongue was preserved, yet dwelling among the Syrians, he learned both their language and manners, and therefore calleth this place by a Syrian name: but Iacob by an Hebrew, who most used himselfe to that tongue, and so did his wives, that gave their children not Syri|an, but Hebrew names, Calvin. 2. These Syrian words are only found in Genesis, and the rest of the books of Moses, and beside, one whole verse, Ierem. 10. and certaine chapters in Ezra and Daniel, after the Syrian dialect: which is an honour, as the Hebrewes note, wherewith the Syrian language is dignified, in that it is inserted into the holy Scriptures, and therefore is not to be neglected, Mercer. 3. Whereas vers 48. it is said, Laban called it Galeed, (whereas Iacob gave it that name, not Laban) Moses reporteth the sense of the name, in the Hebrew tongue, which Laban gave.

QUEST. XX. Of the mountaine of Gilead.

Vers. 47. Iacob called it Galeed. 1. This name Galeed, or with some small change of points, called Gilead, is before mentioned, vers. 25. under that name, not as yet given unto that place, but now imposed by this occasion: which is interpreted, an heape of witnesse: so called of the heape of stones which was made as a witnesse of the league betweene Iacob and Laban. 2. There was one Gilead the sonne of Machir of Manasses, of whom came the Gileadites, Numb. 26.29. but he gave not the first name to this mountaine. 3. This mountaine Gilead is the greatest of all beyond Jordan, it is in length 50. miles: and as it is continued, and runneth along, it receiveth divers names: from Arnon to the City Cedar, it is called Galaad: then to Bozra, it is named Seir, afterward Hermon: and so reaching to Damascus, it is joyned to Libanus: and therefore as Hierome saith, Lebanon is called the head or beginning of Galeed, Ier. 22.6. Perer.

QUEST. XXI. Of the name Mispah, and of divers places so called.

Vers. 49. HE called it Mispah. 1. The Latine translator doth wholly omit this word, the Septuagint maketh it a name appellative, not proper, calling it a vision: which Augustine referreth to that vision, wherein by the way God appeared to Laban. But this Mispah was another proper name given unto the same place: of the word tsaphah, to behold, whereof the reason is given in this verse: The Lord looke betweene me and thee. 2. Of this Mispah, which signifieth a looking or watch-tower, the whole countrey is called the land of Mispah, under the hill Hermon, Iosu. 11.3. There were three other places of that name, a City in Juda, Iosu. 15.38. another belonging to Benjamin, Iosu. 18.26. a third in the land of Moab, 1 Sam. 22.3.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Wives and husbands to be preferred before parents.

Vers. 17. Whatsoever God hath said unto thee, doe it. Iacobs wives are willing to leave and forsake their fathers house, and to goe with their husband: for so the Scripture saith, Therefore shall a man leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife, Gen. 2.24.

2. Doct. Office of carefull Pastors.

Vers. 38. The rams of thy flocke have I not eaten, &c. Iacob is an example of a vigilant and carefull Pastor: hee watched day and night to keepe his flocke, but hee made no spoile or halvocke of them: Such ought good pastors to bee, not to feed themselves, but the flocke, as S. Peter saith, 1 Pet. 5.2.

3. Doct. Polygamy unlawfull.

Vers. 50. IF thou shalt take wives beside my daughters. Laban himselfe though upon a covetous mind hee thrust many wives upon Iacob, yet by the light of naturall reason condemneth the multiplying of wives: Thou shalt not vex my daughters: the taking then of other wives, is a vexation of them: this maketh against their obstinate blindness, that would maintaine polygamy: if they would appeale to Laban, he would be a Judge against them, Calvin. But our Saviour Christ the Judge of us all, hath given us a rule, They two shall be one flesh, Matth. 9.2. two then, not many can be made one flesh.

4. Doct. Of the blind and superstitious devotion of •dolaters.

Vers. 47. THou hast searched all my stuffe. Such is the blind rage of idolaters, as here we see in Laban: he leaveth no corners unsought: he giveth no credit to Iacobs protestation, nor yet sheweth any reverent affection to his daughters, but tosseth and tumbleth all their stuffe: and all this was, to find out his house-gods: such blind devotion was in Micah, that howled and cried after the children of Dan, because they had carried away his images, Iud. 18. Such foolish superstition reigneth at this day among the Romanists, that doe more cruelly punish the least wrong done to their dumbe idols, than which are offered to their brethren the living images of God.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against the worshipping of idols for remembrance.

Vers. 30. THou hast stollen my gods. Laban was not so blockish, to thinke that those idols were indeed his gods, or that his gods could be stollen away: for hee afterward speaketh of the God of Abraham, and the God of Nachor; vers. 53. but he calleth them his gods, because hee made them in the remembrance of God, or hee looked towards them when he prayed to God, Vatab. Calvin. This taketh away that vaine pretence of superstitious Romanists, who would excuse their idolatry, because they doe not worship the idols themselves, but them whose images and representations they are: for Laban here did no more, Calvin.

2. Confut. Images and idols, where they are adored, all one.

FURther let it be noted, that the word teraphim, images, is translated by the Septuagint and Latine in|terpreter, idols: yet Onkelos readeth, tsalmanaia, images, of tselem, which signifieth an image: whence is inferred, that an image and idoll is all one: contrary to the conceit of the Papists, that doe distinguish betweene the name of images and idols: which indeed being turned to a religious, or rather irreligious use, are all one.

3. Confut. Disparity of religion maketh not a nullity of marriage.

BESide, in that Rachel stole here fathers gods, it is evident that Laban was an idolater: yet Iacob refused not to marry his daughters: and this marriage was firme and sure: whereupon Cajetan noteth, Hic quoque prudens lector habes, quod disparitas cultus non est ex naturali jure impediens conjugium: Here thou hast, discreet reader, that the disparity of religion is no impediment by the law of nature to marriage. And he collecteth well: yet Catharinus another of that side, calleth it impium dogma, an impious opinion. lib. 5. annot. in Cajetan. But Cajetan opinion may be justified, both by example in Scripture: as Moses married Sephora, Samson Dalila, David Maacha, which were of idolatrous parents: as also by S. Pauls doctrine, who would have the beleiving partie not to put away his unbeleeving wife, 1 Cor. 7.12. which sheweth that the marriage of such is sound and good, and not against the law of nature, though it be not safe nor convenient.

4. Confut. Antiquity no good rule for religion.

Vers. 53. THE God of Abraham, the God of Nahor, the God of their father, &c. Laban pretendeth anti|quity for his God, whom his father and grand-father worshipped, yea, and Abraham also, who at the beginning before his calling was given to the same superstitious worship. But Iacob sweareth by the feare of his father Isaack: hee riseth up no higher, neither to grandfather, nor grandfathers father, and yet he doubteth not, but that he worshipped God aright: wherefore antiquity is no good rule for religion: neither is it a warrant for us to be of the same religion which our fathers and grandfathers were of before us, Calvin.

6. Morall Observations.

1. Observ. Afflictions make us thinke of our heavenly Canaan.

Vers. 1. NOw he heard the words of Labans sonnes, &c. Iacob, if hee had not perceived some discontent|ment in Laban and his sonnes against him, would not so soone have bethought himselfe of his returning into Canaan: these crosses therefore and domesticall wrongs doe awake him and rouse him up, and bring Canaan to his remembrance: In like manner the Lord useth by afflictions and troubles to awake his servants, that otherwise would be drowned in the pleasures of this life, and so prepare them for their heavenly Canaan, Calvin. As the Prophet David saith, before I was afflicted, I wont astray, Psal. 119.67.

2. Observ. The wicked have no power to hurt the servants of God.

Vers. 7. GOD suffered him not to hurt mee. The wicked may band themselves, and bend their strength against the servants of Christ, but they shall have no more power to hurt them, or to prevaile against them, than shall be to Gods glory, and his servants good: Calvin. As our Saviour saith, My father is greater than all, and none is able to take them out of my fathers hands, Ioh. 10.29.

3. Observ. The Lord delivereth in the time of extremity.

Vers. 24. GOD came to Laban the Aramite in a dreame, &c. Laban was now come to mount Gilead, where Iacob was, with a malicious purpose toward him: but the Lord stayeth him, being now ready to have done him some mischief: thus the Lord sheweth his power in the deliverance of his children, even in the time of greatest extremity, Mercer. Thus God turned Esaus heart, comming with a band of men against Iacob, Gen. 33. thus God delivered David from Saul in the wilderness of Maon, when Saul with his men had almost compassed him in, 1 Sam. 24.26.

4. Observ. A good conscience a bulwarke against slanderous reports.

Vers. 30. WHy hast thou stollen my gods? this is the portion of the righteous in this world, to be slan|dered, and evill reported of: as Iacob here is made a theefe: thus we must be tried, by ho|nour, dishonour, by evill report and good report, as deceivers, and yet true: as the Apostle saith, 2 Cor. 6.8. but a good conscience is a sufficient bulwarke against all such assaults of slanderous tongues: as Saint Paul saith, As touching me I passe very little to be judged of you, or of mans judgement, nor I judge not my selfe, I know nothing by my selfe, 1 Cor. 4.2.

5. Observ. Not to be forward to undertake for others honesty.

Vers. 32. With whom thou findest thy gods, let him not live: Iacob was too confident, and presumed too much of the innocency of his servants, and the rest of his family in this case: which teacheth us, that we ought not to be too ready to answer and undertake for the honesty and innocency of others, unlesse we be of a sure ground, lest it afterward turne to our rebuke, Calvin. As the wise man saith: He that praiseth his friend with a loud voyce, rising early in the morning, it shall bee counted to him as a curse, Prou. 27.14.

CHAP. XXXII.

1. The Argument or Contents.

T

His Chapter consisteth of two principall parts:

First, Iacobs feare of his brother Esau is expressed, vers. 7. with the occasion thereof, the message sent to his brother, and the returne thereof, which was full of suspition, vers. 3. to vers. 6.

Secondly, is shewed how Iacob was comforted against this feare: which comfort was of two sorts: humane, divine. Humane, either religious by faithfull prayer, which consisteth on Iacobs behalfe, of the confession of his unworthinesse, vers. 9, 10. on Gods behalfe, of the certainty of his promise made to Iacob, to vers. 13. or politike: Iacob divideth his company into two parts, vers. 7. he sendeth presents to appease his brothers wrath, vers. 14. to vers. 22.

The divine comfort was by the vision of Angels, vers. 1, 2. by wrestling and prevailing with an Angell: where these things are declared, 1. Iacobs wrestling and prevailing, vers. 24, 25. 2. His infirmity of halt[ing] upon the same, vers. 26. 3. The blessing of Iacob with the change of his name, to vers. 30. 4. The custome of the Israelites upon this accident of Iacobs halting, vers. 32.

2. The divers readings.

v. 1. looking backe he saw the tents of God pitched. S. *the rest have not this clause.

v. 2. he called the name of the place, the Lords tents or hosts. S. Mahanaim. caet.

v. 10. let it suffice me by all thy righteousness and truth. S. my merits are lesse than all thy mercies. C. I am lesse or unworthy of all thy mercies. P.H.B.G. impar, unlike, or not answerable. T. chatan, little. I came alone over this Iordan. C. with my staffe. caet.

v. 25. he touched the breadth of his thigh. S. the palme or inward part of the thigh. C. the hollow of the thigh.* G. the hucklebone, acetabulum. B.T.H. caph. the hollow, or bowing: the sinew of the thigh, H.

v. 25. the sinew of his thigh withered. H. the bread of his thigh withered. S. the hollow was loosed. G. loosed out of joynt. B. moved out of his place. C. P. did hang. T. jachang, signifieth both to hang, and to move.

v. 30. he called the place the face of God. S. peniel. caet.*

I have seene an Angell of God, face to face. C. I have seene God face to face. caet.

v. 32. the sinew that withered. H.S.C. shrank. B.G.P. the borrowed sinew of the thigh. T. nashah. signifieth to lend, and to remove. the hucklebone borroweth certaine sinewes of the hollow bone that it turneth within.*

3. The explanation of doubtfull places.

QUEST. I. Whether this vision of Angels were sensible or spirituall.

Vers. 1. The Angels of God met him. 1. This is the third vision that Iacob had, the first was of the ladder, and the Angels ascending and descending upon it, as he went into Mesopotamia: the other of the particoloured rams leaping upon the ewes, while hee was in Mesopotamia: the third of the Angels now at his returning home. 2. But this apparition of the Angels, was not by a spirituall vision, and in dreame, as Cajetan and Pererius, but it was sensible and visible, for they appeared in the habit of heavenly souldiers: as the like apparition was shewed to the Prophets servant, 1 King. 6. Mercer. 3. The Hebrewes note, that Iacob knew these to be the same Angels, which he saw in vision to ascend and descend upon the ladder. 4. And whereas Iacob is not said to meet them, but they to meet Iacob: therein appeareth the dig|nity and preeminence of the Saints, whom the Angels are ready to attend upon, Mercer.

QUEST. II. Whether two armies only of Angels appeared to Iacob.

Vers. 2. HE called the place Mahanaim, which word is of the duall number, and signifieth two armies: 1. Not as though God made one army, and the Angels another. 2. Or as though Iacob had at the first taken one company to be against him, the other with him, as some Hebrewes: for hee knew them at the first to be Gods Angels. 3. Neither were these two companies of Angels, the one that brought him out of Mesopotamia, the other that now received him into the land of Canaan, as Rasi: for these companies of Angels did all meet Iacob, and offered their protection. 4. Nor yet hath Iacob relation in this name to his hoast and company, that made one, and the Angels hoast, which was the other, as Iunius: for Iacob had no reason to name the place by his hoast. 5. But the duall number is here taken for the plurall: as the same word Mahanaim is used, Cantic. 6.12. so that Iacob saw not precisely two armies of Angels, one before, ano|ther behind, but he was compassed round with them: & beside the forme of the dual number is often applied to proper names, though no reason can be yeelded of it, as Ephraim, Misraim, & so may it bee here, Mercer.

QUEST. III. Of the message which Iacob sent to Esau.

Vers. 3. Iacob sent messengers to Esau his brother. 1. R. Carus thinketh that Iacob sent Angels of his mes|sage to Esau: for the word malachim signifieth the Angels, vers. 1. and generally messengers: but this is too curious: for if Iacob had sent Angels, hee would not have given them Commandement and in|structions, what to say, as he doth. 2. Esau was now removed from his father, before Iacob came, Gen. 36.6. and it may be he had thereof intelligence from his mother, Calvin. He being now growne rich, and see|ing his wives were an offence to his parents, but most of all desiring his owne liberty, might remove into the land of Seir: Calvin. The countrey being neere adjoyning to Beerseba, where Isaack dwelt, Mercer. 3. He sendeth to Esau, 1. Because hee must needs passe by his countrey; 2. And nameth himselfe his ser|vant, not thereby renouncing his blessing, but yeelding temporall subjection for a time, as David did to Saul, though he were even then the annointed King. 3. He maketh mention of his sojourning with Laban, not so much to excuse the matter; that he had not all this while sought to be reconciled to his brother, as R. Carus, as to report unto his brother, what the state and condition of his life had been, who as yet might be ignorant of it, Mercer. 4. He also speaketh of his cattell and riches, that Esau should not thinke that he sought unto him for any need, but only to have his favour.

QUEST. IV. Whether Esau came with 400. men, as an enemy or a friend.

Vers. 6. THE messengers came againe to Iacob. 1. Some thinke the messengers spake not at all to Esau, be|cause they were afraid, meeting him with foure hundred men: but it is not like that Esau had notice of Iacobs coming, but first from him by his Messengers. 2. Neither did Esau come thus accompa|nied to make ostentation only of his power, Musculus. 3. Or to give his brother more honourable enter|tainment, Calvin. Mercer. For he needed not then to have brought so many with him, and he would have sent him some kind message before. 4. Wherefore it is more like, that Esau prepared himselfe to be reven|ged of Iacob: as may appeare by Iacobs great feare, which was not without cause, and hereby also the power of God is more set forth, that could in the very way change the purpose and counsell of Esau.

QUEST. V. Of the divers takings of this word in Scripture.

Vers. 10. With my staffe came I over: the phrase is, in my staffe: this preposition in, is diversly taken in Scripture. 1. In is taken for with, as Luk. 1.75. to serve him in holinesse, that is, with holi|nesse: and so it is taken here. 2. In, for by, Psal. 63.11. all that sweare in, that is, by him, shall rejoyce. 3. In, for through, noting power and helpe: Act. 7.28. in him (that is, by him) we live, and move, and have our be|ing. 4. In, for to, Psal. 136.8. hee made the sunne, in potestatem, for, or to rule the day. 5. In, for because, Hos. 5.5. they shall fall in their iniquity, that is, because of their iniquity. 6. In, for against, Psal. 44.5. by thy name have we troden downe those that rose in nos, against us. 7. In, for in stead: Psal. 31.2. *be unto mee, in domum refug*o*i*, for, or in stead of an house of defence. 8. In, for among: Iohn 1.16. the word was made flesh, and dwelt in nobis, among us. 9. In, for with: 1 Peter 5.2. feed the flocke, qui in vobis, which is in you, that is, with you, committed to your care. 10. In, for of: Habbac. 2.14. woe to him that buildeth a towne, in, that is, of bloud, 11. In, for before, or at: in the name of Iesus shall every knee bow, that is, at or before the name of Iesus, Phi|lip. 2.12. in for under, Psal. 91.1. he that dwelleth in the secret, &c. that is, under: ex Perer.

QUEST. VI. The cause of Iacobs feare.

Vers. 11. I *Fe*o*re him, lest he will come and smite me, &c.* Seeing that Iacob had the Lords promise for his safety, Genes. 31.3. Returne into the land of thy fathers, and I will be with thee: how commeth it to passe, that Iacob is so greatly afraid? for answer whereunto, I neither thinke with Augustine, qu. 102. in Genes. that Iacob feared not his owne deliverance, but that it should not bee without great slaughter; for even Iacob feareth concerning himselfe, lest hee will come and smite me. 2. Neither as Lyranus, was Iacob thus afraid, because hee was to goe thorow his brothers countrey, where hee and his might bee easily surprised; Pererius thinketh, that Edom was not in Iacobs way, being entred into the land of Canaan al|ready; but to goe unto Beerseba or Hebron, where Isaack dwelt, which was in the south part of Canaan, the way was by Idumea, which lay south to Canaan, Mercer. But this was not onely Iacobs feare: for Esau comming with 400. men, even out of his owne territory, had beene able to have spoyled Iacob and his company. 3. Nor yet did Iacob doubt of Gods promise, lest by reason of some sinnes which he might have committed in idolatrous Labans house, it should be suspended, as Lyranus againe thinketh; for Gods pro|mise was absolute, and renewed to Iacob at his departure out of Mesopotamia. 4. Neither was this only a sudden and involuntary feare, such as wise men naturally are subject unto upon a strange accident, as upon the noise of thunder, and some sudden evill message; but they doe recover themselves againe▪ whereas foo|lish men do continue in the same feare still, as Epictetus the Stoike distinguisheth of feare; but this was a iud|diciall and settled feare in Iacob as may appeare by his carefull preparation. 5. Wherefore we must confesse that Iacob sheweth his weaknesse and infirmity; that although looking to Gods promise hee had good confidence, yet turning himselfe to the present danger, he feared; Iacob while he prepareth himselfe, as the Hebrewes note, for three things, for warre, for prayer, for gifts, therein doth well; (for we must use all good meanes, at working under Gods providence,) yet in that he was perplexed with such a great feare, it was his infirmity, Calvin. Mercer.

QUEST. VII. What present it was that came to Iacobs hand.

Vers. 13. HE tooke of that which came to hand. 1. Not without any choyce, as we use to say, that which commeth next to hand; as Muscul. For it is not like that he would send a present of his worst cattell. 2. Some thinke he meaneth those cattell which came under his owne hand, which he had the keel|ping of himselfe; for so the pastorall charge is signified, sometime by the feet, Genes. 30.13. sometime by the hand, Genes. 32.16. and by the rod, Levit. 27.32. sic Iun. 3. But the plainer sense is, that he sent a present of such things which came into his hand, that is, were in his power: such as he had, he sent; he had no sil|ver or gold to send, but cattell, Mercer.

QUEST. VIII. Of divers kinds of gifts.

Vers. 13. A Present for Esau his brother; There are six sorts of presents or gifts. 1. Charitable gifts bestowed upon the poore, such as Cornelius gifts were, Act. 10. 2. Choyce gifts bestowed upon those whom we chiefly love; as Abrahams gifts to Isaack, and Iosephs to Benjamin. 3. Politike gifts, for the obtaining of friendship, such as Felix looked for at Pauls hand, Act. 24.27. 4. Covetous gifts, when by giving a little, one hopeth to obtaine a greater benefit, as the men of Tyrus and Sidon, by such gifts perswaded Blastus Herods chamberlaine to be a mediator for their peace, because their countrey was nourished by the Kings land, Act. 12.20. 5. There are gratulatory gifts, which one friend sendeth to another, to reljoyce with them, as the Jewes were commanded to doe, to testifie their joy for their deliverance from Hamans conspiracy, Esther 9.22. such a present did the King of Babel send to Hezekiah, after hee was recove|red from his sicknesse, 2 King. 20.12. 6. There are gifts of honour, testifying reverence and subjection; such presents the three wise men offered to Christ; such are the religious gifts employed for the service and ho|nour of God. 7. There are gifts of pacification, to appease the wrath of such as are offended; of which kind is Iacobs gift here, Muscul.

QUEST. IX. Of the number and kind of the cattell which Iacob sent.

Vers. 14. Two hundred she goats. 1. The whole number of all the cattell which Iacob sent, was 550. and so many were the sacrifices in the law, which were offered the whole yeare, as the Hebrewes note: beside they observe that every word of this verse endeth in Mem, the like is found Num. 29. and these eight mems they will have to signifie the eight Kings of Edom, Genes. 36. before there were any in Israel. 2. Further, they observe that Iacob in great discretion, knowing the nature of the cattell, did thus sort out the male and female; allotting one he goat to ten she goats, and one ram to ten ewes; but of labouring cat|tell, one bullock to foure cowes; of camels which are more employed, for every female a male; * for so they count the camels with their colts, to be but thirty in all; fiftene female, and fiftene male Camels, which were the colts: of the asses, which were not so much used for carriage as the Camels, there are assigned for two females, one male foale. 3. The Hebrewes are yet more curious in setting downe the times of coupling and comming together of creatures; as for asses once in a weeke, camels once in 30. dayes; they prescribe also for men; for labourers twice in a weeke, for those that labour not, oftner; but these Rabbines, pressing these matters so farre, doe but bewray the salacity and wantonnesse of their nation; and therefore they may be better omitted: ex Mercer.

QUEST. X. Of the ford Iabbock.

Vers. 20. HE rose up the same night. 1. This is not the same night mentioned vers. 13. but the night fol|lowing; the day comming betweene was sent in sorting out the cattell which Iacob sent for a present to Esau. 2. This ford Iabbock is in the borders of the Ammonites, running betweene Philadelphia and Gerasa, and falleth into Jordan, Hierom: some would have it so called of abuk, which signifieth to strive or wrastle, because Iacob there wrastled with God, which word is used vers. 24. Muscul. But it rather commeth of bakak, which is, to empty, because it was emptied into Jordan: and in this place it should seeme that Iacob was neare to Jordan, * where the two rivers joyned: because he saith, vers. 5.10. I came over this Iordan, Mercer. 3. Whereas there is mention made but of Iacobs eleven children, whereas hee had eleven sonnes and one daughter Dinah: the Hebrewes thinke that Iacob locked her up in a chest; and conjecture that it fell out as a punishment to Iacob, that she was defloured of the Sichemites, because hee refused to give her to Esau to wife, * who might have brought him to some goodnesse: but these are fri|volous conjectures: Dinah is omitted, because of her sex: the Scripture is not so carefull to take account of the women: and beside she was the youngest but Ioseph, not above six or seven yeare old,

Mercer. neither was Dinah a mother of the Israelites, as these eleven were fathers, and therefore not so diligently remembred.

QUEST. XI. Iacobs sight not spirituall or in vision, but reall and corporall.

Vers. 24. There wrestled a man with him to the breaking of the day. 1. This wrestling of God in the like|nesse of a man with Iacob, was neither spirituall only, as Hierome seemeth to think upon these words of Saint Paul, Ephes.6.12. We wrestle not against flesh and bloud, but against powers and principalities, &c. 2. Neither was it done in dreame, as R. Levi, who thinketh that Iacobs thigh might be hurt upon some other occasion, as by the wearinesse of his travell, and the cold in the night: and that hee dreamed of the same hurt. But Iacob had little list to sleepe, being in such feare of his brother: likewise the continuance of the wrestling till the morning, the reall and sensible hurt of his thigh, the imposition of a new name, the te|stimony of the Prophet Hosee, He had power over the Angell and prevailed, hee wept and prayed unto him, 12.4. all these arguments doe evidently shew, that this was a corporall and reall wrestling. 3. Neither yet was it only corporall, but spirituall also: for Iacob did as well contend by the strength of his Faith, as by the force of his body, Mercerus.

QUEST. XII. It was a good, not an evill Angell that Iacob wrestled with.

Further, a question is moved, what manner of Angell this was, with whom Iacob wrestled. 1. Origen thinketh he did strive against some of the spirituall adversaries, such as Saint Paul calleth Principalities and powers, and spirituall wickednesses, Ephes. 6.12. and that he was assisted by a good Angell, 3. lib. Periarch. Procopius reporteth the opinion of some, that say it was the devill in Esaus likenesse, that stri|ved against Iacob, and that by the power of an Angell he overcame, who lest he should ascribe this victo|ry to his owne strength, smote him upon the thigh: the Hebrewes say it was Sammael, Esaus evill Angel, that contended with Iacob for the blessing. 2. But these are untrue and improbable assertions: 1. Here is mention made but of one that Iacob wrestled with. 2. Hee that he wrestled with, was the same that bles|sed him. 3. He that strived with him, was the same that touched his thigh. Ergo, it was a good, not an evill Angell: for an evill Angell would not have blessed him, Mercer. Perer.

QUEST. XIII. Whether it were a ministring spirit, or God Christ with whom Iacob wrestled.

NEither was this any of the ministring Angels, but Christ the Son of God, here called a man, because he so appeared. Pererius striveth to prove that it was an Angell, and not Christ. 1. Hosea calleth him an Angell without any addition, 12.4. but when Christ is called an Angell, some other word is added; as the Angell of the covenant, Malach. 3.1. Cont. In that place the Prophet sheweth, that by the Angell, we must understand God: for he saith, He had power with God, and he had power over the Angell: and further he found him in Bethel: the Angell, with whom Iacob wrestled, was the same that spake to him in Bethel, but he was God, Gen. 31.13. I am the God of Bethel. Neither alwayes is an epithete added, when Christ is called an Angell: as Gen. 48.16. Iacob saith, The Angell which hath delivered mee from all evill blesse the children. But this Angell without any other addition is else-where called the God of Bethel. 2. If at any time in the old Testament the sonne of God appeared, it is most like in mount Sinai, when the Law was given, which was the most famous and Noble apparition of all: but S. Stevens saith, Yee have received the Law by the ordinance of Angels, Act. 7.53. Angels then appeared, not Christ, Perer. Cont. The Angels then were ministring Spirits, giving attendance, and executing their office, at the delivering of the Law: but it is no good argument, the Law was given by the Angels, Ergo not by Christ: for S. Paul affirmeth both, It was ordained by Angels in the hand of a Mediator, Galat. 3.19. the ministry was of the Angels, the authority of Christ. 3. If Christ had appeared at any time, then there was greatest cause, when word was sent to Ma|ry of the incarnation of the Sonne of God, both because of the worthinesse of that mystery, and dignity of the person, to whom that message was brought, Contra. 1. It was not fit that the Sonne of God himselfe should be the Messenger of his owne comming into the world: Princes use to send their Ministers and officers before, to bring tidings of their comming: and it was fit that this great Prince should send his Angels before, that it might appeare, that he was even Lord of the Angels. 2. There was greater reason, that the same Angell Gabriel, who was the first revealer of this prophetic to Daniel, concerning the Messiah, QUEST. XV. How it is said, he could not prevaile against Iacob.

Vers. 25. When he saw he could not prevaile. 1. Not that either God gave unto Iacob greater strength to resist, than the Angell had to assault him, as some of the Hebrewes thinke, that it was Esaus Angell, and so had no greater power than God permitted him▪ for it was no such Angell, as is shewed before. 2. Neither as Cajetane thinketh, Factum est ut Angelus assumeret corpus in ◇ mensura virium, &c. It came so to passe that the Angell assumed a body in such measure of strength as should not be able to overcome Iac•b. 3. Neither as Tostatus; Angelus <...> non posse superare; The Angell fained that he could not overcome Iacob: for I have declared before, that it was Christ himselfe, and not an Angell that wrestled with Iacob. 4. Wherefore in that it is said, when he saw, here the Lord descendeth to our capacity: for he knew before the event of this combat, and what he had purposed to doe: the experience then of the thing is taken for Gods knowledge, Calvin. and the Lord with the blast of his mouth had beene able to have confounded Iacob. But he could not prevaile, &c. that is, the Lord did both fight in and against Iacob: he gave Iacob strength to resist: and so in Iacob he overcommeth, and seipso ◇ est, and, so is stronger than himselfe, Calvin. Thus in effect God could not prevaile against Iacob, because hee would not: he disposeth of his power according to his owne will and purpose: so the Angell said to Lot, I can doe nothing till thou be come thither, Gen. 19.22. and the Lord to Moses thus saith, Let me alone, &c. Exod. 32.10. Hereby the Lord sheweth how effectually the faith and prayer of his servants are, which as it were binde the Lords hands, and doe give us victory (in a manner) against himselfe.

QUEST. XVI. In what place of the thigh Iacob was hurt.

Vers. 25. HE touched the hollow of his thigh. 1. This was neither the inward or broad part of the thigh, as the Septuagint read. 2. Neither yet was the huckle-bone put out of joynt, as some thinke, for that could not be without great paine and griefe to Iacob. 3. But whereas the word is cap, which signifieth the bowing or hollow, and so is taken for the palme of the hand, and sole of the foot: here it properly betokeneth the hollow bone into the which the huckle-bone called ischion runneth: we may name it acetabulum, the pan of the huckle-bone: this hollow bone was not out of joynt, but it onely hanged by reason of the sinew or nerve that goeth out of the pan or hollow to the huckle-bone which was hurt, as it is expressed, vers. 32.

QUEST. XVII. How long Iacob continued in his halting.

NOW whereas Tostatus thinketh, that Iacob the next day was perfectly recovered of this hurt, to whom Iunius subscribeth, because cap. 33.18. it is said that Iacob came safe to Sichem▪ I thinke rather with Mercerus, that Iacob was not perfectly recovered of this griefe and halting till his dying day▪ but that it remained, though not alwayes alike, for the remembrance of this thing: and it may so appeare the rather, for that presently upon this accident they did forbear to eat the sinew of the thigh which shranke: whereunto the halting of Iacob being continually in their fight might be a greater motive: and so this custome being taken up in Iacobs time, was retained of his posterity the Israelites. Further, in that he came safe to Sechem, thereby it signified his deliverance from the danger which he feared by his brother Esau, rather than the recovering of his hurt.

QUEST. XVIII. Wherefore it pleased God that Iacob should halt upon the hurt in the thigh.

And the hollow of Iacobs thigh was loosed. 1. Augustine by Iacobs feet, the one halting, the other going upright, understandeth two sorts of people among the Jewes; the unbelievers that halted in their faith, and beleevd not in Christ, and those which beleevd in him: Iacob overcoming signifieth the Jewes that prevailed against Christ in putting him to death; but in being blessed he signifieth those which worshipped Christ, and were blessed of him, serm. 80. de temper. 2. Gregory understandeth by the halting foot, the infirmity of the flesh, by the other, the vigour of the spirit; for so in the children of God, as our Saviour saith to his Apostles, The spirit is ready, but the flesh ◇◇ , sic. Muscul. 3. But the best appliication of the text is, that Iacob was stricken with this infirmity, that he should have an humble and lowly opinion of himselfe, not to ascribe this victory to his owne strength: So for the same cause Saint Paul confesseth of himselfe, Lest I should be exalted ◇◇ of ◇◇ through the abundance of revelations, there ◇◇ given unto me a pricke in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to b•ff• me, because I should not ◇◇ exalted above measure, 2 Cor. 12.7. To the same end was Iacob touched with this infirmity lest he might have beene ◇◇ much lifted up by these heavenly visions, and this great victory which he obtained, Mercer. Calvin.

QUEST. XIX. Why the Angell ◇◇ to depart because of the morning.

Vers. 26. Let me goe, for the morning appeareth. 1. Not as though the Angell was now to goe to the rest of the blessed company of the Angels, to sing their morning hymne unto God, as the Helbrewes imagine: for the Angels not onely in the morning, but at other times are exercised in praising of God. 2. But the Angell thus speaketh according to the custome of men, having now taken the forme and shape of a man, as though he had haste to other businesse, and leaving Iacob also to his affaires. 3. As also because the Angell would not have this vision deserved and discerned of others, seeing it specially concerned Iacob; and that Iacob should not be too curious in gazing and looking upon that humane shape wherein this great Angell Christ appeared, Mercer.

QUEST. XX. Why Iacob desireth the Angell to blesse him.

I Will not let thee goe unlesse thou blesse me. 1. Not as though this were Esaus Angell, and Iacob would have him to confirme the blessing, and consent unto it, for evill Angels blesse not. 2. Nor as some other Helbrewes, as though Iacob would have his antagonist acknowledge him to be the superiour, and to have the better: for Iacob perceiveth that it was an Angell, and therefore would not strive for superiority with him. 3. Neither doth Iacob desire to know his f•tum, or ◇◇ , as Iosephus saith, what should happen ••|to him in his whole life, for Iacob was not so curious. 4. But Iacob well perceiving that he with whom hee wrestled was greater than himselfe, desireth to be blessed of him, for the lesse is blessed of the greater, Heb. 7.7. And Hilarie beside noteth, that Iacob acknowledged him with whom he wrestled to bee the Sonne of God, that should become man for us; Tenes in l^octa tua hominem. sed hic tibi home Demest; Thou doest grapple with a man, but this man is God, lib. 5. de Trinitat. and therefore Iacob desireth to be blessed of him, in whom all the world should be blessed.

QUEST. XXI. Of the name Israel, and the true derivation thereof.

Vers. 28. THy name shall be no more called Iacob, but Israel, &c. 1. He asketh Iacobs name, not because he knew it not, but that by Iacobs answer the Lord might take occasion of the change of his name. 2. Neither was he so called Israel, as that he should no more be named Iacob, for he is also afterward so called, but his name Israel is hereby declared to be the more excellent and worthy name, which was also given unto the whole nation of his posterity, Mercer. 3. The name Israel, 1. doth not signifie, that hee stood against an Angell, as Iosephus deriveth it, and Hierome therefore reprehendeth him: although Iosephus keepeth the sense of the name. 2. Neither is it interpreted, a man seeing God; for then aleph should be inserted in the beginning, and it should be expressed Ishrael, not Israel, with shin having a right point. This interpretation is also confuted by Hierome, though approved by divers of the ancient writers, as Ori/gen, Basil, Nazianzen, Chrysostome, with others. 3. Neither doth it betoken one that is right, or directed of God, as Hierome sometime is of opinion; whereupon he thinketh, that Genesis is called the booke 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, of the right, that is, of Abraham, Isaack, Iacob, comment. in Isay 44. for then this word should be derived from jashar; and so we should say Ishrael, not Israel, Mercer. 4. But the Lord himselfe sheweth the interpretation of this name, Thou hast prevailed with God: and so to come of Sara, which is to prevaile, or have rule: so the Septuag. translate: 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, thou hast had strength with God; and therefore should not doubt but that he might also prevaile with men, as before with Laban, so now with Esau.

QUEST. XXII. Why the Lord refuseth to tell Iacob his name.

Vers. 29. TEll me I pray thee thy name, &c. The Lord here, as also the Angell, Iud. 13. refuseth to tell his name. 1. Not for that as Rasi thinketh, the Angels have no certaine or fixed names, but which are continually changed according to their divers ministeries whereof they are named. 2. Neither as Tostatus, because the Angels have no proper names to be distinguished by, but are discerned one from another by their nature and essence: for this notwithstanding in Scripture, for our understanding, they are called by their names. 3. Nor yet because as some thinke, if the names of Angels were knowne, they would come at our call: this is but a fansie of Magitians, ex Mercer. 4. But the Lord doth not utter his name, thereby staying Iacobs further curiosity, and insinuating unto him, that his name, which is himselfe, is greater than could of him then he comprehended: and hereupon the Latine text, and the Septuag. adde, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which is wonderfull; which words are supplied out of the 13. of Iudges, Mercer. And beside, the time was not yet come, whereby the Lord would make himselfe knowne by his name Iehovah, as unto Moses, Exod. 6.3. and therefore Iacob should content himselfe with that revelation of God, which the Lord vouchsafed unto him, Calvin.

QUEST. XXIII. What manner of blessing was bestowed upon Iacob.

Vers. 29. HE blessed him there. 1. This was neither as the Hebrewes imagine, that this Angell confir|med onely and ratified the blessing pronounced before by Isaack. 2. Neither yet, as Thom. Anglieus, was the imposition of this new name the benediction here spoken of. 3. But the Lord did ex|pressly blesse Iacob, most like in that forme and manner wherein he blessed Abraham, In thy seed shall the Nations of the world be blessed, Luther. and more particularly, what this blessing was may be gathered out of the 35. chap. vers. 10, 11. whereas the imposition of Iacobs new name is repeated, so also it is like there in commemoration of the same blessing, Mercer.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the place called Peniel.

Vers. 30. Iacob called the name of the place Peniel. 1. As before Iacob to testifie his thankfulness, called the place Bethel, where he saw the vision of the ladder; so he calleth this place Peniel, that his posterity by that name might call to remembrance this heavenly vision in that place shewed to their father Iacob. 2. The Latine readeth Phaniel, but the word is Peniel, with a, not e, and without an aspiration: it is called here both Peniel and Penuel, which both signifie the face of God. 3. In this place afterward was builded a City called Penuel, whose tower Gedeon brake downe, because they denied him bread, Iud. 8.17. but it was reedified by Ieroboam, 1 King. 12.25. it was situate by Jorden, Iud. 8.4.8. and belonged to the tribe of Gad. Strabomaketh mention of a City joyned to Tripolis, called the face of God, where the mountaine Libanus endeth, Lib. 16.

QUEST. XXIV. How Iacob saw God face to face.

I Have seene God face to face. 1. Not that Iacob saw the majestie and essence of God, which never any mortall man hath seene. 2. Nor yet in respect of any outward figure or representation is he said to see him face to face, as Thom. Aquin. p. 1. qu. 12. ar. 11. for God is said to talke face to face with Israel, Deut. 5.4. and yet there was no image or representation seene, Deut. 4.15. 3. But Iacob saw him face to face, that is, more clearely and manifestly than at any time before, Calvin. or he saw him, praesens praesentem, he himselfe talked with God present: as God is said to speake to Moses mouth to mouth, Num. 12 Mercer.

QUEST. XXV. How Iacobs life was preserved after he had seene God.

And my life is preserved, &c. 1. It was the common opinion of those times, that they should not live after they had seene God: as Iud. 1.12. Manoah saith, we shall surely die because we have seene God: therefore they rejoyced, when after they had seene God their life was preserved: as Iacob doth in this place, and Hagar, Gen. 16.13. 2. But therein they were deceived, thinking when an Angell had appeared unto them, that they had seene the very Majestie of God himselfe, which cannot be seene of any mortall creature: and therefore the Lord saith to Moses, No man shall see me and live: that is, in this life: as the Go|spell also saith, no man hath seene God at any time, Ioh. 1.18. therefore Augustine saith, Videri Deus in illa tantum vita potest, ubi ut vivatur, est huic mortali vita moriendum: God can be seene onely in that life, where to live, we must first die unto this life.

QUEST. XXVI. Of the Jewes custome in not eating of sinewes.

Vers. 32. Therefore the children of Israeleat not of the sinew, &c. 1. This custome was not taken up of the Jewes of any superstition, which that simple age was not given unto, but of a reverent remembrance of this which befell Iacob according to the pedagogie and rudiments of that time, Calvin. 2. Neither did the Jewes abstaine from the eating of all sinewes, as Rupert thinketh, but onely of the sinewes of the hinder parts: and because they knew not where these sinewes he, they doe refrain from the eating of the flesh also of the hanch and hinder parts: which custome, Iosephus saith, remained till his time. 3. Whether Iacob were stricken in the right or left thigh is uncertaine: but it is most like in the right, where a mans strength chiefly lieth, and that he might better beare in minde this com|bat, Mercer.

QUEST. XXVII. The sinew why it is said to shrinke.

Vers. 32. OF the sinew that shranke. 1. It is a toy of some Hebrewes that would have this to be the sinew where the fore-skin is, for that could not have caused Iacob to halt, as Aben Ezra noteth, Mercer. 2. Some doe translate, the sinew lifted up, of nasha, because the thigh that halteth seemeth to be lift up: some derive it of nashath, which is to be wanting; as Iunius first translateth, Nervum defectionis, the short wanting or failing sinew, because it is shorter than his fellowes: but in his last addition he readeth, Nervum mutuationis, the borrowed sinew, of the root nasha, which is to borrow, because certaine sinewes are as it were borrowed out of the pan of the huckle-bone, and communicated to the round or whirle-bone. Mercerus deriveth the word of nashah, which signifieth to forget; as though this sinew or nerve had forgotten his place, and to doe his office. But the more received reading is the nerve or sinew, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, which shranke or waxed feeble: for so nashah also signifieth to remove, or give way: and so vers. 25. it is said the hollow of Iacobs thigh was loosed out of his place.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Not one Angell, but many appointed for every one of the elect.

Vers. 1. The Angels of God met him. Iacob then had many Angels to attend upon him and to guard him; therefore it is but a conceit, that every man hath one particular Angell appointed for his keeper, or that speciall Angels are assigned to Countreyes as their quarters; seeing that Iacob here hath many Angels, even an hoast and armie of them deputed of God for his protection, Calvin. as the Psalmist saith, He shall give his Angels charge over thee, to keepe thee in all thy wayes, Psal. 91.11.

2. Doct. The parts of prayer.

Vers. 10. I Am not worthy. Iacobs prayer standeth of three parts, which are required also in our prayers. 1. His thanksgiving and commendation of Gods benefits. 2. His humility in acknowledging his owne unworthinesse. 3. His petition and request, Mercerus; so the Apostle joyneth together giving of thanks, supplications, prayers, 1 Tim. 2.1.

3. Doct. We must trust in God and not refuse the meanes.

Vers. 13. HE tooke of that which came to hand. Although Iacob doubted not of Gods protection according to his promise, yet he wisely useth all the meanes which he could devise to seeke his brothers favour, by sending a present, and to provide for his safety; whereby we doe learne, that we must not immediately depend upon Gods providence, but carefully use the meanes which the Lord sheweth for our deliverance from danger, or confirmation in his promises: therefore Aha is said to grieve God, for that he refused to aske a signe of God for the better assurance of their deliverance, Isay 7.13.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against merits.

Vers. 10. I Am not worthy, or lesse than all thy mercies. Iacob ascribeth nothing to his merit or worthinesse, but acknowledgeth all to have proceeded of Gods mercie. Thus our Saviour teacheth his Disciples humbly to confesse of themselves; when you have done all that is commanded you, say yee are unprofitable servants, Luk. 17.10. Muscul. The popish doctrine then of merits is not agreeable to Iacobs faith. And if the benefits of this life cannot be merited, much lesse the Kingdome of heaven.

2. Confut. That Angels are not mediators or impetrators of grace and blessings.

Vers. 29. HE blessed him there, &c. Theodoret alleageth this as a reason that this was not an Angel, but the Sonne of God that wrestled with Iacob, because it belonged not to Angels, but unto God to blesse: Pererius taketh upon him to confute Theodorets reasons, affirming, that Angels though they blesse not as authors of any grace, yet a blessing may be asked of them as the impetrators and inter|cessors for the same at the hands of God; and therefore Saint Iohn wisheth grace and peace to be given to him that was, and is, and is to come, and from the seven spirits which are before the throne, Apocal. 14. that is, from the seven Angels: In Gen. 32. numer. 18, 19.

Contra. 1. Spirituall blessings are conferred either by the author thereof, which is onely God, or by the Mediator thereof, which is onely Christ, or by the ministers or instruments thereof, which may be as well Angels as men; for as Isaack blessed Iacob, and Iacob his sonnes, ministerially onely, as being Gods mouth to pronounce them; so Angels likewise may be messengers or ministers of Gods blessing, and not otherwise. 1. For every good gift commeth from God, Iam. 1.17. 2. Neither are the Angels to be sued unto for any spirituall or temporall blessing, but onely God; If any of you lacke wisdom, let him aske it of God, Iam. 1.5. and our Saviour saith, Whatsoever yee shall aske the father in my name, he will give it you, Ioh. 16.23. a promise is made to them that aske in Christs name, and not otherwise: neither doe we reade that any of the ancient Patriarks or Prophets became suters to the Angels for any blessing. 3. In that place in the Revelation,* by the seven spirits we must understand the holy spirit of God, with his manifold graces; for the seven spirits are the seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, Revel. 4.5. they are also the seven eyes of the Lambe, Revel. 5.6. the Angels are not the eyes, that is, the wisdom or knowledge of the Lambe, but the holy Ghost, which dwelleth in him bodily, Coloss. 2.9. that is, substantially, essen|tially: And whereas he urgeth that phrase, Which are before the throne, whereby a ministerie and service should be expressed, this collection is not sound; for both in Daniel 7.13. Christ is brought before the Ancient of dayes; and in the Revelation 8.2. he is the Angell that stood before the Altar: Neither in all Saint Pauls salutations doth he wish grace and peace from any other than from God the Father; and the Lord Iesus; nor yet Saint Iohn 2. Epist. vers. 2. this forme of benediction then here used must be expoun|ded by the like place of Scripture.

6. Places of exhortation.

1. Exhort. Prayer in extremity availeable.

Vers. 9. MOreover Iacob said, O God of my father Abraham. Iacob being driven to a great strait, tur|neth himselfe unto God by earnest prayer: and so indeed the prayers of the faithfull which are powred forth in their necessity, are much availeable with God, Luther. as it is in the Psalme, Call upon me in the day of trouble and I will deliver thee, Psal. 51.15.

2. Exhort. The hope of our celestia|ll inheritance to be preferred before all worldly things.

Vers. 14. TWO hundred shee goats, &c. The summe of Iacobs present which hee sent to Esau amounted to five hundred and fifty cattell of divers kinds, as is shewed before, quest. 9. hee spared no to redeeme his quiet passage and returne into the land of Canaan, which was promised to him and his seed for an everlasting inheritance: which teacheth us that we should pre••rre <◇> heavenly inheritance be|fore all earthly and worldly possessions, Calvin. <◇> Saint <...> all things <◇> , and even as <◇> , that hee might win Christ, Philip. 3.8.

3. Exhort. With i•o•ce•y we must •oyne wisdom and prudence.

Vers. 13. A Present for his brother. Iacob as a wife and 〈...〉 for his owne safety. 1. He sendeth an humble message to his brother. 2. When that would not speed, he divideth his company into two parts, that if Esau did strike the one, the other might cope. 3. He sendeth a liberall present to make a way to insinuate himselfe to his brothers favour. Thus according to our Saviours rule, we should be as wise as Serpents, and innocent as Doves, M•th. 10.16. Mercer.

4. Exhort. Importunity in our prayers acceptable to God.

Vers. 26. I Will not let thee goe till thou blesse me. Iacobs importunity is striving and not giving over, both obtaineth victory, and procureth a blessing: so should we strive in our prayers with God, as Saint Paul saith of Epaphras, Coloss. 4.12. And Moses was so instant with God in his earnest prayers for Israel, that the Lord at his request suspended the judgements which hee had thought to have brought upon them because of their idolatry, Exod. 32. Luther.

5. Exhort. Against curiosity.

Vers. 29. Wherefore now dost thou aske my name? Iacob is reprov'd for his curiosity, that could not bee contented with this heavenly vision, and sensible apparition, glorious victory, and honourable name given unto him, but would enquire further as touching the Angels name. Wee learne then to bee contented with such measure of knowledge as it pleaseth God to reveale unto us in his word, and not curiously to inquire after hid matters, Calvin. The Disciples were reprov'd for gazing after Christ into heaven, Act. 2. neither shall it be any profit for us to exercise our selves in difficult and intricate questions.

6. Exhort. Not rashly to judge those which have defects or infirmities in their bodies.

Vers. 31. HE halted upon his thigh. We see then that the servants of God may have infirmities in their bodies, which are inflicted of God, not as punishments of their sinne, but corrections for their triall. If Isaack then were blinde, Iacob halting, L•h squint eyed, Moses 〈◇〉, Maph•/sethlame, wee ought not rashly to judge of those which have any infirmity or defect in their body, Muscul. It was the Disciples rashnesse, for the which they are reprov'd of Christ, to judge the blind man punished for his, or his parents sinne, Ioh. 9.2.

CHAP. XXXIII.

I. The Contents.

IN this Chapter is set forth, first, Iacobs meeting of Esau, and the manner thereof: Secondly, their departure each from the other. In the first part, on Iacobs behalfe wee have his policie, in placing of his wives and children in order, vers. 1, 2. his humility, in gesture, bowing himselfe seven times; in speech, hee calleth himselfe Esaus servant, vers. 5. and saith he had seene his face, as if he had seene the face of God, vers. 10. his liberality, in forcing his brother Esau to take his present, vers. 11.

In Esau we are to consider his humanity, in imbracing Iacob, vers. 4. his courtesie, in offering first to goe with Iacob, who excuseth himselfe by the tendernes of his children and cattell, vers. 13. then to leave some of his company with him, vers. 15, 16.

In Iacobs departure there is expressed his acts domesticall, in building an house for himselfe, and booths for his cattell, first in Succoth, then Sechem, vers. 17, 18. politicall or civill, in buying a parcell of ground; religious, in building an Altar, vers. 20.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. The order of Iacobs company, and the reason thereof.

Vers. 1. HE divided the children, &c. Iacob doth dispose his company in order, not onely for decency and comelinesse sake▪ but both to move commiseration and pitie in Esau, when he saw the mothers with their children, as also to this end, that if he smote one company with the sword, the other might escape, and therefore he placeth the dearest unto him, Rachel with Ioseph in the last place, as furthest from danger, Mercer. 2. But whereas Ioseph of Rachel, is preferred before Iudah of L••b, it may be answered, that •s yet it was not revealed unto him that the Messiah should come of Iudah: and Ioseph also proved a most excellent man, Calvin. 3. Iacob goeth first himselfe ready to be offered up in sacrifice for the safety of the flocke, therein shewing himselfe an example of a good Pastor, Calvin.

QUEST. II. To whom Iacob bowed himselfe, and wherefore.

Vers. 3. HE bowed seven times to the ground. 1. He adored not or worshipped God in this inclining and bowing of himselfe, as some thinke, but he bowed himselfe to his brother, as the text sheweth, Mercer. 2. There were divers fashions used in bending and bowing of the body; sometime by bowing of the head, and inclining of the body, sometime by bowing of the knee, 1 King. 19.18. sometime by kissing the hand, * as Iob. 31.27. If my mouth did kisse my hand, that is, if I adore the Sunne when he shined: as this use is retained still in salutations to kisse the hand: sometime they bowed the body to the ground, as Nathan did to David, 1 King. 1.23. and Iacob in this place to Esau, Perer. 3. Neither doth Iacob by this meanes betray or give over his birth-right, in calling himselfe *Esau*s servant, but he is content to yeeld this temporall service to Esau, not doubting but the promise should be fulfilled in his posterity: for so indeed the Idumeans did serve the Israelites from Dauids time to Ioram, an hundred and twenty years, but the Israelites never served the Idumeans, Mercer.

QUEST. III. Whether Esau were in truth reconciled to Iacob.

Vers. 4. Then Esau came to meet him. 1. Some Hebrewes thinke that Esau did but dissemble his affection at this time. 2. But it is more like that *Esau*s heart was changed by the speciall worke of God; some doe gather so, because the word vajecabechehu, which signified, He kissed him, is pointed throughout, of which sort the Masorites note but fiftene: But it is otherwise collected, both by the circumstances here used, Esau runneth to meet Iacob, he embraceth him, kisseth him, and weepeth: as also we reade not of any hatred after this shewed to Iacob, but that they were perfectly reconciled, and both buried their father together, Gen. 35.29. 3. But whereas some inferre hereupon, that Esau being thus ready to be reconciled to Iacob, did follow his fathers precepts and doctrine, and therefore doubt not but that he was saved, it cannot be hence concluded; certaine it is that Esau posterity did wholly fall away from the worship of God, Mercer.

QUEST. IV. Why Ioseph is named before Rachel.

Vers. 7. After Ioseph and Rachel drew neare, &c. 1. Ioseph is not put before Rachel, that he might keepe her from Esau his rage and violence, lest hee might desire her being a beautifull woman, as R. Salomon: for Ioseph was but six yeare old, and therefore not able to preserve his mother from any such attempts. 2. Some thinke because Ioseph was *Rachel*s onely sonne, and dearly beloved of her, he is named first, Mercer. 13. But it is more like, that Ioseph being the youngest of all the rest, went before his mother, as mothers use to put their little ones first, and so he is named according to his place, Iun.

QUEST. V. Why Esau refused Iacobs present.

Vers. 8. What meanest thou by all this drove? &c. 1. The Hebrewes note, that Esau his questions are short; Iacobs answers large: because it is the manner of proud stately men to speake briefly, and hardly to bring forth halfe their words: and beside, Iacob often in his speech maketh menti|on of God, so doth not Esau. 2. Esau asketh not whose droves these were, as ignorant thereof, but be|cause he would in Iacobs presence take occasion to refuse the present, <◇> 2. It seemeth that Esau had not accepted of the present by the way which Iacob had sent before, no• as Ramban thinketh, as though the messengers were afraid of Esaus company, and so fled away: neither did Esau refuse it of hatred to his brother, for Iacobs prayer was heard, and it began presently to take effect: neither yet doth Esau in refusing the present, yeeld therein the birth-right to Iacob, but he deserteth the receipt thereof till he came to Iacob, that he might shew his brotherly affection frankly and freely, not purchased before, or procured by any gift or present, Iun.

QUEST. VI. How Iacob saith he had seene the face of Esau at the face of God.

Vers. 10. I Have seene thy face, as if I had seene the face of God. 1. Iacob flattereth not as some thinke, to insinuate himselfe to his brother, sic Tostat. but he speaketh from his heart. 2. Neither, as the Hebrewes, doth Iacob to terrifie his brother make mention of that vision wherein he saw the Angell face to face. 3. Not yet doth he meane as the Chalde readeth, that he had seene the face, as of some great or excellent man. 4. Not as Augustine conj•ctureth, by the name of God here doth hee understand such as the gods of the Gentiles were; Sic non prajudicatur honori Dei; And so these words doe not prejudice the honour of the true God, in that he resembleth Esaus face to the face of God, quaest. 105. in Genes. for Iacob was farre off from assuming into his mouth the name of the heathen gods. 5. But in the effect Iacob saith thus much, that he acknowledged this to be Gods worke, that Esau was thus reconciled toward him: and the friendly countenance of his brother hee taketh as an argument of the favour of God toward him, Mercer. Calvin. Iun.

QUEST. VII. By what reason Iacob perswaded Esau to accept of his present.

Vers. 11. Take my blessing. Iacob useth divers reasons to perswade Esau to take his present: 1. Take it of my hand, that is, who am thy brother, Marlor. 2. He calleth it a blessing, not in the pas/sive sense, as where with God had blessed him, but in the active, they used to blesse in the offering of their gifts: this therefore should be a signe of perfect reconciliation, that thereby they should take occasion one to blesse another, Mercer. 3. It is brought the•, that is, I have sorted it out, and appointed it for thee, let me not lose my labour. 4. I have enough, God hath blessed me: it shall be no hinderance unto mee if thou accept of my present, Vatab.

QUEST. VIII. Whether Iacob lied in saying he would goe to mount Seir to his brother.

Vers. 14. Till I come to my Lord into Seir. 1. Some thinke that Iacob did goe to Seir to his brother, though it be not mentioned in the story: but it appeareth by Iacobs excuse, that if he fealred to accompany his brother in the way, he had greater cause to feare his brother at home in his owne Countrey. 2. Some thinke that this was officio s•m mendacium, an officious lie, Tostat. and that Iacob pro|mised one thing, and purposed another, Calvin. But where the Patriarks acts may otherwise be defended, we should not easily yeeld them to be infirmities. 3. The Hebrewes make a mystery here; as where Ia/cob saith, Let my Lord goe before, and I will follow; they apply it to Esaus posterity, who had the govern|ment of Kings 600. yeares before Israel had any King: and in that Iacob promiseth to goe up to Seir, they referre the accomplishment thereof till the comming of Messiah, according to the prophesie of Obadiah, vers. 21. The Saviours shall come vp to mount Sion, to judge the mount of Esau. But it is evident that Iacob here hath no such mysticall meaning, speaking of his owne comming, in his owne person. 4. Wherefore it is rather like that Iacob did thinke to goe to Seir, and so purposed, but yet conditionally, if God would, or if he should see nothing to the contrary, Iun. As all such promises are hypotheticall and conditionall; and that upon better reasons he afterward changed his minde, or was otherwise directed by the Lord, Lyranus. As Saint Paul purposed to goe into Spaine, but it is like that he was otherwise letted and came not thithither.

QUEST. IX. Whether Saint Paul according to his purpose were ever in Spaine.

ANd here by the way, though it be the opinion of divers ancient writers, as of Cyrrillus, Athanasius, Chrysostome, Hierome, to whom subscribe Tostatus, Pererius, that Saint Paul according to his determination was in Spaine: yet it is more probable, that being otherwise hindered hee arrived not there at all. 1. Because he purposed to passe by Rome into Spaine, Rom. 15.28. and to be brought on his way thitherward by the disciples of Rome, vers. 24. But when Saint Paul came to Rome, he remained as a prisoner in his house, having a souldier appointed to keepe him, and so continued two yeares, Act. 28.16, 30. therefore it is not like that he was at liberty then to hold his purpose. 2. Saint Paul being at Rome, if he were thence delivered, which is uncertaine, did visit the East Churches presently, Heb. 13.19. that I may be restored to you more quickly; and purposed to continue and remaine with them, Philip. 1.25. This I am sure, that I shall abide, and with you all continue. If he quickly and speedily returned to the East Churches, and continued with them, it is not like that hee went so farre West-ward. It was an usuall thing with the Apostle to faile in these purposes, in disposing of his journeyes; sometime otherwise directed by Gods spirit, Act. 16.7. sometime letted by Satan, 1 Thessalon. 2.18. sometime upon better reason altering his owne purpose, 2 Corinth. 1.15, 23. he stayed his journey which he had determined to <...> like sort the Apostles determination to goe into Spaine might upon some other accident be changed. 4. Of this judgement is Gelasius, <◇> ad Hispanos se promissit ••urum, dispositione divinum <...> patus ex causis, implore non potuit quod promittit, C. 22. q. 2. c. 5. Paul promising to goe into Spaine, being occupied in other greater cause by the divine disposition, could not <◇> that which he had promised: to him subscribeth Tho. Aquin. cap. 15. ad Roman.

QUEST. X. Whether Iacob came to Salem.

Vers. 18. HE came safe to Sechem, &c. 1. Some reade, he came to Salem a City of Sechem•, <...> Sep|tuag. and Latine translator, and Mercer. but it were superfluous in the same place <◇> call a City by two names. 2. This Salem some would have to be Silo, as some Hebrewes: some take it <◇> •elrusalem, as Iosephus; some for Melchisedecks towne, as Hierome; where the ruines of Melchisedecks Palace were to be seene in his time: some will have this Salem to be that Salem spoken of, Ioh. 3.23. where Iohn Baptist baptized: * and that Salem and Sichem were names of that same City first called Salem, afterward Sichem, Tostat. But all these opinions are uncertaine. Silo and Sechem were two distinct places, Iud. 21.19. Salem Melchisedecks towne was Jerusalem, Psal. 76.2. In Shalem i•his Tabernacle, his dwelling in Sion: and if Sichem were the new name, Salem the old, it should in the Gospell be called by the new name rather than the old: and that Salem was a divers place from Sechem, called Sychar, is evident: for Salem was in Judea, Ioh. 3.23. and our Saviour leaving Judea came to Sychar or Sichem, Iohn 4.6. there might be then another towne beside Jerusalem, called Salem, but not the same with Sichem. 3. Wherefore the better reading is, that Iacob came safe and in peace to Sechem: not for that he was now healed of his halting, as the Hebrewes imagine: which in part remained still as a monument of that combat with the Angell: but he came same safe in respect of the danger which he feared from the hands of Esau.

QUEST. XI. Whether Iacob did well in buying a peece of ground of the Sichemites.

Vers. 19. HE bought a parcell of ground, &c. Although Iacob had a promise to possesse and inherit the whole land of Canaan, yet this purchase which he made did neither shew any mistrust in him, neither did he in so doing depart from his right. 1. He did it for his necessity of dwelling, as Abraham had done the like before for buriall. 2. The time of fulfilling the promise was not yet come, and therefore Iacob at this time, while the Canaanites were possessors of this land, doth not prejudice his right in buying this parcell, Mercer. 3. It was no great parcell of ground that he could buy for so little money, nor yet very fruitfull, being in the sight and view of the City, Calvin.

QUEST. XII. Whether Iacob bought his ground for money or lambs.

Vers. 19. FOR an hundred peeces of money. 1. Some read, for an hundred lambs; for the word chesita signifieth both money and a lambe, sic Septuag. Latin. Oleaster; and so they would have the word taken, Iob 42.11. where every one of Iobs friends gave him a lamb. But it is more like they gave him every one a peece of money, which was a greater gift, and more sutable to the other gift of an earring of gold. 2. Some of the Hebrewes affirme that the Arabians call money chesita, but the Scripture needeth not to begge or borrow words or phrases from them. 3. Wherefore it is like that this k•sit was a peece of money that was stamped with the marke or print of a lambe, and thereof was so called, Iun. as among us, Angels are so named of the stampe or print set upon the gold.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Honour to be given to evill magistrates.

Vers. 3. Iacob bowed himselfe seven times. It is lawfull then to yeeld externall honour to evill magistrates that are in authority, as here Iacob doth to Esau, Mercer. as Saint Paul saith, Give to all men their duty, tribute to whom tribute, custome to whom custome, &c. honour to whom honour belongeth, Rom. 13.7. And at this time there were none other but heathen rulers: Mordechai indeed refused to bow the knee to Haman, because it was more than a civill reverence which that proud man expected: and beside he was an Agagite or Amalekite, which was a Nation accursed of God, Exod. 17.14.

2. Doct. God turneth the heart.

Vers. 4. ESau ran to meet him. Thus wee see, that God is not onely a searcher of the heart, but a worlker and changer of it: as here Esau his heart is altered, of an enemie hee suddenly becom|meth a friend: wherefore the Wiseman saith, That God turneth the hearts of Kings, as the vessell upon the waters is ruled and turned by the steares-man, Prov. 21.1.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against humane inventions.

Vers. 20. HE set up there an Altar. Iacob inventeth not, neither bringeth in new ceremonies into Gods worship, but such as he had received from the instruction of his fathers, directed by the spirit of God: such was the building of Altars to sacrifice upon: by this the Romanists are reprov'd, which have thrust into Gods service so many humane inventions, Calvin. and so our Saviours rebuke falleth up|on them, They teach for doctrines the commandment of men, Mark. 7.3.

2. Confut. The sacred signes called by the name of the things.

Vers. 20. HE called it the mighty God. If this reading be received, we see that the signes are named by the things: as here the Altar is called of God, and Moses nameth his Altar, The Lord is my banner; Exod. 17.15. so the Prophet saith, the name of new Jerusalem shall be, The Lord is there, Ezech. 48.35. We need not marvell then if the bread in the Eucharist be called the body of Christ.

6. Morall observations.

1. Morall. To be contented with our estate.

Vers. 11. GOd hath had mercy on me, therefore I have all things. So Saint Paul saith, I have learned in what state soever I am, therewith to be contented, I can be abased, I can abound, &c. I am able to doe all things through the hope of Christ, which strengtheneth me, Philip. 4.13.

2. Morall. Gods worship to be advanced in families.

Vers. 20. HE set up there an Altar. Iacob having settled himselfe, and pitched his Tabernacle, hath a speciall care to set forward Gods worship, and doth consecrate as it were a Chapell and Altar to God: wherein Iacob may be an example to all housholders, that they should exercise and traine up their families in the service of God, and season all their worldly affaires with a relish of religion: as the Apostle saith, I will that men pray every where, lifting up pure hands, &c.

CHAP. XXXIV.

1. The Method and Contents.

FIrst in this Chapter is set forth the ravishing of Dinah by Sechem, with the occasion thereof, vers. 1. the sequele, he desireth her to be his wife, vers. 3, 4.

Secondly, the punishment is described, which was brought upon the whole City for this sinne: this punishment is devised, then executed: In the device, 1. We have the motive, the grieve of Iacob, and wrath of his sonnes. 2. The occasion, the offer of mariage by Hemor and Sechem, vers. 8, 13. 3. The device is propounded, vers. 13. to 18. assented unto by Hemor, vers. 18, 19. perswaded to his Citizens, to vers. 25. Then it is cruelly executed by Simeon and Levi, vers. 25, to 30.

Thirdly, there followeth the expostulation of Iacob with his sonnes, and their excuse, vers. 30, 31.

2. The divers readings.

v. 1. which she bare to Iacob: this clause is wanting in the Latine translation. *

v. 2. forced or ravished her. H. C. S. defiled her. G. humbled her. S. P. afflicted her. T. gn•vah, to afflict.

v. 3. he pleased his minde in Dinah. C. his heart clave unto Dinah. caet. dabach, to cleave.

v. 5. which when Iacob heard. H. Iacob heard, that he had defiled Dinah his daughter, caet.

v. 7. they were very angry. H. they were pricked and grieved. S. they were much moved and very angry. Ch. they grieved at it and were angry. caet.

v. 7. it shall not be so. S. P. he had committed an unlawfull thing. H. which thing ought not to be done: caet.

v. 8. the soule of my sonne Sechem cleaveth to your daughter. H. my sonne Sychem hath chosen from his heart your daughter. S. your daughter pleaseth the soule of my sonne.* C. P. the soule of my sonne longeth for your daughter. B.G. T. casach, to love, to cleave▪ to please.

v. 14. then spake unto them Simeon and Levi, the brethren of Dinah. S.*

v. 15. in this will wee bee confederate with him. H. we will bee like unto you. S. agree or consent with you: caet. jaath to consent.

* v. 25. The third day, when the wounds are most grievous. H. when they were in grieve: caet.

* v. 29. their little ones and their wives they led captive. H. all their bodies and houshold-stuffe, and their wives they carried captive, and spoiled whatsoever was in the Citie and house. S. and all their goods they carried away, their children and wives, and whatsoever was in the houses: caeter.

* v. 30 you have made me odious. H. made me evill before the inhabitants. S. put enmity betweene mee and the Cananites, &c. Ch. caused me to stinke or to be abhorred: caet. baash, to stinke.

3. The explication of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Of the age of Dinah, when she was defloured of Sechem.

Vers. 1. Then Dinah. 1. Neither is the opinion of Alexander Polyhistor, in Eusebius probable, that Dinah at the time of her rauishing was but ten yeeres old: for she was at this time mariagelable, and therefore above these yeeres: and whereas the same Author saith, that Iacob remained in Se|chem ten yeeres after hee came out of Mesopotamia, as Euseb. reporteth his opinion, lib. 9. de praepar. Evangel. it would follow that Dinah was borne in the land of Canaan in Succoth, where Iacob dwelt b|efore he came to Sechem, and not in Mesopotamia, contrary to the Scripture. 2. Neither is *Cajetan*uscon|jecture sound, that Dinah was but three or foure yeeres old, when Iacob came out of Mesopotamia: for all Iacobs children were borne in the second seven yeeres of his service for his wives, before the last six yeeres of service for his sheepe, as may appeare, Gen. 30.25. 3. Neither yet need wee with the He|brewes to affirme, that Iacobs children were borne every one at seven moneths: for admitting the ordi|nary time of nine moneths of childe-bearing: Leah beginning to beare in the eighth yeere, the first of the second seven, might have her first foure children in three yeeres: then allow a yeere of intermission, her other two sonnes, and one daughter, she might have in somewhat more than two yeeres. 4. Wherefore the truer opinion is, that Dinah was six or seven yeeres old at Iacobs departure from Mesopotamia, and that she was now fourteene or fifteene yeeres old, for Ioseph borne at the same time of Rachel, presently after this exploit are said to be seventeene yeeres old, Gen. 37.2. Simeon and Levi are supposed to have beene the one 21. the other 22. yeeres of age, or thereabout: so that the time of Iacobs abode in Succoth and Sechem, might be seven or eight yeeres, Perer. Mercer.

QUEST. II. Why Dinah is sad to be the daughter of Leah.

The daughter of Leah. 1. The Hebrewes note shee was her mothers right daughter, for as shee went forth to meet her husband to have him turne in unto her, * Genes. 30.16. so Dinah goeth forth to see and to be seene; and therefore it is added, the daughter of Leah, but this is too hard a censure for Dinah: this addition is annexed as answerable to the story before, Gen. 30.21. 2. Many other uncertaine collecti|ons the Hebrewes make here: some say that this Dinah was Iobs wife: some say she remained a widow in her brethrens house: some, that Simeon buried her in the land of Canaan: some, that she went downe into Egypt, (which is true,) and that her bones were transported into Canaan, Mercer. 3. Iosephus think|eth that the women of Sichem at this time kept a solemne feast, which was the cause that Dinah was so desirous to goe and see them, Mercer.

QUEST. III. Whether it were lawfull for the Hebrewes to give their daughters to the uncircumcised.

Vers. 14. WE cannot doe this thing, to give our sister to an uncircumcised man, &c. 1. Though Abraham had not any direct precept, as Cajetan thinketh, not to joyne in mariage with the uncircumcised: for both Isaack tooke Rebecca, Iacob Leah and Rachel to wife, which came of uncircum|cised parents. 2. Yet it seemeth that they would not give their daughters to the uncircumcised, though they did take of the daughters of the uncircumcised to themselves. 3. And it is further to be considered, that they speake not in this place simply of marrying with the uncircumcised, but joyning to be one peo|ple with them: which they could not doe with those which were uncircumcised.

QUEST. IV. Whether Simeon and Levi their cruell act may be in part or in whole excused.

Vers. 25. AND the third day when they were sore, two of Iacobs sonnes, Simeon and Levi.] 1. Some He|brewes excuse Simeon and Levi their fact, because Hemor and Sichem first went about to breake the covenant, thinking to spoile them of that they had: for thus they say, Shall not their flocks and substance be ours? vers. 23. Contra. 1. But it appeareth not that Hemor and Sichem went about any such thing: they thus speake either to perswade the people, who most respect their profit, Mercer. or they meane that by trading or having entercourse with them, they should in a manner possesse their goods, Perer. 2. But if it were so, onely Hemor and Sichem had beene guilty of the violating of this league, there was no cause to punish the whole Citie. 3. And although they had reason to revenge themselves, yet such a cruell massacre cannot be justified.

2. Ramban excuseth this fact, thinking that by the decrees of Noah, if the Magistrates punished not adultery, others might: but who seeth not what confusion and disorder this doctrine would bring in • that every private man should take upon him to bee a punisher of sinne. The Apostle saith, that the power or magistrate beareth not the sword for nought, Rom. 13.4. It is peculiar then to him to exercise the sword.

3. Philo allegorizeth this story: by Dinah, which signifieth judgement, understanding the soule, by Sichem the sonne of Hemor, (which is interpreted an Asse) the brutish affections: from the which Simeon and Levi the sonnes of prudence deliver the soule, Lib. de migration. Abrah. But these allegories being devised onely, and not warranted by Scripture, cannot give any defence to such rage and violence.

4. Some doe but in part excuse Simeon and Levi; which may be considered on Gods behalfe, * and so the punishment was just: or on the behalfe of the Sichemites, who also for consenting unto that grievous sinne, were justly also punished: but on the behalfe of Simeon and Levi, because they did it craftily, this judgement was unjust, sic Carthusian. in libr. Iudith. But this allegation maketh nothing for the justifying of Simeon and Levi their enterprise, for God knoweth how to turne mens wicked acts to his glory: nei|ther did these furious men aime at any such end, but sought to satisfie their revengefull minde.

5. Some goe yet further; that this act was not unjust, quoad rem, in respect of the thing, because the Sichemites had grievously sinned; but quoad modum, they did it fraudulently, Cajetan. others say, primum motum, that the first motion to commit this slaughter was of God: but they in the execution did modum excedere, exceed measure, Thom. Anglic. Cont. But Iacob condemneth not onely the execution, but the very first device and counsell; Into their secret let not my soule come, Gen. 49.6. therefore the very first thought and device was evill, and therefore not of God.

6. Some proceed yet further, and altogether defend both their fact, and the manner thereof, calling their craft and dissimulation a prudent caution: their reasons are these; * 1. Because all the Sichemites were consenting unto that wickednesse, and therefore they deserved punishment. Cont. 1. It cannot bee gathered that all the Sichemites were consenting to the sinne of Sichem: their fault was, because of a car|nall minde for their owne profit they received circumcision. 2. And though the whole City had herein of|fended, yet Simeon and Levi had no such calling or commission to put them to the sword.

2. The place is objected, Iudith 9.2. where the Lord is said to have given unto Simeon a sword to take vengeance upon the strangers, that opened the wombe of the virgin: and vers. 4. Which were moved with thy zeale. Contra. Though Simeon and Levi were ministers of Gods justice upon the Sichemites for their sinne, yet they did it not without sinne: and therefore against this booke, which is no Scripture, where their zeale is commended, I oppose the sentence and censure of Iacob, who saith, That they did it in their selfe-will; therefore not by the motion of Gods spirit: and Cursed be their wrath, Gen. 49.7. but if they had done it in zeale, they were rather to be blessed.

3. They further reason thus; that if Simeon and Levi had committed such an unlawfull act, Iacob would have more sharply reprov'd them. Contra. Iacob partly considered the justice of God upon the Sichemites, for the outrage committed against Dinah, partly hee was moved with her complaint and moane for the losse of her virginity, partly he gave place for the time to the rage of his sonnes that were in their fury; and this was the cause of so easie a reprehension, Mercer.

4. But we reade of no restitution which Iacob caused to be made of the goods of the Sichemites taken away, which Iacob would have done if the act had beene unlawfull; for he saith, He got it from the Amorite (that is, the fields and possessions of the Sichemites) by his sword and bow, Gen. 48.12. Contra. 1. It is not unlike, but that many of the persons, as the women and children taken captive were returned, (for they could not all remaine in Iacobs house,) and together with them much of the goods. 2. The rest, together with the ground, though first unjustly had, it pleased God should remaine unto Iacob, as a recompence for the injurie done to his daughter, as the Hebrewes tooke of the Egyptians, jewels of silver and of gold, without any restitution thereof, in respect of their long and hard service; yet neither this fact of theirs, nor the other of Iacobs is here to be imitated, Mercer. 3. Iacob is said to get it with his sword, not as though he joyned with his sonnes in the action, or after consented unto it, but because he by force and armes was ready to defend the possession of that ground from the invasion of the Canaanites, whom God did strike with a feare, they attempted nothing against Iacob or his sonnes, Gen. 35.5. Mercer.

5. Wherefore the best solution of this question is, that although Simeon and Levi were ministers of Gods justice secretly working, yet both the act and the manner thereof, in respect of the instruments and executioners was unlawfull. 1. Because they attempted this thing without the counsell or knowledge of Iacob, whom this wrong most concerned in the ravishing of his daughter: for Iacob saith, Into their secret my soule enter not, Gen. 49.7. 2. They dissembled, propounding a condition, as though they would enter into a league with them, and yet meant it not. 3. They make religion a cloake of their cruelty,* and abuse circumcision to that end, the ordinance of God: yet Ioseph somewhat to hide the nakednesse of the falthers of that Nation, in his narration omitteth to make mention of this craft. 4. They put the whole Ciltie to the sword, even those which were innocent. 5. They take them being sore upon their cutting and circumcising, when they were rather to be pitied. 6. They spare not Hemor and Sichem, who offered to make them satisfaction by marrying Dinah, and giving her dowry which they should set. 7. Then they spoile the City, not contenting themselves only with the goods, but they carried away the women & chil|dren captives. 8. As much in them lay, they brought Iacob and all his into danger to bee destroyed and overcome of the inhabitants. 9. They being reproved of their father, doe not acknowledge, but justifie their sinne, Perer. Calvin.

It appeareth then that Simeon and Levi diversly sinned in this cruell act: whereof Iacob giveth this cen|sure; Simeon and Levi, brethren (in evill) the instruments of cruelty are in their habitations: into their secret let not my soule come: in their wrath they slew a man, and in their selfe-will they digged downe a wall:

cursed bee their wrath, &c. I will divide the• in Iacob, &c. ⟨◇⟩ 49.6, 7. In which ⟨...⟩ setteth downe their sinne, then the punishment. Their sinnes were these: 1. That in their ⟨...⟩ they devised mischief, and sought out how to be •venged, dealing ⟨...⟩ in their wrath. 3. They didst of a selfe will, of a ⟨...⟩ or good counsell. 4. They enterprised this ⟨◇⟩ without the counsell or advice of their father. ⟨...⟩ digged downe a w•ll to enter into ⟨◇⟩ and spoyle ⟨◇⟩ of ⟨◇⟩ good▪

Their punishment is, they are accursed: and the fruit of ⟨...⟩ are divided in ⟨...⟩ neither had Simeon any possession by himselfe, but intermingled with ⟨◇⟩ and Levi ⟨...⟩ among his brethren.* By this then it is evident; that Iacob wholly condemn•• ⟨...⟩ and in nothing approveth it. But whereas some would make this sentence of ⟨...⟩ and referre i• to the Levites, and Priests of Levi, and the Scribes, who were most of ⟨...⟩ are here accursed for putting Christ to death▪ It ⟨◇⟩ cleare that Iacob speaketh of an act done ⟨...⟩ denounceth th• sentence of ⟨◇⟩ and division against it. Now it is not like that the ⟨◇⟩ should goe before the fault. But Simeon and Levi were divided in Iacob, long before Christ came into the world, and was put to death by the Priests and Scribes.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Mariage not to be contracted with men of divers profession.

Vers. 14. WE cannot doe this thing, to give our sister to an uncircumcised man, &c. This, i• ⟨◇⟩ to the Apostles doctrine▪ Be not unequally yoked with infidels, for what fellowship ⟨◇⟩ righteousnesse with unrighteousnesse, &c. 2 Cor. 6.6. No league or friendship, much lesse mariage is to be ⟨◇⟩ or enterprised with men of a divers profession, Calvin.

2. Doct. Gods judgements may be just, when the ministers thereof are wicked.

Vers. 25. THEy slew every male. Simeon and Levi, the captaines and chiefe in this savage exploit, 〈◇〉 all the males that were men to the sword, for the children were carried away captive: this was a just reward upon the City for the sinne of Shechem, although the instruments and minister • 〈...〉 did evill. We see then that Gods judgements are just, when notwithstanding the meanes whereby they are executed cannot be justified: as the triall and affliction of Iob, as it proceeded from God was good, yet Satan the worker, or rather minister thereof, did it of malice.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Mariage not without the parents consent.

Vers. 4. Then said Shechem to his father Hamor, give me this maid to wife. Shechem would not take a wife but by the consent and leave of his father; and this generally was the practice of those dayes: Abraham provided a wife for his son Isaack; Laba • gave his daughters in mariage to Iacob. This condemneth then the practice of the Church of Rome, where it is an ordinary thing for children to bee contracted and marry without their parents consent, Muscul.

2. Confut. Against election by works.

Vers. 25. Simeon and Levi tooke either of them his sword. Simeon and Levi, two fathers of the Israelites, and the one chosen out from his brethren to execute the priest-hood, we see what their doings and works were, they were guilty of much bloud. God chose them not then for their owne vertue or worthinesse, but for his owne mercy sake. So saith Moses, The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor chuse you because, &c. but because the Lord loved you, Deut. 7.8. So the Apostle concludeth by the example of Esau and Iacob, whom the Lord had chosen, and refused the other, before they had done either good or evill: That the purpose of God might remaine according to election, not by works, but by him that calleth, Rom. 9.11. This maketh against the doctrine of the Church of Rome, who ascribe election to the fore-sight of faith and works, Rhemist. Heb. 5. serm. 7.

6. Places of exhortation and morall use.

1. Morall. That fathers should not suffer their daughters to stray from home.

Vers. 1. Dinah went to see the daughters of the Countrey. Bernard hereupon this noteth: Sita 〈◇〉 spectas, o • iouse non spectaris: tu curiose spectas, sed curio 〈◇〉 spectaris: thou beholdest idly or vainly, but thou art not beheld in vaine: thou art curious in seeing others and are more curiously seene thy selfe. We see what followed: Dinah's wanton and curious gazing upon others, gave occasion to the un|chaste and adulterous eye to lust after her: therefore it is not good to give maidens their 〈◇〉 , or to suffer them to wander from home, or sightly to behave, themselves, which hath beene, and in the occasion of much evill: so the Apostle chargeth that young women should be di • er • nt, chaste, 〈...〉 , Tit. • • Calvin.

2. Mor. Sinne committed in the Church and among Christians the more grievous.

Vers. 7. HE had wrought folly in Israel, &c. Although no place have any privilege or exemption for sinne: yet it is most heinous to perpetrate and commit wickednesse in or against the Church of God: Adultery, fornication, uncleannesse, is odious even among the Gentiles: but it is most abominable among Christians: As the prophet upbraideth Ierusalem, Sodome thy sister hath not done, neither she and her daughters, as thou and thy daughters, Ezech. 16.48.

3. Mor. Fornication to be recompenced by marriage.

Vers. 3. His heart clave unto her. Shechem having forced Dinah, doth not then hate her, and cast her off, a Ammon did Thamar his sister: but his love is the more kindled toward her, and he desireth her for his wife: which example doth condemne the wicked lust of many, which having intised maids unto folly, seeke not to make satisfaction by marriage.

4. Mor. Spirituall love should bee more forcible then carnall.

Vers. 19. The young man deferred not to doe the thing, &c. Shechem to obtaine his love, spareth no cost, nor yet refuseth any labour: hee accepteth of the hard condition of circumcision: which teacheth that if carnall love be so forcible, our spirituall love toward Christ should be much more effectuell: that we should contemne all things in respect of him, and refuse no labour, nor spare cost to gaine Christ, as S. Paul counted all things dung to win Christ, Philip. 3.8.

5. Mor. Religion must not be professed for gaine, but for Religions sake.

Vers. 23. Shall not their flocks and substance be ours? They accept of circumcision, not of any love to the worship of God, but of a covetous mind for their owne profit, for the which cause God was angry with them. It is therefore a dangerous thing to dally with God, and to make religion a cloake for our covetous and carnall affections. S. Paul noteth some, that thinke gaine to be godlinesse▪ 1. Tim. 6.5. such are they which professe the Gospel, not for conscience, but for gaine and advantage, Mercer.

CHAP. XXXV.

1. The Contents.

IN this chapter first are declared such things as befell Iacob to vers. 23. then mention is made of his sons, their names, and number, and of the buriall of his father, vers. 23. to the end.

The things which concerne Iacob specially are set forth by the places where they were done. 1. In Sechem God appeareth to Iacob, and biddeth him goe to Bethel, vers. 1. then Iacob reformeth his house, and hideth their strange gods under an oake, vers. 2. to 5. then he taketh his journey prosperously. 2. In Bethel Deborah dieth, and is buried under an oake, vers. 7.8. And there God appeareth to him againe, and confirmeth the promise made: where Iacob builded an altar for a memoriall, vers. 9. to vers. 16. 3. Neere unto Ephrah Rachel dieth in travaile, Benjamin is borne, Iacob setteth up a pillar, to vers. 20. 4. In Migdal•eder Ruben lay with Bilha, vers. 21.22.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. How the Lord spake to Iacob and when.

Vers. 1. Then God said to Iacob. 1. Whether God spake to Iacob by dreame or manifest [•]ision it is not expressed: whether way we take, there is no inconvenience: but it is most like that God spake to Iacob immediatly, as he used to doe to the patriarkes, without the ministry of prophets, Mercer. 1. This was some thirty yeares after God had appeared to Iacob in Bethel: for he had beene 20. yeares in Labans house, 8. yeares in Sichem, 2. yeares in his journey, so that he was now about 106 yeares old: whereupon Ramban thinketh, that God punished Iacob in the ravishing of his daughter, because he had forgotten his vow, and so long deferred it, ex Mercer.

QUEST. II. What strange Gods Iacob putteth away, and why so called.

Vers. 2. PVt away the strange Gods, &c. 1. These might be those idols which Rachel stole from Laſban, as also such as were taken in the spoyle of the city of Shechem, Mercer. 2. Iacob nei|ther winked at the superstition of Rachel, of a blind love toward her, as Calvin. neither need hee to bee instructed by revelation of this misdemeanour of his house, as Rupertus. Iacob was not such a stranger in his owne house, but that it might otherwise come to his notice. 3. They are called strange Gods, not because they estranged mens minds from God, or because they were the idols of devils, that were alienissimi, estranged in affection from men, Perer. or because they were strange, that is, unknowne Gods, that were not able to helpe in the time of adversity, ut Hebr^{••}:

but because they were the Gods of strange people from Israel: and so are the words truly translated, the Gods of strange people, Iun.

QUEST. III. Why Iacob did choose to bury, not to burne the idols.

Vers. 4. ANd Iacob hid them under an oake, &c. 1. This is not to be imputed to Iacobs infirmity, that burned not those idols, but buried them, as Calvin. 2. Nor yet did he burie them, that the matter thereof might afterwards serve for some profitable use: as some thinke that David found them, and imployed them toward the building of the temple, histor. scholastic. 3. Nor yet is it like that Iacob melted them into one lumpe, and after buried them in a deep pit, as Tostatus. 4. But it is more like that Iacob for haste of his journey, wanted opportunity to consume them with fire, Cajetan. or hee rather chose in silence to burie them, for feare further to offend and exasperate the Canaanites, Mercer. and hee did it in a secret and unknowne place, that his familie should not doat after them againe, Iun.

QUEST. IV. Why mention is made of the death of Deborah, Rebeckahs nurse.

Vers. 8. DEborah Rebeckahs nurse died, &c. 1. She is called *Rebeckahs*nurse, not because she suckled her, but was her bringer up and instructor. 2. Deborah was at this time about 180. yeares of age: for it was 170. yeares, since she came first with Rebeckah into Canaan, when shee may well bee supposed to have beene 50. yeare old, having the charge and government of Rebeckah. 3. It is very like that Rebeckah was now departed, for otherwise Deborah would not have left her so long as shee lived. 4. There is no mention of Rebeckahs death, not because she was buried obscurely and in the night, as the Hebrews imagine, Isaack being blind, and none to bury her but Esau: but it is the use of Scripture, to make rare mention of the death of women: in this place Deborahs death is recorded as an accident that fell out by the way, Mercer.

QUEST. V. How Deborah came to be in Iacobs company.

NOW whereas the question is moved, how Deborah came to be in Iacobs company. 1. Neither is it like, that after she had accompanied Rebeckah into Canaan, she went back againe, and was now desirous to goe and see Rebeckah, as Chrysostome: for shee was sent with Rebeckah to remaine with her. 2. Neither did she goe with Iacob at the first, when he went into Mesopotamia, as Calvin. for he was allone in Bethel. 3. Neither was she sent as a messenger to fetch Iacob out of Mesopotamia, as the Hebrewes: for he returned at Gods commandement, not at his mothers call. 4. Neither, as Ramban, is it to be supposed, that Rebeckah had more nurses then one. 5. But it is like, that Deborah was sent to meet Iacob, being returned, Mercer. or went to him of her owne accord, after Rebeckahs death, Cajetan.

QUEST. VI. Of the number of the visions wherein God appeared to Iacob.

Vers. 9. Againe, God appeared unto Iacob, &c. Not as though this were the second vision (in all) which Iacob had: but it was another vision beside that mentioned in the beginning of the chapter where he is bid to goe up to Bethel: or it was the second time that God appeared unto him in Bethel: for otherwise, to count all the visions that Iacob had, this was in number the seventh. 1. God appeared unto him in Bethel, in the vision of the ladder. 2. When in a dreame he was shewed the parti-coloured sheepe, Genes. 31.11. 3. When the Lord bade him returne into his owne countrey, Gen. 31.3. 4. When the Angels met him, Gen. 32.2. 5. When the Angell wrestled with him. 6. When God bid him goe up to Bethel. 7. God appeared againe unto him in Bethel, Perer:

QUEST. VII. Whether the name of Israel is here new imposed, or but renewed.

Vers. 10. Thy name shall be no more called Iacob, but Israel, &c. 1. Neither is this the same vision which Iacob had when he wrestled with the Angel, (as Oleaster) because the same name is imposed: for the text saith, that God appeared againe to Iacob, vers. 9. that is, in Bethel. 2. Neither as Hieromethinketh, was the name of Iacob onely foretold then, and imposed now, tradit in Genes. as Peters name is designed, Iohn 1. but actually given him, Matth. 12.16. Thom. Anglic. for before this, Iacob is twice called by the name of Israel, Genes. 33.10. and Gen. 34.7. 3. Neither (as Tostatus, and Lyranus thinke) is the same name imposed in both places, but upon divers reasons: for in the first place hee is called Israel, because hee prevailed with God, and therefore much more with men, to signifie his fortitude in the active life: but here is named Israel, that is, seeing God, in respect of the contemplative life, the which he had now atchived: But there appeared no difference at all in the reason and signification of the name: for as there by the name Israel hee is comforted and fortified against Esau, so here against the Canaanites, that thought to have revenged the slaughter of the Sichemites. 4. Wherefore wee say, that the same name upon the like occasion is here imposed: and that this is but a repetition and confirmation of the other vision: and thereupon Iacob being confident, doth now more openly call himselfe Israel, Mercer. Iun. And so it is not unusuall in Scripture, to have the same promises often repeated: as those made to Abraham, of the multiplying of his seed, and possessing of the land of Canaan, which were often revived and renewed, as Gen. 15.17.22. Perer.

QUEST. VIII. How it is said thy name shall bee no more called Iacob.

FVrther, whereas the Lord saith, thy name shall be no more called Iacob, and yet hee is afterward called Iacob. 1. Augustine thinketh, that he was called Iacob in respect of this life onely, where he should wrestle (as his name signifieth) with many temptations: but hee was called Israel in respect of the life to come, quast. 114. in Gen. But this solution beeing mysticall, and this mutation of Iacobs name historicall, satisfieth not. Much like is the solution of Tostatus, that he was called Iacob in respect of his active life, but Israel for his contemplative: neither is this answer sufficient, to say he should be called by both names, but in a diverse sense: for the text denieth unto him the name of Iacob any more. 3. Nor yet doe wee approve the solution of Cajetan. Vatab. that for vltra, no more, put in, tantum, thou shalt not onely be called Iacob: for thus the text is forced. 4. Pererius thus interpreteth; not that he should be so much called by the name Israel, as have the thing thereby signified, as strength and power with God: as it is said of Christ, he should be called Emanuel, that is, God with vs: yet was not Christ so called, who was indeed God with vs: But this sense is not so proper, for Iacob was usually called by the name of Israel. 5. Therefore the meaning is rather this: that although the name of Iacob should remaine, yet the last was more honourable and excellent, and should obscure that other, Muscul. Mercer. 1. In respect of the author: the name Iacob was given by men, the name Israel by God: 2. In signification it was more excellent: Iacob signifieth a supplanter, because hee held Esau by the heele: but Israel is interpreted, one that prevailed with God: 3. The name Israel was given to the whole nation and posteritie of Iacob: who of Israel, were called Israelites, not of Iacob, Iacobites.

QUEST. IX. What Kings came out of Iacobs loynes.

Vers. 11. Kings shall come out of thy loynes, &c. 1. The Hebrewes specially referre it to Saul and Isboseth that were Kings of Benjamin, and to the tribes of Ephraim and Manasses. 2. But because that Saul and his house were rejected of God, and the kingdome of Israel was but an usurpation: it is specially to be applied to David and the other kings of Iudah, Calvin. 3. It may also be understood of the kings of the Gentiles converted to the faith, who spiritually were borne of Iacob, Mercer. 4. These nations that came out of Iacobs loynes, were the twelve tribes, that multiplied & increased as so many seuerall nations.

QUEST. X. How the land of Canaan is given to Iacob.

Vers. 12. I Will give the land, &c. 1. Jacob possessed this promised land in faith, his posteritie afterward actually entred into it. 2. The Hebrewes here understand an oath, that God sware unto Jacob, as Moses saith, Exod. 32.13. Remember Abraham, Isaack, and Jacob, thy servants to whom thou swarest, &c. but here no oath is expressed: the Lords word and promise includeth a secret oath: and that oath which the Lord expressly made to Abraham, concerned also his seed, Mercer. 3. The land is here promised to all Jacobs seed: but it was to Abraham restrained in Isaack, Ismael being excluded; to Isaack limited in Jacob, Esau excluded.

QUEST. XI. How the Lord is said to have ascended from Jacob.

Vers. 13. GOd ascended from him, or over him in the place, &c. 1. God in respect of us is said to ascend and descend (who otherwise filleth every place with his maiestie and presence) when he sheweth any visible signe of his glorie, as here to Jacob, Mercer. 2. The word is, magnal, over or upon him: whereupon the Hebrews note, that the righteous are as the Lords chariot, wherein he is as it were carried, Mercer. 3. This ascending of God, was truly fulfilled in Christ▪ who ascending in person to his father, drawleth vs by faith after him, and with his divine presence still comforteth his Church. Calvin. 4. Where it is added, in the place where he talked with him, &c. it sheweth the dignitie and prerogative of Bethel, which Jacob, for the same cause so much honoured: as also how familiar unto Jacob these heauenly visions were, that Jacob without astonishment could perceive the Lord ascending from him, Mercer.

QUEST. XII. What place Bethel was which Jacob the second time so calleth.

Vers. 14. Jacob set up a pillar, &c. vers. 15. he called the name of the place Bethel, &c. Tostatus is deceived, that thinketh this Bethel to be Jerusalem, another from that Bethel which Jacob so called before, when he went into Mesopotamia, because (saith he) hee went from Bethel to Bethlem, which is distant but foure miles from Jerusalem: but the other Bethel is remote from Jerusalem twentie miles: for it cannot be shewed that ever Jerusalem was called by the name of Bethel: and though Bethel were so farre off from Bethlem, that is no argument for this opinion: for the text sheweth not in what time Jacob came from Bethel to Bethlem, but onely that Jacob departed from Bethel, vers. 16. 2. Neither is this a rehersall of that which Jacob had done before in Bethel, as Calvin. but he erecteth a pillar againe, as a moniment of this second apparition: the other pillar which hee set before being either prophaned, or in the space of thirtie yeares defaced, Iun. 3. Jacob both buildeth an altar in this place to offer sacrifice unto God, vers. 7. and erected a pillar as a memoriall of this heavenly vision unto men, Mercer. 4. He confirmeth the same name Bethel which he had given it before: like as Isaack reneweth the name of Beersheba, Gen. 26. which his father had imposed upon that place. 5. He both calleth the place where the altar was, Bethel, vers. 7. as also the whole circuit of ground about it, where he reared the pillar, vers. 15. sic Mercer. Cajetan.

QUEST. XIII. How farre Jacob was from Bethlem, when Rachel traveled.

Vers. 16. When he was a fields breadth from Ephrata, &c. 1. Neither is the Hebrew word Cibrath, here vsed, a proper name of a place, as the Septuag. read: for they translate it otherwise themselves, Gen. 48.7. hippodromum, an horse race. 2. Neither can it be derived of cabir, which signifieth much, as R. Menaham, and Oleaster; as though a great part of their iourney were behinde: and as Geneven. translate halfe a dayes journey: for Ramban that had seene those places, saith, Rachels monument is not one mile from Bethlem: Borcardus not above the flight of an arrow. 3. Neither is it like to bee derived from the word cebarah, which signifieth a sive, as Beres. Rab. to betoken the spring time, when the ground is plowed, and as it were sifted: or as Hierome deriveth it from barah, to chose, and maketh caph not a radical, but a servile letter, because it was now the spring, the choyce time of the yeare: for the word kibrath must needs be taken for a space of ground, 2. King. 5.15. where Gehezi followeth after Naaman. 4. But this word betokeneth a small space of ground: Pegnin• readeth a mile: the Chalde stadium, a race: the Septuagint, hip podromum, a horserunne or race: Oukelos as much ground as may be plowed in a day: and so it may either be derived from kebarah, as Rabbi Leui, to signifie the plowed, tilled, or sifted fields, which are not farre from the citie: or making the letter caph to be none of the radicals, it may be derived from Barah, which is to eate, as Kimhi: and may be taken for so much ground, as one may well goe before his first eating, that is, his break-fast, a morning walke.

QUEST. XIII. Why Jacob calleth his sonne Benjamin

Vers. 18. Shee called his name Benoni: but his father Benjamin. Iacob changeth the name of his sonne whom Rachel named the sonne of her sorrow, lest it might have brought still to his remem|brance the losse of his deare wife: he calleth him Benjamin, the sonne of his right hand: 1. Not for that he onely was borne in Canaan in the south part, which is at the right hand, if one turne his face to the Sunne rising, as Rasi. Mercer. 2. Nor yet because he was borne in Bethlem, within the tribe of Iudah, as Ramban. 3. Nor because he bare this heauey crosse strongly, as Lyranus. 4. Or to shew that he had strength to beget a child in his old age, as Oleaster. 5. But rather, to signifie how deare he should be unto him for his mothers sake, to be alwaies at his right hand, Muscul. Iun. as also Iacob alludeth to the name that Rachel had given: declining as little as might be both from the sound and sense: for Benoni signifieth the son of labour, or strength: & so consequently doth Benjamin, the son of the right hand, where the strength lieth, Mercer.

QUEST. XV. The causes of Rachels hard travel which procured her death.

Vers. 19. Thus died Rachel, &c. Rachel died in trauaile: 1. it is impertinent here and vnnesessarie to shew the cause of perillous & difficult trauaile: which may be caused, 1. Either by some defect in the wombe: 2. Or by the greatnes of the infant, or the indisposition thereof in the wombe, or some other want in that behalfe. 3. Or when the mother laboureth of some other disease. 4. Or the woman beeing long in trauaile. 5. Or be given to rest, and so not breathed: for Aristotle saith, that exercitatio facit ut spiritum re•inere possint, in qua re facilitas partus conciliatur: exercise causeth that they hold their breath, which maketh the birth easie. Perer. ex Aristot. wherupon Pliniewriteth, oscitation•m in mulieribus lethalem, that yawning in travaile to women is mor•all. 2. The Hebrewes thinke that Rachel being wearied in her journey came be|fore her time: but it is not like, that Iacob would have hastened his journey▪ if his dearest wife had beene so neare her time. 3. Neither hath it any ground, that God punished Iacob with the death of Deborah and Rachel, for the slaughter of the Sichemites, Mercer. 4. Ruperius, in that Deborahs death and Rachels is expressed, Reb•ckaes and Leahs death concealed, thereby resembleth the •ynagogue of the iewes, which he would have prefigured by Deborah and Rachel: for so their Synagogue did die and fall away, the church of the Gentiles revived and increased. But such allegories doe not much perswade, having no war|rant or ground in Scripture.

QUEST. XVI. Of the names Ephratha and Bethlem, why and by whom they tooke beginning.

Vers. 19. EPhrath which is Bethlem. 1. Some thinke that this place was called Ephratha, of Caleb• wife Ephrata, 1 Chron. 2.9. which Caleb was sonne of Hezron, and went downe with Iacob into Egypt: and afterwards it was called Bethlem, that is, the house of bread, after the famine in Elimelech, and Ruths time, of the abundance of corne, R. Salomon. Lyran. 2. Tostatus misliketh this o|pinion, because this Caleb that went downe into Egypt, must be 215. yeare old and more, if he survived to returne with the Israelites into the Land of Canaan: at which time it is like Ephrata tooke the name: and beside, if the name Bethlem were given in Elimelechs time, how commeth it to be used by Moses so long before? But these reasons may be easily answered: for the name Ephrata might be given by the second Caleb after his grandfathers name: and divers names are inserted into this history, not knowne in Moses time, as the name Dan, Gen. 14.14. which were added by way of explanation, by those Prophets directed by the spirit of God, which disposed the Scripture into order, Perer. 3. But it is more likely, that this place had both these names of the fruitfulness of the ground: for so Ephrath is derived of Pha/rah, which signifieth to fructifie, and it was afterward called Bethlem, the house of bread, Mercer. but by whom these names and when they were imposed, is uncertaine.

QUEST. XVII. Of the tower of Ader where Iacob pitched his tents.

Vers. 21. ISrael, &c. pitched his tent beyond the tower of Ader, or of the flocks. 1. The Hebrewes, in this place, doe hold, that the temple was afterward built: because the Prophet calleth Sion the tower of the flock, Micah 4.7. but that cannot be: for this tower where Iacob pitched, was not far from Bethlem, about a mile, Muscul. but Ierusalem was further off, Mercer. yet this name was given to Sion, because the people assembled thither in flocks, or because of the flocks of sheepe thither brought to be sacrificed, Perer. 2. This tower was made for the safegard of the shepherds in that country, that used to watch their flocks by night: and Hierome well observeth this to be a type and prophecie of those shepherds, which in this very place watched their flocks at the birth of Christ; where afterward Helena, for a memoriall of the apparition of the Angels unto them, builded a temple, Perer. Luther.

QUEST. XVIII. Of the incest of Ruben with Bilha.

Vers. 22. Ruben went and lay with Bilha his fathers concubine, &c. 1. The Hebrewes to excuse the sinnes of their fathers, here imagine that Ruben did nor commit incest with Bilha, but only cast out her bed out of *Rachel*s tabernacle, where Iacob had placed it after *Rachel*s death: whereas the text is evident, that he slept with Bilha. In like manner they would excuse the offence of Elie his sons, that they did not lie with the women at the gates of the temple, but onely deferred their businesse, and so kept them longer from their husbands: contrary to the evidence of the history, 1 Sam. 2.22. 2. Iacob though he might have used the sword in this case, yet leaveth the punishment to God: but for this sinne of defiling his fathers bed, Ruben lost his birthright, which was given to Ioseph in respect of his double portion, the principality to Judah, 1 Chron. 5.1. 3. This was a very great sinne to commit uncleannesse with his fathers concubine, which was as his wife: such fornication as was not once named among the Gentiles, as the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 5.1. for Antiochus the sonne of Seleucus, being in love with Strato nice his mother in law, yet for shame concealed it, and fell into a most grievous disease. Hippolitus is famous in the tragedie, for resisting the unlawfull lust of Phaedra his mother in law. 4. Some thinke that after this time Iacob did refraine the company of his wives, but that is uncertaine, Mercer. It is most like, that he after this accompanied not with Bilha; as David served his concubines which Absolom went in unto, 2 Sam. 20.3.

QUEST. XIX. Of the genealogie of the Patriarkes wherefore it is here set downe.

Vers. 26. These are the sonnes of Iacob, which were borne him in Mesopotamia, &c. 1. Moses setteth here downe together the number of Iacobs sonnes. 1. Because after this he had no more sonnes borne. 2. As also Ruben is counted among them, to shew that although he had fallen into this grievous sin, yet the Lord vouchsafed to count him among the Patriarkes. 3. As also to distinguish betweene Iacob and Esaus progenie, which Moses prosecuteth in the new chapter, Mercer. Perer. 2. Dinah is not rehearsed among them, because she made no tribe, Mercer. Neither useth the Scripture to set downe the genealogie of women, Perer. 3. The word is put in the singular number, which was borne, for the plurall, not for any such mystery as the Hebrewes note, to shew that they were all begotten by one man, or to shadow the birth of the Messiah: but it is a property of the Hebrew speech, to use the singular for the plurall.* 4. All these are said to be born in Mesopotamia, whereas Benjamin was born in Canaan, as Chrysostomethinketh, for Benjamin was borne ten yeares after Iacob departed from Mesopotamia: but here by a synechdoche▪ according to the use of the Scripture, that is affirmed of all which agreed to the most, Mercer. Perer. So Iohn 20.24. Thomas is called one of the twelve, there being but eleven, Iuda having hanged himselfe: and so S. Marke calleth them the eleven, Marke 16.14.

QUEST. XX. At what time Iacob came to Isaack his father.

Vers. 27. Then Iacob came to Isaack his father. 1. Although now at the length, ten yeares after Iacobs returne into Canaan, hee came first to Isaack with his whole family, yet it is not unlike, but that Iacob went often over to see his father, they dwelling not farre asunder, Mercer. 2. Mention is not made of Rebecca, who is supposed at this time to have beene dead; which is thought also to be the cause of Isaacks being in Hebron, whom Iacob at his departure left in Beerseba: that Isaack remoo|ved thither to burie his wife there, Muscul. 3. Iacob neither came to Isaack so soone, as some He|brewes thinke, that he ministred 22. yeares to his father after his returne out of Mesopotamia: neither staid he away from him so long, as some gather, that is twenty yeares in Mesopotamia, and 23. yeares in Canaan, in all 43. yeares, Muscul. for Iacob could spend no fewer then 9. or .10. yeares in Canaan, be|fore he came to Isaack: seeing Dinah not above six or seven yeares old at Iacobs departure out of Me|sopotamia, was defloured at 15. or 16. yeares of her age, then being marriageable, before Iacob came at Isaack• and when Ioseph was 17. yeare old, he was then come to that land, where his father was a stranger, Gen. 37.1, 2. that is, to Hebron, where Abraham and Isaack were strangers, Gen. 35.27. and this was twelve or thirteene yeares before Isaack died, as shall appeare in the next question following.

QUEST. XXI. Ioseph sold into Egypt twelve yeares before Isaack died: yet it is set downe after.

Vers. 21. The daies of Isaack were 180. This is set downe by way of anticipation: for Ioseph was sold into Egypt, before Isaack died: as it is shewed thus. 1. Iacob when Isaack was 180. must be 120. yeare old, for he was borne in Isaacks 60. yeare. 2. Then at such time as Ioseph was 39. (for he was 30. when he stood before Pharao, and seven yeares of plenty, and two of famine were past, before his father came into Egypt) then was Iacob 130. and at seventeene yeare old, was Ioseph sold into Egypt. 3. If at Iosephs 39. Iacob was 130. then at Iosephs seventeene, Iacob must be an hundred and eight: then was Isaack but 168. wherefore it must needs follow, that Ioseph was sold into Egypt, twelve yeare be|fore his grandfather Isaack died: and that so long Iacob dwelt with Isaack: for it is not like, but that Isaack saw all Iacobs children before he died, and blessed them, and that Ioseph had seene Isaack before he was sold into bondage.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. Of the distinction of the persons in the Trinitie.

Vers. 1. Then God said arise, &c. and make an altar unto God, &c. Although it be the use of the He|brew speach, to bring in one speaking of himselfe in the third person, as Ierem. 2.19, Know that it is an evill thing, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, and that my feare is not in thee: yet not|withstanding, we may observe in this manner of speech a further mystery, as Hillary and Augustine, out of the place, where God said, build an altar unto God, doe prove a distinction of persons in the Trinite. Deus honorem deo postulat, God willeth honour to be given to God, Hillar: God the father, to God the sonne.

2. Doct. Two parts of sanctification, the internall and externall.

Vers. 2. Cleanse yourselves, and change your garments. Here are two parts of their sanctification expres|sed: the internall as the principall in the clensing of their minds, the externall in the change of their garments: which served in those daies, to stir up their inward devotion. So the Lord said to Mo/ses, when he was to appeare in Mount Sinai, Sanctifie them, &c. and let them wash their cloathes, Exod. 19.10. But the inward sanctification was that, which the Lord had respect unto, Ioel. 2.13. Rent your hearts and not your cloathes, and turne to the Lord.

3. Doct. Gods promises most certaine.

Vers. 12. I will give thee this land which I gave to Abraham. Th•s land was onely promised to Abraham, and yet it is said to be given: Gods promises then are so certaine, <◇> they were already fulfill|led, Muscul. so the Prophet saith, The Lord of hosts hath sworne, surely as I have purposed, so shall it come to passe, &c. Isay. 14.24.

4. Doct. The carefull buriall of the dead an argument of the resurrection.

Vers. 20. Iacob set a pillar upon her grave. The Gentiles did bestow superfluous cost upon the tombs of the dead, some thereby thinking to finde solace and comfort in their grieffe, some taking occasion thereby to commit idolatry. But Iacob maketh a memoriall of Rachels sepulture, not onely to testifie his love, and to continue a remembrance of this vertuous matron, one of the mothers of Israel, unto posterity, but chiefly to expresse and professe his hope of the resurrection: for if there were no more hope of the bodies of the Saints, than of beasts, to what end should so much care be taken in com|mitting them in an honest and decent manner to Christian sepulture? Calvin. Pererius. Thus Martha confesseth her faith concerning her brother Lazarus, that was laid in his grave: I know he shall rise againe in the resurrection at the last day. Ioh. 11.24.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against the <...> of idolatry.

Vers. 4. IN that they gave to Iacob their earrings as consecrate to idolatry, and Iacob buried them under an oake: it teacheth us, that all the monuments of idolatry ought to be abolished: and that no• onely the Idols themselves are abominable, but all the <◇> which belong thereunto: such as are many in the Romane Sinagogue, who garnish their idols, with ringes, tablets, pretious stones and jewels, Calvin. all which things ought to be abhorred, as the idols themselves: as the prophet saith: Yee shall poll••• the co•erings of the images of silver, and the rich ornaments of the images of gold, and cast them away as a monstrous cloth, Isay. 30.22.

2. Confut. The Iewes called Gojim, that is, Gentiles.

Vers. 11. MVltitude of nations, shall spring of thee. For the twelve tribes, were as so many nations: the word is Gojim: which the Iewes approbriously call the Gentiles by: whereas in this place, they are called, Gojim, Gentiles, unlesse they will deny themselves to have sprung out of Ia|cobs loines, Muscul.

3. Confut. Against the superstitious choosing of places for burials.

Vers. 19. Rachel died, and was buried in the way to Ephrath. In that Iacob carried not Rachels body to be buried in Mamre, where Abraham and Sarah were buried: but interred her in the very way: wee see that it skilleth not in respect of the dead, where their bodies are laid, Muscul. That superstitious use then of the papists is reprooved, in transporting of bodies from place to place, and in col|veting to be buried in one place more than another, of a superstitious minde, as neare the altar, rather then further of, and in the Church of such an order of Friers, rather then in any other. Wheresoever the body is laid, we know that God shall find it in the resurrection: even the Seashall give up her dead, Re|velat. 20.13.

4. Confut. Gods election certaine and infallible.

Vers. 23. R|uben, Iacobs eldest sonne. Though Ruben had fallen into the most grievous sinne of incest, yet the Lord doth not utterly cast him off, but reserveth unto him a place and calling among the 12. Patriarkes. By this we learne, that Gods election changeth not, but whatsoever he hath decreed concerning any mans salvation shall stand, Calvin. For the gifts and calling of God are without re|pentance, Rom. 11.29. Yet must not this doctrine make us secure, to sinne presumptuously, trusting to Gods election: but as the Apostle saith, We must worke out our salvation with feare and trembling, lest we be circumvented of Sathan, and prevented of that which we vainly hoped for.

Confut. Against the errour of the Novatians.

THis example of Ruben, notwithstanding his fall, restored to his patriarchal dignity, doth further confute that error of the Novatians, who denied pardon to those which were fallen, and refused to receive them into their society and congregation, Calvin. We see that our Saviour Christ, when Perer had thrice denied him, yet vouchsafed to receive him to mercy, and to confirme him in his Apostleship.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Observ. Amendment of life delivereth from dangers.

Vers. 2. THou said Iacob, put away the strange Gods, &c, Iacob being in great danger, doth purge and cleanse h^os houshold, so the next way to finde deliverance, and to obtaine ptotection from God, is to amend our life, and to renew our hearts, and to turne every man from his evill wayes, Perer. Heereupon Balaam gave that wicked counsell to put a stumbling blocke before the Israelites, to cause them to sinne, that they might run into Gods displeasure, and be out of his protection.

2. Observ. The people must shew themselves willing to be reformed.

Vers. 4. THEy gave unto Iacob all the strange gods. Herein appeareth the singular and prompt obedi|ence of Iacobs houshold, who are contented to put away their idols, iewels and caterings, wherein they had so much before delighted, Mercer. which eacheth, that the people should shew them|selves ready and willing to be reclaimed from their superstitions and corruptions of life: as we read, that the souldiers and people came unto Iohn and asked him, Master, what shall we doe? Luk. 3.

3. Observ. God striketh feare into mens hearts.

Vers. 5. THE feare of God was upon the cities. Thus God is able to command the affections of men, and to smite them with feare, where otherwise there is no apparent cause of feare, as here the strong and populous cities of Canaan are afraid of Iacob: So Rahab confessed to the spies, the feare of you is fallen upon us, Iosu. 2.9. Thus God is able to deliver his Church, whereas no other meanes are at hand, by terrifying the hearts of the enemies thereof.

4. Observ. It is lawfull and commendable to mourne moderately for the dead.

Vers. 8. Iacob and his company made such lamentation for the departure of that godly matron Deborah, that he called the place the place of lamentation. It is not then unlawfull to mourne for the dead, nay it is an uncomly thing to shew drie cheekes in the funeralls of parents, wives, and children, as some doe. S. Paul forbiddeth not to mourne for the dead, but not as they that have no hope, 1. Thessal. 4. Muscul.

5. Observ. Our joyes in this life are mixed with sorrow.

Vers. 19. Thus died Rachel. Iacob doth not so much rejoyce for the birth of Benjamin, as he hath occasion of griefe offered for the losse and death of deare Rachel; thus the Lord seeth it to be good to temper our joy with sorrow; and therein we see the mutable and changeable condition of this life, which affordeth no perpetuall and constant joy, Perer. And therefore amidst our joyes, it is good to arme our selves against sorrow; as Iob in the midst of his prosperous estate, did looke for adversity; saying, The thing which I feared is now come upon me, Iob 3.25.

6. Observ. One affliction followeth after another.

WE see further, that Iacobs life was a continuall warfare: still one temptation followed in the necke of another. 1. Dinah was ravished. 2. Simeon and Levi put the city to the sword. 3. Deborah dieth. 4. Then Rachel his beloved wife. 5. Then Ruben commiteth incest. 6. Ioseph is sold into Egypt. 7. Isaack dieth. 8. Benjamin is also taken from him to goe into Egypt. Thus many are the temptations and tribulations, wherewith the Lord trieth his children, Calvin. We learne, that while we live here, we should prepare our selves for crosses and afflictions: and when we are escaped one, to looke presently for another. This was Iobs case, when one messenger followed at the heeles of another, bringing him evill tidings, Iob 1.

7. Observ. Godly women may die in childbirth.

Vers. 18. As shee was about to yeeld up the ghost, &c. The Hebrewes note three women in Scripture, that died in travaile; Rachel the wife of Phinehes the sonne of Eli, and Michol David wife, because it is said, she had no children till the day of her death: but this is a simple conjecture; the meaning is, that she had no children at all, Mercer. But we see by this example, that even godly women may have Rachels lot to die in travaile: and therefore such are not to be discomfited, if it please God that they so end their daies.

8. Observ. Great blemishes sometime fall out in the Church of God.

Vers. 21. Ruben lay with his fathers concubine, &c. It need not then seeme strange, if such blemishes fall out sometime in the Church of God, and families of Saints; as Ruben here committeth incest in Iacobs house, and it seemeth Bilha the mother of two tribes in Israel, was consenting thereunto; so among the Corinthians, a young man had his fathers wife, 1 Cor. 5.1. Mercer.

CHAP. XXXVI.

1. The Method and Contents.

IN this chapter, the externall state and happinesse of Esau is set forth: first by his polygamie and marriage of many wives: with the fruits thereof, his children, and the adjunctes thereunto, his riches, vers. 1. to vers. 8.

Secondly, by his genealogie: where his children and nephewes are rehearsed, and described. 1. By their nativitie, of what wives he had them, vers. 8. to 15. 2. By their dignity, vers. 15. to 20.

Thirdly by the estate of his country, where first the old inhabitants, the H•rites are described, vers. 20. to 32. then the new inhabitants the Edomites, first gover|ned by Kings, vers. 31. to 40. then by Dukes againe, vers. 40. to the end.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. The order of time of the things set downe in the chapter.

Vers. 1. NOw these are the generations of Esau. 1. These things which are declared in the chapters following, from 35. to 41. are set downe out of their place, as all going before the death of Isaack who saw his sonne Esa married, and greatly encreased: he knew of the incest of Iudah with Thamar; and of Iosephs selling into Egypt, Luther. 2. For Esau was 120. yeares old, when Isaack died at 180. therefore the history of this chapter was before Isaacks death, Perer. 3. The selling of Ioseph into Egypt was 12. yeares before Isaacks death, as is proved, Quest. 21. of the former chapter: who is thought to be delivered out of prison the same yeare that Isaack died, thirteene yeare after he was sold by his brethren, Mercer.

QUEST. II. Of Adah Esaus wife.

Vers. 2. ADah the daughter of Elon. 1. This Adah is not the same, before called Iudith the daughter of Beer, Gen. 26.34. as some Hebrewes: which they would have first so called because she professed God, but afterward being given too much to the decking of her selfe, she was called Adah of gnadi a iewel or ornament. But this Adah is the other called Basemath, which is there said to be the daughter of Elon the Hittite: for it is no rare thing in Scripture for men and women to be called by di|vers names: as Maacah the daughter of Absalom the mother of Abjah, 1. King, 15.2. is called Micajah of Vriel, 2. Chron. 13.2.

2. Concerning Aholibamah the second wife of Esau.* 1. these are neither other wives beside those which Esau married before, as Ramban thinketh, who maketh Esau to have had 5. wives in all: for the Scripture maketh mention but of three wives that Esau had: and here it is therefore said, not that hee tooke wives, but his wives, as having relation to those which were his wives before: so that this Aholibamah, is the same which is called Iudith before. 2. Shee is said to be the daughter of Anah, not the sonne, (as the Greeke and Latin readeth) but daughter of Sibeon: for the word is bath, not ben: neither is it meant that Anah was the daughter of Sibeon, as some reade: for Anah was Sibeons son, vers. 14. a man not a woman: nor yet as the Hebrewes fable,* this Aholibamah is said to be the daughter of Anah and of Sibeon, two brothers, as begotten in incest, or of Sibeon the father of Anah: But this is added by way of distinction, because there were two called Anah: one brother to Sibeon, vers. 20. ano|ther sonne of Sibeon, vers. 24. this Aholibamah was daughter to Anah sonne of Sibeon, and so also is said to be the daughter, that is, niece of Sibeon, Iun. Mercer. 3. And whereas her father is before called an Hittite, but here an Hivite: that is, because the Hivites were the greater nation, and comprehended also the Hittites, Iun. or the one may be understood of the father, the other of the grand|father, Mercer.

3. Basemath, that is, the same before called Mahalah, Gen. 28.9. first so named, because she was sick|ly, of chalah, to be sicke, afterward Basemath, of a pleasant smel, Ramban. others will have her so named,* for offering incense to idols, Rasi. but the derivations of names are uncertaine: it appeareth, that the daughter of Ismael whom Esau married was called by two names, Iun.

QUEST. III. Whether this Eliphaz were one of Iobs friends.

Ves. 4. ADa bare unto Esau Eliphaz. This is not like to be that Eliphaz, which was Iobs friend, though he might be of his posterity, for these reasons: 1. that Eliphaz is called a Teman^ote: but Te|man was one of the sonnes of this Eliphaz, who is not like to have taken denomination of his sonne, Mer|cer. 2. this Eliphaz could not be much lesse than 70. or 80. yeare old, when Isaack died at 180. for Esau 60. yeares younger than Isaack, married at 40. yeares: then Eliphaz his first borne was not much more then 100. yeares younger than Isaack. And by this it would follow, that Iob, that lived with Eliphaz, should have beene many yeares before the departure of Israel out of Egypt, which is uncertaine, Muscul.

QUEST. IV. Why Aholibamah the second wife is last named.

Vers. 5. AHolibamah bare Leu^h, &c. Aholibamah is set after the other two wives, whereas Esau married her before he took Ismaels daughter. 1. Some thinke, because she was the last of the three that bare him children: but that is not like, that she began to beare, after 36. or 37. yeares, having many children. 2. It is more like, that Aholibamah had children before, which died, and therefore they are not rehearsed. 3. But the most like conjecture is, that the other two are named first, because they <◇> but each of them a sonne: Aholibamah is named last, because she had divers sonnes, and therefore Moses was to insist longer in her generation: or else, seeing the Scripture doth often invert and change the order of time in history, we need not much stand upon this point, who are first or last named, Mercer.

QUEST. V. Corah how he is said to be the sonne of Esau by Aholibamah, and the sonne of Eliphaz.

Vers. 5. WHEREAS Corah is named among the sonnes of Aholibamah, vers. 5. and yet is numbred also among the sonnes of Eliphaz of Adan, vers. 16. 1. neither for solution of this doubt, need wee with the Hebrewes, to imagine that Corah was the sonne of Eliphaz, by Aholibamah *Esau*s wife, who committed incest with her: for then the Scripture would not before have set him downe as the sonne of Esau. 2. R. Levi thinketh, that when Aholibamah was dead, Eliphaz brought up Corah the youngest sonne of Aholibamah, among his owne children, and so he is reckoned with the rest of Eliphaz.sonnes: but in this case, the Scripture would not have altered, sometime making Corah the sonne of Esau, sometime of Eliphaz. 3. Therefore we thinke rather, that there were two of this name, one brother to Eliphaz by Aholibamah, the other Eliphaz sonne, or nephew: as in this chapter, there are two Anahs mentioned, the one brother, the other sonne of Sibeon, vers.20.14. Mercer. And further, whereas Co|rah is not reckoned in the first place among Eliphaz sonnes, vers. 11.12. yet afterward he hath his place among the Dukes of Eliphaz, vers. 16. it is like he was the nephew rather than the sonne of Eliphaz, who was famous among the rest, and therefore is named among the honourable dukes of Eliphaz, Iun.

QUEST. VI. When Esau departed from Iacob into mount Seir.

Vers. 6. WEnt into a country away from the face of Iacob▪ &c. 1. This can neither be understood of *Esau*s first departure, after Iacob was gone into Mesopotamia: for Esau could not be said to goe away from Iacobs face, he being absent: and to say, that Isaack reserved a double part for Ia|cob, as the first-borne, and sent Esau away, it would have exasperated him so much the more. 2. Nei|ther yet was this the first time of *Esau*s going to dwell in Seir, after Iacobs returne: for Iacob sent messen|gers before to Esau into the country of Seir, from whence he came with 400. men, Gen. 32.3. And that ex|position is somewhat rackt, to interpret for [from the face of Iacob] before his comming, Iun. for in the next verse the reason of *Esau*s departure is yeelded, for that they (not Isaack and Esau, as Iun.) but Esau and Iacob, whereof immediate mention before was made, could not dwell together by reason of their substance. 4. therefore the right solution is, that Esau first dwelled in the country of Seir, while Iacob was in Mesopotamia, removing from his father, either upon displeasure, for the losse of his birth-right, or because of the unquietnesse of his wives, that were an offence to his parents: or for that he was allied by marriage to the Hivites that dwelt in Seir: for Aholibamah was the daughter of Anah, of Sibeon the Hivite, Gen. 36.2.24.

Muscul. But as yet Esau had not removed all his goods and substance to mount Seir, which he had not full and peaceable possession of, before the Hivites were thence expelled, Ramb••. And afterwards Esau returned from thence to visit his father, and having performed his last duty, in the buriall of Isaack, he then finally departed altogether, sic August. Mercer.

QUEST. VII. The cause of Esaus departure from Iacob.

Vers. 7. THEir riches were great, and they could not dwell together. These then were the causes of Esaus departure from Iacob. 1. As it is here expressed, their substance was so great, that they could not inhabit together: not as though the land of Canaan were not sufficient for both: but that corner in Hebron, where they inhabited as strangers, was too scant for their great flocks of cattell, Mercer. 2. Beside Esau had a minde to mount Seir, as fitter for his study and trade of life, who was given to hunting, Perer. and for that his wives were of that country, and he had dwelt sometime there already. 3. But most of all Gods providence herein appeared, to separate these brethren, both for the commodious and quiet dwelling of Iacob, who would continually have incurred the offence of his brother: as also herein the Lord provided for Esaus posterity, that they should not dwell in Canaan, lest with the rest of the Canaanites they might have beene destroyed by the Israelites, to whom that land was promised, Perer.

QUEST. VIII. How the generations of Esau are said to be borne in mount Seir.

Vers. 9. THEse are the generations of Esau, father of Edom in mount Seir, &c. 1. Edom is the name also of Esau, but here it is taken for the Idumeans, the posterity of Esau, Calvin. 2. Whereas before these sonnes here rehearsed were said to be borne in Canaan, vers. 5. we must either understand, not that these generations were borne, but dwelt in Seir, Muscul. or it must be referred not to the sons of E/sau, which are againe rehearsed, but to his nephewes, his sonnes children, which might be borne in Mount Seir, Mercer.

QUEST. IX. Of Thimna the mother of Amalek.

Vers. 12. THimna was concubine to Eliphaz. 1. Neither was this Thimna Eliphaz daughter which he had by the wife of Seir, as the Hebrewes imagine, which afterward was his concubine. 2. Neither had Eliphaz a sonne called Thimna by this Thimna. beside Amalech: because, 1 Chron. 1.36. Thimna and Amalek are numbred among Eliphaz sons: for there, Thimna the mother is set before A/malek her sonne, because he was borne to Eliphaz, of his concubine, and therefore Iunius inferreth •ell, by way of explanation, the sonne of Thimna, Amalek. 3. Yet Thimna and Aholibamah mentioned vers.

40.41. are the names of men, who were so called by the names of the first mothers of that nation, Iun. 4. This Thimna then was the daughter of Seir the Sister of L•an, verse 2•. which being a little one, might be brought up with Eliphaz his sonnes, and afterward become his concubine, Mercer. 5. Ama/lekis here shewed to come of Eliphaz by his concubine Thimna, to shew a difference betweene the right sonnes of Eliphaz, and his bastard sonne Amalek, of whom came the Amalekites whom God comman|ded to be destroyed, whereas the Idumeans God would have to be preserved, Mercer. 6. Whereas vers. 16. Amalek is counted among the sonnes of Eliphaz by Adah, whereas his mother was Thimna, it is like that Adah made him her adopted sonne, and so he is numbred with the rest, *Luther.

QUEST. X. Of Seir the Horite, of whom the mount Seir was so called.

Vers. 20. These are the sonnes of Seir the Horite, &c. 1. For the name Seir, which signifieth hairie, both Esau was so called, Gen. 25.25. and this Seir, who first gave the name to mount Seir, before Esau came thither: some of the Hebrewes thinke, the place was so called Seir, of the apparition of devils, who shewed themselves as hairy men, such as the Faunes were imagined to be. But it is more like that the place tooke denomination of this Seir, which there inhabited before Esau, Mercer. 2. Horite is not here an appellative, but a proper name, it signifieth, free, noble, and they were the same with the Hivites: as Sibeon the sonne of this Seir the Horite, is called an Hivite, Gen. 36.2. *Iun. These were the ancient inhabitants of Mount Seir, surprised sometime by the foure kings of the East, Gen. 14.6.

QUEST. XI. Whether Anah first found out the generation of mules in the wilderness.

Vers. 24. This is that Anah that found mules, &c. 1. The Septuagint make it a proper name, reading, ieemim, not knowing as it should seeme, what to make of it. 2. The Chaldee, interpret it Giants, that Anah found, that is, overcame gyants in the wilderness: in which sense the Lord is said in the psalme to finde out his enemies: but then it should be eemim, with al•ph, not ieemim. 3. Oleaster doth reade, he found out maria, sea or salt water in the wilderness: but then the word should be iamim. 4. Hierome translateth hot waters: for so saith he the word signifieth in the Punicke language: but we must not fetch the originall of an Hebrew word from another tongue. 5. Wherefore the best reading is, he found mules: that is, first coupled divers kinds together, the •e asse and the mare, of whom came the mules: thus the word is best interpreted, though it be only found in this place, both because the circumstance of the place giveth it: for hee kept his fathers asses: as also the thing may bee noted for the strangenesse of it, being a mixture of divers kinds against nature: and therefore the mules ingender not: and forbidden also by Moses law, Levit. 19.19. Thou shalt not suffer thy cattell to gender with other kinds, sic Musul. Mercer. Iun. Rupert. Lyran. &c. But Pererius misliketh this opinion though with no great reason.

QUEST. XII. Of Dishon and Aholibamah.

Vers. 25. The children of Anah were these, Dishon and Aholibamah, &c. 1. This Anah is not the same which in the verse before is said to have found out the mules, but he is the fourth son of Seir named before, vers. 20. for the generation of Seirs seven sonnes is set downe in order. It seemeth then, as there were two called Anah, one the brother of Sibeon, vers. 20. the other the son of Sibeon, vers. 24. so there were two women of the same name Aholibamah: one the daughter of Anah, Sibeons brother here mentioned: the other the daughter of Anah, Sibeons son, the wife of Esau, vers. 2. so that this Aholibamah is not the same with the other, as Iunius with some other Hebrews thinke. 2. So Dishon here is the sonne of Anah, the fourth sonne of Seir:^{*} there is another Dishon also brother to Anah the fift sonne of Seir, whose generation is expressed, verse 27. there is a third Dishon or Dishan, brother to this last Dishan, the 7 sonne of Seir, who is called Dishan, vers. 21. with this difference: the first Dishon is written Dishon, with van, without jod: the second the seventh sonne of Seir, Dishan, with j•d without van: the third the sonne of Anah, without either jod or van: although this difference bee not alwayes kept: for vers. 26.28. they are both called Dishan with the same letters.

QUEST. XIII. Of the number and time of the kings of Edom.

Vers. 31. These are the kings that reigned in the land of Edom, &c. 1. The Hebrews are somewhat curious, who against these eight Kings of the Edomites, set as many kings of Iudah, Saul, Isboseth, David, Salomon, Rehoboam, Abia, Asa, Iehosapha•, during whose time there was no king in Edom: but in the reigne of Ioram, Iehosaphats sonne the Edomites rebelled, and made themselves a king, 2 King. 8.20. that king of Edom in the time of Iehosaphat, was no absolute king, but a Viceroy, deputed by the Iewes, 1 King. 22.47. Beside they note, that Edom had 8. kings, because Iacob 8. times calleth Esau, Adonai Lord, Mercer. 2. He meaneth not those kings of Israel, which succeeded after Saul, as Mercer. for there were many more kings in Edom, before

Saul was elected their king: though I deny not, but Moses by the spirit of prophecie, did foresee, that there should be kings in Israel; as he describeth the duty of a king, Deut. 17.3. Moses then meaneth, before there was any certaine forme of government, or supreme magistrate in Israel, that is, till his time, who is said to be as a king, Deut. 33.5. sic Aben Ezra. Iun. though learned Mercerus mislike this opinion.

QUEST. XIV. Bela the sonne of Beor, neither Balaam nor Balac.

Vers. 32. BEla the sonne of Beor. 1. This neither could be Balaam, that troubled Israel, as some thinke, who neither was a king, nor yet an Idumean, but a Syrian. 2. Nor yet Balac, as the Sep|tuagint reade, who was the sonne of Zippor: not of Beor, and king of the Moabites, not of the Edomites, Mercer: and this Bela being the first king of the Edomites, was long before the time of Moses.

QUEST. XIV. Of what country and kindred Iob was.

Vers. 33. IObab the sonne of Zerah of Bozrah. 1. This neither was Iob that famous man for his patience, whose book is canonicall, as thinketh Tostatus: and it is affirmed by the Septuagint in the end of Iob, that he was this Iobab the sonne of Zerah, the sixt from Abraham: for there is great difference in the names, Iob is written with aleph, in the beginning: but Iobab, without aleph, Mercer. Againe, Iob dwelt in the land of Huz: but this Iobab was of Bozrah in the confines of Moab and Idumes: neither can it be gathered that Iob was a king, though hee were a man in authority for his wisdom and justice. 2. Some affirme Iob to be a Canaanite, and apply that place, Numb. 14.9. where it is said of the Canaanites, their shield is gone from them, unto Iob, who while he lived, by his righteousness delivered Canaan, R. Salomon. 3. Cajetan thinketh that Iob was an Arabian of Arabia-Petr^a: But it is not like that Iob so ver|tuous a man came of cursed Cham the father of the Canaanites and Arabians: and all the rest of Iobs friends were either of, Abraham, Nachor, or Esu, whom hee calleth his brethren. 4. Neither was Iob of the posterity of Nae or Abrahams brother, which is the opinion of Hierome, Lyrano, with some others: for though Huz were one of *Nahorss*sonnes, yet it is more like that the first Huz the sonne of Aram of Sem, Genes. 10.22. gave denomination to Iobs country: and as Elihu one of Iobs friends was a Buzite of Nahor, Iob. 32.2. so Bildad was a Shuite of Abraham by Keturah, Eliphaz a Temanite of Esau, therefore that concludeth not that he descended of Nahor. 5. Nor yet doe I thinke, that Iob was of the posterity of Esau, which is the common opinion of Chrysost. Augustine, Theodoret, and of the new writers, Mercer. Perer. with others. 1. For though the daughter of Edom be said to dwell in the land of Huz, Ier. 4.21. because Edom had so farre extended their habitation: yet they were two divers and distinct coun|tries in themselves, as may appeare, Ierem. 25.20, 21. where Huz and Edom are named asunder. 2. And what though Eliphaz one of Iobs friends be a Temanite of Esau, so was Eliu a Buzire of Nahor. 3. Neither is it like that Huz the sonne of Dishan the Horite, that dwelt in the land of Seir, before the Edomites, Genes. 36.28. gave that name unto Iobs country, which is Tostatus opinion: but of the first Huz of Aram, as is before said, was that country so called, Iun. 4. I thinke it therefore more probable, that Iob came of Abraham by Keturah; as Bildad the Shuire was of Shuah Abrahams sonne by Keturah, whom with the rest Iob calleth his brethren: And these sonnes of Keturah, are said to be sent into the East country, Genes. 25.6. and Iob is said to be the greatest of all the men in the East, Iob. 1.3. Abraham also had a greater care to instruct his sons, and to command them after him to keepe the way of the Lord, for which care the Lord himselfe commendeth him, Gen. 18.19. than either Nachor, or Esau had: and therefore it is not unlike but that Iobs great knowledge was the fruits of Abrahams instruction propagated to his posterity.

QUEST. XV. In what time Iob lived.

Concerning the time wherein Iob lived. 1. He was neither so ancient as Iacob, which seemeth to bee the opinion of Philo who thinketh that Dinah Iacobs daughter was Iobs wife: for Eliphaz the Telmanite, of Teman, of Eliphaz, of Esau, the third from Esau, one of Iobs friends, will make him after Iacobs time. 2. Neither was Iob in the time of Moses, which must be the opinion of Hierome, who maketh Eli•u to be Bala•m. 3. Much lesse lived he in the time of the judges, as Gregorie thinketh: for at such time as Iob lived, who is commended for offering sacrifice, the sacrificing priesthood was not instituted. 4. Wherefore it is probable, that Iob lived in the time of the Israelites being in Egypt, after the death of Ioseph, before the birth of Moses, when Sathan compassed the earth, and it was a rare thing to finde a righteous man: for Moses is held to be the writer of the booke of Iob: and as Eliphaz of Teman, of Eli•phaz, of Esau, of Isaack, of Abraham, was the sixt from Abraham, so might Iob be in another line.

QUEST. XVI. Of Baal-hanan the seventh king of Edom.

Vers. 38. BA•l-hanan the sonne of Achbor, &c. In that the city or country of this Baal-hanan is not expressed, as of the rest. 1. Some thinke it is omitted, because he was of the same city, of the which was the king next before named. 2. Some, because he had many adversaries, and therefore had no certaine place. 3. Some, as Ramban, that Hanan was his citie, and so he is called, Baal-hanan, that is, Lord of Hanan. 4. But it may be, that he was not so famous as the rest, and therefore his citie is not no|ted, Mercer.

QUEST. XVII. Of Mehetabel the wife of Hadad.

Vers. 39. MEhetabel the daughter of Matred, the daughter of Mezab•h▪ &c. 1. Some thinke that Matred was her father, Mezabah her mother. 2. Some, as R. Levi, will have her the naturall daughter of Matred, and the adopted daughter of Mezabah. 3. Some thinke that Mezabah was the name of the place, otherwise called Medeba, or with Ptolome, Medava, Iun. but this seemeth to be some|what coact and strained: that she should be called the daughter of such a citie or towne. 4. Therefore she is said to be the daughter of Matred her father, not mother; and daughter, that is, niece of her grand-falther, as Aholibamah before is said to be the daughter of Anah, and daughter, that is, niece of Sibeon, Mercer. 5. Mezabah signifieth golden waters: it might be that he was enriched by such waters, where gold was gathered; Matred also is interpreted one that is diligent or conversant in his worke: of the word tared, from whence some thinke the name Mithridates to be derived, Mehetabel, that is, doing wel or giving un|to God, of the same signification with the name Theodos••, Mercer.

QUEST. XVIII. Of the Dukes of Edom.

Vers. 41. DVke Timna, &c. Duke Aholibamah. 1. As the principality of Edom began with Dukes, and rose to Kings: so it returneth to Dukes againe, who did not one succeed another, as the Kings, but they were all rulers together, in divers places of Edom, after the death of Hadad, in Moses time, 1 Chron. 1.51. 2. These are not here the names of women, as thinketh Aben Ezra, that first the Dukes are named that came of Timna, then those which came of Aholibamah; neither are they the names of men, Iun. but rather of the places, called by the names of their first mothers, where these Dukes had their seat, Mercer. Muscul.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The prosperity of the wicked of short continuance.

Vers. 32. THese are the Kings that reigned, &c. The wicked are soone raised to honour, and are quickly cast downe againe: as Esaus posterity was speedily advanced to a Kingdome, but it continued not long; Iacobs seed, though a long time kept under in affliction, yet at the last obtained a firme and permanent Kingdome: such is the condition of the elect; though of a long time their happinesse appeareth not, yet when it breaketh forth, it hath a durable continuance; but the prosperity of the wicked soone fadeth away; therefore they are said to be set in flippery places, and they are as a dreame when one awaketh, Psal. 73.18.20. Mercer.

2. Doct. Alteration of states in the hand of God.

FURther, whereas first the Horites dwelt in mount Seir, and had divers Dukedomes and Principalities there: and after them the Edomites were first Dukes, then Kings, then Dukes againe; wee see that the alteration of states, transplanting and changing of Kingdomes, is in the Lords hand; it is God that maketh low, and maketh high, Psal. 75.7. Muscul.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Outward prosperity, no sure note of the Church.

Vers. 32. THese are the Kings that reigned in Edom, &c. There were divers Kings in Edom, before any reigned in Israel; yet was not Edom the Church of God, but Israel; prosperity then and outward glory is no sure note of the true Church, as the Papists make it, Luther. For then Moses would not have chosen to suffer affliction with the people of God, and have refused the glory, pompe and pleasure of Pharaohs Court, Heb. 11.25.

2. Confut. Against the Iewes, that Magdiel is not Rome.

Vers. 43. DVke Magdiel: the Hebrewes take this for Rome, because they thinke that the Romans came of the Idumeans; but they have no reason for it; spiritually indeed the Romanists, and all other enemies to the Church of God may be counted Idumeans; But otherwise there was no affinity betweene Rome and Idumea, being so farre distant; Magdiel was a place in Edom, as Timna and Teman and the rest were; It signifieth, annuntians Deum, praising or confessing God; in which sense it were happy for Rome, now spirituall Babylon, if she could truly be called Magdiel.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Observ. God blesseth the seed of the righteous, for their fathers sakes.

Vers. 15. THese were the Dukes of the sonnes of Esau, &c. As Ismael was temporally blessed for Abrahams sake, so was Esau for Isaacks sake: his posterity was renowned and honourable. Thus the Lord often vouchsafeth temporall and outward favours even to the degenerate seed, for their righteous forefathers sake: as the Lord would not take away the whole Kingdome from Rehoboam, that David still might have a light in Jerusalem, 1 King. 11.36.

2. Observ. The wicked void of naturall affection.

Vers. 20. THese are the sonnes of Seir the Horite, &c. Esau was by marriage allied to this Seir, for hee married Aholibamah, nee to Sibeon the third sonne of Seir, Gen. 36.2.20. yet the children of Esau chased away the Horims, and destroyed them, and dwelt in their stead in mount Seir, Deut. 2.12. whereby it is evident that the wicked are void of naturall affection, and that affinity is not much regarded among them, when they are bent upon their owne preferment and commodity: as Laban pursued after Iacob and his daughters, purposing to have done him some harme, but that the Lord staid him, Gen. 31.29.

THE SECOND BOOKE OF THE SECOND TOME OR PART OF GENESIS: Containing the notable History of the life, acts, and vertues of honourable JOSEPH.

HEB. 11.12.

By faith, Ioseph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Israel, and gave commandement of his bones.

AMBROS. Lib. 1. Officior. cap. 17.

Ioseph humilis fuit usque ad servitutem, verecundus usque ad fugam, patiens usque ad carcerem, re|missor injuriae usque ad remunerationem:

Ioseph was humble even unto service, shamefast unto flight, patient unto prison, a remitter of wrongs unto reward.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVABLE The L. Cecill, Vicount Cranborne, Earle of Salisbury, principall Secretarie to his excellent Majestie, and Chancellour of the Vniversitie of Cambridge, and of his Majesties most honourable privie Councill: Grace, mercy, and peace, from the Lord Iesus.

Right Honourable, I present to your Honour, this last part of these my collections and Commentarie upon Genesis: wherein to set forth unto us the worthy history of honourable Ioseph, his hu|miliation first, and then his exaltation, together with his pati|ence, chastity, clemency, equity, with the rest of his Princely vertues: A fit president for all noble persons to follow, and a per|fect patterne for men of honour and authority to looke upon.

Ioseph was famous and renowned for many noble vertues, but most especially for these foure: his chastity in himselfe, piety toward God; fidelity to his Prince; clemency toward his brethren.

First Ioseph is a rare example of chastity, who in his youthfull yeares, being a poore stranger and a servant, enticed often and allured by promises, and that by no meane wolman, but by his Lady the Mistresse of the house, and not ignorant of the danger, which might befall him for his refusall, yet chose rather with his innocency to lie in chaines of yron, than yeelding to intemperancy to weare chaines of gold: * this was his godly reso||lution, when hee was tempted, how can I doe this great wickednesse and so sinne against God? for he did very well know, that he which violateth wedlocke, doth sinne against

God the author thereof: wherefore the Apostle saith, * that the Lord will judge such himselfe: And Ambrose excellently concludeth this point concerning Ioseph, Mag|nus vir Ioseph, qui adamatus, non adamavit; rogatus, non acquievit; comprehen|sus, aufugit: Ioseph was a worthy man, who being loved, loved not againe: being entreated, consented not: being laid hold on, stayed not.

Secondly, Iosephs chastity is much more graced and commended by his piety: all his actions savour of godlinesse, and the feare of God as a sweet perfume doth give a pleasant scent to all his enterprises: before, when he was enticed, he had God in his mouth▪ when the two prisoners wanted an interpreter, he said unto them, are not interpretations of God? Gen. 40.8. when he stood before Pharaoh to interpret his dreame, he gave the glory to God, without me shall God make answer for the wealth of Pharaoh, Gen. 41.16.

when his children, Manasseh and Ephraim were borne, he remembred God: at the birth of the first he said, God hath made me to forget all my labour: and hee called the selcond Ephraim, and said, God hath made me fruitfull in the land of mine affliction, Genes. 41.50, 51. Afterward when Ioseph communed with his brethren, <◇> unknowne, he could not conceale his religion; This doe and live (saith he) for I feare God, Genes. 42.18. when he discovered himselfe to his brethren, he turneth himselfe unto God, sayling, God did send me before for your preservation, Genes. 45.5. Th•• <◇> Ioseph did shew himselfe twice noble indeed, by his unfained piety, and godly sincerity: Much like herein was devout Daniel, who being one of the three chiefe Governours of that great Monarchy of the Persians, did thrice every day upon his knees pray and praise his God, Dan. 6.10. Thus should all prudent Governours doe, to honour him, by whom they are honoured, and to crave wisdome of the Author and Fountaine of wisdome. Hierome giveth this counsell to a noble Matron: Cum claritate generis morum suavitate con|tendas, cum nobilitate corporis animi virtute nobilior proficias, magisque illa nobilitate glorieris, quae filios Dei, & cohaered•s Christi facit, &c. non est quod si|bi quis de nobilitate generis blandiatur, si ex meliore parte famulus sit: Hieron. ad Demetriad. With the greatnesse of thy stocke, strive by goodnesse of manners: to|gether with noblenesse of bloud, increase in the true nobility of mind: count that the best nobility, which maketh us the sonnes of God, and fellow heires with Christ: it availeth not to boast of highnesse of stocke, if thou be abased in thy bettter part.

Thirdly, Ioseph is famous for his faithfull service toward his Prince, who when he had gathered up all the money, which was found in the land of Aegypt and Canaan, for the corne which they bought, did not store it up for himselfe, but laid it up in Pharaohs treasury, Gen. 47.14. wherein Iosua well imitated him, who in the division of the land of promise to the Tribes, reserved no part for himselfe: but when they had made an end of dividing, then the children of Israel with one consent cast him out a lot amongst them, Iosua 19.49. Ioseph then thought not to enrich himselfe by his office, as many officers now adayes, but he travelled more for the wealth of Pharaoh, than his owne gaine: in whom was not wanting that property which Moses father in law requireth in a Go|vernour, to be a man hating covetousnesse, Exod. 18.21. which point is touched well by *Ambrose: Ne praeeminentem virum thesauri possideant sui, & pecuniis ser|viat, * qui praeest liberis: That a great person should possesse, rather than bee possessed of his treasure, neither be commanded of money, who is a commander of men.* Neither was Ioseph so devoted to his Princes profit, that he neglected the poore commons, but was a father also unto them: that whereas he had bought themselves and their land for Pharaoh, hee both releaseth them of their bondage, and taketh only the fift part of the increase of their land, whereas the whole belonged to Pharaoh: and by this means,* as Ambrose saith, they lost nothing of their profit, that gained a perpetuity: for it was better to part with some of the fruits, than to forgoe the whole. Such a prudent moderation well beseemeth wise Governours, to be such honourable mediators betweene Prince and people (wherein this kingdome, God bee thanked, wanteth not ex|amples) as that the royall dignity of the one may be preserved, the others poore estate piltied, that the people may say unto them, as the Egyptians did to Ioseph, Thou hast saved our liues: for as Amb. well saith, they thought it no sale of their right, but a safe|ty of their estate.

Lastly, Ioseph most wisely did temper severitie and clemencie, justice and mercy

together: first he dealt roughly with his brethren, charged them to be spies, imprisoned them, caused Simeon to be bound, laid theft to their charge: but afterward he lovingly embraced them, wept over them, and was afoster father unto them: * O tormenta mise|ricordiae! cruciat, & amat: O the torments of pittie! hee vexeth, and yet loveth them: So mercie and judgement tempered together, make a sweet harmony,* as David saith, I will sing mercie and judgement: such a song did Ioseph sing; * His wrath asswaged, which appeared, and was not: his mercie prevailed, which was, and appeared not. So Magistrates doe well sometime with Ioseph to use threats, and speake roughly, where is cause: but I well hope, that Iosephs irefull words, and pretended threatnings, will end toward his brethren, with mercifull deeds, and extended embracings. We praise God for your Honours mercifull government: let them first taste of your mercie, that teach you to shew mercie. The Egyptian priests under Pharaoh, by the hand of Ioseph, were maintained in the time of dearth: I doubt not but your Honour under our peerelesse Pharaoh, will doe your best, that the Ministers of the Gospell be stolred with maintenance, where they have it not, much more bee suffred to enjoy that they have: Ioseph remitted his brethrens trespasses, that had taken away his parti|coloured coat: and although some of our brethren would have certaine ceremonies, which may seeme as the coat of this Church) removed, yet Iosephs brotherly connivence may heale up that breach. Toleration and forbearance toward friends and brethren in such matters, may well beseeme Ioseph: But your Honours constant resolution (therein con|curring with his excellent Majestie) against all toleration of contrary religion, or giving countenance to such, is most honourable, and joyous to all faithfull hearts: If they differed from us only in some externall rites, and were beside peaceable and profi|table men, they might have some reason to desire and expect to be tolerated and borne with; according to that conclusion of the Toletane Councel: * In una fide nihil officit Ec|clesiae sanctae consuetudo diversa, &c. In the Church the unity of faith is not hin|dred by the diversitie of rites. But seeing they dissent from us in substantial and funda|mentall points of faith, and so are enemies to the Church, and depend upon a forreinē Prelate for their direction, and so are dangerous to the state, your Honours resolution is most Christian, to shew no connivence in this case, much lesse to give protection, but to use against such all providence and circumspection: for Christ and Belial, Dagon and the Arke, light and darknesse cannot dwell together. God give your Honour courage, strength, and zeale, notwithstanding the malice and envie of idolatrous Romanists, to hold on this happie course, that with Ioseph, though archers shoot at you, your bow may abide strong, and the hands of your armes be strengthened by the hand of the mightie God of Iacob.*

Now lastly, I wish unto your Honour Iosephs portion, that according to his name,* first Iosephs vertues, then Iosephs honours, may be added unto you in this life, and his ever|lasting inheritance afterwards in the heavenly Canaan, through the great mercies of our gracious God, and infinite merits of our blessed Saviour Christ Iesus, to whom bee praise for ever.

CHAP. XXXVII.

I. The Method.

FIrst, in this Chapter are set forth the causes of the envy and hatred of Iacobs sonne against Ioseph. 1. His complaining of them to his father, vers. 2. 2. Iacobs extraordinary love and affection toward Ioseph, vers. 4. 3. His two dreames, of the sheaves, vers. 7, 8. of the starres, vers. 9, 10. whereby was prefigured his prehelminence over his brethren.

Secondly, the fruits and effects of their envy are declared, their hard dealing toward Ioseph, with the occasion thereof, and the sequele. 1. The occasion was ministred by occasion of Iosephs sending to his brethren by Iacob, vers. 13. to 19. 2. Their hard dealing appeareth, first in consulting to kill Ioseph, but that Ruben otherwise turned them, vers. 20, 21. secondly, in casting of him into a pit, while they themselves did eat and drinke, not regarding the affliction of Ioseph, vers. 23. to 26. 3. In selling of him to the Madianites, at Iudah his motion, who sold him afterward to Potiphar.

Thirdly, the sequell and issue is this: first, they dissemble with their father, making him beleeve, that Io/seph was torne of the wild beasts: then they are causes of Iacobs great sorrow and grieve that mourned for his sonne, vers. 34, 35.

2. The divers readings.

- v. 2. when Ioseph was sixteene yeere old. H. seventeene. caeter.*
- v. 2. hee accused his brethren of a bad crime. H. Ioseph brought their accusation. C. evill saying or report. B.G. evill fame. T. dibbah, signifieth infamy, slander, reproach.*
- v. 5. who hated him so much the more: all have but the Septuag.
- v. 13. Israel said to him. H. Israel said to Ioseph. caet.
- v. 14. and Israel said to him. S. and he said. caeter.
- v. 20. into an old pit. H. into one of these pits. caeter.
- v. 21. endeavoured to deliver him. H. delivered him out of their hands. caeter.
- v. 22. this he said to deliver him. H. that he might deliver. caet.
- v. 28. for twenty peeces of gold. S. twenty peeces of silver. caet.
- v. 36. to Potiphar, Pharaohs Eunuch. H.S.B.G. one of Pharaohs courtiers. T. Princes. C.P. saras, a Prince, an Eunuch: it is like he was not an Eunuch being married.

Pharaohs chiefe cooke. S. chiefe captaine. C.H. chiefe steward. B.G. master of his guard.* T. chiefe of his slaughter men. P. tabach, signifieth to kill, to put to death.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. What generations Moses here meaneth.

Vers. 2. These are the generations, &c. 1. Some by generations expound the events, and things that hap|pened to Iacob and his posterity: sic Vatab: but the word toldoth will not fitly beare that sense. 2. Some referre these generations to Ioseph, as the principall among Iacobs sonnes, in whom the image of Iacobs inward vertues and outward countenance did more appeare, than in any of the rest, Rupert. but then he would have said, generation, not generations, in the plurall. 3. Others, as Ramban, Cajetan, send us to the 46. chapter following, wherein Iacobs posterity is rehearsed and numbred: and understand those genera|tions here to bee spoken of: but that genealogy following ten chapters after, cannot conveniently have dependance of this place. 4. Therefore, I thinke rather, that we are to looke to the 35. chapter, where in the end Iacobs twelve sonnes are rehearsed: and then (a briefe catalogue of Esaus of-spring comming be|twene) the story returneth to Iacob and his generations: Iun. Among the which Moses insisteth upon Ioseph, as the most worthy.

QUEST. II. Ioseph sold into Egypt while Isaack was alive.

Vers. 2. When Ioseph was 17. yeare old, &c. 1. Whereas the death of Isaack is mentioned before, c. 35. when hee was 180. yeare old, and Iacob 120. who was but 60. yeare younger then Isaack: this storie of Iosephs selling into Egypt when he was but 17. yeare old, must needes goe be|fore Isaacks death, 12. or 13. yeare: for if Iacob, when Ioseph was 39. that is, 30. yeare old when he stood before Pharao, and nine yeare more, that is counting 7. yeares of plentie, and two of famine, if Iacob were then 130. Gen. 47.9. then at Iosephs seventeene, Iacob exceeded not 108. yeares: But hee was 120. when Isaack died, and then was Ioseph 31. yeare old or there about. 2. Now where it is added, being yet a childe:* 1. Neither need we with Ramban to transpose the word, and ioyn it with his yeares: and reade thus, when Ioseph was a child of 17. yeares: for the order of the text will not beare it to be so trans|posed. 2. Neither is that the best reading to say, and the child was with the sonnes of Bilha, &c. a• B.G. doe reade: but with a parenthesis thus (being yet a child.) 3. which is added, not to signifie his age ex|pressed before: nor yet that he was as a servant and minister to his father and brethren, as the word ••/guar sometime signifieth: as Iosua is called puer Mosis, Moses boy, Iun. but to declare the simplicitie of his mind, that he did not of malice accuse his brethren, Mercer. and the puritie of his affection, that at those yeares could not abide sinne, Rupert. and crueltie of his brethren, that dealt so hardly with him being a child, Chrysost. And beside, his age is mentioned, to shew how long a time Ioseph continued in miserable captivitie: full 14. yeares, from 17. till he was 30. for so old he was when he stood before Pharao, Per••

QUEST. III. Why Ioseph keepeth with the sons of the handmaides.

Vers. 2. With the sonnes of Zilpah and of Bilhah. Ioseph keepeth sheepe with the sonnes of Iacobs concubines, rather than the other. 1. Not because as Rasi thinketh, the sonnes of Leah despised the sonnes of the handmaides, and therefore Ioseph ioyneth himselfe unto them, not scor|ning them: for then these sonnes of the handmaides would haue beene the readiest to have delivered Ioseph: whereas Ruben and Iudah the sonnes of Leah were his best friends. 2. Therefore Iacob com|mitteth Ioseph to their custodie, because the other brethren of Leah could not well brooke the sonnes of Rachel, whom Iacob loved better then their mother, Ramban. and beside Rachel beeing dead, Ioseph was as Bilhas sonne, and her children were as Rachels, and so brethren to Ioseph, as both by father and mothers side, Muscul. he kept companie also with Zilphas sonnes, because it seemeth the sonnes of the handmaides sorted together.

QUEST. IIII. What sin it was whereof Ioseph accused his brethren to his father.

ANd Ioseph brought to their father their evil saying. 1. The other brethren accused not Ioseph to thei• father, as the Septuagint in some translations reade: but Ioseph accused them, whereupon they hated him. 2. Neither did Ioseph only complaine of the handmaides sonnes, as Cajetan. though it may be thought that their servile nature was most prone to euil, but of the rest also, for they all hated him, Iun. 3. That which he complained of was not, 1. Either any wrong done to himselfe, as Vatablus. 2. Not of any particular sinne, as the Latin translator readeth: as either of the sinne of Sodomitrie, as Rupertus. 3. Or of the incest of Ruben, as gloss. interlinear: for Ruben afterward was Iosephs best friend. 4. Or of that horrible sinne of bestiall copulation, as Tostat. Thom. it is not like that Iacobs sonnes, though licentious enough, were so filthye geuen. 5. Or that they did eate raw flesh, contrarie to the precept of Noah, as the Hebrewes. 6. But I rather thinke, that he brought to Iacob their evil fame, or report, as the word signifieth: that is, complained generally of their evil life, for the which they were infamous: as either their contention among themselves, or defiling themselves with the daughters of the heathen, or such like, Mercer. Perer.

QUEST. V. Whether Ioseph did well in accusing his brethren to their father.

NOw, lest Ioseph might be thought to have dealt uncharitable with his brethren, in accusing them to his father: for this is one of the titles giuen unto Sathan, who is called an accuser of the brethren, Apocal. 12. 1. It is to be considered, that Ioseph might first privately admonish them, before he told his father, although it be not in the scripture directly expressed, Tostat. 2. Or it may seeme, that prae/moniti• non fuit necessaria, cum crimen esset publicum: admonition was not necessarie, where the crime wa• publike, Thom. 3. Or Ioseph did perceive that his admonition would not prevaile, but that they would have hated him the more: as the wise man saith, Reproove a scor•er, and hee will hate thee, Prov. 9. and in this case one may forbear private admonition, as Augustine well noteth: *Si vel opportuni•s •mpus querit, * vel metuit •e deteriores efficiantur*; if either hee watch a fitter time, or bee afraid they should wax worse, in such cases to refraine, and not for feare of displeasure, or any temporall losse, it is, consilium charitatis, a charitable consideration. 4. It may be observed, that Ioseph did not publish or divulgate abroad to every one his brethrens sinnes, but only informed his father: for otherwise, as Augustine, Si coram omnibus •is arguere, non eris corrept•r, sed prodit•r, &c. If thou wilt reproove before all what th•• knowest by thy brother, thou shalt not bee a reproover, but a betrayer, s•r. 16. de verb. domin. 5. Ioseph did not accuse his brethren of a mali•ous minde, being yet in a manner but a childe, but of a desire to haue them amended: for, as Augustine saith, Debemu• amando corripere, non nocendi •viditute, s•d studio c•r/rig•ndi, Wee must reproove in lov•, not in a desire to hurt, but a studie to correct.

QUEST. VI. Whether Iacob loved Ioseph chiefly because he was borne in his old age.

Vers. 3. ISrael loved Ioseph, because he was the sonne of his old age. 1. We need not with Rupertus, to under|stand this mystically, by Israels old age, his perfection of vertue, and that therefore he loved Io/seph best, because he did imitate his fathers vertue. 2. Nor yet with Onkel•s, and Paul. Burgens. doe we re|ferre it to Ioseph, that he was the childe of old age, that is, a wise, sober, and grave childe, for this is coact and strained. 3. But indeed Iacob loved him, because he had him in his old age, being then 91. yeare old, when Ioseph was borne: Benjamin was younger than Ioseph, but then not above foure or five yeares old, and therefore not so capable of his fathers love, as Ioseph, who began now to shew his vertue and good dis|position: the rest also of Iacobs sonnes were borne in his old age, all within the compasse of seven yeares▪ and he was 84. yeare old when he began to have children • yet Ioseph was the youngest of them, and the first borne of his beloved Rachel; much desired and longed for on both sides before he was borne, and therefore best beloved when he came. 4. Now the reason • why children borne in old age are best belo|ved of their parents, are these. 1. Because they are the last borne, * and the aged parents looke for none after-sembling his mother Rachel. Iosephus: his heroicall and princely mind, which appeared in his dreames, a ward, Phil. 2. And are most likely to be the longest livers, and so to continue their fathers name, Cajetan. 3. Or for that the aged parents are delighted with the pratling and sport of young children, Oleaster. 4. Or they are alwayes at hand, and in their fathers eye, Ramban. 5. Or the parents doe it in wisdom, to make most of the youngest, because they are least able to shift for themselves. Other causes there might bee of Iacobs affection to Ioseph: as the comelinesse of his body resembling his mother Rachel, Iosephus: his heroicall and princely minde, which appeared in his dreames, a prophecie of his honourable estate after|ward; Philo. His vertuous and godly disposition: but these causes are concealed, lest they might have increased the envy of his brethren, Chrysost.

QUEST. VII. Of Iosephs particoloured coat.

Vers. 3. HE made him a coat of divers colours: the word is, passim, peeces: 1. Some doe read, a side gowne or coat, as Aquila, and Gregory doth thereby understand his constancy and perseve|rance. 2. Some reade, tunicam manicatam, a sleeved coat, Symmach: but the word will beare neither of these interpretations. 3. Neither yet was it made of divers kinds of threads, for that was forbidden by the law, Levit. 19.19. whereas in Davids time, Thamar did weare such a garment, of the same name, passim. 4. Neither yet was it a white silke garment representing the Priesthood, as some thinke. 5. Nor yet of di|vers peeces put together, for that had beene no such precious garment. 6. But it was a coat of divers colours, as the Septuag. translate, poik•lon, which seemed as though it had beene of divers parts and pee|ces, Mercer. Iun.

QUEST. VIII. The difference betweene envy and hatred.

Vers. 4. THEy hated him. 1. There is great difference betweene hatred and envy: 1. Men are hated for evill: they are envied for some good thing, as prosperity, riches, wisdom: 2. Hatred is of some particular matter, envy hath a generall object, for any thing that happeneth well to a man. 3. Ha|tred may sometime be just, as to hate the wicked; envy is never just. 4. Hatred may be conceived against bruit beasts, as a man hateth a serpent or a tode, but envy is only against men. 5. Envy ceaseth when men from a prosperous state fall into misery, but even men in misery may bee hated. 6. Hatred is, where wee have received hurt, but they are often envied of some, whom they never hurt. 7. Whom men hate, they will harme, if they can: but sometime a mans gifts are envied, against whom no hurt is intended. 2. Beside these differences betweene envy and hatred, envy hath these peculiar properties. 1. Envy rejoyceth in ano|ther mans fall. 2. He that is envied many times fareth the better, as Ioseph did. 3. An envious man hu•teth himselfe most, and him nothing that is envied. 4. An envious man dissembleth in his outward behaviour, making outwardly a shew of friendship, bearing malice in his heart: such was Ioa• toward Abner, while he embraced him with the one hand, he killed him with the other. 5. An envious man, as Gregory noteth, sheweth himselfe to be of a base mind: for in that he envieth another, he bewrayeth his owne wants, not having that which hee envieth in another. 3. The remedy against this devouring sinne of envy, Basil pre|scribeth, Si nihil rer•m human•rum magnum, aut vehementer expet••dum putemus: * to thinke no humane thing to be of any great reckoning, or much to be desired▪ and then shall wee neither envy the rich for his riches, nor the honourable person for his honour, nor any other for any worldly gift. Againe, the wise man saith, Ne comedas cum homine invidio, eat not with an envious man, or a man that hath an evill eye, Prov. 23.6. lest that by conversing with such, we learne of their qualities, Perer.

QUEST. IX. Of Iosephs dreame, why doubled.

Vers. 6. HEare the dreame which I have dreamed, &c. 1. Ioseph hath two dreames shewed him, both ten|ding to the same end, to declare the certainty of his exaltation above his brethren: as Ioseph afterward saith to Pharao, that had two dreames likewise, foreshewing the same thing, Gen. 41.32. The dreame was doubled the second time to Pharao, because the thing is established with God. 2. Iosephus is decei|ved, that saith, Iosephs brethren found no fault at the telling of the first dreame, whereas the text is other|wise: they said nothing at the rehearsing of the second, referring it to the judgement of their father, to whom Ioseph told it againe, whom his father rebuked in the presence of their brethren, and therefore they spared their reprehension, or Moses thought good to omit it, Mercer. 3. Some doe apply those parables to Christ, making him the sheafe of corne, to whom all the Patriarks and Prophets do stoope, Rupert. some also further make Ioseph a type of Christ: * 1. In that hee uttered dreames, as the other parables. 2. Christ spake of his exaltation, as Ioseph of his. 3. Christ was hated for his parables, s Ioseph for his dreames, Perer.

QUEST. X. Of the divers kinds of dreames.

FURther it is to be considered, that dreames are divers waies caused. 1. Some dreames arise of the fullnesse of the bellie and excesse of drinke, such are the dreames of Epicures and drunken persons. 2. Some come of emptinesse and want: as when an hungrie or thirstie man dreameth of meat or drinke, Isay 29.8. 3. Some are wrought by the illusion of Sathan. 4. Some partly by the illusion of Sathan, partly by mans owne imagination, Eccles. 5.3. A dreame commeth by the multitude of businesse. 5. Some dreames are sent by divine revelation: such were those of Ioseph. 6. Some proceed partly of our owne serious cogitation, part|ly of divine revelation: such were Nebuchadnezsars dreames: as Daniel saith to him: O king, when thou wast in thy bed, thoughts came upon thee, &c. Dan. 2.29. Perer. ex Gregor.

QUEST. XI. Ioseph not worthy of rebuke.

Vers. 10. His father rebuked him, &c. 1. Ioseph did herein nothing worthy of reprehension the nei|ther told these dreames of any vanitie of minde, nor of childish simplicitie, but as the dreames were revealed of God, * so he moved Ioseph to declare them. 2. Iacob did not herein dissemble in seeming to rebuke Ioseph for the contentment of his brethren. Iun. Calvin. but he did indeed rebuke Ioseph, as not yet perceiving the mysterie of these dreames, yet presently came to himselfe, and considered more deeply of them, as it followeth, vers. 11. His father noted that saying, Mercer.

QUEST. XII. How Iosephs mother being dead, is said to fall downe unto him.

Vers. 10. SHall, and thy mother, and thy brethren, come indeed and fall on the ground? &c. 1. Neither is it like, that Rachel Iosephs mother was alive at this time, as thinketh Oleaster, Cajetane• for Rachel was dead before Iacob came to Hebron, and as yet while Rachel lived Benjamin was not borne, of whom shee died in travaile: so that then there could not be an eleven brethren beside Ioseph, which are signified by the eleven starres. 2. Neither was this fulfilled in Iosua, who was of the tribe of Ephraim of Ioseph, to whom indeed the Sunne obeyed by standing still, as some Hebrewes: for Iacob understandeth not the Sunne literally, but figuratively of himselfe: and so Ioseph also aplieth these dreames to himselfe and his brethren, Genes.42.9. 3. Neither yet is it so fit to understand Bilh• Ra/chels maid, who was Iosephs reputed mother. Ramban thinketh it improper, that a concubine should be resembled to the moone. 4. And it is more unfit with Rupertus, to drive this storie to an allegorie, that by the Sunne we should understand the Saints in heaven, and by the Moone the militarie Church in earth, that all bow unto Christ prefigured in Ioseph. 5. Neither doth Iacob speake ironically, hereby shewing the vanitie of Iosephs dreame, as though his mother should be fetched out of her grave, to doe him ho|mage, as Lyran. Perer. for Iacob himselfe noted these things, and held the dreames not as vaine, but as serious matters. 6. Wherefore the name of mother, is to be understood of her which was then mother of the family, whether Leah or any of the other then living, Mercer.

QUEST. XIII. How Iacob and Iosephs mother did obeysance to Ioseph in Egypt.

BUT a further question here ariseth, how this was fulfilled, that Iosephs father and mother revered Ioseph. 1. For Iacob, the case is plaine: not that he personally worshipped Ioseph, as some doe expound that place, Genes. 47.31. He worshipped toward the beds head: for Iacob there did not worship Ioseph, but praised God: nor yet did Iacob then onely reverence Ioseph, when he sent presents unto him as unknowne by his sons into Egypt. Per. but Iacob did reverence Ioseph not in bowing or humbling himselfe unto him, but in acknowledging and reverencing in him that high place, to the which the Lord had called him. 2. Iosephs mother is said to reverence him, not only because he was of her posteritie in Benjamin honoured: or in respect of the possibilitie or likelihood, that even his mother, if she had been in Egypt, as his brethren were, before Ioseph had discried himselfe, might have fallen downe before him: it is not unlike, but that either Leah or some other, that was the mother of the family, went downe into Egypt with Iacob, though it be not expressed, because the women in that account are not numbred, and so together with the rest might doe obeysance to Ioseph.

QUEST. XIV. Of Sechem, where Iacobs sonnes kept their sheepe.

Vers. 12. THEy went to keepe their fathers sheepe in Shechem. 1. This was not another Shechem beside that Citie which Simeon and Levi put to the sword, as some Hebrewes think: for though it be a good space distant from Hebron, they might raunge thither, to finde out pasture for their Cattell, as Laban and Iacob kept their flockes three dayes journey asunder: neither need they to be afraid of the inhabitants, because of the blood shed in that place, seeing that Shechem was now become Iacobs pos|session, and the feare of him fell upon the cities round about. 2. This Shechem was a notorious place, for divers accidents there done: in this place Simeon and Levi committed that bloodie exploit: there Ioseph was sold, there Ieroboam divided the kingdome, 1 King. 13.25. in Dothan, not farre from thence, the Prophet Elizeus was, when the king of Aram sent a great hoast to take him, 2 King.6.13. 3. It is evi|dent by this place, that Salem is not a proper name of a place, and the same with Shechem, as some doe reade, Gen. 33.18. for here Iacob sendeth Ioseph to Sechem, to see if they were shelem, in safety, or in peace.

QUEST. XV. What man it was that did meet Ioseph being out of his way.

Vers. 17. THE man said, they are departed hence, &c. 1. This was a man, and not the Angel Gabriel, as the Hebrewes imagine: for it appeareth he was one that knew his brethren, and was present, when he heard them say, they would goe to Dothan. 2. Neither need we curiously with the He|brewes, to refer this their departure to the inward disposition of their minde, that they were departed from all brotherly affection toward Ioseph: the words are plaine enough, that he meaneth their changing of place, Mercer.

QUEST. XVI. Why they call Ioseph dreamer.

Vers. 19. BEhold this dreamer commeth. The Word is Lord or master of dreames. 1. They either so call him, because dreames were usuall with Ioseph, Mercer. 2. Or for that, as the property of envious men is, they doe aggravate the matter beyond the truth, and make it more than it is, Thom. An|glic. 3. Or they so called him, as the author and inventor of dreames, Vatab. 4. As also in respect of the matter, or object of the dreames, which made Ioseph Lord over his brethren, Iun.

QUEST. XVII. Of the consultation of Iosephs brethren to kill him.

Vers. 20. COme let us kill him, &c. 1. The Hebrewes imagine, that they had purposed to destroy him, while he was a far off, by setting dogs upon him to worry him: but it seemeth that this was their first consultation, to kill him, and to cast him into a pit, Mercer. 2. Their excuse was ready to say some evill beast had devoured him, for that country abounded with wilde beasts, as Lions, 1 King 13. the man of Iudah was slaine by a lion; and bears, 2 King. 2.42. children that railed upon the Prophet were rent asunder of them. 3. Herein, as Prosper well noteth, the Patriarkes conspiring Iosephs death, were a figure of the Iewes that took counsell to put our blessed Saviour to death. 4. But although they herein sustained the person of the Iewes in figure, they are not excused from sinne, as Ambrose seelmeth to insinuate; Subierunt personam peccatoris populi, ut gratiam acciperent Redemptoris; certe culpam abolevi-gra•ia, &c. They did beare the person of the sinfull people, to receive the grace of the Redeemer; certainly grace hath blotted out the fault: their fault was no doubt remitted, but first we must yeeld the same to have beene committed.

QUEST. XVIII. Of Rubens counsell for the delivering of Ioseph.

Vers. 21. BVt Ruben, when he heard it, &c. 1. Ruben is said to have delivered Ioseph, because by his counsell he hindered the purpose of his brethren that would have killed him, Iun. 2. Iosephus setteth downe divers reasons, which Ruben should use to dissuade his brethren from this bloody enterprise: 1. In respect of God, from whom nothing could be hid. 2. In regard of their father, whose great grieffe and so•row by this meanes should be procured. 3. And concerning Ioseph, that they should consider he was but a child, and therefore to be pittied: he was their brother, and therefore to be spared. 4. And for themselves▪ to remember what a great sin they should commit in shedding innocent blood: and that only envy toward their brother, was the beginning of this mischief intended, ex Perer. 3. It is like that Ruben might use other perswasions: but Moses only expresseth that principall reason, that they should not shed blood: whereof the Lord gave an expresse law to Noah, after the flood, Mercer. 4. Here|in appeareth the hypocrisie of the rest, that thought they were free from blood, if they did not shed it with their owne hand, though they otherwise caused Iosephs death, as by starving or pining him in a pit, which was far worse than if they had presently killed him: and hereupon Ramban untruly noteth, that he sinneth not so grievously, which procureth anothers death, as hee which with his owne hands sheddeth his blood. 5. Ruben in giving this advice, to let downe Ioseph into a pit, had no purpose that there he should die, but as the text is, to deliver him to his father: by this meanes he might thinke to be reconciled to his father, whom he had before offended by his incest, Calvin. The Hebrewes thinke, that for this compassion of Ruben he deserved afterward to have a Prophet of his tribe, namely Hosea: and to have one of the cities of refuge in his lot and division, Mercer.

QUEST. XIX. Of Iosephs party-coloured coat which his brethren spoyled him of.

Vers. 23. THEy stript Ioseph out of his coat, &c. 1. They neither left him naked, as Aben Ezra thinketh. 2. Neither did they take away from him two coats, as Lyranus. 3. Neither is it certaine, where|ther our Saviour Christs coat were like unto Iosephs. 4. They tooke from him this party-coloured coat, which was his upper garment, not so much for desire they had to the garment: but because it was a tolken of his fathers love, Mercer. As also with an intent to shew it to their father, thereby to colour and conceale their fact, vers. 32. Iun.

QUEST. XX. Of Iosephs letting downe into the pit.

Vers. 24. THEy cast him into a pit, &c. 1. It seemeth it was an old broken pit: for there was no water in it: such as Ieremie speaketh of, alluding to the fashion of that country: they have digged them pits, broken pits that can hold no water, Ier. 2.13. 2. It is not like, as R. Salomon conjectureth, that this pit was full of serpents and scorpions: for then, as Ramban noteth, they must needs haue acknowledged a miracle in the preservation of Ioseph among serpents: as of Daniel among the lions. 3. It may be, though no water were in the pit, yet it was full of mire, such as Ieremie was let downe into, Ierem. 38. Perer.

QUEST. XXI. Of the spices and balme which the Ismaelites carried.

Vers. 25. LAden with spicery, balme, and mirrhe. 1. The word necheth, is the same which the Arabi|ans call Nuketa, that is, spices, sweet druggs: yet elsewhere it is taken generally for pre|cious things: as 2 King. 20.13. Hezekiah shewed to the king of Babilons servants, his house Nechothe, of precious things, Oleaster, Iun. though Mercerus interpret it, Domum aromatum; House of spices. 2. The word tseri is not wax or rosin, as Oleaster; although the Latine word cera, and rasina, and the Greek word rheténe, (the letters somewhat transposed) come somewhat neare the sound of the Hebrew word: but it is better interpreted balme, as Iun. whereof there is great store in Gilead, Ierem. 8.22. rosin was neither so rich a merchandise to be transported so farre, nor so precious for curing of diseases; as the Prol|phet there noteth. 3. The last kinde of merchandise is called Lot, which cannot signifie the Chessnut, as derived from the root Lut, which signifieth to wrap in, or cover, as Oleaster; for this had beene no such precious merchandise to carry so farre: and Exod. 30. it is reckoned among the sweet spices whereof the perfume there prescribed was made: but it is better translated ladanum, Iun. which commeth somewhat neare the Hebrew word: the Chalde and Septuagint reade stacte, which is the same that ladanum, the gumme of the myrrhe or Cypres tree.

QUEST. XXII. Why the Ismaelites are also called Midianites.

Vers. 28. SOld Ioseph to the Ismaelites: Which are also called Midianites, vers. 28. and Medanites, vers. 36. which were three divers people, the first of Ismael Abrahams sonne by Agar, the second of Midian by Keturah, the third of Medan Abrahams sonne by Keturah also: these three are indifferently taken for the same people in this place. 1. Not for that they were distinct Nations, but grew to be one peo|ple, as Augustine. 2. Or because they all came of Abraham, and had the same father, Thom. Anglic. 3. Or because Agar and Keturah are supposed to be the same, Histor. Scholast. which is an untrue surmise. 4. Neither are we to imagine with some, that Ioseph was thrice sold, first to the Ismaelites, then to the Midianites, and lastly to Potiphar, as Rasi: for vers. 28. at the same instant Ioseph was sold both to the Is|maelites and Madianites. 5. Wherefore these merchants are named as well Midianites as Ismaelites, both because they did traffike together, and the company consisted of both sorts, Mercer. as also because the Ismaelites and Midianites dwelt in one Countrey of Arabia together: and therefore Oukelos readeth, vers. 25. for Ismaelites, Arabians: and for this cause the Kings of Midian are called Ismaelites, Iud. 8.24, 26. because of their cohabitation together, Iun.

QUEST. XXIII. Of the price which Ioseph was sold for.

FOr twenty peeces of silver, &c. These were twenty sicles of silver, which are in value 23. s. 4. d. starling: for every common sicke weigheth two drachmaes, that is • 4. d. starling: the fourth part of an ounce: so that foure sicles make a doller, Iun. 1. Wherefore it was neither so small a summe, as Bahai gheseth, who would have these to be twenty denarii, which make but five sicles: 2. Nor so much as Iosephus rec|koneth, who would have Ioseph sold for 20. min••, pounds: every mina or pound weighing 100. drachmaes, that is, 58. s. 4. d. starling. 3. The Septuagint also are deceived, that for peeces of silver reade peeces of gold: 4. Neither was Ioseph sold for 30. silverlings, as some translations did reade in Augustines time: because they would make the type & body, the selling of Ioseph and of Christ to agree in the summe, who was sold for 30. pence: but it is not necessary that the type should be answerable in every particular cir|cumstance. 5. The Hebrewes thinke that the ordinary price of servants was 30. sicles, but that they abal|ted ten because they sold Ioseph in secret: but it appeareth otherwise in the law: where the price of re|demption of the male from five yeares to twenty, is twenty shekels, Levit. 27.5. But in this place they had no respect to any custome or law, but according to their number they set the price of 20. shekels, for every one of them, which were ten in all, two shekels: for Benjamin was very young, not above foure or five yeare old, and could not give consent: and Ruben afterward gave consent unto them, Mercer.

QUEST. XXIV. Of the counsell of Iudah to sell Ioseph into captivity.

Vers. 26. Iudah said, what availeth it if we slay, though we keepe his bloud secret, &c. 1. They were resoll|ved already not to lay violent hands themselves upon Ioseph, but to suffer him to perish in the pit, and yet Iudah so accounteth of it as if they should slay him themselves. 2. Iudah was moved by the spirit of God to deliver Ioseph from this second death: yet he sheweth his hatred, in that he giveth counsell to make a bond-slave of him, which was a bad as death. 3. Iudah by this meanes thinketh to avoid three inconveniences, first the shedding of his bloud; secondly, to take him from his father who was so affected toward him; thirdly, to prevent the honour which Ioseph dreamed of. 4. The Hebrewes thinke, that for this compassion in Iudah, afterward Daniel of that tribe, was delivered from the Lyons: but it is certain, that upon this occasion of selling Ioseph into captivitie, the Israelites afterwards went downe into Egypt, and were afflicted with a long and hard bondage. 5. In the meane time while they were making their bargaine, Ioseph did intreat his brethren with many prayers and teares, Gen. 42.22. but they would not heare him, Mercerus.

QUEST. Where Ruben was when Ioseph was sold.

Vers. 29. RVben returned to the pit. 1. Ruben was absent when Ioseph was sold: some thinke, to mini|ster to his father according to his course: some, to mourne alone by himselfe for the sinne committed with his fathers concubine: But it is most like that he went about some other way to the pit to have taken Ioseph thence secretly, and therefore Iosephus thinketh that Ruben came thither in the night, Mercer. 2. Philo thinketh that after Ruben understood that his brethren had sold Ioseph, he utterly misli|ked it, making them worse than theeves; for they prey upon strangers, but these upon their owne brother, lib. de Ios•ph. but it is more like that Ruben did rest satisfied after he understood that they had not killed him; and consented unto them, Mercer. 3. Before he knew what was done he cryed out, Whither shall I goe? both because he was the first-borne, and therefore should bee most blamed for the losse of Ioseph, Muscul. as also for that he had so lately offended his father before for his incestuous act, Iun.

QUEST. XXVI. Of the sprinkling of Iosephs coat with blood, and the deceiving of Iacob.

Vers. 31. THEy tooke Iosephs coat, and killed a kid, &c. * 1. Ioseph thinketh that they brought Iosephs coat themselves, but the text is otherwise, vers. 32. they sent it: but Iosephus ghesseeth right, that they sent the coat rent and torne, as though indeed some wilde beast had devoured Ioseph: and they dipped it in a kids blood, which (they say) is most like unto mans blood. 2. Iosephus also is deceived in that he thinketh that Iacob had some knowledge before of Iosephs captivity, but now changeth his minde, thinking surely that Ioseph was devoured: for from whence could Iacob have any knowledge what was befallen Ioseph, but by his brethren, who were sure to keepe it secret from their father, ex Perer. 3. Rulpertus hath also a strange opinion, that Iacob was not so simple when he saw the bloody coat, to thinke that a beast had devoured every part of Ioseph, nothing to remaine but his coat: but that he did surmise that his brethren had killed him: but durst not tell his sonnes of it, because he saw them so maliciously bent: for Iacob sheweth the contrary by his owne words, that he gave credit to their report, that an evill beast indeed had spoiled Ioseph, vers. 33. and if Iacob had so thought, hee would not have spared by his fatherly authority to rebuke his sonnes to bring them to repentance. 4. It is like that afterward when it was knowne to Iacob that Ioseph lived, that his brethren confessed the truth to their father and acknowledged their fault, but that Iacob seeing how God had turned Iosephs captivity to the good of them all, therein considering Gods providence, spared to rebuke them: as Ioseph upon the same reason did forbear his brethren, Gen. 45.7. 5. Simeon and Levi, as they were most cruelly given, * as it appeareth by the destruction of the Sichemites, are thought to have bin the principall actors against Ioseph: which may be the cause that afterward Simeon was bound by Iosephs commandement: so the Hebrews thinke that Iudas that betrayed Christ was of the tribe of Simeon, as the Priests and Scribes were of Levi that put him to death. And as Iudah here might have counsell to deceive Iacob with the blood of a kid, so hee himselfe was deceived of Thamar about a kid, Mercer.

QUEST. XXVII. The greatnesse of Iacobs sorrow for Ioseph.

Vers. 34. HE sorrowed for his sonne a long season, &c. Many things increased the sorrow of Iacob for his sonne Ioseph. 1. Because he imagined that Ioseph was devoured of some beast: Ne frustum quidem superest, quod sepulchro infiratur; There was no part of him left to be committed to buriall. 2. The very sight of the torne and bloody garment did augment his griefe: as the very sight of Caesars garment wherein he was killed, moved the people to be revenged upon those that murdered him: and Iulia the wife of Pompey when she saw his garment sprinkled with blood, at the sight thereof swooned away and died, Perer. ex Dion. 3. Iacob continued twenty two or twenty three years mourning and lamenting for Ioseph: for now he was seventene yeare old, but when Iacob heard tell that he was living in Egypt he was 39. yeare old: for he was 30. yeares of age when he stood before Pharaoh, and after that seven yeares of plenty were past, and two yeares of famine. 4. This extremity of griefe caused Iacob outwardly to testifie the same: first, by the renting of his cloaths, which afterward did grow into use and custome, to shew the great sorrow and indignation of minde: as Caleb and Iosua rent their clothes, Numb. 14.6. when they heard the murmuring of the people: and Paul and Barnabas when the people would have offered sacrifice unto them, Perer. Secondly, Iacob putteth on sackcloth, which was a ceremonie used in the East Countreyes to testifie their humility, as Benhadads servants presented themselves before the King of Israel with sackcloth about their loines, and ropes about their necks, suing for pardon, 1 King. 20. Perer.

QUEST. XXVIII. Who were those sonnes and daughters that comforted Iacob.

Vers. 35. THEN all his sonnes and daughters rose up, &c. 1. These were not properly Iacobs daughters, as the Hebrewes imagine, that with every sonne Iacob had a daughter borne, which they afterward married: for such marriages, the world being now multiplied, were not in use among the faithfull, Mercer. 2. Neither could Iacobs sonnes, (the eldest not exceeding twenty four or twenty five yeares, not above seven yeares elder than Ioseph) have daughters of that age able to comfort their father, as Musculusthinketh: they were therefore Iacobs sonnes wives that were his daughters in law. 3. Neither did Iacob refuse to bee comforted, because as the Hebrewes thinke, where wee know certainly of the death of our friend we cease mourning, but not where it is uncertaine whether they be dead or no: for Iacob did perswade himselfe here that some wilde beast had devoured Ioseph: but the greatnesse of his griefe would admit no consolation, Mercer. 4. We see the hard and cruell hearts of Iacobs sonnes, that willingly did suffer their father to continue in this griefe; and that with fained words they seemed to comfort him, concealing the truth, Luther. 5. So it is added, his father wept for him; not Isaack, who indeed was yet living, as some thinke, Aben Ezra, Iun. But Iacob mourned for Ioseph, his brethren mourned not, but the father sorroweth for his sonne, Muscul.

QUEST. XXIX. Potiphar how he is said to be an Eunuch.

Vers. 36. TO Potiphar an Eunuch of Pharaohs. 1. This Potiphar was not indeed an Eunuch or gelded man, as the Septuag. readeth, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, for he had a wife, and a daughter married afterward to Ioseph. 2. Neither for the same cause can that conceit of R. David have any likelihood, that Potiphar was an Eunuch in part, as retaining still the nerve or sinew, though not the other instruments of generation. 3. Neither is there any ground of that tradition of the Hebrewes, that God caused Potiphars privie parts to wither and drie up, because he thought to abuse faire Ioseph to his filthy lust. 4. But whereas Eunuches were at the first used by Kings and Princes to wait upon their Queenes, Esther 2.14. and so were as the Chamberlaines, and neare unto their persons, as Harbonah was to King Assuerus, Esther 7.9. Hence the name of Eunuch was taken generally to signifie a Courtier, Prince, or great man toward the King: as the word is used, 2 King. 8.6. The King commanded an Eunuch, or one of his Princes, to restore unto the Shunamite her lands: and in this sense is Potiphar called an Eunuch, that is, one of Pharaohs princes or courtiers, as the word Sarassignifieth, sic Chal. Mercer. Iun. with others.

QUEST. XXX. What officer Potiphar was to Pharaoh.

Pharaohs chiefe Steward or master of the guard. 1. For we neither readeth with the Septuag. Pharaohs chiefe cooke, although the word tabach be sometime used in that sense, 1 Sam. 9.23. which reading Iosephus, Philo, and Ambrose follow. 2. Neither yet was he Pharaohs chiefe steward as some readeth, B.G. 3. Nor the chiefe captaine of his souldiers, as both the Chalde and Hierometranslate. 4. But seeing the word tabach signifieth to kill, and so the word is indifferently applyed both to Cookes and Butchers that are the slaughter men of beasts, and to souldiers that kill men in battell, and executioners that put men to death that are condemned by the law: It appeareth that this Potiphar had the chiefe charge of those that were adjudged to imprisonment or death, as Pharaohs two officers, his chiefe Baker and Butler were committed to his charge, Gen. 40.3. and so may be well thought to be the chiefe Marshall or Captaine of the Guard unto Pharaoh, Iunius, Mercerus.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The father is as the Sunne, and chiefe in the house.

Vers. 9. The Sunne, Moone, and Stars did reverence unto me, &c. Ioseph by the Sunne and Moone understandeth his father and mother. The father then of the house by Gods ordinance as the Sun, from whom the wife as the Moone, the children as Stars must receive their light and direction in every family, Muscul. for the Apostle saith concerning wives, If they will learne any thing, let them aske of their husbands at home, 1 Cor. 14.35. and concerning the rest the same Apostle saith, Having children under obedience, with all honesty, 1 Timoth. 3.4.

2. Doct. The Prophets did not forsee all things but what was revealed unto them.

AGaine he dreamed, &c. Ioseph, as Bernard well noteth, did by the spirit of prophecie foresee his exlaltation: yet his humiliation and captivity was not declared unto him, though this was nearer than the other, tractat. de gradib. humilitat. Whereby we see that the Prophets did not foresee all things, neilther had they a propheticall spirit residing with them, whereby to foretell what they would, but they onely knew those things which it pleased God to reveale unto them: as the Prophet Ieremie at the first did not perceive the falshood of the Prophet Hananie, that prophesied of their returne from captivity after two years, but wished that it might fall out even so, till the word of God came unto him, Ier. 28.6.12.

3. Doct. True obedience followeth not the words, but the minde of the commander.

Vers. 7. IOseph went after his brethren, and found them in Dothan, &c. Yet his father sent him onely to seeke them in Sechem, vers. 12. Ioseph sheweth his prompt obedience in not strictly tying him|selfe to his fathers words, but fulfilling his minde: Iacob spake but of Sechem to Ioseph, but he knowing that it was his meaning that hee should seeke out his brethren, followeth after them to Dothan, that hee might finde them out, Muscul. by which example we are taught what kinde of obedience is most ac|cepted with God, not to keepe onely the letter of the law as the Scribes did, whose corrupt glosses our Saviour confuteth, Matth. 5. but to observe the true meaning and sense thereof.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. The Latine text corrupt and not justifiable.

Vers. 2. When Ioseph was seventeene yeares old. The Latine text readeth most corruptly, When Io|seph was sixteene yeare old; which reading Perer. would justifie by these reasons; 1. The Latine text understandeth sixteene yeares complete, the Hebrewes seventeene yeares now but begun. 2. He thinketh that the Latine translator set downe divers things whereof no reason can bee given, not without the secret instinct of the spirit, Pererius disput. 1. in Gen. cap. 37.

Contra. 1. It is the manner of the Hebrewes when they set downe a number of yeares, to make the ac|count by full and complete yeares, as is manifest by the phrase here used, He was the sonne of seventeene yeares, now he cannot be the sonne or birth of so many yeares before they are expired; the father must be before the sonne: so is this phrase used, Gen. 17.25. where Ismael is said to bee the sonne of thirteene yeares, (that is, so many complete) when Abraham was 99. yeare old, for Ismael was borne when Abraham was 86. yeares old, Gen. 16.16. And bee it granted that the Latine might agree in sense with the Hebrew, yet it is too great boldnesse in a translator to change the number, to put downe 16. for 17. 2. Now to say that the Latine interpreter did this not without the instinct of the spirit, is in effect to say that the Hebrew writer had not the instinct of the spirit; or that the instinct of the spirit is contrary to it selfe, if both he that writeth sixteene, and he that numbrell seventeene yeares in the same place, and of the same person, were moved by the same spirit: But the Latine translator was led by the same spirit to write here 16. for 17. which moved him, Gen. 8.4. for the 17. day of the moneth, to write the 27. day which is a manifest errour, and so is this here. Hence then appeareth the grosse blindnesse of the Tridentine chap|ter, which maketh the Latine translation authenticall without acception.

2. Confut. A concubine not simply or properly a wife.

Vers. 2. WHEREAS Zilpah and Bilha are here said to be Iacobs wives, Pererius noteth that Iacobs concubines were simply his wives, though not his principall wives, as Rachel & Leah were, Perer. in Gen. 37. nume. 9. Contr. The Scripture maketh a manifest difference between a wise & a concubiner for the concubine was still under the government of the wife, as Hugar after she was given to Abraham is still called Sarabs maid, Gen. 16. and the sonne of the concubine did not inherit as the sonne of the wife; yet sometime she that was properly a concubine, is called improperly a wife, as Zilpah and Bilha here, either because the principall wives being dead, they succeeded in their place, or for that their sonnes were privileged to be co-heires with the sonnes of Leah and Rachel, which was not usuall but onely for the sonnes of the principall wives to inherit. See more of this, quaest. 8. in Gen. 25.

3. Confut. Against free-will.

Vers. 4. THEY could not speake peaceably unto him. So our Saviour saith to the Pharises, How can you speake good things, seeing you are evill? Matth. 12.34. Hence is confuted the popish doctrine of free-will, that a man of his owne power is apt to chuse that which is good. Iacobs sonnes abounding with malice, could not speake peaceably to Ioseph; nor the Pharises being a generation of vipers, could speake well of Christ: for an evill tree cannot bring forth good fruit, Matth. 7.18. Muscul.

4. Confut. Our election unto life not by works.

Vers. 6. HEare this dreame, &c. Ioseph obtained this great favour with God, to have the preeminence over his brethren, not by any merit or worthinesse in himselfe, but of Gods meere grace and favour toward him: for as yet Ioseph had not shewed his faithfullnesse and chastity in Potiphars house. The purpose of God then to exalt Ioseph, revealed in these dreames, went before any merit of Iosephs part, Calvin. So also Gods free and gracious election, in setting us apart to everlasting salvation, is without all respect of works in us, as the Apostle teacheth, That the purpose of God might remaine according to election, not by works, &c. Rom. 9.11.

5. Confut. Against the Sadduces, of the immortality of the soule.

Vers. 21. LET us not kill him, or verbatim, smite his soule. Hence the Sadduces did inferre, that the soule is not immortall, because it may be smitten and killed: But Augustine answereth this objection, That here by the word soule, the life is understood, the effect, by the efficient; as in Iob, where Satan is forbidden to touch his soule, that is, his life; for otherwise concerning the nature and substance of the soule, it cannot be killed, according to the words of our Saviour, Feare not those, which after they have killed the body, cannot kill the soule, Matth. 12.

6. Confut. Sheol in this place not taken for hell.

Vers. 35. I Will goo downe into the grave mourning, &c. 1. The word sheol here used, is neither to bee translated gehenna, hell, the place of torment after this life, as the Chalde and some Hebrewes; for Iacob did not suppose that Ioseph was in hell, or that he should goe thither. 2. Neither is it taken here for Limbus patrum, the dungeon of darknesse, where the soules of the fathers remained till Christs coming, as Perer. and other popish writers: for that place of rest and joy where Lazarus was in Abrahams bosome, could be no part or member of hell, where there is no joy to be found. 3. Wherefore it is better translated the grave, and cannot be otherwise in this place understood, as even now shall appeare.

But because Pererius here fighteth with his owne shadow,* and goeth about to prove that sheol in the Scripture is not alwayes taken for the grave, but sometime for hell properly, as though the protestants so affirmed, that the word was never found used for hell: I will first set downe the divers acceptations of the word sheol in Scripture. I find therefore that this word is used in foure severall senses. 1. It is talken for hell metaphorically, that is, for the deepe plunging in extreme sorrow, misery, and danger, as Psal. 86.13. Thou hast delivered my soule from the nethermost hell. 2. It is taken for the locall place of hell properly, as Proverbs 15. Hell and destruction are before the Lord. 3. It signifieth the grave, Prov. 30.16. The grave and the barren wombe are reckoned among those things that are never satisfied: where Pererius will have the word taken for hell, not the grave; for the grave, saith he, is soone filled and satisfied: it holdeth not above one body. Contr. 1. This is a very childish answer, seeing the Wise man speaketh not of any one particular grave, but of the condition of the grave in generall, which is never satisfied with dead bodies, but receiveth more still: as in the same place, saying, The earth cannot be satisfied with water; he meaneth not any severall peece or lumpe of earth, which may be soone drenched with water, but of the quality & nature of the earth in generall. 2. So that in this sense the grave is rather sheol, than hell, because it is more craving: for to hell goe none but the wicked, but the grave receiveth the bodies of all both good and bad. 4. Sheol is taken to signifie the lower, deepe, and remote parts of the earth, as without any relation to the place of punishment, as Psal. 139.8. If I ascend into heaven thou art there, if I lie downe in hell, thou art there also, sic Mercer.

7. Confut. Against Pererius exposition of that place, Psal. 16.10.

FURther, whereas Pererius allegeth that place, Psal. 16.10. Thou wilt not leave my soule in hell, to shew that sheol is taken for hell: it shall not be amisse by the way to examine the sense of this place, where|of there are three expositions.

First, some by soule, nephesh, understand the dead body, as it is taken, Levit. 21.1. Let none be defiled among the dead; the word is nephesh, soule. Genebrard a popish writer thus confuteth this opinion, deny|ing that nephesh in this place taken for the body, but by a metonymie it signifieth the exequies and fu|nerall duties performed to the soule of the dead.

Contra. Though we also approve not the former exposition of nephesh in this place; and that reverend man that so translated, Act. 2. hath himselfe in that point altered his translation,* in his last edition of his annotations upon the new testament: yet Genebrard had no reason to deny the word to bee so taken, Levit. 21.1. for 1. beside that the Israelites had no such custome to use any suffrages or exequies for the soules of the dead, and therefore nephesh can signifie no such thing. 2. The defiling was by touching the dead, Levit. 22.4. or by going to the dead, Levit. 21.11. but the soules of the dead cannot be touched, neither could the suffrages for the soules, but the presence of the bodies pollute them. 3. The Levites are forbidden to defile themselves with the dead, saving their fathers and mothers, and other of their neare kindred, Levit. 22.2. But it is not like that they should have beene forbidden to pray, or offer suffrages for any but their owne kindred; yea the high Priest is forbidden to defile himselfe for his father and mother, vers. 10. Let them say also that he was forbidden to pray for the soule of his father and mo|ther, if any such thing had beene in use then: therefore Genebrards exposition is vaine, and without any good ground.

Secondly, Pererius and other of that sort, doe take hell here for that locall place and region of soules, where they imagine the fathers to have remained before the comming of Christ: and Pererius best reason is, because the Prophet maketh a manifest distinction between the soule and body of Christ, and hell, and the grave, saying, Thou shalt not leave my soule in hell, nor suffer thy holy one to see corruption, Perer. in cap. 13. numer. 100.

Contra. 1. Here is no distinction of divers parts, but an explanation of the same thing in divers words, according to the use of Scripture: so that what is first said somewhat darkly, Thou wilt not leave my soule in grave, is afterward more plainly declared; that is, Thou wilt not suffer thy holy one to see corruption. 2. That such locall place of hell cannot be here understood, may appeare by these reasons out of the text it selfe; 1. That place where Christs soule was not left, and it was impossible he should be holden of it, God loosed the sorrowes of, Act. 2.24. but God loosed not for Christ the sorrowes of hell, which he felt not after his passion, Ergo, Christs soule was not left in hell. 2. The not leaving of Christs soule in hell, was the cause why his flesh did rest in hope, vers. 26, 27. the not leaving of his soule in the locall place of hell caused not his flesh to rest in hope, but the not leaving of it in the grave, and the not seeing of corruption: for their soules which are left in hell shall also returne to their bodies, and bee raised together with them, Ergo. 3. That hell where Christs soule is not left, is the place where corruption is to be seene; for so one clause of the sentence is expounded by the other: but in hell there is no corruption, Ergo. 4. Dauid when he said, Thou shalt not leave my soule in hell, spake of Christs resurrection, Act. 2.31. but the not leaving of Christs soule in the infernall hell, concerneth not the resurrection of Christs body, Ergo, Dauid meaneth not that hell.

The third exposition therefore is, which I preferre before the rest, that Christs soule, that is, his life or person should not be left in the grave: and so this place of the Psalme may bee expounded by the like, Psal. 89.48. What man liveth and shall not see death? shall hee deliver his soule from the hand of hell, or the grave? here the Psalmist himselfe expoundeth hell to be death, where the soule, that is, the life, lieth as it were hid and buried, as Psal. 88.3. My life draweth neare to the grave, sic Paul. Fag. annotat. in Chaldaic. paraphras. in Pentateuch.

8. Confut. Iacob goeth mourning to the grave, not to hell.

BUt whereas Pererius yet further in this place concerning Iacobs descending, &c, would have hell and not the grave understood, for all goe not downe to the grave: and Iacob did thinke that Ioseph was not in the grave, being supposed to be torne of wilde beasts: the contrary shall now appeare.

1. This is a friuolous objection, for the grave is not onely a pit or a hole made for the dead, but any place where the body falleth to dust and corruption: as Iob describeth it, chap. 17. vers. 13. The grave shall be my house, vers. 14. I shall say to corruption thou art my father; vers. 16. They shall lie together in the dust: thereof even Ioseph also, though he had beene torne of wilde beasts, and rotted upon the earth, should have had his grave. 2. In saying all goe not to the grave, he manifestly contradicteth the Scripture, as is before alleaged, What man shall deliver his soule from the hand of the grave? Psal. 89.48. 3. Hell in the old Testament is not taken otherwise than for a place of torment and punishment: but neither Iacob nor Ioseph went to any such place. 4. This hell Iacob went unto with his gray head or haire, Gen. 42.38. but the grave, not hell, is the place for gray haire. 5. Lastly, that sheol here signifieth the grave, it is the opinion of Ab. Ezra, whom Eugubinus, Cajetanus, Oleaster, Vatablus follow: and among the Protestants, Fagius, Mercer, with others.

6. Places of morall observation.

1. Observ. That parents be not partiall in their loves toward their children.

Vers. 4. Iosephs brethren hated him, because they saw that their father loved him. Ambrose noteth this to have beene an over-sight in Iacob, for preferring one of the brethren before the rest: who if he in Ioseph loved and preferred his vertue should rather have concealed his affection: for as hee well saith, it is no marvell if brethren fall out for houses and land, when Iosephs brethren hated him for a coat, Ambr. lib. 2. de Ioseph. Wherefore parents may learne how inconvenient a thing it is to bee partiall toward their children, and by immoderate love toward some, to exasperate and provoke the rest: which the Apostle giveth warning of, Fathers provoke not your children to wrath, Eph. 6.4.

2. Observ. A pitifull man will first offer himselfe to them that are in misery.

Vers. 15. What seekest thou? Herein appeareth the great courtesie and humanity of this stranger, that seeing Ioseph wandering in the field, first moveth the question to him, and bringeth him into his way, Muscul. which teacheth us, that we should offer our helpe to them that are in error and misery, and not expect till we be by much suit and earnestnesse importuned: therefore a mercifull man is described to have a good eye, Prov. 22.9. whose eye first pitieth, and preventeth his care: this condemneth their hard hearts, that are so farre off from offering their helpe to their brethren that they stop their eares against the complaint of the poore.

3. Observ. Gods will even by mens resistance doth take more speedy effect.

Vers. 20. Then will we see what will become of his dreames. Gregory here hath a good note, Inde voluntatem Dei peragunt, cum immutare contendunt; Men often doe most of all fulfill the will of God, when they seeme most to strive against it; as Iosephs brethren, by consulting to kill, and afterwards in selling him, thought to have prevented his dreames: but all this wrought in the end for Iosephs preferment and advancement, Greg. lib. 6. moral. thus the Apostle saith, All things worke together for the best to them that love God, Rom. 8.28.

4. Observ. Dissention among the wicked profitable.

Vers. 21. But when Ruben heard, &c. Ruben onely dissented from his brethren, and so Ioseph was delivered: the dissention then among the evill is often profitable to the servants of God: as the division betwene the Sichemites and Abimeleck was a meanes to bring that tyrant to his end, Iud. 9. and Paul escaped by that contention which arose betwene the Pharisies and Sadduces, Act. 23. Perer.

5. Observ. Against the security of sinners.

Vers. 25. Then they sate them downe to eat bread. Such was the security of Iacobs sonnes, that while Ioseph mourned in the deepe cave without hope of life, they gave themselves to eating and drinking: as the Prophet Amos noteth the security of sinners, alluding to this example; They drinke wine in bowles, but no man is sorry for the affliction of Ioseph, Amos 6.8. and the Wise man saith, It is a pastime for a foole to doe wickedly, Prov. 13.23.

6. Observ. Sin in the end bringeth no profit, but shame and confusion.

Vers. 26. Then Iudah said, what availeth it if we slay our brother? &c. Like as Iudah dissuadeth his brethren from this cruell murder, because they should in the end reape no advantage by it: so every man that is tempted to any sinne should so reason with himselfe, that no gaine is like to come unto him by the sinfull act of adultery, theft, lying, extortion, or such like, but shame and confusion in the end, and the displeasure of God, as the Apostle saith, What fruit have you of that whereof you are now ashamed? 16.21. Muscul.

1. The Method or Argument.

T His Chapter hath three parts; the first concerneth the marriage of Iudah, with the birth of his three sons, from vers. 1. to 6. The second sheweth the wickednesse of Iudah his two eldest sons, Er and Onan, from vers. 6. to 10. The third declareth the incest of Iudah with Thamar: 1. The occasion thereof, because Iudah kept not promise in giving unto her Selah his youngest sonne, vers. 11.26. 2. The manner thereof, the dis|guising of her selfe, and taking a pledge of Iudah, from vers. 14. to 24. 3. The sen|tence of Iudah against her, with the discovery of his sinne, vers. 24. to 27. 4. The birth of Phar•s and Zarah, with the manner thereof, vers. 27. to the end of the Chapter.

2. The divers readings.

v. 1. Whose name was Iras. S. Hirah. cat.*

v. 2. Whose name was Sabath: the Septuag. make it the name of the woman, using the feminine gender. S. whose name was Suah. cat. that is, Iudahs wives fathers name.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. Why this history of Iudah his incest is inserted.

Vers. 1. AT that time Iudah went downe from his brethren, &c. Moses inserteth the story of Iudah and of his line. 1. To shew the prerogative of that tribe of whom our Saviour should come after the flesh, Marlorat. 2. To set forth the great humility of Christ, that vouchsafed to take his flesh even of such a generation as was at the first propagated by incestuous birth, Calvin. for in Christ there was all riches of grace, who needed not to be made noble by his stocke, nor yet were the infirmities of his progenitors any disparagement to him. All precedent slips and errours in them were cleansed and purified in his holy and unspotted conception. 13. This narration of Iudahs incest doth serve to abate the pride and insolencie of the Jewes, who boast so much of their petigree; and they are not ashamed to tell our Saviour to his face, that they were not borne of fornication, Ioh. 8.41. Perer. 4. This story hath some coherence and similitude with that which followeth in the next chapter, though the event is not like: for here Thamar soliciteth Iudah, there Potiphars wife Ioseph; but Iudah sheweth his incontinenzie, Ioseph his chastity, Mercer.

QUEST. II. At what time these things were done here reported of Iudah

BUT at what time this historie was done, here recorded, some question there is: 1. Neither is this narration wholly set downe by way of recapitulation, as Augustine thinketh, quaest. 128. in Gen. as though it went before Iosephs selling into Egypt: for Iudah was not above foure or five yeares elder than Ioseph: for Iudah was the fourth sonne of Leah, and hee and Ioseph were borne within the compasse of seven yeares, Gen. 31.31. Now Ioseph being seventene yeare old when he was sold into Egypt, Iudah then not exceeding 22. yeares, could not have sonnes marriageable, as Er and Onan were. 2. Neither is Pererius opinion to be received, that all this fell out after Ioseph was sold: for from that time till Iacobs going downe to Egypt, when Ioseph was 39. yeare old, are but 22. yeares, in which time Iudah could not bee a grand-father as he was: for his sonne Phares had two sonnes, Ezron and Hamul, that went downe with Iacob into Egypt. And to say that either of these two sonnes were borne in Egypt, is to contradict the Scripture that saith, they went downe into Egypt with Iacob, Gen. 46.26. or to say that Iacobs going downe must be taken for all the time of his life and abode in Egypt, which was seventene yeares, is to speake improperly, and to pervert the course of the story. 3. Wherefore the best solution is, that part of this chapter was fulfilled before Iosephs captivity, part followed after; and Iudah must be supposed to have taken a wife at twelve or thirteene, Mercer. Iunius thinketh at seventene yeares, (I would rather take fourteene or fifteene yeares betweene both; *) and Er must be about ten yeares of age when Ioseph was sold, Iun. who also tooke a wife at the like age of twelve or thirteene yeares, Mercer. which will fall out about the twenty five or twenty six yeare of Iudahs age: then Er and Onan might die in one yeare, Selah might be expected some three yeares, Perer. then the yeare following might Thamar have her two twins, about the thirty yeare of Iudah; Pharez keeping the same time of marriage might have his two sonnes, but very young, when Iacob went downe to Egypt, in the 44. yeare or thereabout of Iudahs age. Iuniu thinketh that Iudah begat Pharez at the age of thirty foure, and was fifty yeares old when he went downe into Egypt: but that cannot be, for Iudah was not above five yeares elder than Ioseph, who was then but 39. yeares old: for Iudah was Leahs fourth son, who together with Ioseph were borne in the second seven yeare of Iacobs service with Laban. 4. And lest it might seeme strange that Iudah and his sonnes were married and had children so young; this is not affirmed without the like president in Scripture: for wee finde that Ahaz father to Hezekiah, was but eleven yeares old when hee was borne; for Ahaz was but thirty six yeares old when hee died, 2 King. 16.2. and Hezekiah immediately succeeding in the kingdome, was 25. yeare old, 2 King. 18.2. It cannot be said that there was an interrognum betweene them, that the kingdome lay void a certaine space: for in the twelfth yeare of Ahaz over Iudah, began Hoshea to reigne in Samaria nine yeares, 2 King. 17.1. and Ahaz reigned sixteene yeares, 2 King. 16.2. Now in the third yeare of Hoshea began Hezekiah to reigne, 2 King. 18.1. If then in those dayes when mans age was much shortned, his nature decayed, and strength abated, they had issue so soone, it is not improbable but that such untimely mariages might be in use in Iudahs time, when their life was longer, and their strength greater. 5. But where it is said, About that time Iudah went downe: it must not be referred exactly to that particular season which went immediately before, but indefinitely understood of the whole course of that history of Iacobs children after their returne out of Mesopotamia, while Iacob dwelt in Sechem, where he remained eight yeares: which I rather thinke with Mercer. than that this was done after Iacob was come to Isaack. Aben Ezra sheweth the like, Deut. 10.7. where it is said, that at the same time when the children of Israel departed from Gudgodah, The Lord separated the tribe of Levi: whereas Levi was separated the second yeare after they came out of Egypt, but they departed from Gudgodah in the 40. yeare: wherefore these words the same time, must be referred to the whole time of their peregrination in the wilderness, not to that particular time of departing from Gudgodah. And so likewise in this place, ex Mercer. Or further, these words about that time, may be understood by a synecdoche, the part being taken for the whole: because some of these things here recorded (though not all) might fall out in that instant, or not long after, as the strange death of Er and Onan, and the incest of Iudah, which might happen about the 24. yeare of Ioseph, ex Mercer.

QUEST. III. Why Iudah went downe, and whither.

Vers. 1. Iudah went downe, &c. 1. That is, he descended into some lower Countrey, it may bee out of Sechem: not as some Hebrewes, that he was fallen from his greatnesse, because he gave counsell to have Ioseph sold, and was the cause of his fathers long grieffe, Mercer. 2. What was the cause of his going from his brethren is not expressed, whether for detestation of the horrible murther committed by Simeon and Levi upon the Sichemites, or for the abundance of cattell which he had. But it is like that he often came and went to his brethren, as appeareth by the story of Iosephs selling into Egypt, whereunto Iudah advised: he also went downe with his brethren into Egypt for corne. * 3. This Adullam was a towne in the tribe of Iudah, whither afterward David did flie, 1 Sam. 22.1. Hierom saith, that in his time there was a village of that name some ten miles from Eleutherepolis, Muscul.

QUEST. IV. Of Iudahs oversight in marrying a woman of the Canaanites.

Vers. 2. Iudah saw the daughter of a man called Suah. 1. This was not the name of Iudahs wife as the Sep|tuagint readeth, vers. 12. but of his wives father. 2. Neither was this Suah a merchant as the Chalde paraphrast readeth, and the Hebrewes follow the same, to cover the infirmities of their fathers: although the word Covagnan sometime be used appellatively for a merchant, Prov. 31.24. But he was a Canaanite: as we readeth the like of Simeon, that he had his sonne Saul by a Canaanitish woman, Gen. 46.10. Mercer. 3. No marvell then if Iudah matching into the cursed stocke of Canaan, whose land was promised to Abraham and his seed, which Iudah could not be ignorant of, had no good successe in his children the fruits of this marriage, who also were accursed of God, Calvin. 4. Iudah saw this woman, he tooke her and went in to her; all was done in haste: so that his affection carried him headlong, his judgement did not guide him, Muscul.

QUEST. V. Er and Onan whence and upon what occasion so called.

Vers. 6. Iudah tooke a wife to Er his first-borne. 1. Though Iudah tooke him a wife without the consent of his father, yet he will not have his sonne so to doe, Muscul. 2. Whence he is called Er it is not certaine: some will have it to signifie watchfull. Augustine doth interpret it pelliceus, to have his name of skinne or leather, such as Adam was cloathed with, in token of his transgression, lib. 22. cont. Faust. cap. 84. Isaack Carus will have all these three sonnes to be named from Iosephs calamity: Er, because Ioseph was in a manner desolate, or destroyed, of gnariri: Onan, of the griefe of their father: Shelah, of the error which Iudah committed in selling of Ioseph. Ramban thinketh Onan to be so called of the paine of his mother in travell, as Rachel called Benjamin Ben-oni; and Shelah of his mothers error, in ceasing to beare afterward. But if it bee lawfull to use conjectures, I thinke upon what occasion soever they had these names given at the first, that the event answered their names; for Er was solitary without children; Onan had a lamentable end, and about Shelah Iudah committed a great error with Thamar. 3. Iudah gave Er his name, the mother named the other two: not that as the Hebrewes note, the father did alwayes name the first-borne, the mother the rest: for as we saw before in Iacobs sonnes, sometime the father, sometime the mother indifferently gave the name, but not without the consent of the father, Mercer. 4. Concerning Thamar, some Hebrewes would have her the daughter of Se, the high Priest Melchisedeck,* because Iudah judgeth her to be burned, according to the law of the Priests daughter committing fornication, Levit. 21.8. but seeing Sem died ten yeare before Iacob, (he lived not to the 50. yeare of Iacobs, as Mercerus) it cannot be that Thamar a childe-bearing woman should bee his daughter, Iacob being at the least an hundred yeare old. It is like she was a Canaanitish woman, Luther. and a vertuous woman, that did leave and forsake the idolatry of her Countrey to worship the true God, Perer. ex Philone.

QUEST. VI. Of the sinne of Er what it was.

Vers. 7. Now Er was wicked in the sight of the Lord. 1. The wickednesse of Er was not as Augustine supposeth, in being given to oppression or cruelty, lib. 22. cont. Faust. cap. 34. but it is like to be the same sinne of unnaturall lust which Onan committed, as may be gathered both by the likenesse of the punishment, as by the phrase, that he was wicked in the sight of God, as it is said of the Sodomites, Gen. 13.13. his sinne was not secret, as Tostatus, but it was a sinne very hainous and grievous against the order of nature, and institution of God: for he abused himselfe, and spoiled his seed, not because he would not have any issue by a Canaanitish woman, as Mercer. for then he needed not to have married her; but rather as the Hebrewes conjecture, that hee might long enjoy the beauty and favour of Thamar; which would be impaired by bearing of children, or some such like cause. 2. So then this sinne was against nature, which is diversly committed: either alone, when men doe vitiously procure and provoke their seed;* or with others, either of a divers kinde, as with bruit beasts, or with the same kinde but not the right sex, as with the male, or with the right sex that is the female, but not in due manner, which was the sinne of Er and Onan. 3. This sinne of Er was against the order of nature, using the act of generation for pleasure onely, and not for generation: it was against God, whose institution he brake; against his wife, whom he defrauded of the fruit of her wombe; against himselfe, in preventing his issue; against mankinde, which should have beene increased and propagated,* Perer. 4. Yet Onans sinne was not lesse than Ers, as Au/gustine thinketh, who maketh Er of that sort of wicked men that doe evill to others; Onan of that kinde that doe no good to others: but herein Onan exceedeth the wickednesse of Er, both because he was not warned by his brothers example; as Daniel reproveth Belthasar because his heart was not humbled by the fall of Nebuchadnezer his father, Dan. 5.22. As also for that Onan committed this sinne of envie against his brother, to whom hee should have raised seed, whereas Er did it not of envie, but of an immoderate desire of pleasure, Perer.

QUEST. VII. Whether in any case it were lawfull by Moses law for one to marry his brothers wife.

Vers. 8. IVdah said, &c. goe in to thy brothers wife. Here a question is moved, whether it were lawfull by Moses law for the brother to marry his brothers widow, to raise up seed to his brother.

1. Philo thinketh that it was not onely lawfull among the Israelites, but that it was the custome so to doe among the Canaanites, and that the Judges of the Countrey did give Thamar to Onan, after the death of his brother Er, but the contrary is evident out of the text; for Iudah and not the Judges of the Countrey gave Thamar to Onan: And I thinke rather that it was a custome received among the fathers, and afterward confirmed by Moses law, than any usage learned of the Canaanites, whose fashions they were not to imitate. 2. Neither doe I thinke with the Hebrewes, that Iudah was the first that brought in this kinde of marriage, though hee be first mentioned, but that he had received that custome from other of the fathers. 3. Wherefore it seemeth that Moses gave liberty to the next brother to take the wife of his brother that departed without issue, and not to the next removed kinsman onely that was without the compasse of the Leviticall degrees: and so some expound that law, Deut. 25.5. sic Genevens. upon that place: D. Fulk. in 6. Mark. annot. 2. But the other sense approved by Mercerus, Calvin, Iunius, which understand it of the naturall brother, seemeth more probable for these reasons: 1. Because the first president of such marriages is taken from this place,* where one naturall brother succeedeth another in taking his wife. 2. The word used in the law, Deut. 25.5. jabam, signifieth not to doe the office of a kinsman, but of a brother; for the word is used first in this place where it so signifieth; from hence then the originall sense of the word must be taken. 3. The words of the law are, If brethren dwell together; now naturall brethren and such as are properly so called, are more like to dwell together than kinsmen removed, who in a large sense are so called brethren. 4. This law is so interpreted in the Gospell, where it appeareth by the Sadduces question of seven brethren that successively tooke the one the others wife, Matth. 22. that it was so practised. 5. It is the opinion of Philo and the Hebrewes, as we heard before, who are best acquainted with their owne lawes, that naturall brethren used so to doe.

4. Now the objections on the contrary part are easily answered. 1. It is objected that Levit. 18.16. the brother is forbidden to marry his brothers wife. Answ. This is a particular exception from that generall law, that unlesse in this case onely to raise seed to the brother, it was utterly unlawfull to take the brothers widow; which was not to uncover her shame, but rather to take away her shame in that shee remained childlesse by his brother, and it was honourable to the dead in reviving his memory. So wee see in other cases that the Lord made some particular exception from his generall lawes: As the making of the Cherubims over the Arke was an instance against the second commandement; the Israelites robbing of the Egyptians against the eighth commandement; Phinehas killing of the adulterer and adulteresse against the sixth commandement.

2. Ob. The practice of this law, as appeareth, Ruth 4. where Boaz not a brother but a kinsman talketh the wife of the dead, sheweth the meaning thereof. Answ. We deny not but where there was no brother nearer, there the next kinsman further off did the duty of the brother; and so was it practised upon Ruth.

3. Ob. Iohn Baptist simply reproveth Herod because he tooke his brothers wife, It is not lawfull for thee (saith Iohn) to have thy brothers wife, Mark.6.18. Answ. It is certaine that Herods brother had issue by his wife Herodias, whose daughter danced before Herod; and therefore in this case it was not lawfull: so that Herod tooke not Herodias for any such purpose to raise seed to his brother, but of an immoderate lust.

4. Ob. Why then should it not be lawfull still in this case to marry the brothers wife dying without issue? Answ. This law of Moses was partly ceremoniall and typicall, in preserving the right of the first-borne, whereby was prefigured the spirituall birth-right in the Messiah, which never should have end: partly politicall, in maintaining the distinction of families in their tribes: whereof the ceremonie is now abolished, which onely concerned that people, Iun. in Deut. 25. vers. 5.

QUEST. VIII. Whether Thamar or Iudahs sinne was greater.

COncerning this act of incontinencie which Iudah committed with Thamar; 1. We refuse the opinion of Rab. Simeon, who altogether exempteth Thamar from any fault, because she onely desired issue for the hope of the Messiah to be borne of Iudah: for this mystery was not as yet revealed, Perer. 2. It is certaine that Iudahs sinne was greater than Thamars, both in that he brake promise with her concerning Selah, as also in that he companied with her not for any issue but carnall lust: though he were afterward preferred before his brethren, this no more excuseth his fault than if Davids adultery joyned with murther should bee defended, because hee was preferred before his brethren, of whose seed the Messiah should come. 3. Thamars sinne was lesse than Iudahs, yet a sinne, as Augustine noteth; Non eam justificatam, sed magis quam se justificatam dicens; Iudah saith, She was not righteous, but more righteous than he, lib. 22. cont. Faust. cap. 62. Yet her fault is extenuated by these circumstances, as Ambrose noteth: Non alienum praeripuit thorum; She did not usurpe upon anothers bed: she stayed till Iudah was a widower: she did it not of an inordinate lust, Sed successionis gratia concupivit; She onely desired to have issue: Et ex ea familia quam delegerat; And by that family which she had chosen: and further, after she knew her selfe to be conceived with childe, she put on her widowes garments againe, and so continued. 4. Yet Thamars sin in some respect was greater than Iudahs; because she wittingly committed incest with her father in law, but Iudah ignorantly, Luther. Notwithstanding all circumstances considered, Iudahs fault was the greater: and so he doth justifie her in respect of himselfe. 5. But whereas Ambrose further noteth, that shee stayed till Selah, to whom she was espoused, was dead, therein is an error: for vers. 14. it is given as a reason why Thamar attempted this thing, because Selah was now growne, and of age, and she yet not given unto him: he was then at this time alive. Beside, Selah is numbred among those sons of Iudah that went downe with Iacob into Egypt: and onely Er and Onan of Iacobs sonnes are said to have died in the land of Canaan, Gen. 46.12. ex Perer.

QUEST. IX. How it came to passe that Iudah discerned not Thamar by her voice.

Vers. 15. HE judged her to be an whore, for she had covered her face, &c. 1. Not as some reade, she had coloured or painted her face, whom Aben Ezra doth not without cause reprove. 2.

Nei|ther is this a reason why Iudah did thinke she was an harlot, because she was vailed, as Iunius, Calvin. for harlots use not to be so modest, but it is given as a reason why Iudah did not know her, Mercer. 3. And whereas it may seeme strange that Iudah did not know her by her voice, the reason is, that being wholly given over to lust, and intending no other thing, he greatly regarded not the sight of his eyes, or hearing of his eares, Luther: As also it was a just judgement of God upon him, to strike him with such a stupidity, as not to discern her, Mercer. Geneven.

QUEST. X. Whether Iud^h were a Iudge.

Vers. 24. BRing her forth and let her be burnt, &c. 1. Iudah giveth not sentence against Thamar, either as being appointed a Prince and Judge among the Canaanites, as Tostatus, Cajetanus: for it is not like they would suffer a stranger to be a Judge and ruler among them, as the Sodomites answer Lot, Gen. 19.9. neither as chiefe in the familie had he power of life and death over those of his charge, as some thinke: for neither doe we reade that any father of families did execute any such justice in their families: and Iacob was the chiefe father of these families; and therefore it is most like that Iudah giveth advice that Thamar should be brought forth to the place of justice, and proceeded against according to the custome and law of that Country, Mercer. Iun. 2. But whereas she is adjudged to the fire: * this was not because she was Melchisedecks daughter, the Lords high Priest, as the Hebrewes imagine, for he died ten yeares before Iacob was borne, who was now above 100. yeare old: and therefore Melchisedeck could not have a daugh|ter so young to beare children: neither was this punishment arbitrary in Iudah, and inflicted without law according to his pleasure, Burgens. for Iudah had no such authority there: nor yet as Lyranus and Tosta/tus, was she worthy of the fire, because she had committed not simple fornication, but adultery, because she was by law obliged to the third brother, and so in a manner espoused: for it was not adultery for the wi|dow of the brother to marrie with some other than the surviving brother: else Naomi would never have advised her daughters in law to get them other husbands in their owne Countrey, Ruth. 1.9. But I rather thinke that Thamars adultery was in this, that she had played the whore, whereas Iudah had betrothed and espoused her to Selah: and that Iudah, who never was minded to give Selah to Thamar, fearing lest he might die also, as is evident, vers. 11. was very forward to take this occasion to be rid of Thamar: that Selah might not marrie her. 3. But herein appeareth Iudahs too much rigour and injustice, * that before the matter was examined gave sentence: and was partiall (the truth being knowne) in his owne cause: and further, it was a savage part to put to death a woman great with childe, which is contrary both to divine and humane lawes: for it is written, Deut. 24.16. The fathers shall not bee put to death for the children, nor the children for the fathers: but if Thamar had now died the infant had died with her. The Romans had a law, that the execution of a woman with childe should be deferred till she had brought forth: the same also was practised among the Athenians, Aeltan. lib. 5. And therefore Claudius the Emperour is noted for his cruelty, that spared not to put to death women with childe, Perer. ex Dion. lib. 57.

QUEST. XI. Wherefore the Midwife useth a red threed, and what colour it was of.

Vers. 28. THE midwife bound a red threed, &c. 1. It is so rather to be read than with Oleaster, a twine or double threed: the word sani here used commeth indeed of sanah, that signifieth to dou/ble, which is rather to be referred to the double die and colour, than the double matter, Iun. Tostatus also is much deceived here, that taketh it not for a red, but a blacke colour twice died, ex Perer. 3. The Midwife tied this red threed as a marke of the first-borne, because he first put forth his hand: and the pur|ple colour very well agreeth to the birth-right or eldership, Muscul.

QUEST. XII. Whence Pharez was so called, and whereof he is a type.

Vers. 29. HOW hast thou broken thy breach upon thee? 1. Hierome is deceived, that of this word pharatz▪ that signifieth to breake or divide, thinketh the Pharises to have taken denomination: whereas they had their name rather of Pharas, which signifieth to disperse or separate: because they were separate from other in profession of life, and their apparell, Mercer. 2. This story hath bin diversly allegorized by the fathers: some by Pharez understand the beleiving Gentiles, by Zarah, the Israelites: and by the red threed, their bloody circumcision & sacrifices, sic Iren. Cyril. Some contrariwise will have Phares to signifie the Jewes, Zarah, the beleiving Gentiles, Chrysost. 3. But this Phares is more fitly a type and figure of Christ, who hath broken downe the partition wall, and hath broken the power of hell and death, Mercer. And by this strange and extraordinary birth, the Lord would have Iudah and Thamar admonished of the sin which they had committed, and to be humbled thereby, though he in his mercie had forgiven it, Calvin.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The difference betweene the apparelling of widowes and wives.

Vers. 14. She put her widowes garment off, &c. It seemeth that it was the use in those dayes for widowes to be knowne from wives by their mourning and grave apparell: in which case more is permitted to women that are married, whom the Apostle alloweth to adorne themselves with comely and sober apparell, without pride or excesse, 1 Timoth. 2.9. to please and content their husbands: but widowes having no husbands to whose liking they should apparell themselves, ought not to decke themselves to please other mens eyes, Luther.

2. Doct. Friendship ought alwayes to be joyned with pietie.

Vers. 20. Iudah sent a kid by the hand of his friend. This Harah Iudahs friend did performe an evill office, in being as it were a broker for Iudah; who should neither have requested any dishonest or uncomely thing of his friend, nor the other yeelded unto it: love, truth, and pietie, ought not to be separated, as Saint Iohn saith, Whom I love in the truth, Epist. 3.1. Muscul.

3. Doct. Adultery in former times punished by death.

Vers. 24. Let her bee burnt. We see that even among the Canaanites adultery was judged worthy of death: for Iudah inventeth no new kinde of punishment, but speaketh according to the law and custome of that Countrey: So the Lord himselfe said to Abimelech that had taken Sarai unto him, Behold thou art but a dead man for this, &c. Gen. 20.3. Now although this law as peculiar to that Countrey, bindeth not now neither in respect of the kinde of death (for by Moses law onely the Priests daughter if she played the whore was burned, Levit. 21.9. the rest were stoned:) nor yet in the inequality of the law: for the women offending were burned, the men escaped, as appeareth in Iudah, Calvin. whereas both adulterers and adulteresses are alike guilty: and though then there was greater cause of keeping their seed uncorrupt for preserving of their lives, and the distinction of families, in which respect it may be thought somewhat of the former rigour and severity may be abated: yet this example condemneth the security and connivence of magistrates in these dayes in the punishing of this sinne, when as faults of lesse nature are more severely censured than adultery. And whereas the president of our Saviour is urged by some for the mitigation of the punishment of adultery, * because he would not condemne the woman taken in adulterie, it doth not serve their turne: for this mercie Christ shewed, not to cleare or exempt the adulteresse, leaving her to the magistrate, but partly to shew that he came not to be a judge in such causes, as neither in other like businesses, as dividing of the inheritance, Luk. 12.14. partly by this example he would teach what is to be required in the person of an accuser, not to bee guilty of that crime whereof he accuseth others.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. That it is not lawfull upon any occasion to marrie the brothers wife.

Vers. 8. GOe into thy brothers wife. Because in this place, as also Deut. 25.5. it is permitted to natu|rall brethren to marry the wives of their brother deceased; Bellarmino inferreth that the Law, Levit. 18.16. that a man should not marry his brothers wife, was but a judiciaall law, not grounded upon the law of nature, and abrogated by Christ: and that it is not simply evill so to doe, for then it could not be made lawfull by circumstance, Bellar. de ma•ri. cap, 27.

Contra. 1. For a man of a lustfull and uncleane minde to take his brothers wife is against the law of nature, and was never lawfull: but in this case onely, to marry her in obedience to the law, and to revive the memory of the dead, was not against the law of nature. 2. If it had, God who is above nature, and who giveth law unto nature, might in this case grant an indulgence and dispensation for those times. 3. Like as then to kill was simply evill and forbidden in the commandement, yet in the zeale of Gods glory to kill the wicked, as Phinehes did the adulterer and adulteresse, and Samuel the king of Ameleck, was law|full and commendable: so notwithstanding that law in Leviticus which forbiddeth the discovering of the shame of the brothers wife, Levit. 18.16. that is, of a filthy and uncleane desire to marrie her; it might be lawfull to doe it onely in this case, to shew obedience to the law, and love to the dead in raising up seed unto him, which was not to discover their shame, but rather to cover it, in that the brother departed had by this meanes an heire to keepe his memory, the woman had issue which was childlesse before. 4. That this law which forbiddeth to marry the brothers wife, was not abrogated by Christ, appeareth by Iohns reprehension of Herod, that it was not lawfull for him to have his brothers wife, Mark. 6.

2. Confut. Against the Anabaptists, of the lawfull power of magistrates.

Vers. 24. LEt her be burnt. This maketh against the opinion of the Anabaptists, who deny that the Magistrate among Christians hath power to put any to death. And lest it might be thought onely lawfull in the Old Testament and not in the new, the Apostle confirmeth the same, saying, that the power beareth not the sword for nought, and that he is the minister of God to shew revenge upon those that doe evill, Rom. 13.4. Now whereas the Anabaptists object that place, Matth. 5.38. Yee have heard that it hath beene said, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth▪ but I say unto you, resist not evill, &c. Where Christ (they say) restraineth this power of revenging evill, given by Moses to the Magistrate: the answer here is readie, that although this rule was first given to the Magistrate, yet the Scribes and Pharises corruptly applied it to private revenge: so that our Saviour in this place disanulleth not the law of Moses, but speaketh against their corrupt gloses upon it.

6. Places of Exhortation.

1. Observ. How life is to bee counted a blessing.

Vers. 6. ER was wicked, &c. and therefore the Lord slew him: Length of daies then simply and in it selfe is a blessing of God▪ and the extraordinarie shortning and cutting off the daies, is a curse: the blondie and deceitfull man shall not live out halfe his daies, Psal. 55.24. yet this is to be understood with certaine conditions and limitations: 1. In respect of the times, for long life more apparantly was accounted a blessing under the old testament, when the people were fed and nourished with temporall promises: but under the Gospel we must looke to spirituall: 2.

Generally upon all the blessing of long, and judgement of short life is not shewed. It sufficeth, that for the demonstration of Gods mercie in the one, and of his justice in the other, some are exemplified: 3. Short life is a blessing, when men are taken away from troubles to come, as Abiah was of Ierobohams house, 1 King. 14.13. And long life is a curse, when it bringeth shame and dishonour with it, as is seene in Cam, Calvin.

2. Observ. Not to post over the fault to others.

Vers. 11. HE thought thou, lest he die as well as his brethren: Iudah layeth all the fault upon Thamar; as though her marriage had beene unluckie, whereas it was wholly in his sonnes. Thus Adam posted over his fault to Eve, but wee are taught hereby to examine our selves, and to finde out our owne sinne, Muscul.

3. Observ. The pronenesse of our nature to sinne.

Vers. 16. HE turned to the way towards her. Wee see in Iudah, what mans nature is, without the directi|on of grace: how prone and readie hee was to commit this sinne, and so carried headlong into it, that hee spared not to give her his best ornaments for a pledge, his Ring, Kercheffe, and Staffe, Musculus. Therefore that exhortation of Saint Paul is necessarie: Flie from the lusts of youth, and follow after righteousness, faith, love, 1 Tim. 2.22.

4. Observ. To feare God more than men.

Vers. 23. LEt her take it to her, lest we be ashamed: Ioseph feareth more the shame of the world in this case, than the displeasure of God, as many doe, which are given to the filthie sinne of un|cleanenesse, Calvin. But wee should remember what our Saviour saith, Feare not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soule, &c. Matth. 10.28,

5. Observ. After repentance, wee must not fall into the same sinne againe.

Vers. 26. SO he lay with her no more. In this Iudah is to bee commended, that having committed a sinne of ignorance, hee would not fall into the same willingly againe, Muscul. so true repentance, worketh a detestation of the sinne repented of: and godly sorrow bringeth a great care with it, 2 Cor. 7.11.

CHAP. XXXIX.

1. The Method or Argument.

T His chapter setteth forth partly the prosperous estate of Ioseph, in his master P•tiphars house; partly his affliction and humiliation, in being cast into prison.

In the first, 1. Wee are to consider the cause of Iosephs prosperitie, the blessing of God, Vers. 1, 2, 3. 2. The effect thereof, the favour of his Master, who committed all to his hand, to Vers. 7. 3. Iosephs faithfulness againe to his Master, in refusing to be entised to folly by his Mistresse, whereto two reasons induced him, the favour and goodnesse of his Master, the feare of God, Vers. 8, 9.

In the second, 1. Is set forth the cause of Iosephs imprisonmen•, the false accusation of his mistresse, with the probable shew thereof, in detaining first, and then producing his vesture, Vers. 10. to 19. 2. Then is set forth the affliction of Ioseph, in being shut up in prison with the other malefactors, Vers. 19, 20.

3. The qualifying of his affliction, in that the Lord so worketh with Ioseph, that hee found favour also with the keeper of the prison, Vers. 21, 22, 23.

2. The divers readings.

v. 19. Giving too much credit to the words of his wife. H. when he heard the words of his wife, which she told him, saying, after this manner did thy servant to me. caet.

* v. 20. Hee cast him into prison. S. into the place of munition or strong place. S. into the prison house. G.B.P. into the round tower. T. sahar, a round tower.

* v. 22. Whatsoever was there done, was under him. H. whatsoever they did there, that did hee. caet.

3. The Explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. The meaning of their words, saving of the bread which he did eat.

Vers. 6. HE tooke account of nothing, saving only of the bread, &c. 1. This is neither to bee understood of Ioseph, that hee had no other reward for all his service at his Masters hand, but the bread which he did eat, for it is not like that his Master would deale so hardly with him, having committed all to his charge. 2. Neither by this phrase is expressed Iosephs parsimonie and sparing diet, that hee would not eat of Potiphars delicates, yet was faire and well-favoured: as the like wee read of Daniel, Dan. 1. For this clause is to be referred to Potiphar, not to Ioseph, saving only of the bread which hee did eat. 3. And yet wee refuse the conceit of R. Salomon, who by bread here understandeth Potiphars wife: for that is a forced and improper sense. 4. Neither with Aben Ezra, doe wee so expound it, as though Ioseph was excluded from medling with his masters meat and drink, because it was an abomination to the Egypti|ans to eat with the Hebrewes: for it is said before, vers. 4. that Ioseph found favour in his Masters sight, and served him, that is, waited and attended upon his person. 5. Wherefore the meaning is no more but this, that Potiphar freely committed the whole charge to Ioseph, taking no account of him: but was secure, and cared for nothing, hee did only eat and drinke, and take such things as were provided for him, without any more care, Mercer. Iun.

QUEST. II. How long Ioseph served in Potiphars house.

Vers. 7. After these things, &c. 1. The Latine translation readeth, after many yeares: which although it be true, yet it is not agreeable to the words of the text. 2. Ioseph spent many yeares in Potiphars house: for first he was as a common servant in his Masters house, vers. 2. Then his master halving a great liking of him, made him one of his owne ministers or servants to attend his owne person, vers. 4. Lastly, hee made him ruler of his house, Iunius. 3. It should seeme then, that Ioseph served 10. or 11. yeares in *Potiphar*s house, before hee was cast into prison, from the 17. yeare of his age, till hee was 27. he might be three yeare in prison, for two yeares after that the chiefe Butler was set at libertie, Pharaoh dreamed, Gen. 4.2. And Ioseph for expounding his dreame, was advanced, being then 30. yeare old, Gen. 41.46. Mercer. Perer.

QUEST. III. What stayed Ioseph from committing this great sinne.

Vers. 9. How can I doe this great wickednesse, and sinne against God? 1. Like as the wicked, accusto|med to doe evill, cannot doe that which is good: as is said of Iosephs brethren, that they could not speake peaceably unto him, Genes. 37.4. So the righteous established by the grace of God, can|not doe evill, not in respect of their free-will, which by nature is prone enough to evill, but because Gods grace stayeth them: so that they cannot doe it, because they know they ought not, Perer. 2. Three things stay Ioseph from committing this sinne; the feare of God, the love of his Master and his libe|ralitie toward him, and the dutie of the wife toward her husband, Mercer. 3. Three things in respect of God ought to keepe us from sinning. 1. The reverence of his Majestie, which seeth and beholdeth all things. 2. The consideration of his mercie and benefits received. 3. The feare of his judgements, Perer.

QUEST. IIII. Of Iosephs invincible chastitie.

Vers. 12. He left his garment in her hand and fled, &c. 1. Forraine histories make honorable men|tion of divers, famous for their chastitie: as Aeltanus of Amabaeus the harper, that halving a most beautifull wife, yet abstained from her; and of Diogenes the Tragicall-writer, that did the like. Valerius Maximus writeth of one Spurima a faire young man, who of purpose disfigured and mangled his face, because he would not be desired of women: and of Hippona woman of Greece, that cast her selfe into the sea to save her chastitie: But chaste and constant Ioseph farre exceedeth them all. 2. For being in his youthfull yeeres, when lust most rageth, of the age of 27. and often sollicitated, and of no meane woman, but of the ladie of the house, he could neither be intised by her promises, nor overcome by her threats, as it is like shee did threaten to accuse him falsely to her husband, and so seeke his death: neither the opportunitie or secrecie of the place could move him: for Potiphar and all his servants were absent, in solemnizing some festivall day, and his wife staid at home, fayning her selfe sicke, as Iosephus coniectureth: neither the impudencie of the woman, that laied violent hands upon him, and struggled a good while with him, till the servants were returned, could conquer his chastitie. 3. Hee was not therefore so faire without, as he was faire and comely within: pulchri^r in luce cordis, quam facie corporis, fairer in the light of his soule, than in the face of his bodie, Augustine. 4. In whom appeare foure principall ver|tues: his temperance, in not being inticed, no not by his Mistresse: his justice, in not yeelding to doe this wrong and dishonour to his Master: his fortitude, in not suffering himselfe by many attempts and assaults to be overcome: his prudence, in choosing rather at once to reject her, and leave his garment, than to keepe her in suspence, Rupertus.

QUEST. V. How it came to passe that Ioseph was imprisoned, not put to death.

Vers. 20. AFter this manner did thy s^rvant unto me; and Iosephs Master tooke him, and put him in prison. 1. That is an obscure collection of Rasi, that Potiphars wife being in bed with her hus|band, shewed how Ioseph would have done unto her: it is not like that shee stayed so long to make her complaint: but as Iosephus thinketh, she sitting weeping and mourning, told her tale as soone as her Lord came in: 2. In that Potiphar casteth Ioseph into prison, and killeh him not; I neither thinke with Perer, that it proceeded of his Masters love toward him; nor with Musculus, that hee was committed to custodie there to be kept, till he received the sentence of death. But I rather with Chrysostome ascribe it to Gods providence, who so wrought in Pharaohs heart, that hee had no such purpose to put Ioseph to death, as also Iosephs innocencie might appeare,* for the which cause the chiefe keeper under Potiphar shewed him favour. 3. It seemeth that Ioseph was put into a dungeon, chap. 40.15. The word Sohar signifieth a round vaulted house, such was this where the Kings prisoners lay bound, and whither Ioseph was sent, not of favour as some thinke, but for more sure keeping: and there hee lay bound with fetters, as it is in the Psal. 105.18. They hold his feet in the stockes, and hee was laid miron.

4. Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. The prosperitie of the righteous must bee ascribed to Gods providence.

Vers. 2. THE Lord was with Ioseph and he prospered: Iosephs prosperitie is ascribed to Gods providence: the world useth to impute such things to chance and fortune: but wee must looke toward God the author of our prosperous state, and moderator of our afflictions, Calvin. That wee may say with David, Whom have I in heaven, but thee, and I have desired none in the earth with thee? Psal. 73.25.

2. Doct. Why adulterie is called a great sinne, and against God.

Vers. 9. HOW can I doe this great wickednesse, and sinne against God? Adulterie is called a great sinne; as Abimeleck saith to Abraham, What have I offended thee, that thou hast brought upon mee and my kingdome this great sinne? Gene. 20.9. It is a great sinne; because there is dishonor done to the hus|band, whose bed is defiled: the children are wronged, who are illegitimate being gotten in adulterie: the woman also breaketh her faith and vow made to her husband: and this sinne is specially said to be a|gainst God, who is the author of holy wedlocke: whose institution is by this meanes violated and bro|ken: as David therefore saith, Psal. 51.4. Against thee, against thee onely have I sinned, Muscul.

3. Doct. Feare of evill report must not make us leave our dutie.

Vers. 12. HE left his garment and fled. Ioseph did choose rather to keepe his innocencie, though it were with infamie and false report: for as according to S. Pauls rule, wee must not doe evill, that good may come of it, Rom. 3.8. So wee must not leave off to doe good, though evill doe insue upon it. Wee ought to use all meanes to have good report, but rather than wee should hazard our faith and innocencie, wee must arme our selves with Ioseph, to passee by honour and dishonour, by evill report and good report, 2 Cor. 6.8.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. Against Merits.

Vers. 21. THE Lord was with Ioseph, and shewed him mercie, &c. Although Ioseph feared God, and was a vertuous man; yet this favour which he found is ascribed to Gods mercie, not to any merit or worthinesse in him: for although the Lord rewardeth his innocencie and integritie by this means, yet was it in mercie, Calvin. So Iacob before acknowledged all to be of Gods mercie, Gen. 32.10. I am not worthie of the least of all thy mercies: and Gene. 33.10. God hath had mercie on me, and therefore I have all things.

2. Confut. Against the descension of Christ into Limbus patrum.

Vers. 22. AND the keeper committed all the prisoners to Iosephs hand, &c. Pererius here maketh Ioseph a type and figure of Christ, that as the prisoners were committed to his charge, whom he was a great comfort unto, and prophesied unto some of their deliverance, so Christ, descending to hell, delivered from thence those which were there bound in prison. Contra. Beside that such devised allegories are but simple grounds of matters of faith, such as the Papists make the descension of Christ to Limbus patrum to be: this comparison betweene Ioseph and Christ hath small agreement in this point. 1. Ioseph was put into the dungeon, as a prisoner himselfe: I hope they will not say, that Christ was as a prisoner in hell. 2. Ioseph delivered none, but foreshewed the deliverance of some: but Christ must be a deliverer. 3. Some of these prisoners were not delivered, but condemned: but Christ (they say) harrowed that hell, to the which hee descended, and delivered all.

6. Places of Morall observation.

1. Observ. Families and kingdomes blessed for the righteous sake.

Vers. 5. THE blessing of the Lord was upon all that hee had in the house, and in the field. Thus wee see that God blessed Potiphars house for Iosephs sake: as Laban prospered because of Iacob: thus houses, families, cities, and kingdomes are blessed, because of the people of God: the world therefore hath reason to make much of them, as Potiphar did of Ioseph, not to hate, and deide them, as the fashion of this untoward age is.

2. Observ. Beautie a deceitfull gift.

Vers. 6. IOseph was a faire person. Ioseph by occasion of his beautie and favour, was in great danger, to have beene supplanted and inticed to evill: which teacheth us, that although favour and beautie bee a precious gift from God, and as the Poet could say, gratior est pulchro veniens è corpore virtus: vertue hath a better grace, that shineth from a beautifull face: Yet there are better gifts to bee desired, which bring no such inconvenience: as the Apostle saith, desire you the best gifts, 1 Cor 12.31, Muscul, Calvin.

3. Observ. The three engines and weapons of harlots.

Vers. 7. His Masters wife cast her eyes upon Ioseph. Wanton women have three principall weapons that they fight with: prima adultera oculorum tel•sunt, an harlots first engines are her eies, as here Iosephs Mistresse first casteth her eies upon him: secunda verborum: The second, are her inticing words, as here shee impudently saith, come lie with mee, Ambrose: The third, is their impudent behaviour, and continuall solliciting: as here this unshamefast woman did day by day, move and provoke Ioseph, Vers. 10: ex Perer.

4. Observ. The occasion of evill to bee avoyded.

Vers. 10. HE hearkened not unto her, to lie with her, or bee in her companie. Ioseph would avoid all oc|casions, that might draw him into the least suspition of evill, Muscul. So the Apostle saith, Abstaine from all appearance of evill, 1 Thess. 1.22. He that will not be inticed to adulterie, drunkennesse, and such like, must shunne and avoid the companie of such.

5. Observ. The unstable affections of the wicked.

Vers 14. SHee called to the men of the house. This wicked womans love, was turned into hatred: such was Ammons filthie love, or lust rather, toward Thamar, whom he hated as much after his uncleane act, as hee doated upon her before, 2 Sam. 13.15. Such are the affections of the wicked, va|riable, inconstant, inhumane, unstedfast.

6. Observ. God visiteth his children even in prison.

Vers. 21. THE Lord was with Ioseph, and shewed him mercie, &c. Though Ioseph was closed up in the darke dungeon, yet God was his light and comfort: as it is in the Psalme, Vnto the righteous ariseth light in darkenesse, Psal. 102.4. Visi•at deus & in carcere suos, God doth visit his, even in prison: as Christ saith in the person of his members, I was in prison, and ye did not visit mee, Matth. 25. Thus God visited Paul and Silas being fast in the stocks in the inner prison, when at midnight they sung a Psalme unto God, Act. 16.25.

CHAP. XL.

1. The Method or Argument.

T His chapter sheweth first, what favour Ioseph found for the time present at the hands of the keeper, and how he was set over the other prisoners, vers. 1. to vers. 5. Secondlly, how by the interpretation of certaine dreames he made away for his deliverance, and preferment following: where first the dreames are rehearsed unto him; the dreame of Pharaohs chiefe Butler apart, as also the dreame of the chiefe Baker: then Ioseph expoundeth the dreames: the interpretation of the one was good, of the other unhap|pie: lastly is shewed, the divers successe of these dreames, according to Iosephs inter|preta•••n, vers. 19. to the end.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. 1. What the offence was of Pharaohs chiefe Butler and Baker.

Vers. 1. THE Butler offended, &c. 1. This Butler and Baker that offended, were not the under officers, and therefore they which were set over them were punished, as R. Ephraim Carus thinketh: for it had not beene justice to punish one for an others fault: but the same parties, which offended were committed. 2. Neither was this their offence, because Pharaoh found a flye in the cup, and a little stone in the bread, as some Hebrewes imagine; it is not like that so wise a Prince would punish so small of|fences with death: some thinke they had attempted the chastitie of Pharaohs daughters, but it is most like, that it was some conspiracie or treason against the life of Pharaoh, as we reade in the booke of Esther, that two Eunuchs conspired against Assuerus, Mercer.

QUEST. 2. How the chiefe Butlers head is said to be lift up.

Vers. 13. WIThin three daies shall Pharaoh lift up, or leavie thy head, &c. 1. Iunius exposition here is too curious; that referreth this to that use and custome of tables made with rowes and ranks of holes, with pegges, against the which were written the names of the officers with their mini|sterie and services: and that this peg is called the head, and the boord or table, the base, or seat, to the which the peg should be removed: which signified the restoring of him to this place again. 2. I had rather with Mercerus, understand by lifting up or leavying the head, the numbering of him among the rest: as the phrase is used, Exod. 30.12. When thou liftest the head of the children of Israel, that is, takest the summe of them. 3. But we neede not search further, than with Musculus, to take the plaine and ordinarie sense; who by lifting up or leavying the head, understandeth his advancement, and restoring to his former condition: as the head of Ioachim King of Iudah is said to be lift up, when he was delivered out of prison, 2. King. 25.27.

QUEST. III. Whether Ioseph offended in making request to the Butler to remember him.

Vers. 14. HAve me in remembrance, &c. 1. The Hebrewes doe reprehend Ioseph, for trusting to this meanes of his deliverance, & say that for this cause he was chastised with two yeares longer imprisonment: to the same purpose writeth Augustin. serm. 82. de temp. But although Ioseph was content to use the meanes which was offered, yet there is no doubt he relied upon Gods providence still, & theer|fore Ioseph is here reprehended without cause. 2. Neither doth he make sale of his spirituall and pro|phetically gift, requiring this as a reward and recompence for this good tidings. But by this he sheweth the certaintie of the Butlers good successe and favour with the King, that if he made but mention of him to Pharaoh, he might be delivered: neither doth he aske this as a reward, but taketh this occasion to do himselfe good: for it is lawfull for a man to use all honest meanes for his libertie, as the Apostle saith, Art thou called being a servant, care not for it, yet if thou canst be free use it rather; 1 Cor. 7.21. Calvin. 3. It may be that Ioseph was some what too confident upon this meanes, as though this were the way that God had appointed for his deliverance; and therefore God would exercise Iosephs patience still; so that Ioseph failed not in diffidence and distrust, in betaking himselfe to the meanes: but rather herein, that he limi|teth Gods providence, both for the meanes, and the time, that even now, and by this meanes, he hasteth to be delivered, Calvin. Mercer.

QUEST. IIII. How Ioseph is said to be stollen away.

Vers. 15. I Was stolen away by theft out of the land of the Hebrewes▪ 1. This theft was not committed by the Ismaelites, who bought Ioseph for their money but by his owne bretheren: who com|mitted a theft two waies, both because they sold a freeman, not taken in battel, nor brought into bondage, which by Moses Law was punished with death, Exod. 21.16. and in that they did robbe their father of his child, Perer. 2. Hebron is not here meant by the land of the Hebrews, as Ramban,* because that was the principall place of abode, for Abraham, Isaack, and Iacob: but the land of Canaan is thus called, where the Hebrewes dwelt; which Ioseph so calleth, rather than Canaan, because he abhorred to be counted of that nation, Mercer.

QUEST. V. How the chiefe Baker his head is said to be lifted up <◇> leavied.

Vers. 19. WIthin three daies Pharaoh shall take thine head from thee, or leavie thine head off from thee, &c. 1. Iunius readeth thus▪ Pharaoh numbering thee, shall cause the• no more to be numbered: and hee referreth it as before, to the removing or taking away of his pegge (which he taketh for his head) out of his hole or place in the table: but this seemeth to be too curious. 2. Neither with some other, doe I thinke, that the chiefe Baker was beheaded, for the text saith, he was hanged upon a t•ee, which needed not, if he were first beheaded. 3. Some make the meaning of the phrase to be this, that Pharaoh would take away his life from him: and the Latines say, capite plecti, to lose the head, that is, to be put to death; hence they are called capitall crimes, that are punished by the losse of the head, or life, Mercer. 4. The most reade, shall take thine head from thee: but he was hanged, not beheaded. 5. Some thinke he was first beheaded, and then hanged, as the manner is yet in some countries, Osiand. But in that the Butlers head was lift up as well as the Bakers, vers. 20. this phrase doth not shew his punish|ment, for then the effect, vers. 20. should not answer to the prophecie. 6. Some understand it of his han|ging, that his head was lift up upon him: as our Saviour calleth his hanging upon the crosse, his exalta|tion or lifting up, Ioh.3.14. Pellican. But this cannot be the meaning, because the same phrase is used both of the Butler, and Baker. 7. This therefore is the sense, that Pharaoh should lift up his head aloft out of prison, and cause his name to be rehearsed, and so his head to be leaved among the rest of his servants, and take cognizance of both their causes, but the one he should hang, and restore the other: So Ioseph doth foretell unto them three things: whereof the first, the leavying of the head, and examining their cause, is common to them both: the other two things are peculiar to either: the Butler shall be restored to his office, and minister the cup to the King, vers. 13. the Baker shall be put from his office, and no more reckoned or leaved among the officers, and be hanged: this then is the true reading of the words, Pharaoh shall leavie thine head from upon thee: that is, that no more leavying or reckoning be made upon thee: which words may be supplied by the contrarie, vers. 13. and the exposition of the praeposition, ghal used there, to thine office, and (m•ghal) from off expressed here, doe insinuate as much: so also the same word meghaleca, from off thee, is used in the end of this verse: and Deut.8.4. Thy garments ◇ not waxe old (from off thee): that is, to be no more upon thee, and so to be used by thee.

QUEST. VI. Whether Ioseph used any preamble to his interpretation.

Vers. 19. The birds shall eat thy flesh. 1. It is like that Ioseph being to deliver so hard an interpretation of the Bakers dreame, did use some preface to excuse himselfe, as Philo bringeth him in thus speaking, Vtinam tale somnium non vidisses, &c. I would thou hadst either not seene this dreame, or not declared it to me: and it is not unlike, but that Ioseph used some such preparation as Daniel did when he was to expound Nebuchadnezzars dreame, The dreame be to them that hate thee, and the interpretation thereof to thine enemies, Dan. 4.16. 2. This hanging of malefactors upon a tree, seemeth to have beene an ancient punishment, and it was counted a most ignominious death: and therefore Saint Paul setteth forth the great humilitie of Christ, that humbled himselfe even to the death of the crosse, Philip. 2. The Latine translator readeth, he shall hang thee on the crosse: which kinde of death was used also among the Romanes: * as Tully saith, Facinus est vincere civem Romanum, scelus verberare, quid dicam in crucem toller•; It is a great offence to binde a Citizen of Rome, a greater to beat him, the greatest to set him on the Crosse, Cicer. Verrem. 7. 3. Such as were hanged to death among the Israelites, by the law were to be taken downe and buried the same day, Deut. 21.23. But it seemeth, that this use was not observed among the Gentiles, but their bodies did hang to be meat to the fowles of the ayre, Perer. which may be noted, as a great judgement of God, when the Lord suffereth his owne image in man to be so defaced, and his flesh to be given for meat to the fowles and beasts, whose flesh is appointed to be mans food: as the Lord threatned against Ieroboam and his house, that they which died in the Citie should be eaten of dogges, they which died in the fields should be devoured of the fowles of heaven, 1 King. 14.11. Muscul.

QUEST. VII. Whether lawfull to keepe the memorie of the birth-day.

Vers. 20. PHaraohs birth-day. 1. This was a very ancient custome to celebrate the birth-daies of Kings and Princes; both among the Medes and Persians, as witnesseth Xenophon, lib. 1. as also, such was the use among the Romans, as Gellius maketh mention of an Epistle written by Augustus to Caius: Celebrasse me sexagesimum & quartum natalem meum; That he had celebrated the 64. yearely day of his nativitie. 2. Yet doe wee not reade of any of the righteous in the Scripture, that kept their birth-day, but rather cursed it as the beginning of sinne and sorrow, as Iob did, cap. 3. and Ierem. cap. 20. only we reade of this Pharaoh, and Herod the tyrant, that kept a memorie of their birth-daies, Perer: yet it is not un|lawfull to celebrate the memoriall of the nativitie daies of Kings, and other worthy men and women, so that we take heed of superstition, in giving the honour of such daies unto men, as the Church of Rome doth: and that we abuse not such daies, to prophanesse and wantonnesse, as the Heathen did: but only thereby take occasion to give God thanks for such worthy instruments, which he in mercie raised up to the Church or Common-wealth. Calvin. Mercer.

1. Doct. 〈...〉

〈1 paragraph〉

2. Doct. 〈...〉

〈1 paragraph〉

3. Doct. Ministers that sow spirituall things, may reape temporall.

Vers. 14. HAve me in remembrance. Ioseph was worthy to have this kindnesse shewed him, that had beene an interpreter and messenger of so good tidings: according to the same rule, it is lawfull for the Ministers of God, the interpreters of the word, that sow spirituall things to the people, to reape temporall, Muscul.

5. Places of confutation.

1. Confut. The interpretation of Scripture must be taken from the spirit of God, 〈...〉

Vers. 8. ARe not interpretations of God? As God by the spirit of God did 〈...〉 dreame: so the interpretations of the secrets of Gods word proceed from the spirit of God: as our Saviour interpreted the Scriptures to the two disciples, and opened their 〈...〉 them, Luk. 24.45. wherefore we are not to depend upon the tradition of the Church▪ opinion of 〈◇〉, conceit of Pope and Cardinals, for the understanding of the word, but wee must 〈...〉 God speaking in the Scriptures, Muscul.

2. Confut. Against the superstitious festivall of the virgin Marie.

Vers. 20. PHaraohs birth-day. Perer. taketh occasion hereby to justifie the practice of the Church in celebrating the birth-daies of three, of our Saviour, the virgin Marie, and Iohn Baptist, in Gen. c. 40. numer. 11.

Contra. 1. The Nativitie of our Saviour is worthily celebrated: because in himselfe he was the rarest birth that ever came into the world, being without sinne; and in respect of us, the most beneficiall, by whom our redemption and everlasting salvation was purchased. 2. The nativitie of Iohn Baptist is solem|nized, as a matter indifferent, by the Church, not to the honour of Iohn, but to the praise of Christ, whose forerunner he was: and we finde mention made in Scripture, of his strange and extraordinarie birth. 3. But the Nativitie of the virgin Marie is a superstitious solemnitie, because they consecrate it to the honour of the virgin: it is blasphemous, in that they hold her to have beene without sinne, which prerogative is onely peculiar to our blessed Saviour: it is also vaine, false, and frivolous, because there is no mention made of it in Scripture.

6. Places of exhortation.

1. Observ. Of the slipperie state of Courtiers.

Vers. 2. PHaraoh was angrie against his two officers, &c. These two were principall officers in Pharaohs court; yet suddenly cast out of their Princes favour: wherein wee see the slipperie state and condition of Courtiers, who are to day in favour, to morrow in disgrace, as Haman was with Akassuerus, Muscul. Little doe men consider, that ambitiously desire to be great in Court, how soone their faire wealther may be overcast with clouds.

2. Observ. Compassion toward the afflicted.

Vers. 7. WHerefore looke ye so sadly to day? Iosephs humanitie appeareth, that first offereth himselfe to these men in miserie, to comfort and cheare them up: as our Saviour asked the two disciples walking by the way, why they were so sad, Luk. 24.17. and to Mar♦♦ Magdalene he said, why weepest thou? Iohn 20.15. such ready compassion should we shew to them that are in heaviness, Marlorat.

3. Observ. No man to presume beyond his strength and gifts.

Vers. 8. TEll me them now, &c. Daniel having received a greater gift of interpretation, was able both to tell the King what he had dreamed, which was gone from him, and the interpretation of it, Dan. 28. Ioseph presumeth not beyond his gift, but first desireth these dreames to be rehearsed unto him▪ whereby we learne, that every man consider his strength and gift from God, and put not himselfe forward beyond that, Calvin. this is that which the Apostle saith, that everie man understandeth according to sobrietie, as God hath dealt the measure of faith, Rom 12.3.

4. Observ. Carnall men heare the word for worldly profit.

Vers. 16. WHen the chiefe Baker saw that the interpretation was good, &c. Hee desired an interpretation of his dreame, not because hee had a minde to bee instructed thereby, but for that he expected some good also: So many men make semblance of some love toward the preaching of the word, not of any conscience, but onely seeking thereby their pleasure and prosperitie: which missing of, then they depart heavie and fact, as the rich young man did goe from Christ, Mark. 10. Calvin.

5. Observ. Ministers must not be afraid to denounce Gods Judgements.

Vers. 19. WItthin three daies shall Pharaoh take thine head. Ioseph sheweth himselfe a faithfull messenger, that would not conceale the interpretation from the Baker, though he knew it should not bee welcome: so it is the dutie of faithfull Ministers, not to feare to denounce the judgements of God to his people, though they have shall thanks for their labour, Calvin. <◇> the Prophet, Mich♦♦ah did frankly and freely deliver his message to wicked Ahab, 1 King. 22.

6. Observ. Courtiers all for themselves.

Vers. 23. THE chiefe Butler did all remember Ioseph. Here wee have a right patterne of a temporizing Courtier, who partly for feare to move the King, partly being addicted to his profit, to serve his owne turne, would make no mention of Ioseph, Muscul. The like minde was at the first in Esther; who fearing the Kings displeasure, refused to make sute for her people, but Mordrehai roused her up from that court-like sleepe, and awaked her, Esther 4.

1. The Method or Argument.

IN this chapter wee have set forth, 1. The dreames of Pharaoh, both tending to one and the same end, vers. 1. to vers. 8.

2. The interpretation of the dreames. 1. The occasion of sending for Ioseph by the narration made by the Butler, of that which had happened in prison▪ Vers. 9. to Vers. 16. 2. The repetition and rehearsall of Pharaohs dreames to Ioseph, Vers. 17. to Vers. 25. 3. The interpretation it selfe, together with the counsell and advice of Ioseph, Vers. 28. to Vers. 37.

3. The exaltation and prosperitie of Ioseph: whereunto belongeth, 1. The authoritie committed unto him by Pharaoh, Vers. 38. to Vers. 42. 2. The great honour given unto him, Vers. 42, 43. 3. The changing of his name, 46. 4. His marriage and children, Vers. 50.

4. The accomplishment of the deames. 1. In the seven plentifull yeares, Vers. 49. to 54. 2. Then in the yeares of famine, beginning, 54 to the end.

3. The Theologicall Explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. How long Ioseph was in prison, and where wee must begin the computation of these two yeares.

Vers. 1. After two yeares Pharaoh dreamed, &c. 1. I neither thinke with Ios•phus and Mercerus that these two yeares must bee accounted from the beginning of Iosephs imprisonment, and that he was but two yeares in the whole in prison: for the beginning of this chapter best agreeth with the end of the former, where mention is made of the Butlers restitution to his place: so then two yeares after that Pharaoh dreamed, Iun. 2. Yet doe I not thinke, that these officers were an whole yeare in prison, as some conjecture, and that Ioseph and they were imprisoned much about one time: for the keeper of the prison, would not at the first give Ioseph charge of such prisoners, till hee had experience of his fidelitie: I rather thinke, that Ioseph was in prison some time before, and that hee was there a whole yeare before the chiefe Butlers deliverance, and two yeare more after, three in all.

QUEST. II. Why Pharaoh dreamed, and where.

Vers. 1. PHaraoh dreamed, &c. 1. The Hebrewes note, that it is not here added, Pharaoh King of Egypt, till afterward, when Ioseph was advanced, by whose prudence and wisdom hee so governed, that then hee was worthie the name of a King, and not before: but this is somewhat curi|ous. 2. This dreame is shewed to Pharaoh, because it belongeth to the office and dutie of a king to provide for his people. 3. This river was not a streame issuing out of Nilus, as Iun. But Nilus it selfe, which is usually called by the name of the river, Exod. 2.3. and because Nilus doth water the plaine of Egypt, where they have no raine, and so maketh it fruitfull, it serveth fitly to decipher the seven yeares of plentie, Mercer.

QUEST. III. The difference betweene the dreames of Pharaoh and Nebuchadnezzar.

Vers. 8. PHaraoh told them his dreames, but none could interpret, &c. 1. Nebuchadnezzars dreame which hee dreamed, Dan. 2. was unlike to this of Pharaoh: for hee had forgotten his dreame, not as some thinke, because hee slept with full stomacke, but God so disposing: but Pharaoh very well remembreth his dreame: there Nebuchadnezzar commanded to slay the wise men, but Pharaoh of a more gentle nature spareth them. 2. Neither did any of them attempt to give an interpretation of Pharaohs dreame, as that hee should beget seven daughters, and burie seven sonnes: or that he should subdue se|ven Kingdomes, and seven other should rebell: as some of the Hebrews conjecture: * but they were all mute, and could say nothing: God had blinded them: for otherwise it had beene an easie matter, by the full eares to understand plentie, Mercer. 3. It seemeth that Pharaoh was no proper name, but common to the Kings, as Caesar is to the Emperours: for the Butler useth it in the third person, * vers. 10. as if wee should say, the Kings majestie, Iun. and it had beene an uncivill thing to call the King by his proper name, Mercer.

QUEST. IIII. Whether Pharaoh in his dreame had an interpretation of it.

Vers. 15. I Have heard say of thee, that when thou hearest a dreame, &c. 1. Iosephus further addeth, that Pharaoh did gently intreat Ioseph, tooke him by the hand, and bade him not to be afraid, but truely declare unto him his dreame, whatsoever it signified, good or evill. 2. This is likely and probable▪ but that other conceit of Iosephus hath no probabilitie, that Pharaoh together with his dreame had the interpretation thereof shewed him in his sleepe: for it is like, that Pharaoh then would have spoken of it to Ioseph. 3. Pharaoh seemeth to have none other opinion of Ioseph, but as of a cunning soothsaier and conjecturer of dreames: and such was the opinion received of Ioseph afterward, as Trogus Pompejus, whom Iustine alleageth, writeth of him, that he did learne in Egypt art-magike, and other points of their learning:

therefore Ioseph of purpose maketh mention of God, * who without any art or skill in Ioseph, should by his mouth give the interpretation of the dreame. 4. And whereas he saith, God shall answer for the wealth of Pharaoh, Ioseph thus saith, not as knowing the dreame already by revelation from God, as Pererius thinketh: but he ignorant as yet of the dreame doth not prophesie, but wish prosperitie to Pharaoh, and so insinuateth himselfe by this dutifull comprecation, Mercer. Iun. Muscul.

QUEST. V. Of the thrice repeating of these dreames, and the reason thereof.

Vers. 20. And when they had eaten them up, &c. 1. This is reported some what diversly by Pharaoh than it was before expressed: not to this end, as some Hebrewes imagine, that Pharaoh would trie by these meanes Iosephs cunning, whether hee could rehearse the dreame aright: But whereas these dreames are thrice repeated, by Moses, Pharaoh, Ioseph, the same words are not every where kept, but the sense: as we see the like, Gen. 24. where Abrahams servant some what diversly in words reporteth the historie of Rebeckahs comming forth and behaviour towards him. 2. But some Hebrewes are yet more absurd, that whereas these dreames, of seven kine, and seven eares, betokening 14. yeares, seven of plenty, and seven of famine, are thrice repeated in this chapter, they make thrice 14. yeares: whereas these dreames though often rehearsed, are but one prophecie and tend to the same end, Mercer.

QUEST. VI. Why Pharaohs dreames were doubled.

Vers. 25. Pharaohs dreames are one. 1. They are one in signification, but divers in respect of the vision, Iun. 2. The Hebrewes thinke, that Ioseph by this speech would excuse the Egyptjan sooth|sayers, why they could not expound the dreames, because it was hard to find out the interpretation, seeing these dreames being divers did portend but one thing: and beside, they take these to be naturall dreames, whereas Ioseph sheweth they were of God. But Ioseph doth not insinuate himselfe into the love and affection of these Magicians, whom hee knew to be professors of Idolatrie and superstition, but doth faithfully discharge this dutie committed unto him. 3. Now although the dreames had one meaning, yet they were doubled, not for any such cause as Lyranus & Tostatus imagine, to shew the two causes of fertilitie, good seed signified by the eares, and good tillage by the oxen: but Ioseph himselfe rendreth two reasons thereof, vers. 33. the certaintie of this thing, and the speedie accomplishment thereof.

QUEST. VII. Ioseph, not Pharaoh, the Prophet.

Vers. 25. God hath shewed Pharaoh what he is about to doe. 1. Though these visions were shewed to Pharaoh, yet because he understood them not, Ioseph is rather to be counted a prophet, that interpreted them, than Pharaoh that understood them not: for it is one thing to have a representation of things objected to the phantasie, another to have the mind lightned to understand them. 2. And whereas God is said to doe this, it was not an ordinarie plentie, or famine, procured by naturall meanes, but extraordinarie sent of God: * although I denie not, but that there might be a concurrence of some naturall meanes: for Nilus overflowing, if it be moderate, causeth plentie in Egypt; if it be s••nt, bringeth sterilitie and barrennesse. Plinies sheweth, that the full increasing of Nilus is sixteene cubits high: in duodecem cubitis famem sentit, &c. if it overflow under 12. cubits, famine followeth, and in 13. cubits there is scarcitie: 14. cubita hilaritatem afferunt, 15. securitatem, 16. delicias. 14. cubits in the overflowing bring chearefulness, * 15. securitie, 16. plentie: he further sheweth, that the greatest increase was of 18. cubits under Claudius, the smallest of five cubits in the Pharsalean warre: lib. 5. c. 9. It might be that Nilus in the seven plentifull yeares overflowed 16. cubits or above, and so made the ground fruitfull; and in the seven deare yeares exceeded not 12. cubits, or was much under, and so caused drinesse and barrennesse: ex Perer.

QUEST. VIII. Iosephs wisdom in counselling to have a chiefe officer appointed for come.

Vers. 33. Let Pharaoh provide for a man of understanding, &c. 1. Ioseph doth not onely foretell the calamitie to come, but provideth a remedie for it; so could not the vaine Astrologers, and Apolloes oracles, if sometime they ghesed at things to come, they could not tell how to helpe it, Mercer. 2. Ioseph doth not give this counsell ambitiously, as seeking his owne honour, as the Hebrewes thinke, for as yet he was ignorant of his advancement: but God directed him by his spirit, to give this advice, that it might be a way to his exaltation. 3. This office here invented by Ioseph, to have a care to provide food for the people, grew afterwards to be very honourable: and from the Egyptians, it is like the Romans tooke this invention: the first officer among them, who was called praefectus annonae, the chiefe steward for provision, was L. Minutius, what time there was such a famine in Rome, that many people cast themselves with their heads covered into Tyberis: Pompey the great, after many honourable triumphs was chosen to this office; who having made great provision in Affrica, being ready to take ship, staid not, though a great tempest arose, thus saying, navigandi necessitas est, vivendi non est necessitas: There is great necessitie to saile, (for the Citie was at that time in great want) but there is no necessitie to live: ex Perer.

QUEST. IX. Why Ioseph advised to have the fift part taken.

Vers. 34. Take up the fift part of the land, &c. 1. Hee meaneth the fift part of the fruits of the land, which was done at the Kings charge: for it is not like that he tooke away the fift part from the owners, though afterward it was made a law, but it was bought with the Kings money, Mercer. Iun. 2. Ra following Oukelos, readeth, let them defend the land of Egypt against the famine, by setting the people a worke to gather the corne: because the word is so taken, Exod. 13.18. where it is said the Israelites came up armed, girt under the fift rib: but this reading is improper; and that the fift part is understood, appeareth by the law of the fift part reserved to Pharaoh, Gen. 47.24. 3. The fift part was thought sufficient, for it is like beside that other rich men, following the Kings president, laid up some what in store also, and in the yeare of famine somewhat might grow, though not much, and they made greater spare in the time of scarcitie, Perer. Mercer. 4. Iosephs prudence appeareth, in preserving the corne so long for seven yeares: which was not done by using sand and quicksilver, as Ramban supposeth: but as Philo well conjectureth, by laying up the corne in the straw: for by this meanes it would keepe long sweet, and the poore might be employed in threshing of it out, as also they had straw for their cattell, Perer. ex Philon.

QUEST. X. Of the ring, fine linnen. and other ensignes of Iosephs honour.

Vers. 42. Pharaoh tooke off his ring, &c. 1. Plinie is here in an errour, that the use of rings came not up before the Trojane warre, whereas Ioseph was honoured of Pharaoh with a ring, who was six hundred yeare before the ruine of Troy. Likewise the same author saith, that the Egyptians used no rings to seale with, lib. 33. c. 1. Whereas it is most like, that Pharaoh gave this ring to Ioseph for that use: as Assuerus gave Haman his ring to seale letters in the Kings name, Esther 3.9. 2. It is like that Ioseph went apart, till Pharaoh had consulted with his Nobles, who all by their silence gave consent, that Ioseph was the fittest man. 3. These then were the ensignes of Iosephs honour: the King giveth him a ring, then he is araied with fine linen, or white silke, whereof there was great store in Egypt, which was made of certaine cotten or bombasine that came of the Gosipon tree, called Xilidon, Iun. Perer. The third signe of honour was a golden chaine, which was in great request afterward among the Romans: the fourth was Iosephs riding in the second chariot, appointed for him, that was the Viceroy next in authoritie to the King. Assuerus caused Mordechai in token of honour & of the Kings favour, to ride upon his horse, Esther 6. And in the same place Mordechai is adorned with the like ornaments, as with royall apparell, and a princely diadem, and proclamation to be made before him, as was here before Ioseph. So King Balthazar promiseth the like reward to him that could interpret the writing, that he should be clothed with purple, and should have a chaine of gold about his necke, and be the third ruler in the kingdome, Dan. 5.7.

QUEST. X. The great authoritie committed to Ioseph.

Vers. 44. I Am Pharaoh, &c. 1. This is not an oath, as some think, that Pharaoh sweareth by his honour: but he onely reserveth unto himselfe the Kingly name and majestie, as before, vers. 40. onely in this throne will I be above thee. 2. In that he saith, none shall lift up his hand without thee, it is to be understood, not of private, but of the publike affaires of the kingdome, Mercer. 3.

The Hebrewes here note, that as Ioseph before humbled himselfe and said, without me shall God make answer to Pharaoh, so now he is exalted: and Pharaoh saith, without thee shall no man lift up his hand, &c.

QUEST. XI. Of the change of Iosephs name, and the signification of it.

Vers. 45. PHaraoh called Iosephs name, Zaphnath-paaneah, &c. 1. These are neither Hebrew words, as Ramban thinketh: for although the first may be derived from tsaphan, which signifieth to hide, yet the originall of the other in the Hebrew tongue cannot be found, Mercer. Hierome thinketh it signifieth, Saviour of the world, in the Egyptian tongue, whom Eugubinus followeth: but it is most like that it signifieth the revealer of secrets, as Iosephus Oukelos, the Septuag. Some thinke he was a Prince rather, as the Chalde translateth, than Priest of On: because the priests of all other were most superstitious, Iun. This On was not the Citie (No) mentioned Ezech. 30. 16. which is Alexandria, but rather Heliopolis, as Hierome: the chiefe Citie of the regiment of Heliopolis, Ptolemie calleth Onium.* 4. Asenath cannot be the daughter of Dina Jacobs daughter, as the Hebrewes dreame, being an Egyptian woman: Ioseph marieth the daughter of an Idolater, because he could not take a wife of his fathers kindred, being in a strange countrey: so also did Iacob marrie Labans daughter that was an Idolater,* and Moses a Madianitish woman, whom afterward they converted to the true worship of God, as Ioseph did his wife: and this might well be a type and figure of the calling of the Idolatrous Gentiles, Mercer.

QUEST. XII. Potiphars, Whether two of that name.

The daughter of Potipherah. 1. We refuse here the opinion of Hierome, that thinketh this Potiphar to have beene the same whom Ioseph before served: and we hold that to be one of the fables of the Hebrewes, that this Potiphar, Iosephs master, having a purpose to use Ioseph to incontinenzie, was stricken of God with drinesse and withering in his secret parts, and afterward became a Priest. 2. I rather preferre Augustines judgement, who upon these reasons rather thinketh, that this was a divers Potiphar from the other: 1. Because it had beene much for Iosephs honour, that his master, whose servant he was, did now bestow upon him his daughter, and therefore Moses would not have concealed it. 2. The other Potiphar is the Captaine of Pharaohs souldiers, this Priest of On, two offices much unlike. 3. This On or Heliopolis, was about twentie miles distant from Memphis the Kings Citie, but the other Potiphar was a continuall officer in Pharaohs house: thus Augustine qu. 136. in Gen. 3. Chrysostome thinketh, that they were two divers men, but of one name, hom. 63. in Gen. But it is evident, that their names also differ: for the first is called Potiphar; the second with the letter ain, in the end Potipherang; besides, it is not like that Io/sephe would marrie the daughter of that adulteresse and wanton woman, whose evill manners hee had experience of, Mercer. Muscul.

QUEST. XIII. To what end mention was made of Iosephs age.

Vers. 46. IOseph was thirty yeares old, &c. Mention is made of the age of Ioseph for divers reasons. 1. By this it may be gathered how long Ioseph was a servant in Egypt, from 17. to 30. yeares, the space of 13. yeares, whereof 3. he spent in prison, the rest in service, Mercer. 2. But Ioseph for his thirteene yeares service, was recompenced with 80. yeares of libertie, prosperitie and honour, for he lived till he was 110. yeares old: which may also be a figure of the everlasting reward of the Saints, which they shal receive for their short and momentarie afflictions here. Perer. 3. This observing of Iosephs age helpeth yeares after, when the seven plentifull yeares were past, and two of famine, was thirty nine yeares old, and Iacob at that time,* an hundred and thirty yeares old: then it will follow that Ioseph was begotten in the 91. yeare of Iacobs age, foureteene yeares after his comming into Mesopotamia: for Ioseph was borne in the end of the second seventh yeare of Iacobs service: so that Iacob was 77. yeares old when hee went first into Me|sopotamia▪ Perer. 4. Iosephs age is expressed, that it might appeare what wonderfull graces hee had re|ceived of God at those yeares: of chastitie, of patience, of pietie, of wisdom, of knowledge, of secrets, of policie, and government. It is said that Iulius Caesar, beholding the picture of Alexander Hercules temple at Gades, lamented that hee had done no worthy exploit at those yeares, wherein Alexander had conquered the whole world. But Ioseph here at the same age of thirty, had shewed more true wisdom and vertue, than either of them both, Perer. 5. Likewise by this president of Ioseph, made a governour at thirty,* wee see that at this age a man is fit for publike employment: David at that age began to reigne, Ezechiel then prophesied, Ezech. 1.1. Christ began to preach, and Iohn Baptist, Mercer. 6. Lastly, Iosephs age is expressed, to shew how mightily the Lord wrought with him, that the grave counsellors and Elders of Egypt were content to give place to his youth, and be advised and ruled by him, Calvin.

QUEST. XIII. What food Ioseph laid up, where and how.

Vers. 48. Laid up food in the Cities. 1. It is not like that Ioseph gathered of all other fruits and provision, as Ramban thinketh, but onely of corne: for other food could not have beene so well kept: and the next verse sheweth that food (ochell,) was gathered, namely, (bar,) wheat, Mercer. 2. Iosephs wisdom appeareth, that provideth barnes for every Citie, that they should not need to travaile farre for food, but have it provided at home. 3. Where it is said till he left numbring: it is like that Ioseph observed order, in laying up of the corne, and kept a talie of it: he numbred it, not of curiositie as David numbred the multitudes of his people, but in a provident forecast, to see what quantitie would suffice for every place, Muscul.

QUEST. XV. Whether indeed Ioseph had forgotten his fathers houses, as it seemeth by the name of Manasses formed of the word Nashah, to forget.

Vers. 51. GOd hath made me forget all my labour and my fathers house: 1. I doe not thinke with Calvin, that this is to be imputed to Ioseph as a fault, that would commit to oblivion his fathers house being entangled with this great honour and prosperitie: for how could hee forget his father, or fathers house, unlesse he should together abandon his faith and religion, and forget Gods covenant made to his father and his seed? 2. Neither doth it helpe the matter to say with some, that he did not forget his father, but his brethren, who are understood by his fathers house. 3. Nor yet is this spoken by way of comparison, that in respect of this great honour, his fathers house, his kindred, and education was nothing: as Mercer. 4. But the words doe expound themselves: he speaketh of the labour, and affliction, and great indignitie which he received at his brethrens hand, in his fathers house, the remembrance and grieve whereof, his great preferment and honour in Egypt allayed and mitigated, Iun. 5 But whereas it will be demanded,* if Ioseph had not forgotten his father, how came it to passe, that he remembred him not all this while, nor sent unto him, seeing Memphis the kings Citie, was not above 40. mile distant from He|bron, where Iacob dwelt: It may be answered, that whether by reason of Iosephs long affliction before, in which time he might thinke his father to be dead, or in respect of his most busie and troublesome im|ployment in the 7. yeares of plentie, or because he would yet conceale his kinred, he might forbear to enquire after them, it was the speciall worke of Gods providence so disposing, that his brethren should first seeke unto him, and bow before him, that his dreames might take effect, Mercer.

Augustine further thinketh, that God so disposed, that Ioseph all this while sent not to Iacob being not above 300. mile from him, that Iacob by this meanes might be exercised with sorrow: Voluit Deus isto modo parva peccata Iacob in hoc seculo igne tribulationis consumere: God would by this meanes with the fire of tribulation purge Iacobs sinnes in this world: ser. 82. de tempor. But Augustine is deceived in the distance of Mephis from Hebron, which was rather 50. than 300. miles: for the Patriarkes could not carrie their corne so farre upon their beasts.

Thom. Anglicus and Pererius thinke that Ioseph had a revelation, how his brethren should come downe to Egypt to buy corn: But if this were so, it is not like, that Moses would have omitted it.

Theodore thinketh that God so disposed, that Iacob knew not of Iosephs being in Egypt, lest he might have redeemed him from thence, and so the occasion of the Israelites going downe into Egypt should have beene prevented: this opinion and the first I preferre before the rest.

QUEST. XVI. When Egypt began to be affamished, and what other countries beside.

Vers. 55. AT the length all the land of Egypt was affamished, &c. 1. For the first two yeares of famine, the dearth was not felt in Egypt, because private men might have laied up in store at home for themselves: therefore the Latine text is here very corrupt, that in the former verse, where the true reading is, in all the land of Egypt was bread, readeth, in all the land of Egypt was famine. 2. Where the famine is said to be in all lands, we must not understand all the countries in the world, but these countries next adjoyning which came thither for corne, vers. 57. and so the Hebrewes especially apply it to be spoken of the countries, Phenice, Palestina, Arabia, which doe border upon Egypt. 3. Some Hebrewes affirme, that Ioseph before he would sell the Egyptians corne, moved to have them circumcised, and that there was much altercation about it: It is like that he circumcised his owne two sonnes, and instructed the Egyptians in the true worship of God; but that he urged them generally to circumcision, being not of the seed of Abraham, to whom that ceremonie appertained, is not like, Mercer. 4. Ioseph is said,

v. 56. to breake to the Egyptians, that is, to sell them food: for so the word shabar signifieth: * either because it breaketh famine, or because it is broken and ground to make bread of: or rather because they made their bread in thin cakes, and so used to breake, not to cut it, Mercer.

4 Places of Doctrine.

1. Doct. God only the disposer and foreteller of things to come.

Vers. 25. GOd hath shewed Pharaoh, what he is about to doe. God therefore is not an idle beholde: or foreteller of things to come, but a doer and disposer of them: which overthroweth the opinion of the heathen, that ascribe the actions of men, some to fatall necessity, as the Stoikes, some to fortune or chance, as the Epicures: but the Scripture telleth us, that whatsoever pleaseth God, be doth in heaven and earth, Psal. 135.6. Further, we see that onely God, that worketh in the world, can foretell the things that are done in the world, as the Prophet joyneth them both together: Shew the things that are to come hereafter, &c. doe good or evill, &c. 41.21. therefore neither spirits nor any other creatures, that are not able to dispose things done in the world, have the foresight or knowledge of things to come.

2. Doct. Repetitions of the same thing in Scripture not vaine.

Vers. 32. THE dreame was doubled, because the thing is established with God, &c. Hence then it is evi|dent, that repetitions in the Scripture, are not vaine tautologies and superfluous battologies, but that they are set downe for more certaintie; for which cause this dreame was doubled to Pharaoh, Mercer. like as Saint Paul saith, Philip. 3.1. It grieveth me not to write the same things unto you, and for you it is a sure thing.

3. Doct. The holy Ghost proved to be God.

Vers. 38. CAn we finde such a man as this, in whom the spirit of God is? Augustine noteth this to be the third place in Genesis, where mention is made of the spirit of God: the first is, Gen. 1, 2. The spirit of God moved upon the waters: the second, Genes. 6.3. My spirit shall not alwaies strive with man, the third in this place, quaest. 134. in Gen.

4. Doct. The mutability and change of time.

Vers. 54. Then began the seven yeares of famine to come, &c. After the yeares of plenty follow the yeares of famine: so after peace commeth warre, after health sicknesse; nothing is permanent or of long continuance here, Muscul. as the wise man saith, There is a time for every purpose under heaven, &c. a time to weepe, a time to laugh, a time to mourne, a time to dance, Eccles. 3.14.

5. Doct. Of the lawfulnessse of rich apparell and other ornaments in men of honourable place and calling.

Vers. 42. Pharaoh tooke off his ring. Ioseph commeth forth adorned with these complements of honour, a ring, gold chaine, fine linnen, riding in the second charriot. So that such ornaments are not to be condemned in men of honourable place and condition, if these two rules be observed: that neither such things be ambitiously sought and desired: as here this great honour was offered to Ioseph by Pharaoh, of him not begged: and that they be not used to ostentation and vaine glory. And for the lawfulnessse of rich apparell, and ornaments of gold in men of high place, to shew their authority, and the more to keepe the people in feare and obedience, the testimonie of our Saviour may suffice, Mat. 62.9. Salomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

5. Places of Confutation.

1. Confut. Against superstitious shaving

Vers. 14. And he shaved him, &c. Ioseph was shaved, not only to cleanse himselfe from the filthinesse and smell of the prison, but because it was not the fashion of that country to come before the king, with long and disordered haire, Mercer. This was a civill use of shaving: they placed no religion in it, as the Popelings of Rome doe.

2. Confut. The vulgar Latine not wholly Hieromes translation.

Vers. 43. They cryed before him, Abrech. This Hierome taketh to signifie a tender or young father of Abh, father, and rech, tender, delicate, tradition in Gen. yet the Latine translation under Hieromes name, readeth otherwise: They cried before him, that all should bow their knees: whence it is evident, that the vulgar Latin was not wholly of Hieromes doing: beside it is very corrupt in divers places, as vers. 54. for in all the land of Egypt was bread, the Latine hath in all the land of Egypt was famine. *

3. Confut. Against the popish prohibition of the marriage of Ministers.

Vers. 50. HE gave him to wife Asenah, daughter of Potipherah, prince or priest of On. The word cohen signifieth both a priest and a prince: the Chaldee readeth, prince, others the priest. H.S. But because the priests were in great authority in Egypt, and as from the Philosophers they chose Priests, so out of the priests they made princes, Mercer. I thinke he was both priest and prince, that is, the chiefe and principall priest. This sheweth that among the Egyptians, their priests were married and had children: so also was it lawfull in the old testament for the priests, and in the new for the Apostles to be married: and never forbidden in the Church of God, till Antichrist began to set in his foot, and his adherents, to teach the doctrine of devils, &c. forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstaine from meats, as the Apostle saith, 1 Tim. 4.1, 3.

4. Confut. Against the superstitious restraine of marriage among Hebrews and Romanists.

Vers. 50. NOw unto Ioseph were borne two sonnes, before the yeares of famine came. The Hebrews note from hence, that all the time of famine Ioseph abstained from the company of his wife, because his children were borne before the famine came: and that it is unlawfull for the man and wife to come together in the time of famine, or any other common calamitie: as they would gather out of Ioel 2.16. Let the Bride-groome goe forth of his chamber, and the Bride out of her bride-chamber; &c. Contra. 1. It followeth not because Ioseph had no children borne in the time of the famine, that therefore he came not to his wife all that time: as though it is to be imagined, that the Patriarkes, when they had no children borne, abstained from their wives. 2. True it is, that the man and wife, according to the counsell of the Apostle, should sometime sequester themselves for fasting and prayer: but it must bee onely for a time and with consent, lest Satan tempt them for their incontineney, 1 Cor. 7.5. they must not then defraud one another for many moneths, or many yeares. Not much unlike to this Jewish conceit, is the Popish restraint of marriage in the time of Lent, for the holinesse of the time, as they imagine, as though marriage were a pollution, either of time, place, or person.

6. Places of exhortation and morall use.

1. Morall. To cleanse our selves when we come before God.

Vers. 14. HE changed his raiment, and came to Pharaoh. As Ioseph changed his outward raiment, and put off his filthy clothes when he came into the Kings presence; so ought wee to cleanse our hearts and sanctifie our soules when we appeare before the Lord, Muscul. as the Preachet saith, Take heed to thy foot when thou entrest into the house of God, Eccles. 4.17.

2. Morall. Not to glory in our gifts, but to referre all to the praise of God.

Vers. 16. Without me God shall answer. Ioseph doth extenuate his owne gifts, detracteth from him|selfe, and giveth the glory to God: so wee should not rejoyce in any thing that is in us, but acknowledge every good gift to be from God; for (as the Apostle saith) Neither he that planteth, nor he that watereth is any thing, but God that giveth increase, 1 Cor. 3.7.

3. Morall. Gods speciall care in providing for his Church.

Vers. 16. GOd shall answer for the wealth of Pharaoh. Though God had great mercy upon Pharaoh and all Egypt, in forewarning them of the great famine to come, that they might aforehand make provision for it: yet Gods speciall care and providence watched over his Church in Iacobs house, that they might be preserved, as Ioseph him|selfe acknowledgeth, God sent me before you to preserve your posterity in this land, Gen. 45.7.

4. Morall. Wisdome not to be despised though cloathed in rags.

Vers. 15. I Have heard say of thee thou canst interpret, &c. Though the Butler before making mention of Ioseph, for feare rather than of love, lest by others it might have beene made knowne to Pharaoh, how Ioseph had expounded his dreame in prison, did in tearmes disgrace him, saying he was a young man, a childe in a manner, an Hebrew, who were an abomination to the Egyptians, and a servant or bonds|slave, vers. 12. yet Pharaoh disdaineth not to take counsell of him: we should not then despise wis|dome though cloathed with rags, not contemne the graces of Gods spirit in poore and base men to the world, Mercer. Muscul. Thus saith the Prophet, There was found a poore and wise man, and he delivered the City by his wisdome, Eccles. 9.15.

5. Morall. Famine is unsatiable.

Vers. 10. The leane kine did eat up the seven fat kine, &c. and it could not be knowne that they had eaten them. When God sendeth the judgement of famine, there is not onely an outward want, but there is also a greedy appetite within, that cannot be satisfied, and that which is eaten is not seene in the body: as these seven leane kine were never the fuller nor fatter, though they had swallowed up the seven fat and well liking kine: so the Prophet saith, He shall snatch at the right hand and be hungry, and eat at the left hand and not be satisfied, Isay 9.20. This judgement God sendeth upon men for abusing of plen|tie: and he which eateth and drinketh of wantonnesse more than sufficeth, is justly punished with a gree|die and doggish appetite, that never can have enough.

6. Morall. Men of gifts must be called to publike office.

Vers. 38. Can we finde such a man as this, in whom is the spirit of God? Pharaoh thinketh Ioseph a fit man for government, because he was indued with the graces of the Spirit: So none should bee called to place of rule and oversight in Church or Common-wealth, but such as are thereunto fit|ted and furnished with convenient and sufficient gifts: as Numb. 11.17. those Elders which were chosen to beare part of the burden with Moses, received also part of his spirit.

7. Morall. The Kings office to provide for the want of his people.

Vers. 55. The people cried to Pharaoh, and he said, goe to Ioseph. Although the people knew that the King had deputed Ioseph the chiefe officer for corne, yet they make their complaint to the King. It then belongeth to the King to provide for the necessities of the people, and to see that his officers doe their duty: so the woman in time of famine cried to the King, Helpe my Lord, O King, 1 King. 6.27.

CHAP. XLII.

1. The Method or Argument of the Chapter.

IN this chapter, first is set downe the comming of Israels sonnes into Egypt, where|fore they came, to buy food, vers. 1, 2. which of them came, all but Benjamin, and why? left he should die by the way, vers. 4.

Secondly, the manner of their entertainment in Egypt, is described, from, vers. 7. to v. 26. 1. Ioseph dealeth roughly with them: in charging them to be spies, vers. 7. to 16. then in detaining Simeon, and binding him before their eies, till such time as they brought Benjamin, vers. 20. to 24. other interlocutory speeches are inserted, of the Patriarkes among themselves, in confessing their sinne toward their brother, vers. 21. 2. Ioseph sheweth this kindnesse to his brethren, in causing their money to bee put in their sacks mouth, vers. 25.

Thirdly, their returne home is expressed. 1. What happened in the way as they went, that in open|ing of their sacks they found their money. 2. The report and narration to Iacob of their manner of han|dling and entertainment in Egypt. 3. The refusall of Iacob to send his sonne Benjamin with them, al|though Ruben earnestly perswaded him.

2. The divers readings.

v. 2. Buy us necessaries from thence. H. buy us food. S.G. corne. B. buy us from thence. T.C.P. heb.

3. The explanation of doubtfull questions.

QUEST. I. How they are said one to gaze on another.

Vers. 1. Why gaze ye? 1. Not as though they set a good face upon the matter, and would not be knowne to want, because of the Canaanites among them. 2. Neither doth this phrase shew any contention or strife among them: as straining curtesie, who should seeke out first. 3. Nor yet did they one gaze and stare upon another, musing to see how they were altered and changed with famine. 4. But the simple meaning is, that they stood as men amazed, not knowing what to doe: to the same purlpose the Septuagint translate, why are yee idle? &c. Mercer.

QUEST. II. How the Patriarkes descend into Egypt.

Vers. 2. GEt ye downe. 1. The Hebrews note is curious, who out of the word redu, goe downe, the letters whereof, make 210. doe gather the time of the abode of the Israelites in Egypt. 2. It is not like that they went downe into Egypt of purpose to seeke out Ioseph whom they had thither sold, as repenting of their fact. 3. But God so directed Iacob, that he sendeth them thither, that Iosephs dreames might take due effect: for now they all humbling themselves to Ioseph for food, doe reve|reverence to his sheafe, as Ioseph formerly had dreamed, Mercer.

QUEST. III. How Ioseph could know his brethren, and not be knowne of them.

Vers. 7. WHen Ioseph saw his brethren, he knew them, &c. 1. He knew them at the very first sight of them, not as the Hebrews imagine, because all strangers, that came for corne, gave up their names before they came into the citie, who they were, and from whence they came. 2. Neither needed Ioseph of purpose disguise himselfe in his habite as some of them again think, not to be discerned of his brethren: for they pressed upon him unawares among others, that came for corne. 3. Therefore it was an easie matter for Ioseph to know his brethren, because they were at mans estate when they sold him, Mercer and Ioseph might take specially view of them, when they did so afflict him: as men beset of theeves take speciall notice of them, Muscul. and by one, Ioseph might know another, whereas if hee had seene them asunder, it had not beene so easie; their speech also was the same, nothing altered, P•er. 4. But Ioseph was not knowne of them: he was altered in stature, countenance, and voice, being but a child of 17. yeares when they sold him: his imprisonment and afflictions might much alter him. Likewise his princely state and pompe tooke away all suspition and surmise from his brethren, that he was Ioseph: as also he spake not unto them in hebrew, but by an interpreter.

QUEST. IV. Wherefore Ioseph speaketh roughly at the first to his brethren.

Vers. 7. HE spake to them roughly. Ioseph thus dealeth with his brethren for divers reasons. 1. That by this meanes they might be brought to the knowledge of their sinne committed against him: for men by afflictions learne to know themselves: as these also did, vers. 21. Mercer. 2. The more roughly they were handled at the first, the more acceptable was the favour shewed afterward, and the benefit appeared so much the greater, Augustin. qu. 46. in Genes. 3. By this meanes Ioseph came to the knowledge of his fathers state and Benjamins, for he might feare, seeing onely Benjamin wanting, lest they had of malice against Ioseph, wrought some evill against him, being his only brother by his mother. Chrysost. hom. 64. and Calvin.

QUEST. V. What Ioseph meaneth by the weakenesse of the land.

Vers. 9 YE are spies, and are come to see the weakenesse of the land. 1. By the weakenesse of the land, we neither understand with some, the idlenesse and slothfulnesse of the people: although the E|gyptians, by reason of the overflowing of Nilus which made the grounds fruitfull, were much given to sloth. 2. Nor yet with Aben Ezra doe we expound, the nakednesse, to be the secrets of the land, because▪ the naked parts are secret. 3. Nor with the Septuagint, vestigia, the waies or passages into the country. 4. But the weake places, were the unvalled and undefenced townes, as the Latine, which Mercerus alloweth, readeth, immunita loca, places without defence. And that this specially belongeth to sp•e•, Moses sheweth, who giveth this charge to those which were set to spie out the land of Canaan: Consider the land, what it is, and the people that dwell therein, whether they be strong or weake, many or few, whether the land be good or bad, whether they dwell in tents or walled townes, Numbers 13.19, 20.

QUEST. VI. Why they alledge that they were all one mans sonnes.

Vers. 11. WE are all one mans sonnes, &c. 1. It is not like, as the Hebrewes conjecture, that these ten brethren did disperse themselves, at their entring into Egypt, and every man tooke a sundry way to seeke Ioseph, and that they confessed so much unto him, whereupon hee tooke occasion to say they were spies: for concerning Ioseph, they supposed that he was dead, vers 13. But Ioseph doth thus charge them rather, because they came in that company as conspirators: and therefore they goe about to excuse the matter, for their comming so together. 2. Wherefore their meaning is this, 1. That the cause of their so comming in one company was, for that they were brethren, and so much the more unlike to be spies because they came together, whereas spies use to disperse themselves, Mercer. 2. And seeing they are brethren, it is like that their father would have imployed his servants rather than sonnes in such a businesse, Muscul. 3. And seeing it was a capitall crime and danger to be a spie, it is unlike that one man would hazzard all his children at once, Iun.

QUEST. VII. Whether Ioseph made a lie, and so offended, in charging his brethren to be spies.

BUt now whereas Ioseph against his owne knowledge chargeth his brethren to bee spies, seeing they came for corne, how was not this a fault in Ioseph, so to dissemble? 1. I neither will yeeld this to have beene an infirmity in Ioseph with Calvin. 2. Neither with some, excuse this fact, and say it was, io/cosum mendacium, a pleasant lie, or in sport. 3. Much lesse was it a purposed lie, as though Ioseph should sweare to it, by the life of Pharaoh: for by that oath hee affirmeth not that they are spies, but bindeth them to bring their brother Benjamin. 4. Wherefore I thinke rather that Ioseph used here no lie at all. 1. But not in that sense, as R Salomon taketh it, as though Ioseph had called them spies one way, because they searched the next way into the land of Egypt out of Canaan, and that they understood Ioseph another way: for Ioseph expoundeth himselfe that he meaneth spies properly, that they came to see the weakenesse of the land. 2. Neither doth he speake in the opinion of others, that they are counted spies, but this thrice urging of that word, sheweth that he spake as from his owne judgement. 3. Neither doth he speake figuratively turning his finger to himselfe, and that they spied out his weakenesse, and abused his youth and simplicity, when they sold him to the Ismaelites, as Rupertus. 4. But I rather thinke, that Ioseph thrice spake, not assertive, by way of assertion, or affirmation, but probative and tentative, by way of question to trie them, which was no lie nor dissimulation at all: as neither was that in our Saviour, that to make triall of his disciples humanity, made shew as though he would have gone further, Luke. 24.

QUEST. VIII. Whether Ioseph had before forgotten his dreames.

Vers. 9. ANd Ioseph remembred the dreames, which he dreamed of them. 1. Not that Ioseph had either made small account before of his dreames, seeing the contrary event in his imprisonment and other afflictions. 2. Or that prosperity had made him to forget his former visions. 3. But now, when he saw his dreames to take effect, he doth more lively remember them, & better understandeth them than before, as it is said of the disciples, that they understood not those things, which were said of Christ at the first, but after hee was glorified, then they remembred that they were written of him, Iohn 12.16. Calvin.

QUEST. IX. Whether Ioseph sweareth by the life of Pharaoh, or therein did wel.

Vers. 15. BY the life of Pharaoh you shall not goe hence. First some excuse Ioseph here, admitting this to be an oath. 1. Because in effect he did sweare by God, who was the author of Pharaohs health and life. 2. Some againe doe extenuate his oath, that he sware in effect by nothing, as Socrates used to sweare by a goose, or dog, Zeno by the Caper tree, to shew the vanity of the heathen that used to sweare by their Gods: but it is not like, that Ios•ph set so light by the health of Pharaoh, as Augustine well noteth: an bono & fideli servo vilis fuerit salus Pharaonis? 3. Some would excuse it, because Ishph was not in good earnest, but did all this in a friendly kind of dissimulation: but as it is not lawfull to lie in jest, so much lesse to sweare in jest.

Secondly they that denie this to have beene an oath, 1. Some say it was but a vehement kind of obtestation, as Moses calleth heaven and earth to witnesse, Deut. 30.19, and as a man may contest by his faith, by his head, and such like, Calvin. But yet this will not helpe, for our Saviour condemneth, whatsoever in our speech is used beside yea, or nay, Math. 5. that out of Deut. is a patheticall compellation of the creatures to be witnesse, against the people of their ingratitude and disobedience, which is much unlike this case here. 2. Some hold this speech of Ioseph to be an execration: as if he should say, he wished Pharaoh no otherwise to live, than he would doe as he said, Thom. Aquinas. But Ioseph was more reverent and respective of Pharaohs health and life. 3. Iunius saith it is a constant kinde of affirmation used both among Christians, and others: and will have it like to those asseverations, 1 Sam. 2.2. O my Lord (Anna saith to Eli) as thy soule liveth, and Abner saith to Saul, as thy soule liveth (O king) I cannot tell, 1 Sam. 17.55. and as the use was to sweare by the soule of the Emperour, as he alleageth out of Vlpianus: But herein I cannot consent unto that learned man: for in those phrases, they alwayes either protested by themselves, in the first person, as 2 King. 6.31. God do so to mee, and more also: or by those to whom they speake, in the second person, as in the examples given in instance: and therefore the case is not all one with this: And concerning that use, to protest by the Emperours soule, though it continued under Christian Emperors, yet it is certaine that it was taken up before in the time of Idolatry, when they ascribed divine honours to their Emperors. 4. Wherefore I rather incline to thinke, that this kind of speech, to say, by the life of Pharaoh, was used commonly in Egypt as an oath, partly of flattery, partly of superstition, in ascribing too much to their Kings: which use they seeme to have derived from the Hebrewes, that as they used to sweare vivit dominus, the Lord liveth, so they, Pharaoh liveth: and the Hebrewes write, that to this day it is a law among the Egyptians, that he which falsly sweareth by the kings head in a pecuniarie matter, shall be put to death, Perer. yea and the imperiall law is, that he which did commit perjury, swearing per genium Imperatoris, by the soule or spirit of the Emperour, should be beaten with clubs, and it should be written over his head 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉, sweare not rashly, Iun. ex Vlpian. But yet Ioseph in this place of purpose sweareth not, but by the common use and custome spake as the rest did, as it appeareth by his twice using of the same words together: like as in our English tongue, many suddenly will say (Mary) having no intent to sweare: which notwithstanding at the first (I thinke) was taken up as an oath by the name of Marie: And beside Ioseph doth conforme himselfe of purpose to the Egyptian phrase, that his brethren should not suspect him to be an Hebrew, which they might easily have done, if he had said, as the Lord liveth: Therefore although Ioseph may be somewhat herein excused, yet can he not be cleared or justified, but that living among a superstitious people, he was somewhat polluted also by their man|ners, Mercer. Genevens. annot. in the great Bible: and so Iosephs brethren did take it, that he charged them with an oath.

QUEST. X. Whether Ioseph did forswear himselfe.

Vers. 16. BY the life of Pharaoh yee are but spies. It might seeme that Ioseph here did forswear himselfe, because they were indeed no spies. 1. It doth not satisfie to say, he did not forswear, because there is no mention made directly of God: for though we ought onely to sweare by the name of God, yet he that sweareth fa|sly by any other thing, forsweareth himselfe: It seemeth it was the Pharises doctrine that a man might sweare by other things as well as God, so they did not forswear: but our Saviour, not m|sliking their caution against forswearing, sheweth further, that it is not lawfull so much as to sweare at all, by the heaven or earth, by the head, &c. Math. 5.34. 2. Neither sufficeth it to say that Ioseph did sweare in jest, not in good earnest, and therefore forsweareth not: for an oath is not to be used in sport, but we must sweare in judgement, Ierem. 4.2. that is, advisedly. 3. Wherefore to exempt Ioseph from perjury, first he saith, by the life of Pharaoh, ye shall not goe hence, except your youngest brother come hither: this was performed, for they did not all goe, but left one bound to be a pledge for the rest: Algaîne hee saith, if they failed in bringing their brother, by the life of Pharaoh they were spies: that is, as their words should not prove true for the one, so they might very well bee suspected for the other, and worthily held to bee spies: so Augustine well expoundeth, Exploratores deputabimini merito mendacii vestri; You shall deserve by your lie to be counted spies, quast. 139. in Genes. And againe they did in a manner take it upon them, to be counted spies, if it were not true which they said, Mercer.

QUEST. XI. Why Simeon was taken and bound rather than any other.

Vers. 24. HE tooke Simeon from among them, and bound him. 1. They did not choose Simeon, to be a pledge for the rest, but Ioseph tooke him. 2. Either because Ioseph had experience of his bloody minde against the Sichemites, and so might hold him a principall agent in his affliction; and some hold that Iudas Iscariot, that betrayed our blessed Saviour, came of this Simeon. 3. Or because he would not assist Ruben, in delivering of Ioseph, being the next in yeares, and so they both joyning together might have swayed the rest, sic Theodoret, quaest. 102. in Genes. 4. Or rather, because he was the author of the conspiracie to kill Ioseph, and the first that let him downe into the pit, as Philo thinketh. 5. Ab•• Ezra, whom Iunius followeth, saith, Ioseph tooke Simeon for the rest, because he was the eldest, not Ru/ben, whom he spared for his kindnesse and brotherly affection toward him, though he committed him to prison with the rest at the first, lest he should have bewrayed himselfe. 6. And Ioseph knew Simeon to be of an unquiet and turbulent spirit, and therefore detained him, lest he might have hindered the motion for the bringing of Benjamin, Muscul.

QUEST. XII. Who it was that opened his sacke in the Iune, and what sacke.

Vers. 27. AS one of them opened his sacke to give his asse provender; &c. 1. Some say this was Levi that opened his sacke, some thinke it was Ruben, but it cannot be certainly gathered who it was. 2. One of them opened his sacke, not that great one wherein they carried their corne, as Ramban; for it is not like that they gave their asses wheat, neither yet was it the purse wherein they put their molney, as Mercer: for he thereout tooke provender for his horse, but it was another lesser sacke, wherein they carried provision for their asses, Iun. and therefore another word is here used (amthacath, which signifieth a bag that is stretched out) than before, where that, wherein they carried their wheat, is called (sack) a sacke, the same in English and Hebrew. 3. And though they were in an Inne, it might be that there was no provender to be had, but such as they had brought; the word is malon, a lodging place, not like unto our Innes, where provision is made both for man and beast, Muscul.

QUEST. XIII. Whether one or all opened their sacks in the Iune.

BUT whereas one of them is here said to open his sacke, and finde his money, and the rest at home in the presence of their father, vers. 35. and yet Gen. 43.21. they are all said to have opened their sacks in the Inne: for the solution hereof. 1. Some thinke, that indeed one of them did open his sacke in the Inne, and the rest at home: but they in reporting of it make but mention of the Inne, to be more compen|dious, Iun. or by a synechdoche, all are said to doe it, because one did, Muscul. or they joyne together, that which was done in the Inne,* and the house. But none of these answers doe satisfie, for still the contra|diction remaineth: for they thus say to Iosephs steward, As we came to an Inne, and opened our sacks, behold, every mans money was in our sacks mouth, Gen. 43.21. then it must needs be that every mans sack was opened. 1. For it
